Since I have been in the work I have had various phases of experience, but so far I have escaped physical damage, though I was hit with two eggs at Gehenna, O., about thirty-two years ago. But the oddest experience I ever had was last Saturday afternoon at a Holiness camp meeting near the south fork of the Lewis river, not far from a place called View. I was to speak near there the next day, and at the close of the meeting I published the announcement. A very zealous brother full of the devil and the holy ghost, told me I had a devil in me. I replied that believers should cast out devils and if he was a believer, he should prove it by casting the devil out of me. He took me at my word and seized me to drag me to the anxious seat where they had their work bench for such purposes, but I refused to be dragged. Immediately, hands seized each arm and the lapels of my coat and one or two muscular Christians behind pushed at my shoulders and a zealous woman pounded under my knees to bring me to my prayer bones, all of them shouting "hallelujah," "you're a wicked sinner, praise the Lord," "you are a liar, bless God," and a lot of other things that I could not remember. I have no idea how I got out of their clutches. They were all mad, though they say they never get mad. Had it not been I had to return pretty soon I should have allowed them to experiment on me awhile.

I then went up to the leader of the melee, and told him come to one side, "I want to talk with you." I had talked a very short time when he became ashamed of himself and asked my pardon. On the way to my room he overtook me and again asked my pardon. I did not talk with any others, as I could not reason with them except I got them separate.

I forgot to say that while I was talking with him again, they got around me again and tried again to force me to my knees. They took off my hat as God wouldn't chase the devil out of me with my hat on. I got away again and was going to let them have the hat, but they chased me up and brought it to me. "Bless the Lord" D. RELIGION GONE MAD.

A Bible in One Hand, and a Razor in the Other.

Genoa, W. Va.—Never in the history of Southern West Virginia has this section of Wayne County, the border county between West Virginia and Kentucky, been so thoroughly stirred by a tragedy as it is now.

Shortly before daylight, Sept. 6, Rev. Morris Wilson, whose head the snows of 80 winters have whitened, killed his aged wife by drawing the keen blade of a razor across her throat several times from ear to ear. The revolting tragedy was no doubt enacted while the aged woman slept, but this will never be known for a certainty, as no one was in the house at the time save a servant girl who was asleep in an adjoining room. She says she heard no struggling, but was awakened by demon-like intonations at that unusual hour made by the aged parson who was reading from his Bible. A dim light was burning, and, peeping from her room through a door, partly ajar, she witnessed the old minister reading from the holy book while in the other hand he held his razor tightly clinched, blood even yet dropping from the weapon of death.

On the bed, her face covered with blood, lay the protrate form of the aged parson's wife, her head almost severed from the body. The old minister was reading from the ninth chapter of Hebrews, as follows:

"19. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people

"20. Saying, This is the blood of the Testament which God hath enjoined unto you.

"21. Moreover, he sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry.

"22. And almost all things are by law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission."

The last sentence of the quotation the snowy-haired divine repeated time and again in a deep voice, that reminded one of the ravings of the great tragedian McCullough when he was dying of paresis in the madhouse, and, as he raised his hands as in supplication to heaven, his hair became disheveled.

For a time in the dim yellow rays of the lamp he presented the appearance of an ancient Druid priest performing his strange and gory rites in the dark nooks and recesses of Stonehenge as it stood in the days of Julius Caesar.

The sight was enough to send a chill into the heart of the bravest cavalier, and that the girl was frightened is merely stating the case mildly. With a scream she bounded out of doors and ran in her night clothes to the home of a neighbor and gave the alarm. Soon 20 or more people of the quiet little village had gathered and the scene was one awful to behold. The old man walked calmly from the room repeating as he departed: "The Lord's will be done; blessed be the name of the Lord."

So dumbfounded were those assembled that they noticed not the aged person's departure from the building, and a few minutes later, when search for him was begun, he could not be found. He probably went direct to the heavy woodland just in the rear of the little town, and is no doubt in hiding, but all realize that he must soon surrender, as he is so feeble that escape is next to impossible.

Rev. Mr. Wilson was for years a leading minister of the Baptist Church in this region, and has frequently filled some of the leading pulpits of the state. For years, though, he and his aged wife have been living a retired life here and were the most highly respected residents of the community. A great religious fever has been sweeping through this community of late, and Rev. Mr. Wilson has taken a deep interest in the progress of the work. It is believed that his constant reading of the Bible at an age so advanced caused a derangement of his mind, and the crime of this morning was no doubt committed in a fit of religious frenzy. He had three times been married, but life with his last wife was seemingly never clouded.

Thus it is that insanity is developed during great religious excitement, resulting in a fiendish murder. In the whole history of Spiritualism, a like experience can not be found. When it succeeds, as it finally will, in spiritualizing the whole world, such a diabolical crime will be unknown.

HEAVEN ON EARTH.

There Is Where It Ought to Be Located.

To the Editor:—Heaven on earth!—that sounds beautifully. Angels on earth!—there is where there should be many. Good deeds now!—Commence them at once on this mundane sphere. Read the following graphic account!—then, from that time on, do good to all.

A long time ago—nearly twenty years—there was a little girl named Mamie Clarke, who lived on the North side. She was a graceful, dark-eyed child, with tresses that hung in curls over her shoulders, and a smile that showed the dimples in her cheeks.

One day this little girl was taken sick, and, in spite of expensive doctors and trained nurses, and everything that money could do for her, she passed away and was buried, like millions and millions of others.

But, unlike most little girls, or boys, or grown people, Mamie Clarke did not vanish into a cloudy memory of the misty past. Although two decades have have gone by since she was laid in the ground, she lives to-day as a bright light in the hearts of a great many boys and girls, and will continue to live away into the indefinite future.

Her portrait hangs to-day in the schoolroom of the Chicago Nursery and Half-Orphan asylum at 175 Burling street, and once every year the children at that institution have cause to bless her. To-day is her birthday, and it is a red-letter day at the orphan asylum. The children call it "shoe day."

WORSHIPED BY HER AUNT.

When this little Mamie Clark died she had an aunt who worshiped the child more than anything else in the world, and whose heart nearly broke. Her name was Mrs. Mancel Talcott, and when she, too, passed away it was discovered that she had left $5,000 to the asylum, to be known as the "Mamie L. Clarke fund."

The interest of this fund was to be used once a year in buying shoes for the children, and also for buying the material for making a dress for every girl and a pair of trousers for every boy in the institution.

Every year since then the occasion of Mamie Clarke's birthday has been a festival.

To-day everything was bustle and expectancy at the asylum. Nearly 200 children were bubbling with excitement, for each one knew that a pair of beautiful new shoes, and a dress or a pair of knickerbockers, would be his or her portion before the day was over.

BABIES ARE REMEMBERED.

Two hundred packages were piled in a stack in the schoolroom, and each package had written on it a name. Some of the 200 children who call the place home are very little, and don't even know whether they have names or not, but there is a name on every package, just the same. The tiny babies are not forgotten.

Nor are all the dresses and trousers of a uniform cut or patterns. They are of many different materials—wonderful, indeed, in the eyes of the recipients, to whom a new suit is of more importance than it is to happier youngsters.

The Mamie L. Clarke memorial exercises were set for 3 o'clock this afternoon, and a programme was arranged. At the close of the exercises the distribution of the presents was scheduled to take place.

This Mrs. Mancel Talcott was an angel on earth—without wings of course. She was always doing good, thinking good, acting good, and inspiring good. She is in heaven now, a beautiful spirit. Good deeds constitute an excellent spiritual currency.

Pomeroy's Reflections.

Blessed be the priest, prophet or potentate who don't try to pervert truth and justice; and blessed be the man who paddles his own canoe, doesn't worry about original sin, nor fee a priest or fear the orthodox devil; one who believes nature is all-sufficient to meet the wants of her children and that Eve, the first mother, was a true mother and to be commended for desiring knowledge for herself and offspring. If there is a continuing of life hereafter, he believes the author of life has provided abundantly for the comfort and well being of all who walk uprightly, obeying the law of Christ, i.e., of brotherly love and fair play.

Nature is an open book, interesting and profound, true and sincere; never becomes stale or false, and there is always a new page to turn, a new field to explore, new beauties to behold and facts to learn.

The idea of a priesthood founded upon celibacy, is abhorrent to nature; and the idea of a spiritual church being supported by compulsory tithing, is Jewish, not Christian.

Spiritualism seems to have both forces, good and evil, arrayed against each other, much as mortals do; but the spirit of love and truth and of a sound mind must, we think, eventually win.

When the masses claim their birthright to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," and kick against the tyranny of the classes, they must desire fair play for all. So long as they are of the same spirit as the extortioner, and combine, not only against greed and capital, but against others as poor and needy as themselves, the true spirit of brotherly love does not actuate them, and all just spirits are repelled and can not make common cause with them. Their motoes are selfish the same as priestcraft and greed. They have the ballot and can help themselves when they are ready to make common cause for all who toil, and are manly enough so that their vote can not be coerced, bought or sold. H. E. POMEROY.

THE CUBAN'S ASTRAL

How It Saved the Crew from Disaster.

LIEUTENANT OF POLICE TELLS HOW THE MASTER OF A SAILING VESSEL PUT COURAGE INTO THE HEARTS OF HIS MEN—HOW THE WICKED CUBAN SAVED COMRADES FROM WATERY GRAVES—WRITING ON THE SLATE.

The District police force is not only the most honest and efficient in America, but it is also head and shoulders above any other department in the United States in point of intelligence. Made up of the pick of the army and navy, it is composed of men who have seen service in many campaigns—men who have sailed in all the waters of the globe, visited every part of the North and South American continents, and who have passed through experiences that would gladden the heart and inspire the pen of a Stevenson or a Kipling.

One might spend a year listening to the tales related by these men of things, times, places, and events that, if collected, would form an exceedingly readable book of adventure. During the past week a Post reporter met several members of the District force, men above the rank of patrolmen. It required some urging to get them to relate their experiences, but by promising not to divulge the names of those who gave them, The Post reporter was able to secure the following, which can not fail to interest those who have taken upon themselves the task of exploring the domain of the mysterious.

"I was born in the old city of Boston," said a lieutenant. "At the close of the war I was a strapping lad of fourteen, and, like most youngsters of that age, pining for adventure of a character that promised something more exciting than that which I and others managed to bring about at home through the agency of our own mischievous tricks and enterprises. At the time of which I speak it was quite a common thing for lads of my age, and older, to spend their vacation at sea, taking a cruise to the West Indies, between which islands and Boston there existed then, as now, considerable trade in the products of New England and the greater Antilles.

"As soon as the school year was over, we were on the wharves seeking employment as ordinary seamen on the various brigs, schooners, sailing craft, steamers, and the like plying between the points I have just mentioned, and once employed we would remain on these vessels, making several trips, until fall arrived, when we would leave and return to our books. Some lads of my acquaintance earned enough money on these trips to take them through college, while at the same time a season on board a vessel in the West India trade was more than sufficient to satisfy our craving for adventure for the rest of the season, if not longer.

CAPTAIN WAS RELIGIOUS.

"On reaching my fourteenth year, I secured a berth on board a vessel that was commanded by one of the very few religious sea captains whom I have ever met. His name was Capt. Chisholm, and without being a crank, he was one man who tried to live, and who did live, the life of a consistent Christian. We ran down to Cienfuegos, Cuba, and Port au Prince, Haiti, where we took on a big cargo of limes and logwood, and, getting under way, started on our return trip.

"Our vessel was a venerable old brig that had been built before the war and had been used in the West African slave trade. All throughout the hold there were curious bolts, hooks, stays, and rings, showing where in former days what is known as 'slave decks' had been rigged up, while around and about on all sides were the marks, remnants, and compartments for old fashioned cannon, that all ships of her class carried in the days of the outlawed slave trade. Well, everything went well until we reached Cape Hatteras, where we encountered a gale and heavy seas that came very near wrecking the ship, and which drove us miles out of our course.

"To make matters worse, the cargo shifted a little to one side, and the vessel began leaking at an alarming rate. Like everything else, the pumps were old fashioned, and had to be worked by hand, and although every man was working over-time, the water seemed to gain on us in spite of all our efforts to keep it pumped out. At first we thought that we would have to jettison a portion of cargo, and at another time it looked as though the ship would founder before we could do anything at all.

MEN GREW NERVOUS.

"The effect of all this soon became noticeable on the men. They were frightened, dispirited, wet, tired, and hungry, and there was danger of their deserting the pumps and making a rush for the life boats. As usual in cases of this sort, Capt. Chisholm was as calm and collected as though nothing had gone wrong. His faith in God was so strong that no matter what happened he looked constantly forward to some manifestations of the divine power—some miracle, as it were—that would deliver him from the straits in which he was placed.

"Seeing that the men were fast becoming panic-stricken, he delivered a speech, in the course of which he related the following story of what had actually occurred on a former occasion off Capt Hatteras, and of which, he said, he had been an eye-witness from start to finish. This he related with a view to encouraging us and infusing fresh determination into our trembling hearts, and I am free to say that when he concluded we felt like new men. This is the story he told, a story that every one of us believed as firmly as we believed in life and death, for we had the simple reason that we knew that Capt. Chisholm never spoke aught but the truth:

"'Twelve years ago I left Santiago, Cuba, with a cargo similar to that which I am now carrying on the home voyage to Boston. I had as a crew on my vessel a lot of Cubans and natives of Porto Rico, men of mixed blood and about as wicked a lot as I ever employed in my life. Two of them were especially depraved. They were the worst villains unhung; men who would cut your throat for a dollar, gamblers, without either conscience, religion, or decency.

"'When we reached Cape Hatteras, in about the same latitude where we are at present, we were overtaken by a terrific storm and high seas, with the result that our vessel began to leak, and we had to jettison a large part of our cargo. Things went from bad to worse, the water gained on us, and it soon became clear that unless help came in some form we must all soon perish.

ONE CUBAN BECAME ILL.

"'This was on the second day of the storm, on the morning of which the most depraved and wicked of the two Cuban cutthroats was suddenly overcome by some unknown ill and swooned away in a dead faint from which he did not recover until the following morning. What ailed him we could not tell, nor did we have time to investigate, and lashing him to the top of the cabin we went about our work, trying to save the ship, and thinking no more of this man until, as I say, the morning following. Things went from bad to worse all that night, and at 4 a.m. the vessel was sinking. Now, before I go on with this story, it will be necessary for me to drop the thread of my narrative for a few minutes, in order to relate a thing that occurred elsewhere and at the same time the events I have just described were in progress on our vessel. The matter in question has, of course, a direct bearing on what I am about to tell.

"'A Yarmouth brigantine, loaded like ourselves with West Indian products, was on her homeward journey to Boston. She had escaped the hurricane that struck us, and was making fine headway under full spread of canvas, when, to the dismay of her officers and men, her captain, who, having been up sleeping, arose, came on deck and gave a sharp, clear-cut and ringing order to put her head about, and to sail back over the course she had then covered. Accustomed though seamen are to obeying orders, the mates could not refrain from asking questions and expostulating with the captain over this seemingly insane order.

"'What could be his object in turning back over a stretch of the stormiest and most dangerous sea on the Atlantic coast, when they were just getting out of the wind-swept area? Why turn back when he knew that the quicker he made the journey the greater the amount of profit the owners would realize on the vessel's cargo. To these and many other questions having the same general object the captain had only one answer, and that was this: 'Continue south until sunrise. Then, if nothing appears in sight, head her about, and resume our homeward voyage.'

"'Thus the vessel sailed all night, back over the course she had traveled two days previous, with all hands wondering and trying to divine what motive the captain had in thus turning back like an absent-minded man returning for his hat, when, at sunrise, the lookout, from his perch in the crows' nest of the main top-mast, shouted to those below that he saw a signal of distress floating from the main topmast of a half-foundered vessel on their starboard bow. The news threw the crew into a state of intense excitement. All eyes were on the captain, as he ordered the wheel put about and the vessel steered in the direction of the wreck.

"'In a short time they were alongside of us. My vessel was then sinking, we had given up all hope, and were awaiting our doom ,when we saw the Yarmouth brigantine bearing down on us in answer to our distress signal. In a few minutes we were on board of her; rescued, just in time to escape death, for thirty minutes later we saw our vessel careen and go under.

"'One of the first orders given by the Yarmouth captain as he drew alongside of us was to bring the Cuban whom we had lashed to the cabin top and who, until then, had remained unconscious, on board his vessel. There the fellow revived, staggered to the rail in a half-dazed condition, and for some minutes was unable to regain his faculties. It was a bright, sunshiny day, the storm had passed and the captain of the brigatine stood in the sun like one petrified, contemplating with eyes that seemed almost ready to start from their sockets, the Cuban whom he had just rescued along with the rest of us. 'My God,' he exclaimed, 'that's the man.'

WRITING ON THE SLATE.

"'To make a long story short, this is what happened, or at least this is what the Yarmouth captain told me. The morning before while asleep he had experienced a very realistic dream. He dreamed that as he lay in his bunk he heard some one coming down the cabin stairway. Looking up he saw my Cuban, the wickedest man of my crew, who had fallen and remained in a dead faint since the morning of the day before, enter the cabin, dripping wet. Watching to see what the fellow would do he saw him go to the slate on which he kept his daily reckoning, take the pencil and write. When he finished he left the cabin as mysteriously as he had entered.

"'Curious to know what the fellow could have written, the captain arose (in his dream), and, going to the slate, read these words which the stranger had written in a bold, legible hand below the daily reckoning: "Steer south until sunrise. If there is nothing in sight, resume your voyage north." When the captain arose he found that it was late in the afternoon. He looked at the slate, but the words he had seen there in his dream had disappeared. He tried at first to shake off the impression made on his mind by the dream. He tried to think that it was the result of something that he had eaten, but all to no purpose.

"'The whole thing had been so vivid and realistic that he could not dismiss it from his mind. "Steer south until sunrise. If there is nothing in sight, resume your voyage north," seemed branded on his mind and vision. He could not get rid of it, and the more he tried to dismiss it from his mind the faster it stuck. Finally, he became so overwhelmed by the power of his dream that he gave the order to put the brigantine about, and steer south. Now, the curious thing was that when the brigatine drew alongside of us the captain instantly recognized the unconscious Cuban lying lashed to the cabin as the man whom he in his dream had seen descend into his cabin, dripping wet, and write the directions about steering south.

"'As for the Cuban, he said that during his period of coma he had experienced an indistinct dream about being in a ship's cabin, but that was all. Both the captain and myself questioned him closely as to whether he remembered seeing the former in his dream, or whether he remembered writing anything on a slate, but he shook his head, saying that all that he remembered of his dream was that he was very wet and very cold when he entered the ship's cabin. Thus, this vile and wicked man had been the instrument of God in effecting our rescue, and I tell you this, boys, simply to show you how God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. Who knows but what in the next few hours something may come to our relief, from some quarter, and by some means beyond our power to foresee.'

"Such was the story told us by Capt. Chisholm, and it had the desired effect of instilling fresh courage into our faltering hearts and renewing our strength and determination. We actually looked forward to something quite as wonderful as that which the captain had related, and we were not altogether disappointed, for in the next several hours the storm broke up and cleared away, we gained on the water, finally pumping the vessel as near dry as it is possible for a ship to be, straightened out the cargo, and made the rest of the journey in safety."

The above from the Washington, D. C., Post, illustrates an important truth in connection with the Spiritual philosophy. Wise spirits, seeing the danger of the ship's crew, and realizing the material condition of this Cuban, conducted his spirit to another ship where he was able to accomplish his mission.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 19 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men. JOHN F. M.

THE MODERN EVANGELIST ON WORLDLY AMUSEMENTS.

Text: Exodus xxxii: 19, 20, 26, 27, 28.

I am a member of the Church, steadfast, staunch and true,
I go to all the meetings, I sit in the front pew,
I am one of "The Lord's Little Ones," whom 'tis dangerous to offend,
Better hang a millstone around your neck and in the sea descend.

I do not play at cards, nor dance; to shows I never go (Except when far away from home, where the brethren cannot know),
And you must make your conduct suit the views I entertain,
For Zion's peace and purity I shall zealously maintain.

They call it calisthenics when you caper with your hands
In which you do not violate the least of God's commands,
But if you caper with your feet, whatever folks may say,
He will send you to perdition for ever and a day,

For dancing just means hugging spurred on by sinful lust,
And only is indulged in by the vilest most accurst.
I know your mother used to dance in the wicked days of yore,
Your sisters and your sweethearts now, are seen upon the floor,

But every word I say I mean, they are lewd, unclean and low,
And if they do not soon repent to hell they'll surely go;
E'en in their mother's drawing rooms, if girls stand up in sets,
They are naught but bold, bad huzzies—"Society's" vile pets.

You may urge that at the opera, the circus, ball or rout,
Such gross indecent terms as these are strictly voted out,
But in the temple of the Lord they are proper, pure and right.
Here anything His servant says is pleasing in His sight.

The Bible's square 'gainst dancing, for, when Moses at Sinai
Saw Aaron and the Israelites all out upon a fly,
A singing round the calf, a drinking and a dancing,
He got mad and broke the tables, and went about a prancing;

And ordered every fiddle, right then and there to stop
And quickly put an end to the music and the hop.
He said that such like doings were against the Lord's Command,
And asked all who then repented to come up and shake his hand.

Then he ground the calf to powder which he made the sinners eat,
And killed three thousand reprobates for using of their feet;
Because they would not promise to stop their evil ways
He sent them down to Sheol to dance around the blaze.

There are wicked "learned preachers" who affirm it for a truth
That it was only their idolatry which provoked the leader's wrath,
But I tell you it was dancing, and so the thing is sealed,
For I am a "weak brother" to whose judgment you must yield.

You can read,—Herodias' daughter once danced in Herod's sight
Until his passions were aroused—she gave him such delight,
That (as in progressive euchre)) he offered her a prize,
Then dancing led to murder, so stop it if you're wise.

I admit that old King David said, 'For all things there's a time;
To laugh, to weep, to sing, to dance, "but this he said for rhyme,
A mere license which all poets take, on which you can't rely,
For David often sinned himself, a dancing on the sly.

You argue, When the prodigal resolved no more to roam,
That his father killed the fatted calf to greet the wand'rer home,
And gave a little party with music, dance and joy,
Yet not one word of censure do the scriptures here employ.

But you see the elder brother ne'er made merry with his friends,
Against such idle reveling he earnestly contends;
He was a member of the Church and one of the elect,
Hence to all worldly pleasure 'twas his duty to object.

Murderers, thieves and liars—blasphemers every one
May have some hope of pardon for the evil they have done,
But if you keep on dancing there's no hope of Heaven for you.
Hell is kept hot and sizzing for all the dancing crew.

You may play draughts or dominoes, these the scriptures don't debar,
But with cards in every shape and form they're eternally at war.
So when you waste your precious time at euchre or at whist,
You give your soul's salvation a horrid hellward twist.

No matter what the occasion, or whether stake or not,
You're as bad as thieves and blacklegs, who quarrel round their pot;
The old devil always sits aloft to see the game go on,
And every player's name he notes and writes him for his own.

Of all the hell-born methods that Satan e'er designed,
To delude poor erring mortals and captivate the mind,
The circus is the very worst—his chiefest stock in trade—
Yet I'll let you send your children or look at the parade.

But if you ever go to hear a so-called standard play—
As well frequent a vaudeville where bands their legs display,
An opera by Wagner, Beethoven or Mozart
Is on the lowest level of a most degrading part.

From Alpha to Omega the whole thing is unclean,
And when you go to any you're unchaste, and vile and mean;
When the drama and the taste for it were planted first in man
And operatic music its damn'd career began

The Lord was not consulted, the devil stole a march;
To extend his foul dominion to annoy and blast the church,
Hence it becomes my duty to warn you one and all
To eschew the whole caboodle, all sorts, both great and small.

Frivolity aboundeth and Satan's hosts rejoice,
But against triumphant evil I'll always raise my voice,
I'll cry aloud and spare not, a mighty war I'll wage,
While feet keep tap to music from childhood to old age.

E'en the kitten takes to sinning as it plays upon the hearth,
Indulging in amusement that savors of the earth—
A catching of its hinder parts—such looseness I bewail;
The Lord may have made the kitten, but the devil made the tail.

Then there's Walking round the levee" and "Walking for a cake;"
Just practicing the young folks God's strict commands to break;
There's "Skip to my Loo" and "Rosie's Ring" and other foolish pranks,
One and all invented to recruit old Satan's ranks.

All worldly amusements are debasing, carnal, wrong,
And heavenly amusements to another age belong,
But, when I go to Heaven, as soon as I get there,
I'll prohibit all diversion, the same up there as here.

The money that is spent each year in dancing, cards and plays,
In clothes and rings, and buggy rides, and other wicked ways,
Should go to the preachers, the glad tidings to diffuse,
And to spread among the heathen my broad and liberal views.

Other sinners agree freely that they are without excuse
And wilfully receive from us their quantum of abuse,
But the vile amusement sinner will not admit he's wrong,
Hence he is by far the most depraved of all the guilty throng.

If you sin and are submissive, and our pardon you implore,
You may sin again and lie again, then sin and lie some more;
As long as you keep promising that you will not go again
You may go to every show that comes and church membership retain.

But the stiff-necked and rebellious, who yield not to our yoke,
Are ungodly "Sons of Belial," whose destruction we invoke,
They will not say they're sorry for the pleasures which they seek,
Hence set a bad example to the lowly and the meek.

I can name you numerous young folks, who, spurning all control,
In theatre or ball room risked their immortal soul,
But God sent forth His sickness, and, it pains me to relate,
Though each became quite contrite, repentance came too late.

My soul I have delivered in the fear of our good Lord—
I am moved by sweetest charity, supported by His word—
But if all grace you will resist, cross'd love will turn to hate—
We'll turn you out of the Lord's Church and that will seal your fate.

You have no right, in sacred things, to walk by your own light;
I am my brother's keeper to guide his steps aright,
So if in my church you would stay, I'll tell you what to do,
And, if you refuse to do it, we desire your vacant pew.

For all who differ from my views are the spawn and brood of hell
Who, in the temple of the Lord, should never dare to dwell—
May God have mercy on us—My duty I have done
In denouncing all things sinful, all laughter, mirth and fun.

EPILOGUE.

Oh, Lord, who made mankind for joy,
Thou can'st not love the lengthen'd face;
Teach us our talents to employ,
Restrained and guided by Thy grace.

From pleasures though we've not cut off,
Let wise discretion guide aright,
Assured a free and hearty laugh
Will not condemn us in Thy sight.

Forgive the honest erring men
Who ignorantly distort Thy word;
Enlarge their narrow minds, and then
Thy voice of reason will be heard.

Do Thou control our acts and words
And Thine Own Self the master be;
To force our neighbor ill accords,
With the free worship due to Thee.

Education is the great liberator of the world. A home library of liberal literature will encourage independent thought in the coming generations. Peruse the following offers:

OUR PREMIUM OFFER.

READ AND REFLECT.

Remember, please, that we send many of our Premium Books by express. If you do not receive your order promptly by mail, inquire at the express office. If not there, notify us at once.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to purchase any of these Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands." Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills an exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have NINE Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any eight of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.50.

Lastly all of these NINE valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $2.75, a price never before equaled in this country or Europe. The following is the list:

NINE REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $2.75.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.
5.—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.
6—The Next World Interviewed.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printers art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

PERTINENT THOUGHTS.

Concerning "Passive" and "Receptive" Mediumship.

To the Editor:—You do me so much good sometimes, and this is one of the times when I must tell you of it. If you but knew the floods of foolish teaching with which this South country is being deluged, you would see why one's heart is delighted to read your sensible lines on mediumship in late issue.

Say it again, say it frequently, and say it in large type, that one seeking mediumship should not consent to become "a passive puppet!"

I entered complaint to one "teacher," that her yield-your-soul method, tended to rob one of all individuality. "Oh, individuality!" she cried. "I am sick of the word. There is no such thing as individuality. The individual is nothing save as some spirit acts or speaks through you, first one spirit and then another uses you as an instrument!"

But The Progressive Thinker says one's individuality is a sacred thing. Is it true that we are only as "houses to let," occupied for awhile by one spirit and then again by another, and then by more? Some one please answer, is that anything like the truth? I thought my body was built for the use, growth, benefit and education of one spirit while here on earth, and that that one was myself, the real and lasting me!

"One's individuality is a sacred thing, and self-control should never be yielded to any power." How good that sounds and reasonable, and well I like that idea of thought given to, and not merely through, a medium.

Another point, Oh ye that know a thing or two about this engrossing subject of mediumship: Is it right to assert, as they do here, that everyone and anyone can develop that power? I have been trying to follow directions and find the power in the passive condition. I am ashamed to consider the time I've wasted in staring at this or that in the effort to master "concentration," but console myself with the thought I have not been all alone in that waste of time.

I may sit for inspiration until I'm so concentrated on that one place that I can hardly get up, and never an "inspire" do I get; but let me go to work, commence in my own way and decide to do my work myself; then before long I begin to truly realize I have someone, or ones, in sympathy with me and near at hand, some intelligence aiding me with this or that suggestion. Perhaps a sudden sense of rhyme and time may lead me from prose into poetry, or perhaps I should say an attempt at versification. I have no doubt that many times I have written "under inspiration," but it was never, no never, done by sitting passively down and staring at a spot. I believe if you want spirit aid, you must "hustle" for it the same as material blessings.

I never but once wrote anything in a state of trance or semi-trance, and was then supposed to be under the influence of an ancient Egyptian priest. Possibly, but the subject being the "True and False Spirit of Worship," it struck me as odd that his ideas and mine coincided so nicely.

I do not want to be skeptical about spirit-control; nothing would delight me more than to think that good and wise spirits would use me as an instrument to voice their words and thoughts, but I am going to be convinced before I say I believe it. I believe inspiration to be something so subtle, also so sympathetic, that it is hard for a man to tell just when the thought has ceased to be his own, or just where some spirit may be prompting him. Is that not reasonable? It may be I am even now inspired to say to the many trusting and misguided students of mediumship, that there is still much truth remaining in the old terse saying, "God—who is spirit—helps those who help themselves!"

For the sake of health and wisdom, be positive and not passive; be "receptive," yes, to the softest whisper of a thought, but quit this "passive puppet" business.

Is it not a mistake to confound concentration of mind with a steady stare or glare? When I am actively engaged on some piece of work that I love, writing or music, why is not my mind then concentrated? "If not, why not?" Will some wise one kindly give us some information on this great subject of concentration?

Yours for common sense in Spiritualism. RALPH DOUGLAS.

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican.

Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "putteen," and an Irish recipe for "comfounding" the same. "What's that?" says the Pope. "Put in the spirits first," says his Riv'rence; "and then put in the sugar; and remember, every dhrop of water you put in after that, spells the punch." "Glory be to God," says the Pope, not minding a word Father Tom was saying. "Glory be to God!" says he, smacking his lips. "I never knew what dhrink was before," says he. "It bates the Lachymachrystal out of the face," says he—"it's Necthar itself, it is, so it is!" says he, wiping his op'tatoliest mouth with the cuff of his coat. Paper, 25cts.; cloth, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

CONNECTED WORLDS.

A Lady's Interesting and Instructive Experience with the "Psyche" Board.

(Concluded from No. 668.)

Walter greatly enjoyed the happiness that had come back to him, and made the most of his opportunities to rise heavenward, until one day he hailed Jeanette as his savior, announcing his escape from the body and the bliss it conveyed to his soul, though compelling him to keep at a distance from her, as his spiritual body forbade a close approach to her mortal one.

Two days later she was awakened at an early hour by a distinct voice, telling her that he, Walter, was bound for a trip to Germany to attend his body's funeral; and when in the afternoon she took the board, Walter greeted her again, saying that he had returned and was glad the thing was over.

"It was a sad affair," he declared, "there were plenty of tears, myself was the only merry party." When Jeanette sympathetically asked for particulars attending his delivery, he related, that after a happy hour with her he was hurried back into his body, and then came the final struggle and complete separation. There was much commotion at the establishment, as his end had not been expected. His family was sent for and surrounded his couch, and his wife pressed a farewell kiss upon his forehead. "That kiss," he added, "has accompanied me across the border; it is burning upon my forehead, but I hate it and hope to get rid of the feeling by and by."

Jeanette's honest nature was deeply touched by that last remark. She took everything for granted.

Walter advised her not to write to his brother, whose address his friend had given her; he insinuated that his family would not like to speak about certain affairs, and so the letter would be useless; but Jeanette had already written. She felt much elated at Walter's transition, and hoped the best results of his spiritual growth. It was difficult for her, however, to comprehend that unfortunate intermediate state he claimed to have occupied for several years, though some strange experiences she had with the magnetic board pointed faintly to similar phenomena.

She was now and then surprised by messages from friends and relatives whose presence in the spirit world was news to her; but those messages were so characteristic that she could not help identifying the writers, and faithfully mailed to their friends on earth the words of love they begged her to convey to them. This brought about other surprises in the shape of sarcastic letters, mailed to her in evident haste from trans-Atlantic postoffices by those very correspondents, most of them claiming to be hale and hearty and having fair prospects to reach the century-mark.

Jeanette was pleased and mortified at the same time. Consulting the board, she was told that all those persons had indeed been across the border on short visits, and had spoken to her unbeknown to their everyday consciousness; a thing now and then occurring with persons in certain conditions of health, often unsuspected by themselves.

Such explanations were mystifying of course, but could not be disproved, and Jeanette was at present well inclined to believe Walter in every particular, and immense was her astonishment when, contrary to his solemn declaration that now he would have to wait for her in heaven, being stripped of all earthly remnants,—he suddenly fell back into his former jealous and passionate approach. Ah! for the truth of the secret suspicions lingering in her mind!

Here at last was a glimpse of light penetrating the misty gloom and plainly exposing as a liar that creature who had posed as her friend. The true Walter might still be on earth; yet where could the false one have gathered all his knowledge about the real one? One thing at least seemed true. The genuine Walter must have met with the counterfeit one on the other side. Jeanette remembered having once asked him how he could know so many things he never learned on earth, and his answer was, that spirits were great rovers and had good ears and eyes, and found it quite amusing to gather news in every direction.

This indeed she had to believe; but who was he, that frivolous newsgatherer? That bold impostor who had tormented her for almost a year in the guise of an unforgotten friend? All the positiveness latent within Jeanette was roused at once, shaking off the tyrannical influence of that scoundrel, and only leaving room for the spirit of investigation which marks the lover of truth.

"Who is he? What can I do to trace him and establish his identity? How can I manage to turn evil into good, utilizing my remarkable experiences so as to form one modest link in the brilliant chain of evidence for the great truth of spirit return—that only sure proof of immortality?"

Addressing these questions to herself, there rose before her mind the memory of her first years of life in America, spent in Jacksonville, Florida. It was fully twenty years ago.

When we land on a foreign shore, no greeting is more welcome to us than the sound of our native tongue, and even the greatest rascal among our countrymen has a fair chance to insinuate himself into our good graces. This well-known fact was soon experienced anew by Randolph and his family, in spite of all their previous experiences.

The fairy-land dreams that had drawn them southward soon vanished at the daybreak of stern reality. Golden sunshine and luxuriant vegetation could be freely enjoyed in the blessed South, but it was not enough to keep body and soul together, and like anywhere else, work was the only means of subsistence for those not overburdened with worldly treasure. Had Randolph been a laborer or a mechanic, it would have been easier for him to gain a footing, but artistic or scientific endeavors were scarcely in demand. So his purse grew more slender every day, and to cut down the expenses of rent, he lent a willing ear to the proposition of a chance acquaintance, a German-American bachelor, to share his lonely cottage, in the neighborhood of the city, in exchange for Jeanette's keeping house for him, and the children helping him in garden work.

That arrangement proved helpful under the circumstances, but the new atmosphere was highly uncongenial to a family of culture. They stood it for some time and would have tried to stand it longer, had not Jeanette discovered that their host pursued her daughter with his unwelcome attentions. Emma was scarcely more than a child at the time, and her indignation at her mother promptly altered the situation by taking up quarters within the city limits.

As they escaped with Stephe, as he called himself, and did not see him again but once, just before they left for the North. He was rather a young man then, and apparently strong and healthy. Could he have died meanwhile and concocted that vile plan for the sake of mean revenge? Jeanette recognized his characteristics in false Walter, and before he posed in that name there were those frightening messages about her daughter Emma, which also pointed to him. Could she be on the right track?

Calling for her son, in the hope of being rid of her persistent tormenter, she took the board, and there was again some posing, but quick detection was this time followed by a confession that seemed to come nearer the truth than anything said before. The correspondent admitted himself to be Stephe, alias Walter. He assumed the role of penitent, appealed to Jeanette's heart and begged for mercy.

He related a weird story of unhappy surroundings from childhood; of the world's harshness; of the forsaken boy's ill fortune; of his final attempts to rise, only to be pulled down much more by a faithless, heartless wife. From her, he stated, he ran away in despair; then happened to fall into bad company, and for some black deed was cast into prison. From thence he succeeded in breaking out, and rather than to be caught again, jumped into a river, hoping for oblivion.

Then followed a description of his new despair when awakening to another life, with renewed pangs of remorse and humiliation; the good spirits shrinking from him, and only bad ones to associate with. He heard of people claiming to have been born back to earth life, and longed to have another chance, but had nobody to show him the way. At last he discovered that magnetic avenue to Jeanette, and knowing that she would loathe the idea of renewing his acquaintance, he sneaked into her favor under an assumed name that he found written in her memory. He did not mean to be a cast-away in all eternity, he declared; he wanted some good thing at least and had a right to it like other people; thus he came to Jeanette now confessing and with a contrite heart, sure of her charitable feelings that would forbid her casting him off entirely.

There was a revelation at last, and some truth was in it, despite the correspondent's crookedness. Jeanette felt it at once, and quickly planned to trace the man's life or end, if possible.

She remembered a German merchant at Jacksonville with whom he had been in the habit of trading. This merchant was an obliging and trustworthy man, though skeptic. He willingly made inquiries, and after the exchange of a few letters, Jeanette knew all that there was to be learned about Stephe. It was not much, but strikingly elucidating his own story.

Stephe had married a worthless woman and led with her a miserable life. One morning the woman's dead body was found on the premises of their home, and her husband went to prison under strong suspicion of having murdered her. He would not confess anything, however, and as no convincing proof could be found against him, he regained his liberty and disappeared from Jacksonville that very day, no trace having been found of him ever since.

This was about four years previous to Jeanette's experiences, corresponding with his alleged arrival in spirit land. Jeanette questioned him directly about the murder of his wife. He would not confess it, but put it to another man, maintaining at the same time that she was the meanest, most corrupt and abusive woman on earth. When asked whether the corruptness was all on her side, there came an evasive answer. The man evidently strove to appear cleaner than he was.

Formerly, when posing as Walter, he always claimed to have a wife left on earth, though a bad one; but during his frequent unaccountable bursts of passion, he often raved about a woman persecuting him and forcing him to her side, while Jeanette was holding him back. Might it not have been the spirit of the murdered woman?

Whether he was indeed the murderer or not, his many contradictions would have blackened his case in any court, while his hatred of the woman seemed intense.

At all events, Jeanette considered her tormenter identified at last, the main points of his story coinciding with what was known of him before his disappearance. Whether he really drowned himself, and his body never was found or identified, can not be proved after so long a time, but Jeanette was satisfied at the result of her investigations, and greatly relieved, hoping that now the unmasked deceiver would not dare to approach her again, while the truth about Walter's whereabouts would soon be revealed by Stephe himself, as the lie would henceforth be useless.

But she was mistaken on both suppositions. She did not learn anything about Walter, while even after weeks of absence she could not take up the board again without Stephe monopolizing the current, either in his own name or an assumed one. He continually appealed to her compassion, her principles of charity and forbearance, and when she granted him sympathy, promising to help him on as far as her own powers in intellectual and spiritual attainments permitted, he seemed grateful and eager to learn, while Jeanette soon found out that he was only cunningly waiting an opportunity to sneak back into his former relations with her. This of course was once more a signal to discard the board, and this time with a firm declaration to stop communication entirely until he would have outgrown those earthly tendencies that have no place in higher spheres.

"If you refuse to be my friend, then prepare to have me for an enemy," was his last fierce retort, which however failed to make an impression on Jeanette. He tried for a while to scare her in different petty ways, especially by impressions, knowing well that she was very receptive.

Once, during a severe thunder storm, there came a tremendous bolt, shaking the whole house. Just at that moment, while Jeanette was stepping into the hall yet filled with the glare of lightning, a voice was heard distinctly: "This was meant for you, had not your son frustrated my purpose." But later on another voice said: "Do not believe him; he is only boasting; no spirit has the power to interfere with the laws of nature."

Thus Jeanette more and more took courage, and slowly but surely succeeded in banishing that persecuting influence. Comfort came also one day in the form of the long-expected answer to her letter to Walter's brother. It had safely crossed the ocean, but then gone astray, until it finally reached its destination. There it lay on her lap, that longed-for answer. Jeanette studied the black-rimmed envelope, with the family name on top, but no first name.

"Ah!" she ejaculated, "that means Walter." Hesitatingly she opened it at last.

Heavens! What a surprise! Had she lost her senses? Is it a mere fancy? Tremblingly she holds the sheet, her dimmed eyes reading again and again the few lines it contained, written by Walter himself; the first, and may be the last letter devoted to her by him.

How she rejoiced at his being alive and well, holding still an honorable position in this mundane sphere; and vindicating thus her trust in his character. In the next sphere—who knows? they might still unite and be happy together. But why the black-rimmed envelope? Ah! she had overlooked the few additional words, telling her that only a short time ago he had lost his good wife.

Stop fluttering, poor little heart! It is in vain. You have kept faith with Randolph once—you will keep faith now, until death looseth the bond. We have to bear the consequences of our actions, unwise though they may have been; and the grey locks of a true woman cannot wear a finer ornament than the crown of virtue and uncompromising faith. So farewell, Walter! Farewell once more, dear friend of my youth! We meet again in realms where eyes are clearer and the language of the heart plainer. That last meeting will mean reunion forever.

H. SCHILFFARTH-STRAUB.

SOME CLOSING REMARKS.

The facts described above have been lived through by a woman of sane mind and in full consciousness; no dream, no trance condition prevailing at any moment. She is not a developed physical medium; only naturally sensitive to mental impressions, and controlled inspirationally by exalted intelligences, who advised her lately to discard the psychic board altogether.

The story might have been woven into an interesting romance instead of giving bare facts; but imaginative readers can work it out themselves, and at the same time supply that satisfactory conclusion, which facts have refused so far to supply, but which is yet within the realm of possibilities even here on this imperfect plane of mortal man.

THE AUTHOR.

MARS INHABITED

By Those in Advance of Earth.

The habitation of Mars, Prof. Hough, astronomer of the Northwestern University, asserts, is not a theory, but a conclusion based on facts.

"Astronomers have come to agree that animal life could not exist on Mars," he said in discussing the question yesterday. "It has been proved that climatic conditions on the planet are the same as on the earth. It has an atmosphere and is covered with a red vegetation. This much has been determined, but the largest telescope is not strong enough to enable the eye to see any sign there of animal life which may exist.

"It would be folly to suppose, however, that not only one but millions of solar systems would be created that a little planet like the earth might alone be inhabited. And since Mars and possibly Mercury and Venus are fit for habitation, reason tells us that people have been put there. The planets were not created merely to fly around in space."

Because Mars first became fit for habitation Prof. Hough asserts that its people should have become much superior in intelligence to those of the earth.

"The 'Martians' certainly had a long start of us, may be a million years," he declares, "and certainly should be more intelligent than we are, if we accept the theory of evolution, as almost all scientists do. Because it is smaller, it solidified more rapidly than the earth, and whatever forms of life were meant to exist upon it were given a start while the earth was hot and still in a gaseous state.

"It will be impossible ever to know what form has been given to the inhabitants of Mars, but the fact remains that their home was prepared for them so long before ours that in the course of evolution they should surpass us in intelligence. I believe this view has been accepted as a possibility, but I believe that it is a probability.

"The fishworms, or whatever other form of animal life from which we have evolved, were certainly not a higher form than the first life of Mars, providing it was put there. then why should the development of life on the other planet not be farther advanced?"

Prof. Hough derides the theory of the possibility of ever establishing communication between the inhabitants of the earth and any of the other planets.

"That theory is visionary," he said, "and utterly impossible. There are no facts in our possession to warrant the belief that such an event will ever come to pass. It is beyond the imagination of even the most optimistic scientists. The people of Mars may be looking down upon us through superior telescopes, with superior intelligence, but they can never communicate with us or we with them.

"There have been no startling discoveries in astronomy for a century, and probably will not be for a century more. The conclusions that are drawn now result from gradual observations, the gathering together of little bits of information from all over the world.

"It is certain that there is no animal life on any of the planets except the earth, Mars, Mercury, and Venus. Jupiter, which is seven times as large as the earth, has a plastic surface of a substance of a density half way between that of air and water. It is still in a gaseous state and undergoing the process of solidification that will make it fit for the reception of life."

Advanced spirits for a long time have asserted that Mars is inhabited by a race far superior to the inhabitants of earth. Let us ardently hope that such is the case. We of earth will try to equal the people of Mars sometime in the far distant future.

Evanston, Ill. SPIRITUALIST.

A PRAYER.

Our wayward feet full oft have gone astray,
E'en tho' our hearts were right.
O! guiding spirits from the realms of light,
Lead us into the day!

With thankful hearts, and strength renewed, we'll climb
The rocky path of right;
For morning dawns upon the darkest night,
And we shall win, sometime.

We are not wholly base, tho' oft we fall;
O! let us fall no more!
And when we triumph, meet us on that shore
From which we hear you call!

THE DANGERS OF SPIRITUALISM.

Much has been written and spoken about the dangers attendant upon the investigation of Spiritualistic phenomena, and we believe a much needed note of warning has been sounded upon a matter which is too often passed over with the slightest consideration, even if it is not avoided altogether.

In the search for evidence of spirit return men are too often inclined to allow their enthusiasm to run away with them, their zeal to consume them and their hearts to govern their intellects, with disastrous results.

We have over and over again drawn attention to what we regard as hysterical manifestations on the part of persons attending seances; and while writing call to mind the head-jerkings and spasmodic limb-twitchings of certain individuals whenever the least opportunity suggests an opening for "control."

Such exhibitions are far from edifying, and besides bringing ridicule upon the individuals, reflects discredit upon the cause to which they have attached themselves.

One of the greatest dangers of Spiritualism is this weakness of character which fails to discriminate between times and seasons; which allows the will of the individual to be constantly dominated by an idea or by a tactless "spirit control."

A moment's reflection should make plain the dangerous character of that "mediumship" which destroys the individuality of the medium and effectually prevents the exercise of his will.

To become the puppet of spirits from the other side of life, to be compelled to obedience when they dictate, to gesticulate, vociferate, and generally appear ridiculous at the bidding of "wire-pullers" from the spheres, is to surrender will and reason, and to become a mere marionette-doll given over to the sportive festivities of undesirables from the world beyond.

The highest aim of many circle sitters is to be "controlled." Whether by Jesus Christ, Judas Iscariot, William Shakespeare, or Charles Peace, matters little to them so long as the "influence" is sufficient to entrance them and compel them to the utterance of words.

We speak strongly because we feel strongly. Better, we claim, never to seek "control" at all than to sit in circle open-souled for any influence to take possession, regardless of the character, the tendencies and the aim of such influence.

Mediums have been known to claim possession of such controls as the Archangel Michael, Adam and Jehovah himself. We are not in a position to disprove the claim that the ancient Jewish murdering divinity has found a home in the aura of some poor English working man—poor but honest; but at the same time feel convinced that possession of such controls really spells obsession by spirits who have no holy motive, no uplifting designs.

The dangers of Spiritualism, then, to us lie in the absolute surrender of the self-hood to the control of the body by other spiritual influences which are not themselves struggling to obtain benefit or blessing, but which are working out their own pleasure at the expense of those whom they have overpowered.

To the man or woman who keeps a level head, who possesses an earnest desire for spiritual attainments, who holds the best thoughts, and surrounds him or herself with an atmosphere of purity and love, there is little to be feared. To those, however, who rush into the developing circle with the one desire for control or so-called development, with arms outspread to embrace the first influence which puts in an appearance, with malice in the heart, hate burning in the breast, or even inharmony in the home or in daily life, there is danger.

It is better, truly, to know of this danger than to be obsessed in ignorance of the fact. But, knowing the possibility of injury, knowing there is suffering and loss of happiness, if not worse, lying in wait for he who opens himself to the inrush of all manner of spirit influence, it would be the height of folly not to guard against the lurking danger.

If persons knowingly and wilfully put their heads into the noose they must not complain if others pull on the rope. He who suffers through ignorance is to be pitied; he who knows and still suffers deserves but little sympathy.

HARBINGER OF LIGHT, MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

IN THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW OF DEATH.

Several years ago I was conversing with a Victorian doctor, a strong advocate in favor of cremation of the body at death in place of the ordinary custom of burial; he concluded his arguments by saying, "Besides, it stops all possibility of premature interment."

Upon my asking him if he thought such an unfortunate occurrence was frequent, he said: "It is impossible to tell, for exhumation of the corpse is a rare occurrence, but there are instances in our medical literature of the corpse having been found, when exhumed, turned on its side, and also instances of resuscitation occurring between the time the body was placed in the coffin and its being placed in the grave. I assure you that there is no absolute test of the certainty of death having taken place except the commencement of decomposition of the tissues. Personally I have the greatest horror of being buried prematurely, and I want you (as my most intimate friend) to solemnly promise that this shall not happen to me if you are anywhere at hand when my death occurs." His earnestness made me ask him if it was through any previous painful experience that he was so emphatic. "Yes," he replied; "when quite a junior in my profession, I was assisting a then well-known Melbourne surgeon in a post mortem. After we had commenced our investigation, to our unspeakable horror, the subject opened his eyes. Ask no more." When my friend died, I helped to place him in his coffin—decomposition had commenced.

Communications from spirits given to us in all countries of the world agree in stating that cremation of the body after death is a decided advantage to the spirit, its late occupant. Except in comparatively few instances is there at death any immediate complete severance of the spirit from the body; there are magnetic cords still connecting one with the other, and these are not completely severed until the body has decomposed. The quietness or violence of the death also has much to do with this, for the more violent the death the less easy is it for the spirit to withdraw and bring all its elements together again. The Church of England prayer, "From sudden death, good Lord, deliver us," is a good prayer, and there are more reasons than are commonly understood why we should all utter it. The burning of the body at once frees the spirit from all magnetic connections with the flesh, thus enabling it to start the sooner on its upward career. It also renders impossible that most awful of all fates, the awakening to consciousness after being buried while life was still in the body. The awfulness of this fate was made known to me in the experience I am about to relate, and which I will term

THE FEMALE IN A BOX.

I was one night sitting quietly reading, when I heard a female spirit exclaim, "Oh! I am in a box. Will no one let me out? Oh, dear me! I am in a box—in a box. I can't get out. Oh dear, oh dear." The voice, though only heard by me clairaudiently, was agonizingly painful; the sobbing as the words "Oh dear! oh dear!" were uttered was heartrending indeed. I offered up the mental prayer, "God help me to help that unfortunate spirit," and then said, "God enable you to come out of that box. It is so. You are out of it." Knowing it was only an illusion of the spirit's mind, I said the above words in an emphatic tone, so as to impress the idea upon her. The reply was instantaneous, "Oh, God! how I thank thee. I am out of it."

She knew nothing of the part I had taken in her release, nor was it necessary that she should; but when I prayed for some spirit to come to her and help her, she said, "Friend still on earth, I do so thank you. I understand it all now; I am in a new world and have died. May God bless you."

I then heard the voice of a superior spirit saying, "Friend on earth, may God's blessing rest on you. I know that poor spirit, and have long tried to help her, but could not approach her or make her hear, and I was directed to try and lead her so as to get her en rapport with you, for if I could do that, I was told you would hear too and be able to make her hear you. The reason of her trouble is simply this: she was buried while life was not extinct, and she awoke in her coffin, to her 'a box;' consequently the horror of such a conviction upon her mind. She, when her real death ensued, formulated around her a box, and ever since she has been in the spirit land she has been incessantly uttering the heartrendering cries you so opportunely heard. I will now take care of her, and no longer will she dwell in the Valley of Shadows."

The "Valley of Shadows" is a good name for a large area of the spirit sphere adjacent to this earth, into which enter many who die with a strong illusion on their minds. Death, that is, the process of death, is, so all spirits inform us, simply sleep; and just as on earth, if we fall asleep with some very strong trouble on our mind, on awakening in the morning, it immediately comes back to our recollection, so it is at death, but the difference is this that the disembodied spirit, unconsciously to itself, formulates through the power of mind surroundings or conditions in correspondence with the mental troubles, and is quite oblivious of anything outside these conditions. The above-mentioned instance is a good illustration as to how this may happen, for we have only to imagine the intense horror we should feel if we fell asleep one night and awoke up finding ourselves confined in a narrow box, unable to barely move arm, or leg, or head, and notwithstanding our cries, find that no one heard us, to realize the impress it would make upon our mind. The half hour we might live, prior to suffocation taking place would, under such circumstances seem an eternity of horror, and unfortunately, as in the case of this poor female, this awful eternity may be extended to days, weeks, months, and perhaps even years in spirit life. Truly, the very possibility of such a fate should cause all Spiritualists to be advocates for cremation of the body.

I was informed that to those immediately around this poor spirit, she was invisible, nor could any hear her cries, for she had surrounded herself with an atmosphere, or aura, which rendered her unnoticeable by the undeveloped and ignorant spirits of these lower spheres. To the spirits of higher development, she appeared enveloped in a cloud, and by such spirits as have a knowledge of these matters, her sufferings could be read and her cries heard. Unfortunately she was impervious to the thought impressions of those who knew her trouble, and who vainly endeavored to move her to say this prayer, "God take me out of this trouble." Some such prayer on her part would have brought instant relief. Lacking that, the only way to help her was to place her en rapport with a sensitive on earth, or to wait till the almost complete decomposition of the body in the coffin weakened her attraction to it.

To the Editor:—Having perused with great pleasure many copies of your valuable paper and seeing numerous articles of interest therein, a question has arisen in my mind often: Is it the law of the survival of the fittest or the Spiritualism, that the most impudent quacks and impostors of all descriptions should flourish and fatten under its noble banner seems to be the rule.

Having for many years traveled in England, France, Germany, Australia, New Zealand, and recently in America, and throughout the best part of twenty years I have taken an intelligent interest in Spiritualism and its adherents, the above query is the result.

There are many workers of ability and gifts who find it impossible to maintain self-respect and gain financial support on account of the state of affairs now existing. A case in point is Mr. and Mrs. Perkins, of whom I have previously read, and with whose good work I have been familiar for some time. These well-deserving people have had a continuous struggle for mere existence, and, forsooth, why? The illness of Mrs. Perkins primarily, but much of the opposition was due to the fact that they were too honorable to stoop to fraud, and honest enough not to countenance certain questionable practices that are fostered from time to time upon kindly disposed Spiritualists.

Only recently here in Sacramento I have been instrumental in uprooting a nest of fraudulent materializing mediums, whose only claim upon a long-suffering public were their craftiness and impudence. If they had been dealt with according to merit, they would long ago have materialized upon the muddy bottom of the Sacramento River.

The methods of these cunning and bold tricksters that thrive are astonishing, to say the least, as the power of right succumbed to might, and will right come uppermost? I give it up!

GIVES HIS SECRET TO THE WORLD.

A Remarkable Discovery By a Remarkable Man.

The Art of Fascinating, the Power of Charming, the Secrets of Personal Magnetism Fully and Completely Revealed at Last.

A Marvelous, Mysterious Force Which Gives Wonderful Mental and Physical Strength, Overcomes All Diseases; Enables You to Know the Secret Natures of Others and to Handle Them as You Please.

Professor R. F. Robertson, Psych. D., C. D., is the greatest living teacher of Personal Magnetism. He has astounded the scientists of the world. He has discovered a new system of developing and imparting magnetic force. He believes the great power he has discovered lies dormant in every individual. He guarantees you can master its strange secrets at your own home and perform wonders of which you never dreamed. You can know at a glance the secret natures, talents, weaknesses, strength and vices of every person you meet. You can quickly develop marvelous physical and mental power, overcome all diseases in yourself or others, banish pain and bad habits without drugs or surgery. Professor Robertson can read your secret nature and influence your thoughts, though a thousand miles away. He can teach you how to do the same. This may seem incredible, but he absolutely guarantees this result under a forfeiture of $1,000.00 in gold. The power of hypnotism, persuasion, threats and entreaties pales into insignificance when compared with the wonders of this mighty force.

Professor Robertson calls his new discovery the "Ki-Magi" System of Personal Influence. You do not have to have subjects upon which to practice. Professor Robertson's instructions are so plain and explicit that you can read them carefully and at once use this great power secretly to influence and control the thoughts and desires of any one you wish. You will be startled and mystified at the wonderful things you can do; you will be astounded at the amazing power that you can exercise over others. Prominent ministers of the gospel, lawyers and business men have mastered Professor Robertson's new system, and they give it their highest indorsement.

S. I. Yetter, of Middletown, Pa., says: "Your 'Ki-Magi' System of Personal Influence has brought me that success in business for which I have been looking. It is the magnet that controls; there is no guesswork about it—it is a scientific fact. It has taught me to know and control myself as well as others."

Dr. H. H. Childs, Box No. 70, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "In your 'Ki-Magi' System of personal Influence I have found what I have for years searched for in vain. It has changed the whole trend of thought and given my life a new meaning. I feel younger and stronger every day. I find in it the key to business success."

Mrs. A. B. Egert, of 502 Woodland avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I do not see how any society woman can become a successful leader without a knowledge of the wonderful secrets imparted by the 'Ki-Magi' system."

Mr. George W. Howard, of 157 Beech street, Detroit, Mich., says: "By means of your 'Ki-Magi' system I have made some startling discoveries in the characters of my friends. It is far beyond my fondest expectations. It should be in the hands of every man and woman who wishes to achieve the greatest success in life."

We have just issued 8,000 copies of Professor Robertson's new book entitled "The Secret of Power." We propose to give these 8,000 copies away absolutely free to interested persons for the purpose of showing the startling possibilities of this great discovery. We want you to have one free. After you get one, tell your friend. He will want one also, but he must write at once if he gets in on our free distribution, as these books are going very fast. After 8,000 copies of this book are distributed everybody will want one. But they will cost money then. Remember, they cost you nothing now. THE OTHER WORLD AND THIS.

A compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature. By Augusta W. Fletcher, M. D. In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings. Price $1.50.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

By S. Weil. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents. This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion, that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and facts.

The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

JOYS BEYOND THE THRESHOLD

A Sequel to The To-morrow of Death.

By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French. The To-morrow of death was written to develop the idea of the principle of the permanence of the human soul after death, and its reincarnation in a chain of new beings, whose successive links are unrolled to the bosom of ethereal space. "Beyond the Threshold" continues on the same lines, enlarging and expanding the idea by reasons and considerations drawn from science and philosophy, claiming that the certainty of a new birth beyond our earthly end is the best means of arming ourselves against all weakness in the presence of death, and that the help offered by science and philosophy to that end is far superior to that of any of the existing religions. From beginning to end it is interesting, entertaining, instructive and fascinating, and whether one accepts it all or not, much will have been learned and much pleasure enjoyed in its perusal. Price, $1.25.

THE GOSPEL OF BUDDHA,

According to Old Records. By Dr. Paul Carus. A translation made from Japanese, under the auspices of the Rev. Shaku Soyer, delegate to the Parliament of Religions. Was published in Japan. Price, $1.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1902.

Oh, How Sly!

An association of fogies who are clinging to the skirts of the old skeleton of immaculate conception and Bible infallibility, under the name of the National Educational Association, while in session at Minneapolis recently, passed a very innocent little resolution which shows plainly which way the "God in the Constitution" and "Bible in public schools" element is blowing. The resolution expresses a "hope" and "wish" that public sentiment would permit the Bible to be read and studied in the public schools, if "only" as a "literary work of the highest and purest type," side by side with the "poetry and prose which it has inspired and in large part formed."

They wouldn't have it treated as a "theological book merely," of supreme religious authority, but only as a "masterpiece of literature." But they fail to state in that transparent resolution whether it should be the Catholic Bible or the Bible of Protestantism, or the Jewish Bible. Of course they speak of the English Bible.

Pray, why not put all the bibles of the world, translated into the English language, before our children and do away with so much arithmetic, spelling, writing, grammar, history, etc.? It isn't necessary for them to know how to do business(?) they can act automatically for the trusts, who are "special agents of Divine wisdom," to run the business of this earth and pass through or by all the experiences of this embodiment.

To this point the New York Sun rises to remark:

"Simply as a text book in English literature, the Bible would prove of little value in the public schools, even if religious opposition to its use was silenced. The schools are already overloaded with studies, to the great confusion of the minds of children. To be of any literary service the new method of teaching the Bible would have to be pursued so thoroughly that a radical transformation in the whole curriculum would be made necessary. Moreover, our public school teachers, well fitted as they may be to conduct the ordinary routine of elementary study, are conspicuously incompetent for this purely literary instruction. Their weakest point is on the literary side. Nor would the impression produced on children by the Bible be deep and permanent, as it has been on our race, if the singular sacred supremacy of the book was not also taught by the teacher. As 'a literature' merely, as man's book and not God's Book, it would be only a dry and tiresome study for the pupils. Its appeal to their imagination, to their sense of wonder, to their awe, would be gone if it was not presented to them as a supernatural production.

"The reason for the present greatly diminished familiarity with the Bible is obvious. The later criticism has removed from the Bible the supernatural distinction which made it the Eglish literary treasure house, for without deep religious faith in the Bible as the one veritable message of God to man it could never have reached the maintained the place of supremacy in our literature. Its vigorous English alone would never have preserved it as a book for the popular study and as a source of literary wealth. If it had only that excellence to recommend it, the Bible would have become, long ago, a practically obsolete book so far as concerns people who were religious and philological and merely literary students. Its life has been only in the vitality of the religious faith to which it was the 'Word of God.'"

The Protestant world has from time immemorial been trying to get their Bible read in the public schools because it was the "Word of God," and for the same length of time the Catholics have fought it. On the other hand the Catholics want to educate their children wholly at the parochial schools and the Protestants, through tinkering with the educational laws, have made it imperative that every child between certain ages shall attend the public schools a certain number of months each year, and, note their scheme, at the same time trying to force their Bible in the schools as a text book. Now they have degraded their book from its supreme position as the "Word of God" to simply a "masterpiece of English literature."

Any way to get it in. That is the object. But it will not work; there are as long-headed and shrewd, if not as cunning minds in opposition to such a move as the Catholic and independent world can produce, and our dear Protestant goody-goodies will be so convinced when it comes to the test.

The idea of mixing a certain kind of religion with our educational facilities and forcing upon the minds of children of unsectarian parents doctrines wholly obnoxious to them is one that strikes the thinking minds with a sensation of the remains of the notorious inquisitorial days, and receives the condemnation of our secular press.

A Word to the Wise.

A friend said to me just now: "Don't make any mistake about that Magazine of Mysteries. Its cloven foot is everywhere apparent. It is a two-faced, sanctimoniously religious, occult, Jesuit sheet." A word to the wise, etc.

GEO. A. BACON.

An Important Matter.

One of our correspondents, "Ralph Douglas," offers some suggestive thoughts concerning a subject of importance in its relation to Spiritualism.

It seems strange, yet it is true, there are Spiritualists, some of them mediums, who think the proper thing for mediums to do is to give themselves up entirely to spirit influence, become perfectly passive to receive whomsoever comes, and give forth whatsoever the "spirit" may choose to utter or dictate.

This method, to a certain class, is the very perfection of mediumship. Some seem so constituted, or have so schooled themselves, as to believe that it is wrong to refuse to act as the medium for any "spirit" who may wish to speak or act through them.

Why is it wrong to refuse to do for a "spirit" what you would assuredly refuse to do in answer to the wishes of any one on this side of life?

Why be "passive" to "spirits" more than to those in the fleshly habitation? Why treat a "spirit" that comes with lies, with more tender consideration than you would treat an earthly liar?

There are all sorts of "spirits," just as there are all sorts of humans here on earth. Vicious people and liars carry their vicious and lying propensities with them when they pass into the spirit world. Mediums are under no more obligation to welcome and harbor such characters in their mental and spiritual habitation or selfhood, than they are to welcome the same sort of characters to their earthly homes and firesides.

We may be helpful to such as need help, but not at the expense of our own mental, moral and spiritual being, such as is denoted and invited by a state of passivity, yielding ourselves as passive instruments for all sorts of spirits, in or out of the flesh.

We regard one's individuality as a supremely sacred thing, that may not be rightfully set aside or displaced by any being, "spirit" or other, in this world or any other. One who consents to such dethronement of his normal individuality, consents to a species of abnormalism which bears a strong resemblance, at least, to insanity.

How often has it been said of one temporarily mentally unbalanced, "He is out of his head." Is not this expressive of the condition of the individual in a state of trance induced by spirit hypnotism? Is it not at least a condition of semi-insanity?

But, by yielding consent to such control of one's mentality and one's physical organism, not knowing what may be said or done through his organism, he is morally responsible for the controlling spirit's words and acts, be they of whatever nature.

No person has a moral right to assume such responsibility as that.

Mentally and morally it is a crime against nature. It is a wrong against one's own spirit individuality.

No, we should always retain the power, and exercise the right to pass judgment upon that which we are about to say or do. It should be a previous or co-ordinate judgment, and not merely an after or post-judgment, to be of practical use.

And this implies the possession of self-control and the full use of our reasoning faculties—not in eclipse, or lost in sleep of unconsciousness.

We are not saying that high and good, wise and noble thoughts may not be given by one in a state of spirit-hypnotic trance.

We doubt the moral propriety of the method as an infringement of the rights of one's individuality—rights which should never be abnegated.

The throne of one's own individuality should never be abdicated. In this sacred realm every individual should ever reign in unbroken possession of his own mind, his own mental and moral being, his own spirit—himself.

Practical Future for Telepathy.

Under this heading the Chicago Cronicle utters some suggestive and interesting thoughts which point to a future use of telepathy that will do away not only with ordinary telegraphy and communication by telephone, but also the recently devised system of wireless telegraphy.

Says the Chronicle:

Even the most stubbornly materialistic scientists are now disposed to admit that the mental system of wireless telegraphy which is known as telepathy is no longer a theory but a fact. The experiments of Dr. Binet-Sangle have convinced the most tenacious objectors that the telepathic theory is veridical.

It is very likely, however, that if Mr. Marconi had not devised his apparatus for electrical signaling without wires the opposition to telepathy would still be stubborn. The materialists who now accept thought transmission as a fact do so upon the hypothesis that it is a species of Marconigraphy. That is to say, that the brains of the "agent" and the "percipient," as they are technically called, are in harmony—tuned to the same key—like the instruments of the wireless telegraph. In other words, that telepathy is a matter of molecular vibrations.

It makes no particular difference what the modus operandi of telepathy is so long as the fact itself is established, and we have apparently reached a point where its authenticity is no longer disputed by anyone.

The problem which now confronts psychologists is to render the power of thought transmission practicable and reliable instead of a rather rare and unreliable phenomena which is of small value, save for experimental purposes.

If the materialists are right in their hypothesis science should find some means of attuning two brains to the same number of vibrations just as two tuning forks are harmonized. When that is done we shall have wireless telegraphy without the intervention of Mr. Marconi or any other deviser of "coherers" and similar apparatus. The human brain will do it all.

Spiritual Baptism Heathenish.

New York, Sept. 7.—The Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur, at the 100th meeting in the "Evangel" tent to-day assailed the doctrine of baptism. He declared that the dropping of water on an infant at birth was heathenish, and the idea that God would forever condemn an innocent but unbaptized babe makes him a tyrant, a monster, and a demon. That utterance, coming from Dr. MacArthur, had a wonderful effect on his hearers. They rose to their feet and applauded wildly. The scene was striking.

"Baptism," he declared, "never saved a human soul. The doctrine of baptismal regeneration is both unreasonable and unscriptural. The superstitions that have gathered about infant baptism form one of the saddest chapters in church history. Thousands through all the ages have believed that a child dying without being baptized was eternally lost. This dark and dreary superstition has cast a gloom over the history of the church for centuries.

"This doctrine is heathenism pure and simple. The idea that God would forever condemn an innocent babe because some one had not put a few drops of water on its head and face makes God a tyrant, a monster, and a demon. Rather than believe in such a God I would be an avowed infidel.

"This doctrine of baptismal regeneration makes the minister of religion a worker of magic, a fakir, a performer of ecclesiastic miracles. Such teaching is a violation of all sound reason and true scripture teaching."

Obedience With a Variation.

According to press reports, John G. Frankenfield, a blacksmith and an elder in a church near Hereford, Pa., recently acted upon biblical advice in a startling manner. While reading the Bible at family prayers he read the sermon on the mount, including the command "If a man smite thee on the one cheek turn to him the other also," and, having closed the Bible, prepared for church. As he stepped from the door a tramp asked for food. Mr. Frankenfield returned to the kitchen and secured some sandwiches. These he offered to the man.

"I want coffee," insisted the tramp. "You cannot have it," said Mr. Frankenfield, and the tramp in return for his kindness struck him on the cheek. Remembering the Bible admonition, Mr. Frankenfield turned the other cheek and said:

"Strike me again."

The tramp did so. Without any further delay than to place his hymnbook on a chair Mr. Frankenfield resented the assault and thrashed the fellow until, bleeding and blackened, he ran away, upon which Mr. Frankenfield proceeded peaceably to church.

Correction.

In the notice of N. S. A. Convention in last issue of The Progressive Thinker the word "fee" was inadvertently omitted by the undersigned, which would give the impression to the reader that no one is to be admitted to the daily sessions. The sentence should be "No admission fee to the daily sessions." All are welcome.

MARY T. LONGLEY, Sec.

HOW MEN HAVE FOUGHT OFF THE BULLY, DEATH.

Great expectations are wrecked by the lack of longevity [F. L. Oswald in the Cincinnati Enquirer], as often as by the lack of luck. Our lives are mostly half-told tales. Before our fields of enterprise have time to ripen a harvest the season ends; the unrewarded toiler is overtaken by the night when no man can work.

There is no need of such disappointments, says Captain Edwin Dimont, of San Francisco. A plurality of our contemporaries, he maintains, have no real excuse for yielding to what they call the inevitable. Death is a bully, ever ready to collar the weak-kneed, but as apt to retreat if he sees a man advance with resolute strides and with fists clenched for a fight. People die at 70 or so because they have been taught to expect the end of their tether about that time. They stumble and drop for want of energy and think they are yielding to fate. It's just the same with a foot trip. A man can persuade himself to limit his daily promenade to a mile as the extreme of human endurance and will really feel the need of rest when the terminus of his self-appointed task comes in sight. Dudes may be seen collapsing into an arbor chair after making the circuit of a five-acre garden, while pioneers, starting out with a Pike's Peak or Bust sort of a resolution, have been known to finish a hundred miles' distance between camp and camp in a continuous spurt. They don't mind wayside deserts, but keep their eyes fixed on the distant mountain range, where they have a fair prospect of finding wood and water. The end of an ordinary journey may bring suggestions of needed repose, but for those who determine to push on, nature bottles up a reserve stock of staying power.

RESOLVED TO LIVE.

Acting on that hypothesis Captain D., 60 years ago, resolved to see the end of the nineteenth century. He was past 40 then—born 1797 or '99, according to two different accounts, which, however, agree to other data of his remarkable career—and up to that time had traveled in the beaten track of dietetic habits, though he abstained from alcoholic stimulants. There was no moral merit about that teetotal ism, he confesses; wine and beer had never had any temptation for him, and he did not vaunt his temperance; "would as soon have thought of priding himself on his abstinence of hasheesh." But he had begun to appreciate the value of life, and a sort of instinct told him that at the present rate of expenditure his fund of vitality would be exhausted in less than 20 years. "I resolved upon a change of programme," he says, "and didn't die, mainly because I had made up my mind to live. Mind is the principal thing."

He admits, however, that hygiene is a good second. Being somewhat subject to digestive troubles he reduced his meat rations and devoted one hour of each day to active exercise. A few years after he also renounced coffee, tea and "the superfluous third meal"—probably breakfast.

On those terms he has preserved his health ever since, and now, several years after the celebration of his centenary, is still able to walk 10 miles without a halt. His hand is steady, and his eyesight nearly as keen as 60 years ago, and the only symptom of advancing debility is the need of daylight naps. He falls asleep after dinner; in warm weather often nods in his chair after reading, writing or chatting for more than hour.

But he is convinced that only his change of habits has saved him from entering the Realms of Endless Slumber half a century ago.

LIMIT FOR REDEMPTION.

What is the limit of the chance for redemption? Dr. Boerhave held that heredity and the educational influences of the first 15 years decide a man's prospects of survival within one-tenth of the average, but Frederick the Great's physician agreed that his opportunity for prolonging his lease of life came after the completion of his fortieth year. He was an epicure, fond of interminable suppers, spiced with French pepper sauces, as well as with dare-devil table talk, and rather disliked outdoor exercise as a sanitary prescription. His father repeatedly predicted that flute player Fritz would be a weakling and perish of effeminacy. "Der effeminirte kerl soilte abdanken" he used to say. "That dude ought to renounce his right of succession; it's not worth training him for the few years he can be expected to last."

In 1756 the prediction seemed likely to be fulfilled. The King had become a confirmed dyspeptic, nervous, capricious, irascible and more than ever averse to physical efforts. But then came the seven years' war, with a programme of fatigues such as were never forced upon crowned soldier since the days of Mithridates. One by one his friends forsook him, but so did his blue devils, and when he had finally conquered Silesia he had also regained his health, for many years to come. He had then already passed the limit of his father's life-term, but contrived to live more than 20 years longer.

REMARKABLE CASE.

His brother Henry solved the same problem in the same way, but a still more remarkable case is that of Louis Cornaro, the son of a Venetian aristocrat who had gormandized himself to death in his forty-sixth year. Not a single one of Louis' five brothers got a chance to celebrate his fiftieth birthday. One died of a bowel complaint at 32, another of alcoholism at 40. Louis seemed booked for a similar trip, when the diagnosis of a medical friend scared him out of his temper, so much so, indeed, that he locked himself up in a solitary country cottage and passed three days and three nights in "feverish meditation."

He had pondered Hamlet's alternative and come to the conclusion that his forfeited chance of survival would have to be repurchased outside of a drug-store. Should he renounce wine, abstain from meat and all spices? His lights on those points were dim, but he resolved to keep sober for the rest of his life and never again to eat more than he could be sure to digest. Twelve ounces of solids and ten of wine seemed a scant allowance for a day of 24 hours, but on that stint Louis Cornaro not only regained his health, but reconciled its enjoyment with the astonishing rule to avoid physical exercise as much as possible. His plan seems to have been founded on the theory that life could be protracted by economizing the resources of vital vigor, i. e., by shunning fatigues and not burdening the digestive organs with an ounce more than the minimum needed to satisfy the demands of nature. He advised his converts to eat very slow and thoroughly masticate every fragment of food. "Mouthful" would have been a misleading expression in that case, for after their subdivision in three meals those 14 ounces cannot have filled more than a small tea-cup saucer. "If you should swallow your ration at one gulp," he says, "you will feel almost as hungry as before, but munch it in small installments while you are chatting or reading, to divert your mind, and you will be surprised to find on what moderate terms you can silence the clamors of actual hunger."

His "Discorso della vita sobria" was translated into a dozen different languages, not without the protests of epicures, but contradictions were refuted by an unanswerable argument. The prescription answered its purpose in the case of the prescribed. Louis Cornaro, born in June, 1467, lived to witness the rush for the Eldorados of a new world, the triumph of Copernicus, the rise of the Turkish world-power, the Protestant revolt, the battle of Pavia, and on his hundredth birthday wrote a preface to a new edition of his "Discorso."

He had added half a century to his probable life term and felt at liberty to retire, as from a task accomplished. In the summer of 1567 the white-haired little man once more took refuge in his Veronese country house to attend to the interests of his soul, after having conclusively demonstrated what even belated reform could do for the welfare of the body.

One of his disciples was Cardinal Kearny, who had already reached his seventieth year, when a quarrel with the Duke of Bourbon forced him to shoulder the burden of a party feud and finally a dead weight of administrative responsibilities. It was a question of comparative risks—abdicating and dying in exile or holding the fort against all foes, including old age and the peril of overwork. The old prelate decided to stand his ground, and within a couple of weeks had "adapted his habits to a state of siege." In order to gain time for extra work he postponed his dinner from four to six hours—nay, there were days when he did not sit down to table at all, and merely munch a few ounces of dried fruit while he perused the reports of his emissaries.

"What! Don't you drink any wine whatever?" asked his friend Crillon, after trying him with a dozen different bottles.

"I'm getting old and have to avoid babbling," said the cautious Chancellor, hinting at the custom of priming officials with liquor and then pumping for political information.

OPPONENTS WERE DISAPPOINTED.

His opponents fell back upon the hope of winning with the aid of time. They felt sure that the old factotum statesman would work himself to death in the course of a few months, but year after year passed and the political steam mill continued to grind away. The uncrowned ruler of France controlled both the Legislature and the Department of Foreign Affairs, supervised education and tried his hand at financial reforms. In his eighty-third year he added the functions of a Postmaster-General. His appetite for work, in fact, seemed to increase as his appreciation of made dishes diminished. With the culinary resources of the most luxurious court of Europe at his command he often abstained from fleshpots for weeks together, and would drink nothing stronger than orange water with a few drops of claret by way of compromise with the prejudice against unmixed pump products.

In his eighty-ninth year he was tripped by the misstep of a courtier who had volunteered to assist him upstairs, and, falling backward, struck his head against the marble floor with stunning force, but three days after was at his desk again, signing orders and dictating as if nothing had happened.

Quite a number of overcentenarians devoted their younger years to the culture of wild oats upon a rather extensive scale. Charles Macklin, the wealthy actor, seemed to waste his health on the short-and-merry life plan of proceedings, but changed his programme under the influence of brightening financial prospects, and with somewhat unforeseen results. Death appeared to have forgotten him altogether, as he expressed it, and he had certainly passed the century mark by several years when he assembled his friends to celebrate the establishment of the French Republic.

LONG LIFE CONVERSION'S REWARD.

Dr. Polotiman, of Plotiman, of Vandemont, in Lorraine, died February 8, 1825, in his 139th year, having burdened this planet nearly twice the excusable period of three score and ten, though through no fault of his own, if it is true that during the first three-quarters of a century he rarely went to bed sober, and often awoke in jail. The dread of lithotomy, if not of the law, eventually made him more careful, and he reached an age that would have enabled him to subsist on the donations of sightseers, to whom a facetious friend used to introduce him as "a sinner whose conversion has been rewarded with earthly immortality."

Rev. Waldemar Tegner, a kinsman of the famous poet, reached an age of 104 years after sanitary vicissitudes that would have ruined an ordinary constitution. As a poor student of theology he had to stint himself in food to keep out of debt, but found time to publish a dictionary of classic quotations that procured him an introduction to a wealthy nobleman and a subsequent engagement as a librarian and private tutor. In the latter capacity he toured Europe with the son of his patron. "There was no help for it," he writes. "I had signed a three years' contract, and had to take my place at every table d'hote, eating French ragouts, with no way of escape except death by indigestion."

After that ordeal the life of a quiet country parsonage seemed a blessed relief, and the ex-tutor outlived his pupils and all their children, because he "had no further excuse to be sick."

Christian Drakemberg, "the old man of the north," as the Germans called him, stopped drinking only when he became too poor to procure liquor. He was a native of Aarhuys, in Jutland, and in his 108th year was visited by a relief committee of his fellow citizens, but denied his age to avoid the risk of being clapped in a poorhouse. Being confronted with the proofs of the parish register he actually threatened suicide, but on a promise of liberty and a small yearly pension agreed to survive, and kept his word to the extent of 38 additional years.

While he was about it he also kept a pledge of total abstinence from brandywin, and died in 1712 at an age of 146 years and 4 months.

M'KINLEY AND CZOLGOSZ.

Poetic Vision of Their Meeting at the Traditional Golden Gate of Heaven.

I seem to see at Heaven's gate two men on entrance bent;
One was an assassin, the other a president.

The assassin in a stupor, or a dark and gloomy state,
Slow approaches old St. Peter for admission through the gate,
But before that aged watchman would permit him to pass through
He must pass upon his record for at least a year or two.
So he telephoned to central, but old Satan had the 'phone,
And replied that he must interview the victim all alone.
It just seemed that a description had been telepathed ahead
That upon a certain morning the assassin would be dead,
And as Satan "knows his victims," he was there ahead of time,
And had duly been apprised of the assassin's awful crime.

Then came Satan to St. Peter and thus spake with glad salute,
For his victim who was standing at the entrance, sad and mute:
"I am pleased, and at your service, and the fire is all aglow
In the special builded furnace where I cooked Booth and Guiteau."
Then St. Peter turned to Czolgosz to inform him of his fate,
And his eyes fell on McKinley standing just within the gate,
And his voice and smiling presence, unexpected at the time, Filled old Satan's burning bosom with emotions all sublime.
"I must beg your pardon, Peter, for my presence at your gate,
But I want to plead in heaven for this soul a better fate.
'Please do not let them hurt him,' for he surely is insane
On a subject he had pondered while upon the earthly plane;
He mistook me for a tyrant as a ruler of the poor,
And went crazy on the topic that to kill me was the cure."
In an instant Satan vanished and a light came from the skies,
And McKinley, calmly smiling, stood before Czolgosz's eyes;
Then a chorus of sweet voices sang the good old melody,
With McKinley—eyes uplifted—"Nearer, My God, to Thee."
The assassin's conscience smote him, and McKinley knew full well
That the poor, distracted spirit would not need a hotter hell.

Poor St. Peter sat in silence when this tragic scene had passed,
For a cloud of gloom and sorrow o'er his aged soul was cast; Knowing sinners in repentance would at once be made to see That old Satan is the conscience and from terror be set free
This would rob the dear old watchman of a soft eternal place,
And no wonder gloom and sorrow came upon St. Peter's face.
He had learned that Earth's religion had been changed in recent years,
And that love had well supplanted all the old-time hates and fears.
Thus in silence sat St. Peter, for he hated to complain,
And he knew his own dethronement meant a universal gain.

* * * * * * * *

Now I see McKinley lead his poor murderer to a spot
Where no sound could ever reach him; in a place that seemed forgot.
Here he, smiling, bows and leaves him to the gloom that is his own,
To the thoughts of his desertion in a desert, all alone.
There to think out his existence in the darkness of his soul;
There to ponder on his evil there to drink from his own bowl.
There he left him with his conscience that had battled all in vain
To direct a high vibration through his poor deluded brain.
For an age it seemed to Czolgosz while in darkness he remained
Only conscious of his error and the punishment obtained.
But at last, his soul so heavy that he thought he should expire,
It was then his early teachings of the preachers o'er him fell,
A great light loomed up before him like the flashing of a fire.
Of the sinners and the Savior ,and the everlasting hell.

* * * * * * * *

Now I see the noble spirit of the martyred one descend
From his home of light and beauty to his now repentant friend.
He seemed filled with deep emotion as he took the fellow's hand
And he lifted him up higher toward a bright and better land;
And again I hear the voices of the angels from their height,
They were singing with such sweetness
"Lead, Kindly Light."

* * * * * * * *

Each may have on earth his station
whether high or whether low,
Hell or heaven, his own creation, love and justice make it so.
Each one has his life to live, and each one has his real worth,
Each must take what life would give him, even out beyond the earth.

The Spiritualistic View That Follows.

Henry Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, makes a scorching attack on the New York exclusive set—the "four hundred," referring to them as a flock of "unclean birds." He says in part:

"The term 'smart set' was adopted by society to save itself from a more odious description. The distinguishing trait of the 'smart set' is its moral abandon. It makes a business of defying and overleaping conventional restraints, upon its pleasures and amusements. It sets itself above the law, both human and divine.

"Its women are equally depraved with its men. They know all the dirt the men know. They talk freely with the men of things forbidden the decent and virtuous. They read the worst French fiction. They see the worst French plays.

The women of this smart set no longer pretend to recognize virtue, even as a female accomplishment. Innocence is a badge of delinquency, a sign of the crude and raw, a deformity which, if tolerated at all, must carry some promise of amendment, for among these titled cyprians the one thing needful is to know it all.

"In London and in Paris and at Monte Carlo in the winter and at Trouville and Aix in the summer they make life one unending debauch; their only literary provender, when they read at all, the creeds of D'Annunzio and Bourget; their Mecca the roulette table and the race course; their heaven, the modern yacht, with its luxuries and isolation. The ocean tells no tales, and as the smart set knows no law, in extremis it can go to seni

"The 400 are rotten, through and through. They have not one redeeming feature. All their ends are achieved by money and largely by the unholy use of money. If one of them proposes to go into jingo politics he expects to buy his way, and the rogues who have seats in Congress or foreign appointments to sell see that he pays the price. If one of them wants to marry a lord she expects to buy him, and the titled rascals who wish to recoup their broken fortunes see that she pays the price.

"Must these unclean birds of gaudy and therefore of conspicuous plumage fly from gilded boughs to boughs, fouling the very air as they twitter their affectations of moral supremacy, and no one to shy a brick at them and say 'Seat you devils'?"

The above is a disgusting picture, and if true, the whole crowd is a disgrace to present civilization.

The Tribune draws another picture as follows:

"Mr. Henry Watterson's passionate, intemperance article about the 'smart set' requires some modification before persons who hold fact higher than fancy can be advised to read it. 'Before taking it should be well shaken'—and also well diluted. It is impossible with justice to characterize a whole class of individuals—out of jail—in the violent terms which Mr. Watterson has seen fit to adopt in speaking of the 'smart set.'

"If the so-called 'four hundred'—which, as a San Francisco paper says, is largely a figment of the imagination of newspapers—is understood to constitute the fashionable society of New York, it is inconceivable that it does not contain among its members some virtuous women and many upright, honorable men. There are among the fashionable people of New York a number of extremely foolish persons, and their silly actions are given publicity in the press. There are degenerate men who give monkey parties and unwise women who go to them. There are women whose names have come into the public prints in undesirable ways. There have been divorce scandals and other scandals, but it is worthy of notice that some who have figured in them have irretrievably lost caste and never have been restored to their former position in so-called fashionable society.

"On the other hand, there are among the pretended 'four hundred' a number of women of the finest character, who practice the religion they profess, who are devoted to charity and all good works, and whose names never are associated with anything that can be described as impure or 'unclean.' There are men, too, equally deserving of public esteem and confidence.

"To say that anybody who occupies a position in fashionable society is respectable is to run counter to the expressed ideas of a certain class of newspapers, but the fact remains that there are in fashionable society men and women who are as much devoted to good works and have as true a love for their neighbor as any individuals who can be found in unfashionable society. There are in the best society everywhere men and women who feel the responsibilities of wealth and who endeavor to administer it with some reference to their obligations to the community. Probably if confronted by some of the men and women belonging to the class Mr. Watterson has spoken of so abusively he would hesitate to repeat the extraordinary language he has seen fit to use.

"We hear much about the 'unclean birds,' although there are few of them. We do not hear much about the 'clean birds,' though there are many of them. They give no provocation to the newspaper reporters to write anything exciting about them. They are domestic—devoted to their families and private life. They do nothing to invite or demand publicity. They are the people who live unnoticed by the papers. The public hears the most about those concerning whom it would be well if it heard the least—the men and women who figure in the divorce courts and the press to their own disadvantage and to the disgust of honest people."

There comes, however, a spiritualistic view of these people more in harmony with the truth and common sense.

They are the legitimate evolution of wealth, luxury, and a perverted view of life.

They are just what circumstances have made them—nothing more—nothing less.

Each one has an immortal soul that will live through the unending ages of eternity.

Each day in the life of this vast aggregation of riches, adds either darkness or brightness, beauty or hideousness to the soul of each one.

The present is evolving in some respects the future life for all.

The one who is the custodian of great wealth, possesses the inherent power to do a great deal of good to the world, and if he fail to do that, just in that degree he is recreant to justice and right, and must in a measure suffer therefor.

The sin of omission is no trifling matter in the world of cause and effect—in a world where there is so much suffering and misery.

Great wealth implies great responsibility—great responsibility to those who are struggling in sickness, poverty and misery.

If these wealthy nabobs carried out the spiritualistic idea, their great wealth would be diverted at once from the luxurious life now prevailing, and would be wholly directed towards making life more pleasant and happy for those bowed down with poverty. When they awaken in spirit life, their earthly wealth will have faded, and they will find themselves in the possession of just as much spiritual wealth as they have actually earned. Many of them will find themselves poor indeed in the spirit realms—far below many who were poverty-stricken on earth, and then they will fully realize that they are reaping just what they have sown.

While these aristocrats are not as bad as portrayed by Henry Watterson, and some of them not quite as good as represented by the Tribune, possessing the "finest character," none of them come up to the highest conception of the ideal men and women, as pictured by the Spiritualist.

The time will come when to possess great wealth will be recognized as a crime, unless wisely used to promote the happiness of those less fortunate.

Hon. A. Gaston.

Under his management Lily Dale Camp has been exceptionally prosperous and well liked—probably the most popular camp in the United States. That is enough to say in praise of Mr. Gaston. Success always speaks for itself. The lady who succeeds him, as president, will endeavor, no doubt, to make the camp still more attractive and useful, and thus continue the good work. The new officers have our best wishes.

Dr. Wilder's Tribute.

That distinguished medical author, Alexander Wilder, A.M., M.D., was so charmed with Dr. Bland's book, "In the World Celestial," that he wrote a beautiful review of it for the Metaphysical Magazine, and as Mr. B. O. Flower did in the Arena, he prefaces his review by a high tribute to the author. He says: "The author of this book, Dr. Bland, has been an able champion of liberal thought and personal freedom for almost half a century, and his truthfulness and integrity are beyond question." The book contains such a marvelous revelation of the spiritual world, that did it come from the pen of a less reliable writer, most readers would regard it as a beautiful fiction; but Dr. Bland's statement that it is not fiction but fact, settles the question, and gives his book great value as a contribution to the literature of Spiritualism.

A Prominent Spiritualist Passes On

Milton Rathbun, a well-known hay and grain merchant of New York City, and for many years a firm believer in spirit return, passed away early Sunday morning, September 7th, at Riverhead, Long Island. He had arrived there with Mrs. Rathbun and his two sons on September 1st, and in the evening was seized with a severe pain, which the doctor pronounced due to gall-stones. He rallied steadily until Saturday, when at 3 a.m. he was seized with another severe attack caused by peritonitis. A specialist who was summoned from Southampton arrived about 3 p.m., and pronounced the patient dying. He passed from the body that night, at 1 o'clock, but felt even in the last hours that death was only a change in life, and expressed his admiration that the life of this world should blossom out into the glorious flower of eternity.

Mr. Rathbun was born at Verona, near Rome, New York, August 3rd, 1844. In the winter of 1857 and 58 he removed with his parents and brothers to Springfield, and in 1860 he came to New York where he was employed in the grain business at the same building that the Milton Rathbun Company now occupy. In 1873 he married Harriet Lee Fales, of Bellport, Long Island. The family lived in New York until 1884, when they removed to the suburban town of Mount Vernon, their present home. A little over a year ago he reorganized his business into a stock company on a profit-sharing basis. From the time that he was eighteen years of age, Mr. Rathbun had been interested in Spiritualism. He actively aided the movement. His house was often used for meetings and many well-known lecturers and mediums, during their stay in New York, were entertained in his home.

Mrs. Russigue, Mr. Lyman C. Howe, and Rev. Charles H. Pennoyer, the Universalist minister of Mount Vernon, speak at the funeral, which takes place at Willard Hall this afternoon.

Reports of Camp Meetings.

We are always glad to publish brief reports of the various camp meetings. They should be sent in during the camp, or on the day of its ending. We will not publish reports sent in several days after the camp has adjourned. If the officers of any camp are not interested enough in the same to secure prompt reports to go forth to our 40,000 readers, then they lack interest in the cause.

TEACHING.

It Is the Noblest of the Arts.

Nature is the great teacher. The inventor resorts to nature for his models. To imitate nature is the ambition of the artist. It is only the natural that is enduring. The new child-study is based on further discovery in nature.

All the advanced light brought to earth through the mediumship of Modern Spiritualism is from a newly discovered storehouse discerned in the wonderful realms of this great mistress of the universe. All the college and church progress comes from a better learning of nature's ways.

All of the true students of progress are such as have procured a divorce from the supernatural, and have thus been enabled to go up a step higher. At last the world is learning of a natural heaven.

The time will probably never come when there will not be more to learn about the nature of man, it may be centuries before all the earth family will have been grown up to the plane of the natural, but the leaven will doubtless at last leaven the whole lump.

The present-day teacher is a new model. He must know a great deal before attempting to teach a little. He must possess more enlightenment to teach the first and second grades of the public school than is required of the teacher in the seventh and eighth grades. Mistakes in the lower grades mean subsequent difficulty.

The present-day teacher is no longer content to simply ask the questions at the bottom of the text-book page. He has the lesson in advance in his mind; and calls first on a student in the class, or varies the program and asks for a volunteer to tell, in his own language, the subject of the lesson and what he knows about it. When all the members are sufficiently called out, he closes by telling what he knows about it. He allows discussion in the class. The enthusiasm of the teacher incites the same in the class. If the teacher is apt in it, he adds meaning by an amusing anecdote. He has the interest and attention of the students. Teachers necessarily vary according to their varying natures. New tact is always in demand.

Some teaching, on certain subjects, is best done by lecturing. There is subjective and objective teaching. The subjective is by theory. The objective is the most expensive, as it takes money to purchase the illustrative objects. Mathematics is largely done on the blackboard. Music is by theory, imitation and hearing.

In the past the classes have been too large. This fault is gradually being corrected. As money comes in more freely more teachers are employed. The gulf between tacher and student is lessening.

It is being recognized more and more that the compulsory study of the foreign languages on students that have neither taste nor talent for them, creates distaste for knowledge in general. The increasing growth of elective courses indicates the growth of this special reform.

Another excellent and practical reform is the manual training department, and it is getting into the higher institutions. In the total abolition of capital punishment it is being learned they went too fast. They now recommend some physical punishment as being preferable to the disgrace of a discharge. They have many new school governmental ideas that are not so humiliating, yet are effective.

Lincoln said he couldn't learn the meaning of the word demonstrate. He unavailingly searched the dictionaries. He desired to teach. He felt he had something to say. How to demonstrate his ideas and not be misunderstood was the question. Had he lived in the present time the mists would have been cleared away.

There may be none of these thoughts that will be new to any of your readers. It is not easy to always be fresh.

Robert G. Ingersoll is among the greatest of teachers. Every human being is a teacher. The tiny infant teaches by enlisting a very great degree of interest for his present and future welfare. The fallen man teaches as a pitiable object whose course should be avoided. Most of human knowledge arises from experience and observation. Pride teaches. It spurs on to new effort. Dr. Franklin said he had tried all his life to cure himself of his pride; and when he got it cured he was proud to think he had cured it. Said pride was natural. It might be changed but could not be killed.

Beauty is another teacher. It suggests the thought of perfection. The gossips teach. It causes the reflection of what brilliant society people these would have been had they been reared under better circumstances. Dignity teaches by its appearance of composure.

History is a great teacher. It tells of our ancestors, what they did, and under what circumstances; and helps to present guidance.

Poetry is a lofty, profound and entertaining teacher. It grasps the elevating, the contrast, the soul-felt and sublime, and weaves it all into strains restful and inspiring. It is logic without the cumbersomeness of logic; and music without the presence of the musician.

A word about the Spiritualist College faculty. At present the college is a little seed planted. Water, sunshine, and wise care of the plant is the need, first, last, and all the time. The faculty to start it is large enough. It is informed in the requisite understanding, beneficent, and is experienced in the work that is the aim of the important undertaking.

Moses Hull has knowledge, subdued enthusiasm, far sightedness, moderation, self-control, a pleasant disposition, fearlessness of tenets that are strong only through age, conservative enough to conserve the useful whether old or new, a delicate conception of the work before him, and rich qualifications for it.

A. J. Weaver, in charge of the psychic department, is probably better qualified for that position than any other man in the United States. His equipments are of unusual depth, he has agreeable manners, and a character above reproach.

Mattie E. Hull will make a delightful mother of the whole institution. She has passed through every phase of Modern Spiritualism and has never lost her head. Her whole nature is refinement itself. Is quick to learn and apt in execution. Her presence is an inspiration.

Mrs. Jahnke is a graduate of the largest and best oratorical college in America: is open, frank, and large-hearted, and possessed of the right degree of enthusiasm to infuse the students with a spirit of study and interest. She could hardly be placed where she would not be valuable.

The other assistants are not yet fully decided on, but will be selected with a view to efficiency and needs.

It would not do to omit mention of Clara Stewart, the secretary, who is a lady of superior judgment, and almost a professor herself.

THE REGULARS AT WORK,

Trying to Suppress Spirit Healers in Florida.

August Buesing, of Jacksonville, comes to the front with the following vigorous address:

State Legislature.—Gentlemen:—The advocates of Chapter 4, Division 1, Title XI, of the Revised Statute of the State of Florida tells us that it will secure the observance of suitable regulations for health. For example, it will force healers out of business; it will promote the pecuniary interest of the medical trust combination.

2d. It will secure the sale of prescription for drugs by doctors so much so that it will multiply the fee of physicians.

It is but fair to say that the medical trust combination to-day claims under said chapter 4, the liberty and vested rights of American citizens as its exclusive property. It considers itself the superior of the people, and every other person inferior in power, skill and ability. It demands of American citizens when assailed by disease to employ none others but members of the medical trust combination, although people of immature age died every day under medical treatment and not from failure to accept the same. Should your neighbor, your wife or child in the night awake with pain and ask you for aid or ask you to procure some remedy you must cruelly deny them. If you do not, to jail you go for practicing medicine without a license.

Should you see a person fall in the street, if you pour oil on his bruises, to jail you go for practicing medicine without a license. To allow them thus to monopolize the healing trade and close the gates to progress is an outrage upon suffering humanity. To destroy competition of healing by means of their trust combination is an outrage, and should be restricted and be done away with. The public no longer endorses those outrageous laws, and you must annul them. Such change can not come any too soon.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL AND SPECIAL PRIVILEGES FOR NONE.

Suppose that every other trade and labor combination of the country would demand special laws enacted in their favor similar to that of the medical trust? Suppose the tailor trust demanded a law that would compel citizens to recognize them as their superior and consider themselves as utterly inferior, a law under which it had proven to prevent every citizen from engaging in the business of sewing buttons on clothes or upon being caught in the act of sewing without the consent of the tailor trust, place the victim in jail.

This illustrates precisely the scheme under which the medical trust controls and regulates its business, destroys competition, forces rivals out of business and claims the liberty and opportunities of citizens as its exclusive property, an important move in the battle for control of the medical trust over citizens.

That no person dare, without the consent of the trust, engage in the same business of the trust, should be regarded a scheme of robbery. How could such a policy be defended? That could not well be sustained in theory, practice or law? State, county and city authorities can not legally infringe on people's rights, nor can it invest the trust with rights that would give them power to prohibit every person from engaging without the consent of the trust in the same business of the trust. Such laws actually have established a crown monarch of the state of Florida, whose actions are not subject to review. It has established a medical monopoly. Infringements on popular rights are illegal and unconstitutional. Such laws deprive citizens of rights, privileges and opportunities secured by the constitution. We have abundance of proof that in the past just such unconstitutional laws were enacted simply to oppress the citizens and promote the interest of the medical trust monopoly, who, under the law became the crowned monarch of the state of Florida. It reduces the president of the United States and the governor of the state as their inferiors. It drags the governor and president as a willing slave behind them in their triumphal march.

Chapter 4, Division 1, Title XI, of the Revised Statutes of the State of Florida, relating to the appointment of medical examiners, power, duty, etc., has closed the gate to progress. The worst of this law is, that it helps to pauperize thousands of citizens.

American citizens ask you to prescribe measures of relief in this case and follow the path marked out by The Advocate of Common Sense.

It has been the habit of government officials to promote the pecuniary interests of the medical trust to the detriment of citizens; a method against which the public intelligence rebels, a class which, in the past in a most outrageous manner made a great outcry against the noble labor of healers. The medical trust combination evidently is unable to maintain themselves in fair competition against new ideas and healing and has invoked the power of the law to check the growth and spread of a superior healing art by punishing all who dare to teach, act and heal upon the glowing fresh truths that develop every year, every day and every hour in the emancipated intellect of the 20th century. The pretense that the public welfare is interested in maintaining the exclusive authority of the medical trust combination and their efforts is the last nail to their coffin. The old prejudices against natural, spiritual and mental healers have died.

Citizens are forced to recognize personal and individual rights the medical man's property. The medical man, under the law, is ownership and confiscation. But the end of medical slavery is in sight. Citizens are shocked beyond human measures to see the pecuniary interest of the medical trust promoted and healers' methods annihilated. The fact that every step made by the medical trust towards the establishment of a monopoly is an encroachment on popular rights of the masses.

What is the cause for joy, fright, ignorance, worry, fear, suicide, despondency, sickness, health and happiness? In what manner the Spirit manifests itself through the nervous and muscular apparatus, the human body? Why does thus the body transform into the handbook of phrenology? How could you receive knowledge concerning cause and cure of joy, fright, ignorance, sickness, etc., etc., from the study of anatomy, drugs, physiology, surgery and chemistry? Why should those sciences constitute the base of the medical system when they in fact utterly fail to throw light upon cause and cure of disease? If it throws no more light upon cause and cure of disease than what a grave at the cemetery does, then why would you place healers under the control of the medical trust combination examining boards? Why would you thus deny citizens the right to secure health under healers' methods?

"The Spiritualism of Nature." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

The Divine Quest,

Or, the Age-long Dream of the Fraternal State.

"Old legends tell us of a Golden Age,
When earth was guiltless,—gods the guests of men,
Ere sin had dimmed the heart's illumined page,
And prophet-voices say 'twill come Again.
O happy age! when Love shall rule the heart,
And time to live shall be the poor man's dower."

—Gerald Massey.

It has been said that the dreams that nations dream come true; and certain it is that great moral or ethical ideals, which haunt the brains of earth's noblest sons and persist from age to age, gaining in fulness, clearness, and symmetry as through successive civilizations they are handed down by the apostles of progress, are destined to be realized precisely in proportion as the mind of the people becomes awakened and the moral nature gains ascendency over animal instincts and selfish desires.

The dream of the Fraternal State is older than civilization. In its earlier expression it came as a haunting memory of a half-forgotten dream, the fascinating wonder-story of an Elysium or an Edenic State, long since lost but some day to be regained. Far back in the dim past, where myths are mingled with facts and history is interwoven with legends, the student of human life is often startled by the prescience of the poets, prophets, and philosophers, as, while vaguely voicing the heart-hunger and hopes of humanity, they touch upon the great fundamental or basic principles that must be recognized by man and become the basis of social government in any civilization that endures—such as the solidarity of the race, the brotherhood of man, justice to all, equality of opportunity and privilege, and that love that makes justice a passion in the hearts of men.

These basic truths came vaguely at first before the minds even of the greatest prophets, philosophers, and lawgivers. They were at best but partial appearances, but gleams of light, but flashes of the fundamental verities, that for many ages did not extend beyond tribes, nations, or races. Later the underlying principles of enduring progress gradually assumed nobler proportions; and as the years vanished there arose from time to time great lawgivers, such as Moses and Solon, who not only voiced the best ideals of justice present among their people, but at times revealed the presence of inspirational glimpses far in advance of their age, who in a more or less enlightened manner sought to emphasize the duties of society to its less fortunate children, and thus expressing in a degree at least the fraternal spirit that is the thread of gold extending along the highway of progress and broadening and brightening as civilization moves toward the day.

A striking example of this character is furnished by the ancient Athenian statesman, Pisistratus, who on coming into power found the city thronged with beggars. Poverty flaunted itself on every hand, and, as men must eat to live, crime went hand in hand with starvation.

"Why do you not work and earn a home, food, and raiment?" inquired the ruler.

"We have no opportunity," came the prompt reply.

"There is plenty of idle land."

"True, but what would result if the poor man attempted to till it without the permission of those who claim to own it; and if the land was free, how could we earn a livelihood without a penny wherewith to buy seeds, tools, or beasts to till the soil?"

There was justice in the reply, and the statesman at once set to work to portion out the idle land around Athens. The seeds, tools, and beasts necessary for cultivation were furnished the poor of Athens by the State, after which the ruler forbade begging in the city. As a result uninvited poverty disappeared; the idle land yielded abundantly; all the people were blessed through the plenteous harvests; the class that had been a burden became prosperous, independent, and a blessing to the State. Such, indeed, was the transformation that for long generations men were wont to speak of the Golden Age of Pisistratus.

At a later date Plato presented a far higher and broader vision of social justice than had hitherto been voiced by poet, philosopher, or idealist—a vision limited in a degree by the circumscribed horizon of the civilization of the age in which it was born, but, time and circumstances considered, marvelous in its philosophic breadth of thought, in its prophetic reach into the distant future, and in its grasp of certain great fundamental truths upon which the laws of civilization and progress depend. Plato was followed by Cicero and others who evidently gained inspiration and ideals from the master mind of Hellas.

The noble idealism of Plato was complemented by luminous glimpses of truth from certain leaders of that austere and prosaic school of thinkers, the Stoics. Thus, for example, we find Epictetus impressing upon his disciples ethical verities and rules of conduct, which prove that the basic law of the solidarity of society and the mutual dependence of all the units that make up the State, which is now for the first time taking hold of the popular imagination in a large way, was thus early apprehended by this philosopher. On one occasion Epictetus said:

"You are citizens of the Universe, and a part of it; not a subordinate but a principal part. You are capable of comprehending the divine economy and considering the connection of things. What does the character of a citizen imply? To hold no private interest; to deliberate of nothing as a separate individual, but rather like the hand or the foot, which if they had reason and comprehended the conditions of Nature would never presume or desire but with reference to the whole."

The luminous flashes of truth and the illustrations of sincere attempts of lawgivers and rulers to incorporate into practice nobler dreams and ideals far in advance of their age were, however, only isolated examples of the presence of a gleam of the larger law of life that foreshadowed the rise of justice and the advent of the spirit of fraternity. But until the coming of the Great Nazarene these were but solitary voices crying in the wilderness of life—iconoclastic utterances spoken in an almost unknown tongue; because no thought was more foreign to the great peoples of earth than that of a common origin of life, or that all men were brothers. The Jew was proud and exclusive, confident that he belonged to a peculiar people who were the special object of the affection of Deity. All other nations were called Gentiles—as a term of reproach. To him they were common and unclean. To the Greek all save the Hellenes were barbarians; while nowhere was found greater self-satisfaction or a more pronounced feeling of superiority than among the free citizens of Imperial Rome.

It remained for Jesus to declare the solidarity of life. He and his accredited disciples laid broad and deep the foundations of the Fraternal State when they taught that all races and peoples sprang from a common source of being, from One Father; that that Father was no respecter of persons, and whose impartiality was beautifully symbolized by the sun, dew, and rain, which refreshed and nourished alike the tree, fruit, flower, and the wayside weed.

In the teachings of Jesus and the Gospels that his disciples proclaimed, Deity no longer dwelt apart from man—cold, indifferent, and cynical. No; He was at all times to be considered as the All-Father. Hence followed the necessary corollary that all men were brothers. Moreover, Jesus in the Golden Rule and in his code of ethics rendered the Fraternal State inevitable so soon as society would or could accept his teachings in a life-molding or compelling way.

In the teachings of the New Testament this great fact of the common source of life is constantly dwelt upon. Thus we are told that "God made of one blood all nations of men" (Acts xvii. 24-26); and again that "There is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all" (Eph. iv. 4-6).

Here was a conception of Deity strange and revolutionary alike to Jew, Greek, and Roman. True, to the former the idea of one God was nothing new; but the doctrine that this Deity was a common Father of all men, and not a respecter of persons, was as wholly revolutionary and inimical to Jewish racial prejudice and to all preconceived ideas as it was fundamental to a true scientific conception of a Fraternal State or a love-knit federated world; while to the Romans and Greeks monotheism was revolutionary. In the Pantheon were rival and warring gods and goddesses. Hatred and discord were not unknown to Olympia. (Jealousy and struggle and unrest were the heritage of gods as well as of men.) Into this confused thought-world came the new declaration of a common origin of life, of a Deity who was a Father, and whose love encompassed and enfolded all mankind.

If God is Father of all, and if He made of one blood all nations, then all men are brothers or comrades and neighbors, to be loved and cared for even as one loves himself; and, lest men should in after years deny their obligations to those whom in their pride they might consider their inferiors, Jesus gave a striking illustration of who is the "neighbor" in the beautiful parable of the good Samaritan. And when the apostles went forth to preach it was to the once despised Gentile as well as to the Jew that they carried this wonderful new evangel of love-knit fraternity. No man henceforth was to be called common or unclean. And how pregnant with the vital spirit of the Fraternal State are the ethical teachings of Jesus and his disciples!—

"All things, therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." (Matt. vii. 12). "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." [This last command is solemnly repeated by the apostle Paul, who in his letter to the Galatians (v. 14) says: "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: that thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."]

"Render to no man evil for evil. . . . If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink. . . . Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Romans xii. 17, 20, 21.)

"He that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. . . . Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." (Romans xiii. 8-10.)

"Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee." (Luke xiv. 12, 13.)

It will be seen that the key-note of Christ's law of conduct is found in that all-comprehending Love that goes out to all mankind, and most freely of all to the poor, the down-trodden, the oppressed, and the unfortunate ones. His life also grandly filled the measure of his teachings. Possessed of marvelous insight and power, with life's trials and temptations on every hand, he denied himself a home and the common comforts of life, that he might mingle with the lowly, the sick, the afflicted and sin-burdened, and help them. To the woman taken in sin he cries, "Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more." To the leper, instead of drawing back with aversion, he goes forward and touches his decayed flesh, saying, "I will; be thou made clean." In the presence of the heart-broken sister of his friend, Lazarus, Jesus wept. Always and at all times, not only the idea of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, but also a passionate love for life's unfortunate ones, gleamed and glowed from his life.

Jesus did not pretend to expound a theory of social government. He knew that there could be no such thing as a Fraternal State until man came to a recognition of the solidarity of life—till he accepted the great fundamental truth of the brotherhood of man, with all it implied. He knew, furthermore, that the Golden Rule and the laws of conduct that he broadly outlined must take a firm hold of a considerable part of society before a government based on liberty, love, justice, and equality of opportunity would be possible. Therefore, he addressed himself primarily to the individual, but at the same time he laid broad and deep the foundations of the Fraternal State, teaching laws of conduct that, if lived up to by his disciples, would create a social state that would blossom in the beauty of justice and love whenever a people became Christian in deed as well as in name.

The early Church, ere it began to compromise with the self-seeking spirit of the Jewish and the pagan world, translated the spirit of Jesus' teachings into life; for we are told that—

"The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common." (Acts iv. 32.)

And again:

"Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need." (Acts iv. 34, 35.)

It was not to be expected that a philosophy of life so radically revolutionary and opposed to popular prejudice and to the passions and ambitions of the rich and powerful of earth would make instant headway. But the magnificent attempt of the early Church to carry out the luminous ethics of Jesus in daily life must ever remain a golden moment in the history of human ascent, and an inspiration as well as proof positive of the intent of Jesus and his disciples to carry the religion of Fraternity at least into the lives of all who claimed to be the followers of the Great Nazarene. The revolutionary theory, however, was ere long choked by the tares of worldliness, the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life. The Church sought to win over the State. Compromises followed, with the result that the Church became far more secular than the world became, in a true sense, Christianized. And Rome, corrupt, brutalized, and enervated, reeled forward like a drunken colossus toward her ruin. The northern Barbarians overpowered the Mistress of the World, and then came that long night-time of feudalistic anarchy which we call the Dark Ages—a time of war, turmoil, strife, and slaughter. Lords, barons, chiefs, and petty kings warred against one another and despoiled the lands of their adversaries. Society was divided into three classes—small groups of masters or rulers, the retainers, and the serfs. The latter slaved to create wealth to enrich the lords and to support the retainers.

It was a time of eclipse for learning, science, art, and progress, in the large or modern sense of those terms. Interminable strife and social anarchy paralyzed society, retarded development, and overcast Europe like a mighty pall.

At length, however, a change stole over Western civilization. There came a new awakening, so deep and profound that it touched life on every side. The Dark Ages faded before the light of Modern Times. Again the dream of the Fraternal State came into bold relief against the dark background of oppression, greed, and selfishness that prevailed; and with the new impetus in the ideal world came a startling story of the strange socialistic civilization of the Incas found in the newly-discovered Western world.—B. Interesting Experiences with Mrs. Vestal.

To the Editor:—I wish to give a little attention to a few things of importance that transpired during my three weeks' visit to Camp Chesterfield, Ind.

I think I never saw this camp when it seemed so perfectly beautiful as it did this season, and the pleasant greetings that met one on every hand, from the president to the most common of the visitors, and the very atmosphere seemed to be filled with harmony, and everything moved along smoothly. Now as to my experience with the phenomena, which was quite extensive and interesting, I will give one in Maggie Vestal's seance. It was of more than the ordinary on account of the trick I played on the medium.

My wife and I sat down, and as the medium closed the door we took the trumpets out of the circle and placed them behind us to see what we would get. More than twenty voices of friends and others came and told us we could take the tin horns and throw them out of the windows if we so desired; that they wanted us to distinctly understand that this was no tin-horn business, and they did not need them. Everyone of the spirits talked independent, and at the close Dr. Abbott came and closed the seance with an eloquent address. He also referred to the setting out of the trumpets, and urged me very earnestly to be sure and write to The Progressive Thinker. I promised him I would do so. He said he was glad that I did it, because he said it gave them more strength, and virtually removed all doubt as to the medium using the trumpets. He said that there was a class of people that always thought the medium was unable to do the work without the trumpet, but he wanted all to know that this was strictly a Spiritual work, and that it had come to stay. I might give a great many interesting things that occurred during my visit to the camp, but fear to intrude farther on your valuable space. Will say one word to all Spiritualists: Strive hard to rise above the frivolous things which are so detrimental to Spiritualism. I believe the time is fast approaching that the people generally will accept our proposition, that Spirit return is true, and that communication with our departed friends is not only possible but true.

SPIRIT FORCES.

The mad rush of the waves in its onward sweep,
As it seeks the ocean bed,
Heralds the call of God's hosts that keep Watch over the sleeping dead;
And the tireless wing of the eagle's flight
Through the dome of a viewless sky,
Leaves in its wake warm seas of light
That lifts great souls on high.

The world in its struggle for might and power,
In its battles that seethe and rend,
Fills up its short day and troublesome hour,
And finds at the grave an end.
But the wing of the eagle and the water's mad rush
Have each a purpose to fulfill;
They paint with the skill of an artist's brush
The lessons of a Master's will.

Time but marks eternity's swift rounds;
The days and the years and races past;
But the range of the soul has no limit or bounds
That the cycle of years can blast.
The sweep of the eye poesy hurled
Can grasp but a margin at best,
Of the forces in the bosom of this beautiful world
In the soul of each mortal breast.

Temple Heights Camp, Me.

After a very pleasant session of one week the twentieth annual session of the Temple Heights Spiritual Corporation closed at their beautiful grounds on the shores of the Penobscot Bay in Northport, with the closing of the month of August. Aside from one day of bad weather the camp was showered with sunshine, both earthly and heavenly, while the attendance and the good work done, was but the result of perfect harmony and a general working together of all the forces with the aid of the unseen powers.

The meetings opened on Sunday, August 24th, with an address in the morning by Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, of Westfield, New York, and in the afternoon another address was given by Harrison D. Barrett, of Boston. A similar program was given on Monday, but on Tuesday Mrs. Twing, lectured both morning and afternoon, owing to Mr. Barrett's inability by reason of illness.

Wednesday forenoon was devoted to a meeting at which the Grand Army from this section of the state were invited and when they had well filled the large auditorium, a pleasing address of welcome was given by Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, with remarks by Harrison D. Barrett and Fred A. Wiggin, of Boston, and the remainder of the program by the Grand Army "boys," which proved very interesting. In the afternoon Fred A. Wiggin gave a pleasing lecture followed by his famous ballot tests.

The addresses of Thursday were given by Harrison D. Barrett and Fred A. Wiggin, and on Friday morning a meeting of the State Association was held, with addresses by Mrs. Sarah Jordan Clifford, of Stockton, president of the State Association, and several others, proving a very interesting session, and a large sum of money being raised for state work. In the afternoon Fred A. Wiggin delivered a pleasing lecture.

Saturday and Sunday addresses were given in the morning of each by Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, and in the afternoon by Fred A. Wiggin. Sunday the last day was a model one, and the attendance was large, while that during the week was very gratifying to the management. On Wednesday and Friday evenings Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing gave an hour and more to tests in the auditorium, charging a small fee for the benefit of the corporation. The attendance was very good and interest at the best, while the tests by Fred A. Wiggin at the close of each lecture were not only interesting but received with much enthusiasm by his hearers.

Social meetings were held each morning and at these many of the young mediums appeared on the platforms and spoke with every encouragement. Circles were held in the evenings at the various cottages and the week of meetings was a delightful one. On Thursday evening, the annual mid-week concert was given on the grounds, and on Saturday evening, the Ladies' Aid Society held their annual fair and entertainment, both of which proved interesting, and financially as well as otherwise were a great success.

Mrs. Nellie Kneeland, of Boston, furnished the music this season, combined with congregational singing. The accommodations on the grounds were better than ever before and the transportation lines, giving reduced rates, while the easy means of access assisted in promoting the interest of the grounds.

At the business meeting, the re-election of practically the same board of officers, proved the choice in working for the welfare of the grounds, and they are as follows: President, B. M. Bradbury, Fairfield; secretary, Orrin Dickey, Belfast; vice-president, A. H. Blackington, Rockland; treasurer, A. E. Clark, Belfast.

Directors: A. H. Blackington, Rockland; Dr. M. R. Webber, Fairfield; A. T. Stevens, Belfast; George W. Morse, Belmont, Mrs. N. H. Rhoades, Rockland, Albert J. Skidmore, Liberty; Mrs. M. W. Williams, Providence, R. I.

The Ladies' Aid Society made choice of the following officers: President, Mrs. George W. Morse, Belmont; secretary, Miss Ellen Smiley, Newport; treasurer, Mrs. J. P. Stearns, South La-Grange.

It is probable that nearly the same speakers will come again at the session next year and that the meeting will be held earlier in the month. Much has been done by the Ladies' Aid toward improving the grounds during the past year, among other things being the building of a fine new waiting room on the wharf. Plans are now in order for a very successful session next year and it is very probable that the present auditorium will be rebuilt and a fine floor laid so that it can be used for gatherings of various kinds aside from the meetings.

One cottage is now in course of erection since the meetings and others are to go up before another session, so that the outlook with several lots sold is most encouraging. A faster steamer will make landings at the Heights next year and the outlook for this spot is very encouraging. The natural advantages combined with what has been done this year and what will be done the coming year will tend to make Temple Heights one of the leading camping grounds in the state of Maine, improving all conditions and placing the Spiritualistic worth far above the present standing in which it already leads.

THE MAN WHO LOVES A JOKE.

Though his pedigree be painted 'Scutcheonless of prince or peer,
Though he boast no kinship sainted
Stretching stately in his rear,
Though his funds be slow and slender,
'Like of clothes and coinage broke.
All the scruples I surrender
To the man who loves a joke.

Mark I not his lore nor living,
Count I not his tongue nor creed,
Sin and shadow all forgiving,
Bow I gladly to his need;
Friends and fathers ranged before me,
Clodded head and heart of oak,
I will give them all that bore me,
For one man who loves a joke.

Flaunt his banners fore or after,
Count his battles lost or won,
Kindly connoisseur of laughter,
Just philosopher of fun,
Lightlier shall beat the breaker,
Lightlier rest the human yoke,
On the happy co-partaker
With the man who loves a joke.

Brother to the world around him,
Fellow with the clod and clay,
High and low alike shall sound him
For the comfort of their way;
Sharer of Life's joy and sorrow,
Bearer of the erring stroke,
Hopeful of the fairer morrow;
Lives the man who loves a joke.

Clearer eyed and broader builded,
Kindlier toward his human kind,
Visions keen nor fancy gilded,
Open heart with open mind,
Self-esteeming, yet denying,
Severed from the selfish cloak,
I will spend my life relying
On the man who loves a joke.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery that Cures All Afflictions of the Eye Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable.

Mrs. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without glasses. Am 65 years old."

Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I should have been blind had I not used 'Actina.'"

Actina is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York & London Electric Association, Dept. T, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive free, a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General, and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
He'd forward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

You should sign your own name and address to the items you send in; otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

Mrs. G. Patridge has returned from her vacation in the West and North regions, filled with inspiration, and will be at home to callers, 2576 Fulton st., city.

Bro. Howard, of Springdale, Col., thinks that Jesus was the culmination of very harmonious and loving prenatal conditions, and no more divine than any other man.

Matilda B. Grumwald, of Louisville, Ky., expresses her great love for Spiritualism and its glorious truths. She was raised in the Episcopal faith. She has been very happy since she became a Spiritualist. She has been elected president of the Ladies' Aid Society. She writes feelingly of the death of her son.

Miss Emma Marie Caillard, discussing the question of immortality from the scientific standpoint, argues strenuously and well against "the false assumption that there is a scientific presumption against the persistence of individual life after death so strong that a greater weight of evidence should be demanded than would be necessary before it can be accepted as proved." She maintains that, apart from the evidence of apparitions and the like: "From the scientific standpoint we can claim a presumption in favor of the persistence of human individual life after death, a presumption founded on the prominent place of individuality in Nature, and its presence in so high a degree in man that actual conditions are insufficient to give it scope. The body of a bird or of any animal does not strike us as limiting its individuality, rather as expressing it in a most complete and appropriate manner. The individuality of many a human being, on the contrary, seems to be fighting its way to expression through bodily hindrances, rather than clothing itself in a suitable and controllable form." She also suggests that telepathy, which is known to exist between living beings, while still in the body, might enable communication to be established between the disembodied and those whose physical life still continues.

Spokane, Wash., has a sensation and a youthful wonder in a 12-year-old boy named Johnnie Hyde, who has developed a hypnotic power said to equal that of the famous Svengali, and whose experiments with the boys in his neighborhood have carried anxiety and consternation among the mothers of the children. A short time ago the Scottish hypnotist McEwan gave a number of exhibitions in that city, and Johnnie was to be found in the first row in the gallery every evening. He closely watched every move of the hypnotist and paid the most devout attention to every word of the short lecture with which McEwan always preceded his performances. Since that time he has embarked into the business himself, and has a large following of young boys, who gather every evening in a vacant lot near Johnnie's home. One of his favorite stunts is to tell the boys that they are stuck in the mud and, try as they will, they are unable to lift a foot. Night before last it is said he lined the boys up against a fence and told them their hands were fastened. The result of the experiment was that he had a row of seven boys stuck to the fence in a most ludicrous manner. Of late it is said that he has gone further and has successfully tried the statuary work as given by McEwan, in which, at the word "stone," the subject becomes absolutely rigid. Johnnie has tried this on a number of occasions so successfully that he laid one boy across the space between two chairs and piled a number of other boys on top of him. He was making good progress until he had the misfortune to put one of the boys so soundly asleep that he had great difficulty in awakening him. This becoming known to the parents of the other boys, they at once issued a ukase forbidding their children to go near the youthful Svengali, and he is now without subjects upon which to practice his arts till he can gather together a new crowd of boys.

Mrs. W. J. Youmans writes from Billings, Mont.: "We have been having good instruction in our society during the past month. Mr. P. S. George, of Lincoln, Neb., delivered a very instructive lecture. Later in the month Mr. George P. Colby, of Lake Helen, Florida, visited us, remaining two weeks, and doing a great deal of good. He and his control, Seneca, have our very best wishes in their travels."

Captain Geo. W. Walrond, of Denver, Col., found the journey to Los Angeles, from San Francisco, Cal., too much a nervous strain, and is now in the Pacific Hospital under the doctors' and nurses' care. He has completely broken down in health for the time being, but will return to Denver as soon as his strength is sufficient for the journey.

Harry J. Moore is lecturing at Columbus, Ohio. During the week he will respond to calls to lecture, and will officiate at funerals any day except Sunday. Address him in care of the Dryden Hotel, East Town St., Columbus, Ohio.

Dr. Geo. W. Carey, formerly of California, now located in St. Louis, will be in Chicago from Oct. 13th to the 17th. He may be found at No. 1814 Michigan Boulevard, from 1 to 5 p.m. Telephone 7102 Calumet.

"From what I know of human nature, every man has an approachable spot and the best way to reach that spot is by kindness. You can reach men by coming near them and learning their conditions. My theory is that if you bring men together in a way to make them know each other, and if you appeal to the head and the heart you establish a bond between the two factions that can not be broken."—Senator Hanna.

Mrs. Maggie Waite has returned after a six weeks' sojourn at Clinton and Marshalltown (Iowa) camps. She is now located at the same house, 3160 Wabash Ave.; Phone 6321-Calumet.

The State Journal of Lincoln, Neb., says: "Dr. Louis Schlesinger is in town for a few days and is located at 1412 R street. The doctor's home is at Chattanooga, but he is going about with a special message to the world—answering the question, "If a man die shall he live again?" He claims to have direct communion with the spirit land, and we are not prepared to dispute him in view of the daylight seance he gave us and the several things he did and said which were startling if not convincing. There may be psychological reasons for everything that transpired on that occasion, and mental telepathy may come in as an explanatory aid, but you may search us. The doctor appears to be a thoroughly sincere and honest man and if he is deceiving himself as well as other people, scientists ought to be able to unravel the mystery and tell us how it is done. We were not under hypnotic influence during his stay in the office, and were never in better condition to watch the corners and avoid being flimflammed. Dr. Schlesinger is the first spiritualist medium we ever saw who could do a thing in the field of occultism which wasn't fraudulent on the face of it."

G. H. Brooks writes from Newport, Ky.: "I commenced my work here in Newport, Ky., the first Sunday in September, with a good audience, Sunday, the 21st, is to be Founders' Day; there will be special services on that occasion. Rev. J. O. M. Hewitt, of Chicago, will be present and assist in the services. Services in the afternoon and evening. The ladies are to serve a supper and a good time is to be had. I hope those in adjoining towns will attend. I am located for the present at 607 Lexington Ave. I will respond to calls for funerals.

St. Louis has been a nest hole for office-holding boodlers, the worst gang that ever lived, rotten to the core. Its leading gang prostituted the name of God in the following oath: "I do solemnly swear before the Almighty God that in associating myself and in becoming a member of this combine I will vote and act with the combine whenever and wherever I may be ordered to do so. And I further solemnly swear that I will not, at any place or time, reveal the fact that there is a combine, and that I will not communicate to any person or persons anything that may take place at any meeting of the combine. And I do solemnly agree that, in case I should reveal the fact that any person in this combine has received money, I hereby permit and authorize other members of this combine to take the forfeit of my life in such manner as they may deem proper, and that my throat may be cut, my tongue torn out and my body cast into the Mississippi river. And all of this I do solemnly swear, so help me God."

Dr. C. J. Hoffman writes from Allegheny, Pa.: "The Psychic Research Society of Allegheny opened its hall on Sunday, Sept. 7, with a good attendance at both the afternoon and evening meeting. The opening address was made by Rev. L. M. Oles, followed by spirit messages by Mrs. Duff, of Baltimore. The evening addresses were by Rev. S. M. Oles, Bro. Evans, Mrs. Duff and others. Meeting every Wednesday evening, Sunday afternoon and evening. We have also started a Ladies' Aid Society, which from the outlook will be a success."

H. W. Henderson, of Lawrence, Kan., writes that the Ottawa Camp was a success, harmony and good feeling prevailing. Officers elected practically the same as last year. There is no debt; more pledged for next year than ever.

H. L. Chapman writes from Marcellus, Mich.: "Sept. 6th was a fine day and a meeting at Bankson Lake, Mich., had been arranged for, yet poorly advertised, which seems to be a general failure with many societies, and for this reason the attendance was not large. However, Mrs. E. R. Newton of 832 Burr Oak Place, Kalamazoo, was the speaker. Her home in girlhood days was in the immediate vicinity and many of her former friends came to hear her, and those who did not, missed a treat, for, while not entering deeply into the science or philosophy of Spiritualism, the whole lecture was filled with good and true thoughts of the higher spirituality that appeals to our better natures. Mrs. N. has scarcely begun public work, but this lecture bespeaks much for her in the future, and she is worthy of work and remuneration."

Now a new fiat has gone forth; let all the world bow down and worship the new cult, the religion of kind words. For it is now considered distinctly bad form to say an ill word of any one, even one's dearest enemy. If you think Mrs. Vulga positively shocking in her misuse of English, you must stifle your thinker before it allows the bad form to bubble to the surface in words—it's so very passe to have an evil thought of a soul in the world. Or, at least, you must not say it out in society. It's quite the proper thing to be delighted with everything and everybody under the sun—the social sun, that is to say. The old way of being superior to every kind of entertainment, house, picture, friend or pug dog, in a yawn which said very plainly, "Very nice; but not half what I've been accustomed to all my life," has gone out. Now you must go about wreathed with smiles of benign charity toward all the world—your world, anyway. What the ministers have been toiling upward in the night to bring about has sprung into being by a single bound at the call of the wizard Fashion.

The Japanese public schools do not confine themselves to matters purely secular. They are concerned with the morals, as well as with the intellect, of their pupils. In accomplishing their purpose, however, they employ a method which is altogether their own. They have what is called "bushido." What is meant by "bushido" it is perhaps difficult for a foreigner to say. Perhaps an exact definition is impossible. A general description is easier. "Bushido" is that kernel of moral principle which is found in most of the religions of the world. It consists mainly of the idea of righteousness. It teaches charity and philanthropy. It denounces injustice and selfishness. It stands for those things which religion in general, apart from theology, regards as good. It is averse to those things which religion in general regards as bad. Briefly, it is "ethical culture." Therefore, while Japan has two religions, Shintoism and Buddhism, it teaches neither. It goes no further than "bushido" will allow. Now, "bushido" is not inconsistent with either Buddhism or Shintoism. At the same time it is only a part of each of them. Nevertheless, the people seem to be satisfied with it, and the question of religious instruction does not seem to rise to perplex the government. What causes trouble in England hardly receives notice in Japan.

Sar'gis writes to say that the account in The Progressive Thinker of September 6th, of Mr. Hodge, editor of the paper in Illinois, getting into trouble for printing the 54th chapter of Genesis, must be either a mistake or a sell—as Genesis has only fifty chapters. As he has seen it in many newspapers he wonders why some preacher or Bible student has not detected it. It is a joke on somebody.

Mrs. Alice Baker, lecturer and message medium, of Cleveland, O., her address now is the Devonshire, Brownell St., Suite 5. She will answer calls to lecture and give messages to societies within 100 miles of Cleveland, and will officiate at funerals.

Mrs. John Lindsey writes that she has returned home again at Grand Rapids, Mich. She made a trip through Wisconsin, and attended the camp meeting at Waukesha. She saw her beloved husband at a materializing seance. She did a good work holding circles. She visited the Morris Pratt Institute, and was much pleased with it. Mrs. Lindsey will continue on in the work, and will accept calls on reasonable terms. She is an excellent test medium. Address her at No. 291 North Front Street, Grand Rapids, Mich. Her terms are reasonable.

England is just now agitated by the question of religious instruction in public schools. The reason for the agitation is to be found in the fears of the nonconformists with regard to the new educational bill. They think that under the provisions of that bill the established church will obtain an unfair advantage over them. As a consequence they have gone so far as to suggest, through their leaders, Mr. Joseph Parker and Mr. Hugh Price Hughes, that they may find it necessary to refuse to pay the taxes which are likely to be applied to the instruction of the youth of England in doctrines which are repugnant to nonconformist ideas. The principle seems to be established in England that the public schools are to give instruction of a religious character. The quarrel lies in the share of that instruction which is to be assigned to the various religious bodies.

H. F. Coates writes: "I wish to announce through your paper that, on account of Dr. Hewitt being called out of the city Sept. 21st, the Rev. T. W. Sherk will lecture for us at Kenwood Hall, No. 308 Cottage Grove Ave. Subject, 'Present Day Opportunities.' Dr. Hewitt has been associated with me for the last year, and the words of truth which he has spoken, I feel have carried conviction to many a doubting mind, and have led them to the light. We have conducted our meetings all summer, both afternoon and evening, with a good attendance, and as the question is asked me so often about the progress of Spiritualism, I can not help but answer that, from the increasing interest which I see manifested, ere long it will be the leading religion of the day. We have Mr. and Mrs. Freeman to sing for us, and with the many messages which are given, I feel that all who come to our hall go away delighted and enlightened. The Progressive Thinker is always on our table for those who wish a copy and I find that only words of praise are given it."

Thos. Harding writes from Sturgis, Mich.: "The Harmonial Society of Sturgis, Mich., held its annual meeting for the election of officers to serve during the ensuing year, on the first Monday in September, at the residence of Mrs. Hannah Buck. The following named members of the Society were unanimously chosen: President, Thomas Collar; secretary, C. Cressler; treasurer, Mrs. Libbie Anderson; executive committee, John Kelly, John Hodges, Mrs. Nellie Smith, Mrs. Eliza Gilhams, Mrs. Ellen Pontius; soliciting committee, Miss Etta Pontius, Miss Hannah Kelly, Miss Agnes Cressler, Miss Maud Gilhams; committee on music to be subsequently appointed by the chair.

The Lynn, Mass., Spiritualists' Association held its annual election of officers on Sept. 2nd. The following were elected to serve the society the ensuing year: Alex. Caird, M. D., president; Samuel Merchant, vice-president; A. A. Averill, secretary; E. P. Averill, treasurer; Mrs. E. T. Metzwer, E. W. Raddin and J. O. Allan, directors. Dr. Caird, Mr. Merchant and Mrs. Averill were elected delegates to the N. S. A. convention. The affairs of the society were reported as in a very prosperous condition, twenty-one new members being admitted.

L. D. Murphy writes from Holland, Tex.: Mrs. Laura B. Payne, spiritualist lecturer, visited our town a few days ago and spent a week in our midst, delivering three lectures. Of Spiritualism our people knew but little, but many there be who refuse the dogmas of the orthodox world; hence, while her audiences were not large, they were appreciative, and every word she uttered was as seed sown in good ground. She filled the old skins of dogma with the new wine of love, and showed us what it was to believe and at the same time be free. It was our good fortune to entertain this messenger of the gospel of truth, this angel of light, while here, and we say it from the great depths of our heart, our home was a veritable oasis of delight. The influence of her calm nature, the life of love she taught and so beautifully expressed in her own life, could but sweeten and ennoble the lives of all with whom she come in contact.

W. T. Green, of Unionville, Mo., would like to correspond with societies or parties who desire some one to lecture, and organize. He will spend all his time in the advancement of the cause of Spiritualism.

The Independent Association of Spiritualists, Toledo, Ohio, commenced its meetings Sept. 7.

The celerity and secrecy which some savage tribes possess of transmitting to each other and at great distances has long been a wonder and a mystery. The death of the ameer of Afghanistan occurred on Feb. 15 last and the fact was known in the bazaars some time in advance of the official announcement. Also, it is said that when the Roumania was wrecked it was known on a Saturday that a big steamer carrying piece goods had been wrecked in the Red Sea, though agents of the line did not receive the news until the following Monday. News travels with equal celerity in Africa. We read in Wilson's "Behind the Scenes in the Transvaal;" "Again and again have Kaffirs reported events hours and even days before the news could possibly have got through by the ordinary channels. I remember, for example, how the Kaffirs in Pretoria detailed the account of the capture of Malaboch at least four hours before the first telegram arrived in Pretoria, and numbers of people who have passed through the experience of native wars in South Africa have testified to similar instances.

That a people superior in intelligence to those of the earth inhabit the planet Mars is a conclusion that will be set forth by Prof. G. W. Hough, head of the department of astronomy of Northwestern university, in a report which he is compiling of his summer's observations from the Dearborn observatory. He asserts this as a probability based on recent discoveries, and adds that of course it can never be established positively. The conclusion includes the acceptance of the theory of evolution, and the statements of leading astronomers that climatic conditions of Mars are the same as of the earth. The possibility of Venus and Mercury being inhabited is admitted because they have solidified, and the intense heat resulting from their proximity to the sun may have been overcome by a deeper covering of atmosphere. None of the other planets, in the opinion of the professor, could contain animal life.

Mrs. M. E. Wrench thinks that a good test medium and lecturer could do an excellent work at Yorkville, N. Y.

Mrs. Dr. Edwards, of Chicago, trance, test and business medium, is located at 502 W. Park St., Butte, Mont. Circles for spirit phenomena Tuesday and Friday at 8 p.m. Lecture and tests Sundays at Masonic Hall. Independent slate writing daily.

"The following prayer is found in many prayer books at the end of the mass," says one who has read it. It is as follows: "Holy Michael, the Archangel, defend us on battle. Be our protection against the wickedness and the snares of the Devil. Rebuke him, O God, we suppliantly beseech Thee, and Thou, O Prince of the heavenly host, by Thy divine power drive into hell Satan and the other evil spirits who wander through the world, seeking the ruin of souls. Amen." It is said Pope Leo grants to all who read this prayer as aforesaid 300 days indulgence.

Mrs. L. Le Sieur writes: A reception will be given to Mr. and Mrs. Richmond, on their return home, at the regular meeting of the Band of Harmony next Thursday, at the afternoon and evening sessions. All the members and friends are especially invited to be present. Ladies, please bring refreshments. Supper served at the usual hour.

Dr. R. McL. Angus writes from Toledo, Ohio: "I have a few open dates for fall and winter to serve societies as lecturer and test medium. I am much interested in lyceum work." Address 620 Madison Street.

Jennie Hagan Brown writes: "The camp meeting at Marshalltown has been a pleasant and enjoyable one. The attendance has not been as large as it would have been had the street railway accomplished its work; so the people could have come directly to the grounds in the cars. Another year will probably see this all arranged satisfactorily. Much credit is due to the management and a general feeling of good will, kindness and friendship has grown among the people of the city to the camp meeting." Mrs. Brown will soon be in Chicago to attend to her work there.

Hon. J. A. Onthank, of Arlington, Neb., has passed to spirit life. He was 82 years of age. He was a prominent Spiritualist and a well known citizen and philanthropist. He had been in the legislature of Nebraska and was one of the most prominent men in Arlington, having lived there since 1858 when Arlington was Bell Creek. He leaves his wife, three daughters, a son and many grandchildren. The funeral was held in the Congregational church. Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown officiated at the funeral, giving a discourse and poem.

Will C. Hodge writes from San Diego: "I am quite busy; am speaking for the San Diego society in the morning and for the First Society in the evening; am having excellent audiences and am engaged for the whole of September in both places." The California Spiritualists ought to keep Mr. Hodge constantly employed. He will give them wholesome truths.

G. R. Bicknell writes from Decatur, Ill.: "Mrs. Maggie Vestal, trumpet-speaking medium from Chesterfield, Ind., is here this month, and gives occasional seances which are enjoyed by large circles. On Sunday nights, in connection with the regular meetings conducted by Mrs. India Hill in the Library Block Hall, Mrs. Vestal closes the meetings by giving trumpet voices in the glare of the gas lights. This feature is very convincing to skeptics, and standing room only was announced at our last Sunday night meeting.

Mrs. John H. Letter writes: "Mr. Will Avent, of Pittsbury, Pa., has been holding very successful circles in Akron and Barberton. He is a very promising test medium, in some instances he gives full names. He goes from here to Mineral Ridge, Ohio, where he can be addressed until Oct. 1st."

G. W. Kates writes from LaCrosse, Wis.: "Mrs. Kates and self visited La Crosse to hold three meetings, September 10, 11 and 12. We found a good working society, under the ministration of our earnest brother, Will J. Erwood. He has succeeded in building a supporting membership and creating an earnest work by the society until it has leased and furnished a comfortable little edifice for a church. With a meeting place the members control a public interest is created and an excellent work results. He holds Sunday meetings regularly in La Crosse and does the State missionary work during the week; hence, Brother Erwood is a busy man. As a young man he promises much for the future. Such workers are entitled to support and praise. He sees the necessity of reaching the young, and is now starting a children's Lyceum, and thus will build for the future of our cause."

F. G. White writes: "I have received the premium book, The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science. I consider it the best book in the world to-day for the uplifting and ennobling of humanity."

Mrs. L. B. Slater writes from Wash- I would like the helpful thoughts of the readers of your most valuable paper." Of course they will all give it, and we hope the same will be followed with ington, D. C.: "My husband is very ill. beneficial results.

B. Chanpel writes: "No. 607, The Progressive Thinker, contains much wisdom which should be read, learned and thoroughly utilized by all who wish to progress in real spiritual knowledge in this and the next cycle of their continued existence. 'Why is the Christian Religion Declining,' by A. Nazarene, is grand indeed, and chock full of truths for the millions to learn. Also 'Some Reflections on Certain Prominent Absurdities,' by H. S. Hill, touching Bro. Myrick's theories of the origin of life, etc., will prove of great importance to all readers who dare to think and allow reason to guide them. It is excellent. The Progressive Thinker is doing a work that no other Spiritual paper, up to date, has ever done. It opens its columns to all classes of thinkers (if they keep within the bounds of courtesy), and thus throws wide open the door into the endless fields of liberalism and free thought, thereby aiding to unshackle the soul from the trammels of sectarian dogmas, that it may rise and move forward in harmony with the great progressive army which is ever reaching upward for the true light."

Correspondent writes: "The Fifth Annual Reunion of Spiritualists held forth at Brook Side Camp, near Payne, O., on Sept. 7, with good results. Fred Dunakin, of Cecil, and E. V. Morse, of Lorain, O., were speakers. This was Mr. Morse's first call in the field, and we must say he is a deep thinker, a good reasoner, and has ample proof stored away in his head to back every statement. He is open for engagements. Address E. V. Morse, Lorain, O."

Hon. Andrew C. Dunn writes from Winnebago City, Minn.: "I have just returned from the camp at Waukesha, Wis. For a new venture this camp has been reasonably successful I should judge; good talent was employed for the rostrum and good test work was done from the platform. Such speakers as Moses Hull, Rev. Owen, Geo. W. Kates, Zadia Brown Kates, and Mattie Hull, all of whom I heard, have always something to say, and know how to say it. Our Unitarian brother, the Rev. Owen, is a charming speaker, full of logic, pathos and spirituality. He declared himself a Spiritualist in his every fibre. The platform test work by Mrs. Nellie Mosier was something to be remembered. She is a psychic of rare gifts. Her spiritual vision and hearing is clear and pointed; her messages are verified in every instance. She brings the spirit realm very close to her hearers, and comforts exceedingly the seeker. While there we visited the new seat of Spiritual learning at Whitewater, the Morris Pratt institute, and predict for it a successful season. It is in good hands and must be of great benefit to our cause."

Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Reed City, Mich., was in Chicago last week. The world has been made better by the Doctor having lived in it.

Sunday Sept. 14, the Church of the Soul held its first service of the autumn at eleven o'clock in Hall 300, Masonic Temple. Sunday school in same hall, promptly at ten o'clock. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond officiated, rested and strengthened by the change of the summer. She received a cordial welcome. The trustees say: "We are going to have a profitable and prosperous year; be with us from start to finish. Not only come yourself but bring your friends." That Mrs. Richmond is one of the most remarkable mediums of the present age is conceded by all. Her lectures, her poems, her messages, etc., have never been excelled.

A press item says: A mysterious light which flickers across the prairie near the spot where Minnie Mitchell's body was found is being regarded as the girl's ghost by superstitious people living in the vicinity. The light is round, and is similar to one made by a bull's eye. The light was first noticed on the night that Bartholin was found in Riceville by young people returning from a party in Burnsville and now they claim the spot is haunted."

Sarah E. Bromwell writes: "Mrs. Sarah E. Bromwell has returned to her home, No. 3310½ Rhodes avenue, after her missionary work in the tents on Silver Buck Creek at St. Joseph, Mich, under the auspices of the National Sunlight Center Club; closing Chautauqua August 31st; there holding two seances in Assembly Tent, which were highly appreciated by all who attended. Banqueters were presented with good wishes for success of next year's encampment, which has already been arranged for."

Miss E. R. Fielding writes: "The 48th Annual meeting of The Friends of Human Progress met in Forest Temple, North Colline, N. Y., Sept. 5th to the 7th. Geo. Sucher was chairman. Friday, 11 a.m., conference, led by Prof. Lockwood; lectures by Mrs. Clara Watson, and Prof. Lockwood. The Indian Quartette consisted of S. C. Lay, tenor; R. H. Printup, second tenor; E. M. Spring, baritone; L. Bishop, bass."

Frank T. Ripley, platform test medium and speaker, is at Springfield, Mo., and he can be engaged for week evenings within one hundred miles, to speak at funerals and to lecture. Those desiring the services of Mr. Ripley can address him there in care of General Delivery.

Engineer's Premonition Saves Man's Life

The Tribune states that as one of the fast trains on the Chicago and Northwestern railroad was running through Evanston shortly before daylight Sept. 8th, the engineer, William Campton, was seized with a feeling that the track ahead of him was not clear. Signal and switch lights were set for clear track and the brilliant electric headlight showed no obstacle in front of the engine.

The feeling would not leave him, and although he could see no reason for the action he shut off the steam and set the air brakes. The train came to a stop just north of Central street. Conductor M. Brown came running forward and made inquiries of Engineer Campton.

"There is something wrong, but I do not know what it is," said the engineer. "Let's investigate a little."

The trainmen took lanterns and went ahead. Under the front end of the pilot they found a young man lying between the rails. If the engine had gone ten feet farther he would have been crushed. He was unconscious and help was summoned from the police station. He was taken to Dr. Hemenway's office and after a short time regained consciousness. He gave his name as John Goudie, 2015 West Railroad avenue.

He had been employed as a watchman at a new building and had been taken ill during the evening. About 1 o'clock he left the building to go home and fainted on the railroad track. But for the premonition of Engineer Campton he would have been cut to pieces. As it was the pilot struck his head inflicting two scalp wounds.

This is good substantial evidence of spirit power.

HAY FEVER AND ASTHMA CURED BY THE Kola Plant.

The Kola Plant.

A New and Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA has been found in the Kola Plant, a rare botanic product of West African origin. So great are the powers of this New Remedy that in the short time since its discovery it has come into almost universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America for the cure of every form of Hay-Fever and Asthma. Its cures are really marvelous. Men, women and children who have been given up as incurable are being restored daily to perfect health by the use of Himalaya. Thousands of letters attesting its wonderful cures have been written the importers, but limited space prevents a detailed list. Read what a few have to say, proving that Hay-Fever and Asthma can be cured:

Mr. J. B. Ayle, Estherville, Iowa, writes, Fe b. 28th 1902, that he was cured of Hay Fever and Asthma after severe suffering for 28 years. Miss Eva Preston, Petersburg, Ind., writes March 8th, 1902, that she suffered untold misery for 18 years with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Is completely cured, although her physician said that a cure was impossible in her case. Wm. Kuhler, Sr., Warrenton, Mo., writes Dec. 22nd, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma of five year's standing, and that his son was also cured after many years of similar suffering. Mr. J. W. Cully, No. 1109 W. Lafayette Ave., Jacksonville, Ill., writes March 10th, 1902: "I traveled a great deal for relief from Asthma; climate of Michigan and Minnesota gave temporary relief, but Himalyn entirely cured me." Rev. J. L. Coombs, Martinsburg, W. Va., writes to the New York World, July 22nd, that it cured him of Asthma of 30 years' standing. Mrs. Emaline Bolton, No. 380 Conarroe St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes March 9th, 1902, was completely cured two years ago, and says Himalya is the only Asthma medicine that has merit, and she has tried them all. Mr. C. B. Slade, Los Angeles, Cal., writes March 8th, 1902, that Himalya saved his life. He told numbers of sufferers about his cure, and Himalya did not fail in a single case.

If you suffer from Hay-Fever and Asthma in any form, do not despair, but write at once to the Kola Importing Co., No. 1162 Broadway, New York City, N. Y., who in order to prove the power of this wonderful new botanic discovery will send you one Trial Case by mail, entirely Free. Remember it costs you absolutely nothing.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND Other Offerings.

BY

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and stories contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 288 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

NEW EDITION

THE LYCEUM GUIDE

BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

Do you want to organize a society for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM

furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM. It furnishes a system of evolution of internal growth, not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school. It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.

It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.

Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.

Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.

Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.

The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

SELF MURDER.

Suicide from a Secular and Spiritualistic Standpoint.

To the Editor:—I first give you a view of suicide from a secular paper's standpoint, the N.-Y. Sun, as follows:

SELF-DESTRUCTION AND THE SAVING OF LIFE.

Very naturally, the case of the poor woman of Philadelphia who wrote to us in defence of suicide as a reasonable resort for people in her situation, that is, "gently bred" people for whom the hardships of poverty are too great for endurance, has brought to us many letters, of which we print a few to-day.

To the first of these letters we will give special attention, for it starts out with an utterly false premise. The writer is a clergyman and he ought to have taken pains to examine easily obtainable authorities on the subject of suicide before asserting that "statistics show that there is a higher rate of suicide in the United States than in any other part of the world, civilized or uncivilized."

The statistics of suicides are kept officially in all civilized States, and there is no room for debate on the subject. No other of the causes of death is more easily obtainable for record. Our own Department of Health, for example, reports every week the exact number of suicides in New York. For the first week in this month, out of a total of 1,353 deaths for the five boroughs of New York, only 15 were by suicide, though this is the season when suicide is most frequent. The number of suicides in the same week last year was 13. The estimated population of the greater city was 3,437,202 in August, 1901, and 3,632,501 now.

It will be seen, therefore, that suicide as a cause of death is proportionately very trifling in New York. Twenty-nine deaths, or nearly twice the suicides, were caused by drowning in that August week.

According to the most authoritative of recent statistics of suicide, the country in civilization where the rate per 100,000 living is highest is Saxony, with 31.1 per cent., while in the United States it is only 3.5 per cent. But the whole table will be interesting:

Saxony	31.1
Denmark	25.8
Austria	21.2
France	15.7
German Empire	14.3
Sweden	8.1
Norway	7.5
Belgium	6.9
England and Wales	6.9
Scotland	4.0
Italy	3.7
United States	3.5
Ireland	1.7
Spain	1.4

These statistics are several years old, but no considerable changes in the ratios have taken place since they were gathered. Here in the United States the ratio seems to have been increasing during recent years, but not at all significantly. No such alarming tendency to suicide as our clerical correspondent assumes and asserts has shown itself or is now manifest. Naturally, in the great cities of civilization, where the defectives and degenerates and desperate characters of society tend to concentrate, the suicide rate is higher than in the country generally; but it is less in New York than in the great European capitals.

The number of suicides in New York for the last four years, as compared with the total mortality of the same period, is returned by the Health Department thus:

	Suicides.	Total Deaths.
1898	673	66,294
1899	581	65,343
1900	743	70,872
1901	678	70,720

That is, the suicides were only about one in a hundred deaths—not an alarming percentage, certainly. Now, as to the comparison of New York with the European capitals in this matter of the number of suicides to 100,000 population, the foreign statistics being the latest obtainable:

Paris	42
Berlin	36
Vienna	28
New York	20

It will be seen that the suicide rate is less in New York than in any of these four great European capitals, less than half the Paris rate and far behind that of Berlin.

Suicide, therefore, is by no means the terribly serious matter in this country our clerical correspondent makes out. It is a relatively insignificant matter, and is brought to special public attention for the very reason that a suicide is unusual. This clergyman complains of newspaper sensationalism in giving publicity to suicides as a cause of "epidemics" of suicide; but such an assertion as that made by him is the most mischievous sort of sensationalism. Happily, it is easily refuted.

Not self-destruction, but the saving of life in modern civilization, by science, sanitary regulation and the progress of medicine and surgery, is the impressive and indisputable fact.

HERE IS A REMARKABLE CASE.

If this very remarkable letter did not come to us from a source whose good faith is beyond question we should set it down as an attempt to reduce to ridicule the subject of which it treats. Its writer is a man of good standing in New York and well known and esteemed in the sphere of business in which he is engaged:

"To the Editor of The Sun.—Sir: Having read The Sun the last fifty years and being often instructed by the handling of different difficult problems by it and its volunteer contributors, I ask your advice on a matter that is giving me very serious thought, which I can not solve.

"The Christian influences under which I was raised have inculcated in me the feeling that a suicide can not enter heaven and is doomed to eternal punishment.

"An old friend of life-long standing, who has always lived an honest, upright life, is destitute through vicissitudes of fortune and so tired of life that he imparted to me that being decrepit and destitute he intended committing suicide.

"Shocked at the information, I obligated myself to provide for him until something might develop that would help him. I find my financial resources will not allow my supporting him further without my being seriously embarrassed. What shall I do? I may injure myself trying to care for him, and the thought that if I withdraw my support and his suicidal act will eternally deprive him of the joys of heaven, which I might by possibly sacrificing myself prevent, has placed me in a very unenviable frame of mind. Can you advise me what should I do?

CHRISTIAN.

"New York, Aug. 14."

First, let us give commendation to this man because of the spirit of humanity in him and his fidelity to friendship and to religious conviction. He is a good man.

When Christianity came in, suicide, which in paganism had been regarded as permissible and under many circumstances as laudable, was made a capital sin because of its violent resistance to the will of God. In the Catholic Church it became a mortal sin, a crime for which in the nature of things there could be no penance. Christian burial was denied to the suicide by the Church and his soul was deprived of the benefit of prayers for the dead. By the ancient rule in England a suicide was condemned to "ignominious burial on the highway with a stake driven through the body;" but in the reign of George IV, this was relaxed so as to require simply that the suicide should be buried within twenty-four hours after the Coroner's inquest, and between the hours of 9 and 12 at night. Practically, however, in these days the Coroner's jury is likely to bring in, on slight evidence, a verdict of temporary insanity, which takes away the criminal character of the act.

In this country attempts to commit suicide are punishable. There is an argument, however, that suicide is necessarily a symptom of insanity, as being contrary to the first and universal human instinct of self-preservation. Actually, however, some suicides, at least, are manifestly in possession of their normal faculties. Unquestionably the frequent suicides of men in antiquity distinguished for their mental equilibrium, and among contemporary Chinamen, can not be attributed to insanity. Statistics are published to show that there has been a slight increase in suicide in Christendom during the present generation, but self-destruction as a cause of death still remains one of the least active throughout civilization.

As a Christian of the old faith our very serious correspondent believes "that a suicide can not enter heaven and is doomed to eternal punishment." But does that belief impose on him the obligation he has assumed of supporting a friend because of a threat to kill himself if the aid is not provided?

If religious people generally proceed on that principle, threats of suicide as a means of extorting money would become fashionable. In saying this we do not mean to infer that the friend for whom our correspondent has sacrificed so much as a duty of piety and fidelity belongs to a crowd capable of such a threat merely for a mercenary purpose. But if this man is willing to accept pay not to kill himself, there is something all wrong with him either morally or mentally. His true place is in confinement either in a criminal or charitable institution or in an insane asylum. He is not a man to be allowed to go abroad. Society and not our correspondent ought to take care of such a man; and in handing him over to the keeping of the public authorities our friend would be discharging his full Christian duty.

Charity extorted by a threat of suicide is not a virtue, unless, perhaps, it be extended temporarily. Our friend has duties to his family and to society which he can not set aside by permanently supporting a man who threatens otherwise to put an end to himself. It may seem cruel to say it, but it is true that nobody capable of making such a threat as a means of obtaining bread and butter will be missed from the earth, even if he should carry his threat into execution. But he will not do it. People who talk so freely about committing suicide are not likely to proceed to the extreme, unless in a few cases where they are actually mad, when, obviously, they ought to be turned over for examination by an alienist. Our advice to our friend is then, finally, to consult about the matter a physician experienced in insanity.

In the matter of suicide, as in many others, Spiritualism varies from the ordinary popular religious views. As in other things pertaining to speculative or other views in spiritual affairs, and Spiritualism holds closely to nature and common sense.

Life is ours for a purpose; the present earthly life rightly is ours to use for our own good and the good of others—the good of humanity. Rightly used, this life ripens us for a higher and better stage of being. This is our duty, and to leave it unfulfilled is a wrong to ourselves, to society and the world. Such a wrong is involved in the taking of one's life, before nature's appointed time.

Spirits who have thus entered into Spirit life invariably express regret and deep sorrow for their act of self-murder, which has brought upon them a state of darkness and loss, and they sadly wish they were back in the mortal state, to endure its trials and troubles to the end, even at the worst that might come to them.

But the orthodox view of an eternity in hell, for any class or person, is foreign to Spiritualism, as it is abhorrent to sane common sense. X-RAY.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

The above question is comprehensively answered by Hudson Tuttle, in his new work, entitled "Mediumship and its Laws, its Conditions and Cultivation."

Silver coin can be sent with safety if carefully wrapped, and is preferable to stamps. Price, postpaid, 35 cents. This work should be in every family. Address HUDSON TUTTLE, Berlin Heights, Ohio.

WHISTLE

Whistle for the Glory of God.

To the Editor:—Why not whistle? If agreeable it is good to whistle. It is divine to do anything good. Robert Chisholm Bain whistled "The Holy City," Lassen's "O Loving Voice of Jesus" and Rubinstein's "Voices of the Woods" at vesper service in the South Congregational Church, Fortieth street and Drexel boulevard, Chicago.

The full, fluent, flutelike notes of the whistler carried their distinct music to the furthest corner of the building. They passed out through the open doors and caused scores of couples idling among the trees and flowers of the boulevard to pause and listen.

When the whistler began the bars of his first number a hush fell upon the congregation. When he had finished, up-to-date girls, old-fashioned matrons and the staid elders of the church turned to each other and whispered complimentary things and smiled and nodded approval.

After the service Mr. Bain held a levee. Women thronged about him and shook his hand.

"Your music was delicious," said one.

"It was fairy music, so sweet and beautiful," said another.

"I am Mrs. Willard B. Thorp, the pastor's wife," said a third. "I enjoyed your numbers very much. I do hope you will come to us again."

"I believe in such innovations," said H. H. Blake, chairman of the church committee on music. "The announcement that Mr. Bain would whistle filled the church to overflowing. There were only 200 persons in the congregation last Sunday. There were more than 700 to-day. More than half of these were strangers, whom the whistler has whistled within the spiritual influence of the pastor.

"People are weary of choir music and vocal soloists. Even the most orthodox favor new features which do not conflict with the government, discipline or well-being of the church. The congregation approved of Mr. Bain's engagement cordially. I am delighted with the result."

Mr. Bain is a teacher of whistling, with a studio in the Auditorium Building. He is a graduate of Hahnemann Medical College and practiced as a physician for four years. He gave up medicine to whistle.

"I learned my music from the birds," he said. "The only maestros at whose feet I sat were the little feathered warblers that swung from the twigs and flower stalks in Chicago parks and poured out their melodies to the skies. I always could whistle. My mother says I could whistle before I could talk."

Let us have whistling anywhere if it incites one to do good, and be good. The churches are gradually being liberalized by Spiritualism. First, the organ—to use that was sinful. Opposition to that was overcome finally, and now whistling is adopted for the glory of God. What next?

The Rams' Horn of Aug. 23 was unusually "meaty." I quote in part from teers."

"Do we realize that a conflict is impending which, if not at once arrested, is far more certain of its accomplishment and more dreadful in its consequences than a foreign invasion would be? America has a cancer in the heart, and the disease reaches from Hudson's Bay to Mexico. We see it in the pale and nerveless type of Christianity which walks our streets. Unbelief fills the air. It threatens to subdue our faith in God, in Christ, in the Bible, and in the Church. The gospel is still preached, but in the form of apology or compromise.

"The Bible is dismembered, and we are left in doubt whether God has spoken through its pages to the human race.

"There is a call to arms. There is a need of recruits. We have a ground work of an army. It is the Christian Church. Let us rally to her standards. Her ranks are depleted. Let us fill them at once and uphold the hands of consecrated ministers who have sat through a long winter of sorrow and chill at the sight of God's waning cause."

What a despairing wail from such a strong orthodox paper. "Who is going to the help of the Lord against the mighty" in answer to this cry for help?

Just note that in the above quotation the editor says if the conflict is not arrested at once its accomplishment is almost certain. This conflict is the fight between the powers of light and the powers of darkness. John 1:5 says: "And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." But it would seem that in these later days the darkness is beginning to comprehend the light, and the editor who loves the darkness of superstition and ignorance better than the light of reason and knowledge, wants the light put out and the conflict stopped; and the Ram's Horn proposes to do mighty work in smashing the principal source of the new light—Spiritualism—concerning which it says: "As for spiritism, we have been most fortunate in locating the man (now ninety-five years old) who was the unwilling and unconscious originator of this whole movement. Spiritism as it is now practiced, he now detests and repudiates. He has given us information regarding its beginning and its bad ending in charlatanry and fraud."

Surely here's meat for Spiritualists, who will doubtless be interested in the old gentleman's story; but methinks before they get a little way on their job the Ram's Horn & Co. will be reminded of Mrs. Parlington trying to sweep back the Atlantic with a broom.

THE WAY TO WIN.

"Strike" while the iron is heated,
"Pause" and the iron's cold—
If you strike too late on a hardened plate
The weld will never hold.

"Seek" and success will follow;
"Wait" and it passes by;
Be quick to grasp, then hold it fast
And trust for a better try.

"Work" and the world works with you;
"Loaf" and you loaf alone;
This strenuous world's a continuous whirl;
It offers no room for the drone.

"Life" is an undertaking;
"Death" is a silent thought.
So let life's light illume the night
With deeds which you have wrought.

Sycamore Grove Camp, Cal.

Two more weeks of the Southern California Spiritualists' Camp, at Sycamore Grove, Los Angeles, have passed away to become henceforth a memory. Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Watson each made her last appearance to a large and appreciative audience on Sunday, August 31st, and each departed from among us in a halo of glory.

Moses Hull was expected to arrive in camp on Saturday, Sept. 6th, at an early hour in the morning. The hour came and passed, but no Moses. Then an afternoon train was looked forward to, and then an evening train, and there were two more disappointments. Hearts became anxious. What if he should fail to make his appearance to a large and expectant audience on Sunday morning? At a late hour came a telegram announcing that he was on the road between San Francisco and Los Angeles, and would arrive Sunday morning. His train had met with a twenty-four hours' delay, and he had been as anxious as we, if not more so.

Sunday morning dawned bright and warm, and the crowd began to gather early, and long before 10:30 o'clock the pavilions where the meetings are held pavilion where the meetings are held was jammed with an eager and expectant throng, while anxious inquiries were bandied back and forth: "Has he come?" "Has anyone heard from him?" etc. Finally, and promptly on time, all suspense was removed by the welcome appearance of the veritable Moses himself, amid a storm of hand-clapping and feet-stamping.

Although evidently worn and weary, he was soon well launched out upon the theme of "The World's Bibles," and, like one who eats with a "coming appetite," his weariness seemed to be soon lost sight of in the ardor of a growing and glowing inspiration, and when the time came to stop and he declared that he had already talked too long, cries of "Go on!" attested the unwearied interest of the audience. Many old Spiritualists, as well as others, had been waiting for this occasion to make their first appearance upon the grounds.

In the evening he spoke again to another large audience, taking for his theme, "If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again," and his oratory was even more fervid than in the morning. He was followed by Mrs. R. Cowell, of Oakland, with messages.

By the the way, I have hitherto inadvertently omitted to state that Dr. Tanner, the famous forty-day faster, is camped upon the grounds, and has been during the entire meeting so far. He is a jolly genial young-old man, and is quite an acquisition to our morning conferences, as well as to the social atmosphere of the camp.

In my next letter I intend to devote some space to the less noted workers of the camp, whose work is just as important as that of the more prominent ones, and quite essential to the success of those more prominent ones.

ELLA WILSON MARCHANT.

Seattle, Washington.

The State Spiritualists' Association of Washington has just ended its camp meeting, closing with their sixth annual convention, lasting two days. Our camp was a grand success both spiritually and financially, as it reached beyond our expectations, so much so that we in convention assembled took steps to buy ground and have a permanent home for our camp, and the necessary funds to accomplish the purpose were readily raised by subscription for a start in that enterprise, showing that the work of our camp meeting was not in vain, but that we aroused the enthusiasm of all lovers of free thought, and that we are able to attract and to hold the lovers of humanity to our grand philosophy as the redemption of the race.

I also thank all those earnest souls that co-operated with me in perfecting and carrying to a final the first camp meeting held under the auspices of the State Association, especially the speakers and mediums that gave their services without money and without price.

We regret very much that our president, P. C. Mills, could not have been with us until the last few days, as he was on the sick list; nevertheless he was with us in spirit, if not in the flesh. At our convention we elected the following persons to fill our offices for the ensuing year: President, P. C. Mills, Edmonds, Wash.; vice-president, R. F. Little, Seattle; 2d vice-president, Geo. E. Knowlden, Tacoma; secretary, Julian W. Smith, Seattle; treasurer, Walter Hall, Seattle; trustees, Mrs. Mary Brown, Seattle; Mr. Moses Leach, Puyallup; Mrs. Lydia Reade, Seattle; Mrs. Frances Sheldon, Tacoma; Mrs. Mary E. Stranch McCall, Tacoma.

Mrs. Esther G. Thomas was elected to take charge of what is to be known as the "Young People's Association of Washington," through which we are in hopes to gather in and educate the young people and thereby strengthen the cause of Spiritualism so that when we older ones pass to the beyond others will be better qualified through their early education to advance the cause much better than we who were limited by orthodoxy and conservative ideas, as what was born in flesh has been hard to overcome. But thank the All Good, some of us have arisen above it and now we stand firmly on the rock of Spiritualism. JULIAN W. SMITH.

The Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association.

To the Editor:—The Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association closed its camp at Waukesha, August 31, after a month of outing, and communion with the denizens of the higher life. The meeting though a new one has awakened a great deal of interest in the cause of Spiritualism, and many have awakened to the initiated to take new interest in life.

Many mediums of note were with us, and gave manifestations of varied and convincing character, that gave added strength to the convictions of the old time Spiritualist and caused the uninitiated t take new interest in life.

Waukesha is one of the most beautiful summer resorts in the country, and offers many attractions to its many visitors; and yet notwithstanding this many of the visitors found their way to the camp grounds.

The date for the camp next year has been changed, and will commence July 17th and close August 17th. The management will spare no effort in making the next year's meeting one of the very best in the country. All who are interested in the work in Wisconsin will do well to take note of the time of such meetings.

I wish it were possible to mention in detail the work of the various mediums on the camp grounds, but space and time forbids. It is sufficient to say that it was of the best.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the State Association has appointed the writer to act as State Missionary for the season, and I am more than anxious to make engagements throughout the State. Many have spoken to me about dates and meetings, but as yet have not made any definite arrangements. I want to say to the friends that delay may make it impossible for me to visit your locality, and hence I would like to have them write me as soon as possible.

I now have many engagements that fill my time for many weeks ahead, and if you want meetings you must apply early. We are making the easiest possible terms for our work, and feel that all of our time should be filled.

The work in Wisconsin must go forward, and it remains for each and every one of us to do our share towards making it do so. Write to me for terms and dates, and let us make the present season's work one of the most successful in the history of our State. We have had good work done in the past, but that is no reason why we should relapse into inactivity. Action means Life. Let us go forward to greater things.

Every Spiritualist in the State should send in their names, and one dollar, and become personal members of the State Association. If you are a member and have not paid your annual dues, do so now, and give us the wherewith to carry on the work as it should be carried on. WILL J. ERWOOD, Sec.

DR. PHELON'S LETTER.

Brief Notes on Various Matters of Interest.

The event of the week for those interested in the growth and permanence of Spiritual organizations, was the Seventh Annual Convention of the California State Spiritualists' Association. Commencing on the 5th of September, it closed on Sunday the 7th. We were prevented from attending the whole session, much to our regret.

The executive work of the guiding ad interim officers had been well arranged, and a vast amount of detail work, ready for use, was at the service of the Convention, so soon as it had passed into the hands of its presiding officers. As a body, it was made up of men and women whose faces bear marks of trial and testing, some by the fire that once applied, can never be effaced, in the marking left behind, even after the call of the Master open for us that gate which for mortals swings but one way. In the latter years the personnel of the Spiritualists has improved. They show training and thought. The difference is the same as for the war, and the volunteer citizen soldier, who has just enlisted for the war, and the veteran who has marched with Sherman to the sea, and seen the finish.

Years ago, when phenomena were a hardly tasted cup offered us by the invisible, as a proof of continued existence, the only answer to the many questions of doubters and cavillers was: "They say." But now the intricate and subtle workings of spirit potency are demonstrated as being the result of unchangeable and equal law. Research and practice have given Spiritualism a firm foundation to stand upon. We are no longer regarded as mystical lunatics, but as people who have something to say, and propose to say it, boldly and potently in behalf of the faith that is within us. We meet so seldom in deliberative bodies, that we are apt to try to do the discussing and arranging of essential affairs in the main body, when representative members of our Conventions could do much better in the committee room. Then the reports could be accepted or rejected, or recommitted to the committee with the instructions of the Convention. We should save time for other matters. There would be more efficiency and point to what the Convention should put forth as passed. That is the record of the representative bodies of the world, who have had the most experience in the practical workings of matters of that ilk.

We noticed a little disposition on the part of those who had donated a few cents to the General Fund to be pertinacious in inquiring just what disposal had been made of such amounts by the officers having the disbursements in charge. It reminded one of the dear New England husband who, when his wife asks for money, says solemnly: "Mirandy, what did you do with that five cents I gave you last week for the support of the family?" Such discussion is all right for a committee room, but not on the floor of a convention. But as we grow older, we'll grow wiser and as we always hope, better.

The programme allowed two days for the business sessions. We were not able to attend the welcoming entertainment of Friday evening, nor of Saturday evening, which was reported as of more than much harmony and interest, to those who were privileged to be present.

For the next term, J. S. Gillespie, a well-known and able worker, will be president of the California State Spiritualists' Association. The board of directors is largely a new selection, not by reason of any dissatisfaction with the old board, but because its work is a labor that ought to be shared by the many capable members of the association, who are not only able but willing, to bear their share of the burdens. And so closed the business sessions of the Convention.

It is often urged that Spiritualists have no need for money, and that too much commercialism pervades their ranks. But no matter how devout they may be, or how strongly they may believe in the power of the spirit, they known that their bodies must be provided for support. Spirit forces and entities act through established lines of communication when they can, and thus save time and needless expenditure of force. There are two ways of obtaining money, one is to work for it and the other is to ask for it. The Spiritualists do both. They do not begin, however, to do the same amount of commercial business that the churches do. The insinuation of commercialism is from him who sows tares among the wheat. To-day there are no more whole-souled, helpful people in the world, than those who have accepted the true Spiritualism, and are not ashamed of it. The cause is not losing ground. It may sleep; but it is not a sleep that knows no waking, for there isn't any such.

It is hardly necessary for me to say, the sessions of Saturday night, and of all day Sunday, were occasions to be remembered with joy and enthusiasm by all present. One of the incidents was the appearance on the platform of Mrs. F. A. Logan, a pioneer Spiritualist, who celebrated her eightieth birthday a few days since.

$10,000 DONATED TO HYPNOTISM

Dr. X. La Motte Sage, a Noted Scientist, Donates $10,000 To Be Used for the Publication and Free Distribution of a Valuable Work on Personal Magnetism and Hypnotic Influence.

Wants to Demonstrate the Practical Value and Power of This New Science in Business, in Society, in the Home, in Politics, in Love, in Diseases, and as a Factor in Influencing and Swaying the Minds of People.

Prominent Business and Professional Men, Ministers of the Gospel and Others Heartily Indorse the Movement—A Noted College Undertakes the Work of Free Distribution.

Any One May Get a Book Absolutely Free So Long as the Edition Lasts and Master the Hidden Mysteries of This Marvelous Power at His Own Home—Many Jealously-Guarded Secrets Made Public.

Carnegie is giving away his fortune for libraries. Dr. X. La Motte Sage proposes to put the most useful book in all libraries free of charge right into the homes of the people. For this purpose he has just donated $10,000, and a big publishing house is busy day and night turning out the books for free distribution. The book Dr. Sage wishes to distribute free of charge is entitled "The Philosophy of Personal Influence." It is heartily indorsed by the ablest business men, ministers, doctors and lawyers of two continents. It is beautifully illustrated with the finest half-tone engravings, and every page is brimful of intensely interesting and practical information. It is a book which should be in every home. It is by far the most remarkable work of the kind that has ever been written, and it has truly created a sensation in the book world.

It tells you how a wonderful woman in England got millions of dollars simply by the exercise of her marvelous hypnotic powers over the lords and millionaires of her country. It explains numerous instances in which people have been secretly and instantaneously controlled by hypnotic influence. It teaches you how to protect yourselves from the use of hypnotic power over you. It tells you how to develop and use your magnetic power so as to wield a wonderful influence over those with whom you come in contact.

Men like Vanderbilt, Morgan, Rockefeller and other millionaires have studied the very methods explained in this book and have used them in their business to pile up millions. This book lays bare secrets in the lives of rich men of which you have never dreamed. It reveals all the hidden mysteries of personal magnetism, hypnotism, magnetic healing, etc., and discloses the real source of power and influence in every walk of life. It contains secret information of inestimable value to every person who wants to succeed in life. Many of the most prominent public men in this country have obtained this book and read every line, and they are daily using its teachings to their own profit and gain.

It explains to you the power by which you may cure yourself and others of all diseases and bad habits without the aid of drugs or medicines. It tells of a secret, instantaneous method by which you may produce a state of insensibility to pain in any part of the body, so that the teeth may be extracted and surgical operations performed without the use of cocaine, ether or anaesthetics of any kind. It gives you the power to induce sleep in yourself or others at any time of the day or night you may desire. It enables you to develop your mental faculties, improve your memory, eradicate disagreeable tempers and habits in children, and to develop within yourself a marvelous magnetic will power so strong and so subtle as to make you practically irresistible. It will give you a force of character of which you have little dreamed, and will truly make you a leader of men. No matter how strong this description may seem, it is not one-half as strong as the marvelous power explained in this wonderful work.

If you have not achieved the success to which your abilities and talents justly entitle you, if you would like to secure a good paying position, obtain an increase in salary, if you care to rise higher in your accepted business or calling, if you desire to wield a greater influence over others, if you care to win the love or friendship of some one you know, or if you long for fame or renown, you should write for a copy of this remarkable book at once.

The following extracts from a few of the letters received from some of the people who have read the book give an idea of its unusual character and great value:

Mrs. Mary Milner, 312 D street, Pueblo, Colo., in a recent letter says: "I was so sick and worried I could not eat or sleep. I wrote you for your free book. I used the methods on myself with wonderful success. To-day I am perfectly well. I would not part with the information you gave me for any money."

Mr. T. L. Lindenstruth, 30 East South street, Wilkesbarre, Pa., says: "Your work on personal magnetism is a fortune to any one starting in life. It is absolutely sure to bring success."

A. J. McGinnis, 60 Ohio street Allegheny, Pa., says: "When I wrote for your book I was laboring by the day. Now I am managing a business. This is certainly the best proof that could be offered of its great value. I advise every man who wishes to succeed in life to get a copy at once."

G. S. Lincoln, M. D., 101 Crutchfield street, Dallas, Texas, writes: "Your methods of personal influence are marvelous. I have used them on my patients with wonderful results. They cure diseases when medicine and every thing else fail."

S. R. Kink, M. D., Gilliam, Ind., writes: "You have sent me the most remarkable book I have truly ever read. By the methods explained in your work headache, backache, rheumatism and other diseases of long standing disappear like magic. Your instruction in personal magnetism is simply grand. It gives one a power and an influence over others which I did not dream it was possible for the average man to acquire. Your book is worth more than gold to any one starting in life. Its value cannot be estimated. My only regret is that it was not in my hands when I was a young man."

The New York Institute of Science has undertaken the free distribution of the book referred to. Big roller presses are running day and night to supply the demand until the $10,000 worth of books are distributed free. On account of the great expense incurred in preparing and printing this book only those are requested to write for free copies who are especially interested and really and truly desire to achieve greater success, obtain more happiness, or in some way better their condition in life. Please do not write through mere curiosity, as the free edition is limited. If you want a book, write to-day, as the copies are going very fast. Never before in the history of the publishing business has there been such a great demand for any book as to-day exists for "The Philosophy of Personal Influence."

Remember, at the present time it will be sent to your address absolutely free, postage prepaid. Address New York Institute of Science, Department M K 1, Rochester, New York.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

A large octavo volume of 556 pages, strongly bound in cloth. Price $2.25. For sale at The Progressive Thinker office.

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams; cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

REASONS WHY.

Reason and judgment as you well know were given to human beings, to be exercised concerning all matters, and all the affairs of life; and especially should they be exercised by invalids in search of health; and may help you to make a wise decision.

With all due respect to Physicians and Healers of all kinds, we feel free to say that it is duty you owe to yourself and your friends to employ the best Physicians; and especially so as upon this matter may depend your future health, or sickness, or early death.

The following are some of the reasons why you should consider us as capable and skillful as others. First—Dr. C. E. Watkins is known the country over to be the best psychic before the people. His diagnoses of disease are absolutely correct. He makes no failures.

For eighteen years he has been thoroughly tested, by scientists, clergymen, professors in colleges, and the world's greatest savants—and without an exception they pronounce his psychic powers not only genuine, but absolutely astounding. The proprietors and editors of our newspapers respect and honor him as a man spiritually gifted, whom they never have had to defend through their columns. He treats several of their families, and always with success. His psychic mediumship has never been questioned, nor is it equalled at the present time. Not only does Dr. Watkins as a psychic see disease, but he cures them—cured POSITIVELY 92 per cent in 1900 of his patients.

HIS MEDICAL EDUCATION.

He is a graduate of the Vermont Medical College, also of the American Health University of Chicago, Ill. He afterwards took one course of study at the California Medical College and at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Boston besides connection with the Union Hospital of Boston. He holds a certificate from the Board of Registration for the State of Massachusetts.

His psychical treatment without medicine is perhaps the treatment that cures three-fourths of his patients.

THE VOICE OF SILENCE.

As Viewed by D. M. Bennett, Alice Walser, Medium.

By this word silence I do not mean to impress you with the idea alone to hush speaking or conversing, but to feel the full force of silence is when all nature, as it were, is hushed in silence, when man and beast are at rest from labor and pleasure.

'Tis then silence speaks out in her eloquent voice; 'tis then she bids us pause and reflect on our past, present and future. We ask self for what are we striving? Then as we stand in the present of our past, as it were, and ask this question when all is silent around us, what will be our answer? You will hear the rich and poor, as in one voice, answer: "I am striving for happiness, for power here and hereafter."

The poor man will say to himself: "I labor to gain money wherewith to own a little home to place my family in, that they may be independent of want and be happy here; that they may have the pleasure of preparing their souls for the great hereafter." He wishes to be free from labor at least one day in seven to enjoy with his family, to teach them to be good men and women, that they may enjoy the blessings of earth and heaven. He wishes to think of his dear ones and also himself as respected, honored persons on earth and bright, happy angels above, when earth's trials are over.

This is the answer the laboring man gives to self in that silent hour of his when he stands on the shores of the present and looks back across the deep, silent past: "I have striven to be happy and make my family so." He will confess his mistakes to self in silence which the world will never hear him give expression to in words. When the voice of silence questions us we always answer truly.

You will hear the rich and the grand say: "I have also striven to gain power through wealth that I might be happy." He also will face his past conduct and answer: "My life has been a long struggle to be happy;" although he may excuse his actions to the world, he will answer the voice of the silent self-questions truly. He knows that he has wronged others, yet he did it to gain wealth and power that he and his might be happy.

Do not take it for granted that we condemn the rich alone, for it is not true; we condemn none. We only ask every one to pause and answer to that grand voice of silent-self each day: What has your conduct been to-day? Listen to the small voice as it speaks to you how to be happy, for to be happy one must be well in mind and body, and the true voice of the silent-self spirit is always true. Then pause and be silent. Commune with self, and you will do no wrong. Let your daily life be such that when the silent hours of rest come to you, you can answer to self truly: "I have done no wrong, for as sure as I do I suffer." Then avoid all wrong.

You may escape the eyes of your fellow men, but in those silent hours when you are alone, it is then you must answer for your actions. You may have gained great honor and great wealth to bestow on wife and self. The world looks on with praise and envy and gives you all honor. You are happy in your hour of triumph; then be sure that you can answer to self in your hours of silent self and say, "I did no wrong to gain my glory." If you cannot answer truly the voice of silence, your glory will be turned to sorrow, your happiness to pain.

I say that self is the worst accuser we have, and when in the silent hours of rest we can answer self truly then we are happy. Silence is the mother of thought, and thought the cause of all action, for we cannot act without thought, let our action be ever so sudden or quick. Even our earth is the result of atomic thought. Every atomic formation is a result of thought. Our rocks and forests, and every demonstration of nature's law are a direct result of nature's thought, for where there is no thought there is no action, no expression.

Our great earth planet is one beautiful combination of thought.

All nature proves itself to be a great pulsating world of thought.

We call ourselves thinking men and women, children of this earth; if so, then that is a proof in itself that this very earth is a living, pulsating body. It must be so to be the producer and mother of man. Every atom of earth has its spirit or counterpart as well as man, and from the very center of earth clear through the belts of space, everything has a spirit.

We always were and always will be, for when once a thought is put in action it lives forever. The body cannot be destroyed; it will go to dust or the mouldering earth, yet it is not destroyed, but is no longer a living man in man's form, able to think and act with us, yet it has power among earth's atoms. As life it only represents the silent voice of earth again, but the thinking spirit which gave it being still lives to act, for the soul never dies nor enters the tomb.

The body must go through its change, for all nature is continual action and change. The spirit goes on through belt after belt, all the time growing more spiritual, grander and better.

From the time of your first automatic formation when you were being created in nature's cradle of thought, you were a part of spirit and matter then just as now, and mother earth intended you to be a good expression of her thoughts then as well as now; but when you were born into this compound of compounds you became independent of your creative cause to a great extent. You had power to form your own thoughts, and as we think, we act and are. So we in our great struggle for power and happiness have put away nature's beautiful thoughts and changed the very appearance of our mother earth, both in looks and effect, yet she goes on in her grand silent march, teaching us lessons of good health, love and peace.

It is in silence we are commanded to pray, because when alone we feel the great grand powers of silence. Then we can concentrate our minds on the past and the present, and plan for the good of our future.

We can ask in prayer for blessings. Prayer is or should be a divine desire of the soul. How our barren and dreary earth must have in silence communed with self and planned and prayed and desired before she produced all the grand and useful scenery upon her smiling face.

Oh! what a grand council of atomic silent thought must have been called to bring forth humanity with all its wonderful possibilities, its great powers of good.

Oh, man, every action of your life proves you a result of that grand council—a result of that divine prayer. Then when you go in silence to pray for health or wealth or love or any desire you stand in want, you stand before the silent council of nature, confessing your inability to succeed without recourse to commune with the great nature's council, the cause of your atomic creation.

We are told in the Bible that God said, "Let us make man," but we are not informed to whom he was speaking. We will then suppose he was alone communing with himself and nature's power to create.

He called a silent council of nature's powers and said, "Let us create man." It says plainly that we were formed out of earth's matter, and into this body was breathed the breath of life, and we became living souls and afterwards became as wise as gods, knowing good from evil, which means how to produce men, and use our power of intellect to give him a living soul full of life, power and intellect, that we may learn the teachings of this material earth. It is then we learn the great lesson that all things that have life were planned by silent thought; whether man or flower, all are a demonstration of thought.

The power which causes the grain of corn to grow is the same unseen power that gave us life, only demonstrated in a different way.

We see the expression of nature's thoughts everywhere, yet we do not see the cause, the life power.

We look around us and see the beautiful results of nature's thoughts on every sun-flushed cloud, on rosy seashells and pale, sweet, delicate blossoms; this beauty is loud in its expression, but silent in cause. We can trace it back to silence. It comes from silence and to silence it returns so far as this one expression is concerned, yet it proves that the cause that gave life was from an intelligent source which cannot change.

As each season of the year comes the same expression is repeated; so is man like a flower—he comes but to pass, as it were, through this belt. He comes as the result of atomic life, as a combination of physical life, and as a flower sheds beauty and sweet perfume in its pathway, so should man shed goodness and love on his journey while passing through each sphere of our life. Our thoughts and actions help to form our children for generations to come.

That we may be always right we cannot too often go into silence alone and question self. Commune with the good in us and desire to be guided by truth alone; then all nature will answer you in her silent way and teach you how to gain that which you desire, and how best to attain it, which if a pure desire should be to be happy and bright, and work in harmony with nature to develop your moral, intellectual and physical, as well as spiritual nature.

You have the power within you to pass through this life bearing a good impression both to the present and future generations. Do not be selfish and exacting, but be kind and considerate to yourself and others. It is wrong to neglect self to injury; then cease not to commune often with self. Then you can with the voice of the poet say:

The day is done and the darkness falls from the wings of night,
As a message is wafted downward from the angels in their flight.

Such messages have power to quiet the restless pulse of care,
And come like the benediction that follows after prayer.

Our nights shall be filled with music,
the cares that 'fest the day Shall fold their wings in silence and in silence pass away.

Dr. Geo. W. Carey.

Dr. Geo. W. Carey, author of the Biochemic System of healing, scientist and lecturer, of St. Louis, formerly of California, will be in Chicago from Oct. 18th to 24th, with rooms at 1814 Michigan Boulevard, Tel. 7162 Calumet.

Dr. Carey will receive his friends, and any who may wish to meet him, from 1 to 5 p.m., Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Oct. 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23d and 24th. Consultation free. The doctor's articles on biochemistry, the new theory of electricity and blood formation, are attracting wide attention.

Independent Association, Toledo, O.

Sunday, Sept. 7, the Independent Association of Spiritualists resumed meetings for the season of 1902-03, in Memorial Building, G. A. R. room, where it has held forth for the past three years. The first thing in evidence at the hall, which presented itself to one's observation on entering, was the artistic decorations, as well as the paintings, etc.; also new carpeting for the floor which gave the place a different appearance; all of which has been put in order since the adjournment of the meetings last May.

Mrs. J. A. Murtha, of Baltimore, Md., reopened the meeting and will continue to serve the association as speaker and test medium for the month of September. As a message medium Mrs. Murtha has few equals. The rostrum for the month of October will be occupied by Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, Mich. Mrs. Carpenter is known to the people of this association as a lecturer and test medium; being of a pleasing personality she has made many friends here.

Mrs. Loe Prior has an engagement with the association for the months of November and December. Mrs. Prior is also a lecturer and test medium. She served the association on a previous engagement, when she gave general satisfaction.

Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, Mich., is booked to serve the association during the month of February. She served this association about a year ago as lecturer and test medium, in which capacity she will serve again.

In March, Mrs. Marian Carpenter will again officiate.

Mr. F. Corden White is engaged for the month of April, during which time he will serve as lecturer and test medium; although Mr. White has never served this association he is conceded to be equal to the occasion. May is still open for some good speaker and medium. So, as the programme would indicate, there is to be a perpetual mental feast for at least eight months, although we sincerely trust that none will become mentally deranged from an overfill of good things.

GEO. FRIEND.

Forest Home Camp, Mich.

Forest Home Camp at Snowflake, Mich., closed its meetings Aug. 24, that being the fourth meeting of its session.

Dr. W. O. Knowles and his estimable wife, of Grand Rapids, were with us throughout. The Doctor proved a very efficient help. His talks were instructive along all lines, and Spiritualists would do well to heed them.

Dr. Spinney, of Reed City, Mich., needs no words of mine to introduce him to the public. We are always glad to have him with us.

Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, was with us ten days and won all our hearts, congratulating us on our camp site as compared with others. She gave us great encouragement to go on with our work, to stem the tide of difficulties and come out victorious at last.

Mrs. Jennie Martin, our home medium, did a good work. She is especially adapted to psychometric reading. Our music was fine, the orchestra being led by Master Glenn Osborne on violin. He is 14 years of age, with great possibilities in the future. Great credit is due to all who so faithfully worked to make the camp a success.

This was our 3d annual camp, and although not as great a success financially as we would have liked, in all other respects it was. When we consider that we are situated in this neck of the woods, population sparse, railroad facilities poor, depending on two small towns, Bellaire and Central Lake, for support, and in a farming country, we have no cause to complain. Good health and good order prevailed. We were treated kindly. The weather was dry and beautiful; cool nights; our lake inviting.

Our cosy house, just rebuilt we named "The Retreat," and so it was in every sense of the word. It contains parlor, dining room, kitchen, and four sleeping rooms above. We already feel they are inadequate for the demand. Election of officers came off on Aug. 25. Frank Lesher succeeds himself for president. W. I. Nixon succeeds himself for vice-president. Emma L. Nixon succeeds herself as treasurer. Ruth Eastman was elected secretary, and four new trustees. The secretary will kindly reply to all inquiries for the coming year regarding camp work, and will as kindly receive all suggestions, advice, etc., so that the good work may go on.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Passed to the higher life, from the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. W. Fitch, Milan, O., Aug. 31, 1902, after a long and painful illness. She was born July 29, 1830, at Fowler, N. Y., and came to Ohio with her parents at the age of 7 years. She was married to W. J. Lindley in 1850. In 1859 she married J. W. Fitch, of Milan. To them one daughter was born. They made their home in this town during their long and happy union. He died in 1899.

She was a woman beloved by all for her gentle, amiable qualities, emphatically a home-maker, silent over the errors of others, but quick to praise. She was a Spiritualist because she was spiritual.

During her last illness her daughter lavished her untiring attention, and cared for her every wish. The funeral was held Sept. 2nd. Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle gave a song service and recited a poem written for the occasion and Hudson Tuttle gave the address. There was a profusion of the flowers she loved—pansies, pinks and roses.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

If you or your friends want a correct diagnose or clairvoyant reading, send to DR. J. R. CRAIG, Sacramento, Cal.

WHY BE SICK?

Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Famous Physician and Scientist Has Perfected a System of Treatment that Gives Hope to Every Sufferer.

Send His Valuable Book, "A Message of Hope"—It will Explain to You this Wonderful Treatment and Tell You How You Can be Healed.

Why will you continue to suffer when there is a treatment at hand that will cure you? Dr. Peebles and his associates, all physicians of wide experience and reputation, have perfected a system of treatment that promises health and strength to all.

J. M. Peebles, A. M., M. D., Ph. D.

Many of their cures seem almost like miracles, for hundreds of those restored had traveled far and wide, trying this doctor and that; without getting any relief and were about to give up in despair when they began the treatment of Dr. Peebles.

They are able to do such wonderful cures because they work in harmony with nature, and employ her mighty healing forces in connection with mild, scientifically prepared medicinal remedies. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the depleted system, enriches the blood, improves digestion and assimilation, gives strength and tone to weakened nerves and muscles, and permanently repairs wasted tissues and organs, causing thousands of the sick to rejoice at being healed.

Why don't you sit down, at once, and write the doctors a plain, truthful letter as to your condition as you see it? If you will do this, they will carefully examine your case and send you a full diagnosis of your condition, and tell you truthfully whether or not they can cure you. This will cost you nothing, and if they find they can cure you, they will make their charges so small that anyone can afford the treatment.

If you are sick, write them at once for their full diagnosis and professional advice which will be sent without charge, together with their wonderful book, "A Message of Hope," which will explain fully this grand system of treatment and give you information that will brighten the remainder of your life. Epilepsy Cured.

At Last a Positive and Permanent Cure for This Terrible Maladay Is Discovered.

The renowned Brain and Nerve Specialist, Dr. Charles W. Green, of Battle Creek, Mich., has at last found a positive cure for Epilepsy, or Fits.

Epilepsy has baffled the medical world since the time of Hippocrates, and not until the Eminent Specialist, Dr. Green, patiently worked out his great cure has a positive cure for Epilepsy been known. The Doctor has used it in every case of fits he has treated in the past five years, hundreds of whom had tried everything they could hear of before taking his treatment, and he has yet to find the case, not due to injury, that it will not cure.

Mrs. Lizzie Green, of Boston, says: I cannot thank you enough for my deliverance from that terrible disease, Epilepsy. I had suffered with it for thirty years and had tried everything I could hear of, but the attacks only grew harder and more frequent. I had given up all hope when one of my neighbors told me of your great cure. I should not have written this if she had not urged me, for I had been fooled so often that I had resolved to pay out no more money. God bless her for urging me for you cured me and saved me from a life worse than death." Do not experiment longer with "Free Cures" and worthless nostrums containing injurious hypnotics, etc., but write at once to Dr. Charles W. Green, 214 Monroe St., Battle Creek, Mich., for full particulars of this great and tried remedy. It will cure you and brighten the end of your life. Write at once giving full facts about your case; the doctor will tell you exactly what can be done for you. Remember the treatment is positively guaranteed.

Esoteric Lessons.

An Argument Against Physical Causation.

The object of this book, considered a most excellent one by some, is to establish what is commonly regarded as purely physical health upon a purely psychical basis; to show that health is knowledge, wisdom, insight; that men suffer from so-called purely corporeal disease only because they form erroneous judgment; also, to show that the fundamental erroneous judgment is, that there is any such thing in the universe as physical causation, a belief in which leads both directly and indirectly to disease. Often directly in case of the individual, but more commonly indirectly as a race-belief held throughout the known history of mankind. This work is by Sarah Stanley Grimke. Price $1.50.

Three Remarkable Books

"The Divine Pedigree of Man."
"The Law of Psychic Phenomena."
"A Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life."

The Divine Pedigree of Man, or the Testimony of Evolution and Psychology to the Fatherhood of God. By Thompson Jay Hudson, LL. D. A most remarkable work, demonstrating the existence of the Soul and Future Life. It is scientific throughout. Price $1.50. Dr. Hudson's work on "The Law of Psychic Phenomena" is also valuable. Price, $1.50. His "Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life" should be read by all. Price $1.50.

The Romance of Jude A story of the Life and Times of "The Nazarine" and of his people. Given Through the mediumship of MRS. M. T. LONGLEY, to Ira C. Fuller, and by him dedicated to humanity. It is enough to know this work came through this excellent medium to recommend it. 174 pages of interesting reading. Price, cloth, 50 cents.

Longley's Beautiful Songs
For Public Meetings and the Home.

VOLUME ONE

Contains the following songs with music:
I'm thinking, dear mother, of you. We miss our boys at home. The land of the bye and bye. The good times yet to be. The land beyond the stars. They are waiting at the portal. When the dear ones gather at home. Resting under the daisies. The grand jubilee. My mother's tender eyes. Dear heart come home. Come in some beautiful dream. Where the roses never fade. In heaven we'll know our own.

VOLUME TWO

Contains 15 new and beautiful songs, suited to the home circle, seances, local meetings, mass-meetings, conventions, anniversaries and jubilees. They comprise an excellent variety of poems set to easy harmony and ought to sell readily. These books are 15cts. each; the two for 20cts. For sale at this office.

VOLUMES 3 AND 4.

This is a book of 57 pages, filled with spiritual harmony from first to last. Spiritual societies need not be calling for something new to sing to the people if they will supply themselves with copies of this book, or in fact any of the above choice collections of Mr. Longley's musical publications. Volumes 3 and 4 are in one book, price 25 cts., 3 cts. each by mail.

"AS IT IS TO BE."
A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.
It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"NO BEGINNING."
An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful number. Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

LIGHT OF EGYPT.
The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1. The Language of the Stars, paper, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

REINCARNATION.
A Leading Work On That Subject.

This is a newly edited and revised production of Mr. Walker's great work by News E. Wood, A. M., M. D. It is brought down to date by the addition of new matter. It has the following fourteen chapters: "Reincarnation Defined and Explained," "Evidences of Reincarnation," "Astral Pictures of Successive Incarnations," "Objections to Reincarnation," "Reincarnation Among the Ancients," "Reincarnation in the Bible," "Reincarnation in Early Christendom," "Reincarnation in the East To-day," "Esoteric Oriental Reincarnation," "Transmigration through Animals," "Death, Heaven and Hell," "Karma, the Companion Truth of Reincarnation," "Western Writers on Reincarnation," "Mr. Walker's Conclusions." As the book stands, it is the most complete, logical, clear and convincing work on the subject extant. Price, postpaid, in handsome leatherette, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

PROGRESSION Or How a Spirit Advances in Spirit Life. The evolution of Man. By Michael Faraday. Price 15c.

THE SOUL OF THINGS;
Or Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. By Wm. and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. A marvelous work. Though concise as a text book it is as fascinating as a work of fiction. The reader will be amazed to see the curious facts here combined in support of this power of the human mind; which will resolve a thousand doubts and difficulties, make geology plain as day, and throw light on all subjects now obscured by time. Price, $1.50. In three volumes, cloth bound, $1.50 each. Postage, 10c per copy.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism,
A Menace to American Civilization. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. A trenchant and masterly treatise. Price, 25 cents.

ZUGASSENT'S DISCOVERY.
Sequel to The Strike of a Sex. By George N. Miller. Paper, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

The Spiritual Wreath.
A collection of words and music for the choir, congregation and social circle. By S. W. Tucker. Comprises sixty or more gems of song. Price, 15 cents.

Consciousness In Its Biological Aspect.

To the Editor:—In the Popular Science Monthly for August, the leading article is the address of the President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Prof. Charles Sedgwick Minot, at the Annual meeting held in June at Pittsburg, Pa.

This address is semi-official, being by the chief officer of the association on what he esteems the theme of present importance in the scientific world. This fact and the subject selected gives to the address more than ordinary interest. The topic for the paper was "The Problem of Consciousness in its Biological Aspect." He began by saying that "consciousness is at once the oldest problem of philosophy, and one of the youngest problems of science." He then gives the attitude of science toward it in these words:

"The time is not yet for giving a satisfactory definition of consciousness, and we must fain content ourselves with the decision of the metaphysician, who postulates consciousness as an ultimate datum or concept of thought, making the brief dictum cogito, ergum sum, the pivot about which the system revolves."

It is not the purpose here to review this paper from the official head of the American Association, but to refer to it that Spiritualists may see the position of science toward the subject. The paper next notices the two philosophic divisions: (1) Monism which regards consciousness as an epiphenomenon—a result, not a cause—and (2) those who regard it as a real phenomenon. He rejects monism as "not so much the product of deep and original thinking as the result of a contemporary tendency. * * rather an incidental result of an intellectual impulse." The position of the address itself is that "consciousness ought to be regarded as a biological phenomenon, which the biologist has to investigate in order to increase the number of verifiable data concerning it." In other words, it declares that consciousness is peculiarly and primarily the work of biology, and it is in that direction rather than by philosophy that the problem is to be solved.

It will well repay the thinking Spiritualist to read this, in some respects remarkable address. He will lay it down with both wonder and admiration at the dexterity with which the author has avoided the constantly obtruding idea that there could be any suggestion of spirit or soul in the manifestations of consciousness. To give the reader a clearer conception of the president's position, the hypothesis with which he closes is here given:

"Consciousness have the power to change the form of energy, and is neither a form of energy nor a state of protoplasm." And concludes with this declaration: "The Universe consists of force and consciousness. As consciousness by our hypothesis can initiate the change of the form of energy, it may be that without consciousness the universe would come to absolute rest."

Here is the inevitable travel in the circle — two consequent hypotheses based upon a third primary hypothesis, yet biology is the one road open to these hypothetical speculations of this latest position of science.

The purpose of this notice of the American Association address was to lead up to a notice of J. Clegg Wright's remarkable book, "Body and Soul," recently issued from the press, and already in its second edition—a fact complimentary to the reading public.

One of the remarkable things about the scientific cult is the seemingly studied ignoring of spirit or soul, as a hypothesis. They can postulate atoms, gravity, ethers, energy, force, evolution and so on, for the one reason that some such concepts are needed to make their theories work, but not that the unseen power is intelligent without a visible personality. They will not even consider it a hypothetical possibility. Take for illustration the hypothesis of this address, that consciousness has the power to change the form of energy, but is neither a form of energy nor a state of protoplasm. And yet the student of science is advised to find out its nature by biologic investigation. And what, pray, is biology? (1) The science of life and living things * * the knowledge of vital phenomena; (2) physiology; (3) life history of an animal; (4) animal magnetism.

These are the four divisions in the dictionary, the scientific definition of biology, to which consciousness is relegated for solution. But Prof. Minot makes another startling declaration for a biologist. And it is that "there are two fundamentally different things in the universe—force and consciousness." And then adds "that we do not have, and never have had, any evidence whatever that matter exists. All our sensations are caused by force and force only, so that the biologist can say that our senses bring no evidence of matter." And again he quotes Faraday as saying that "nothing was gained and much lost by the hypothesis of material atoms."

It is not polite nor is it always germane to be hyper-critical, but this scientific pronouncement is very tempting in that direction. How "two fundamentally different" things can produce the harmony of the universe sounds curious when we look at the definition of the two words used. And how science can sneer at Christian Science when we do not have and never have had any evidence whatever that matter exists.

And again, how long and how persistent has been the protest of the Spiritualist Scientists against the atomic theory the columns of The Progressive Thinker can in part testify. And yet our platforms are vocal with the iteration of this oldest and chiefest postulate of materialism. And even the President of the American Association after this sweeping away of matter from the path of science will talk about "the law of gravity," which is predicated upon the primal existence of "particles of matter." Without matter as primal, gravity can not work as a law. Yet this President says:

"It would be a great contribution to science to kill off the hypothesis of matter as distinct from force."

Surely the world moves. Consciousness, says science, can change the form of energy, but is not energy. Consciousness can influence protoplasm, yet is not a state of protoplasm. What is it? Find out, says science, by studying protoplasm and observing the effect of energy upon or within it.

Here we come to the parting. And to this travel in a circle we are limited to establish a non-sequitur—because science refuses to even consider spirit as a hypothesis in the solution. Why consider any and all sorts of hypotheses except this? Suppose it is but hypothesis, why should science object when its whole scheme of nature is purely hypothetical? In truth, save in some chemical formulas the whole structure of science is hypothetical. Do with spirit as with any other postulate. Try it, give it hospitable treatment. See how things not otherwise explained it will answer, and then determine whether as a hypothesis it works out results that are mysteries by other methods. But it is begging the question by science to raise this objection. As has been said, gravity, ether, energy, polarity, atoms, evolution and a host of other things are all hypotheses by which science essays to solve the problems of nature, yet when we postulate spirit or soul they turn up their salaried noses at a hypothesis.

Bus is it such? Aside from chemical formulas, there is nothing in the domain of research so well-established by evidence as the continuity of life. Crookes, Lodge and others more eminent in science than any members of the American Association, have proved it by scientific methods, and so general has the fact been demonstrated that hostile scientists have set themselves to account for these well-established facts by some other agency than spirit. Even such a disjointed patchwork as Thomson J. Hudson's book has been greedily seized upon to help out entrenched bigotry, when on any other question its crude absurdities would be laughed at by the most elementary efforts at logic.

And most opportunely comes this book by J. Clegg Wright—an exposition of spirit and Spiritualism, by the most exacting scientific methods, and it might almost be said in deference to the demands of the scientific cult. To show the contrast between the narrowness of science and the generous temper of this book—where it treats of one of the brain functions, it says: "You are indebted for this discovery to science. Modern physiological and anatomic science have demonstrated the existence of the apparatus through which spirits can communicate with mortals. Never permit it again to be said by ignorant opponents of the phenomena of trance consciousness and the influence of spiritual power that such manifestations are not consistent with known physiological science. It is perfectly in harmony with physiological and anatomical science demonstrated as a fact in organization every day in your medical colleges."

And this is from a spirit, explaining to an audience in Washington City how he was then controlling a medium in the presentation of these facts. And this is but one illustration of the many in this remarkable book. What is it like?

The book consists of 146 pages, divided into seven lectures—entirely inspirational. In order that those not familiar with Mr. Wright's lectures by personal attendance upon their delivery, this extract from his preface is given. The lectures, he states, were "delivered by me while in the trance state. This state, as seen in me, is a state of perfect sleep, that is, the conscious, normal mind is suspended and the trance mind, with a changed personality appears and becomes the possessor of the organism for the time being."

The changed personality in this case was or is George Rushton, whose life is well authenticated—an Englishman, as is Mr. Wright; was a man of wide learning and evidently of great mental ability and accomplishments, contemporary with and acquainted with Lord Broughham, Byron and other well known men of their time, and often refers to them and to himself. He always speaks of himself in the first person as if present and speaking—saying "I" as familiarly as any one. So that this book is as near of purely spirit authorship as any that can be found—and in its idiomatic science might be from even so distinguished a source as the President of the American Association himself. In this respect it is exceptional and unique in spiritual literature.

You may recall that in these talks with your readers, it has been urged that the time had come for Spiritualists to assert themselves and insist on their rightful status among the thinkers of the world, for a philosophy, a theory, principles, a system of doctrine, or whatever name may be chosen, as firmly based on evidence and demonstration as any hypothesis or system in any other department of knowledge. We have the facts demonstrated over and over again, for more than half a century, and when we quit begging the question, quit pandering to "respectability," with alphabetical appendages to their names, and charge home the ignorance that exists in the learned professions as to the multitude of facts behind us, the sooner will the knowledge of immortality become the common possession of civilization. Barbarism has always known and recognized it, and our prevalent religions are largely based upon barbaric concepts of what it means, or what it interprets, from a common world-wide phenomena.

If our platforms, seances, and those who rush into print on a two or three seance experience, would take this position and have the courage of our knowledge, the monotonous parentheses about "fraud" that has become so fashionable would cease. The statement may be made with absolute confidence that the major part of the "fraud" bugaboo comes from self-elected critics whose ignorance of the facts underlying Spiritualism is simply amazing, if not deserving a harsher word. People have been before the public as teachers who have never had more than an occasional spectator's experience in slate-writing or materialization or of the independent voice. This is not mere assertion, but it is based upon long experience and observation. Too many of our leaders are in this category, tinctured with the superstition annexed to phenomena. They seem to forget that the nursery education regards anything like mediumship as fortune telling and the theology of adult years as miracle. Both these must be got rid of before the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism can be rationally examined.

Spiritualism is not a religion in the sense of the churches—past or present. It is not a philosophy based upon metaphysical induction or deduction, but a knowledge based on a series of well attested occurrences, facts demonstrated by the highest methods of scientific examination and proof. The proposition is very simple—that the individual human being, as to memory, intelligence, knowledge of the past and present, exists after death, and is able to identify itself with the same personal idiosyncrasies as when living among us. That is the essential governing fact—the all general—of Spiritualism. It is this fact that is demonstrated by phenomena and should be kept paramount and clean. And this can only be done by experience and familiarity with mediumship and its manifestations.

But when our leaders attempt to lecture us about our duty as to this or that, or as to our belief in reference to theories growing out of these facts, they are emulating the priest and urging their own opinions. However able or interesting all this may be, it is not basic teaching. It is this growing tendency in public work that is overshadowing phenomena, because those who practice it are too often ignorant of the primal facts, and are the poorest exponents of its foundation truths. What are the facts: That spirit communication by sound is as well proven as telegraphy; that writing by invisible agency on slates, wood, paper, etc., is as well authenticated as that this is hand written manuscript; that the voice from the invisible personality is as well established as telephoning; that what is called materialization has been proved in broad daylight, the process being watched from beginning till complete as plainly as a lady dressing her hair. When our platforms are occupied by teachers who can say: "I know these things by actual experience and observation" we will hear less about fraud and have less to say about it.

This book through Mr. Wright is invaluable, as there is not a medium before the public to-day that furnishes more complete evidence of spirit control, and the lectures are by a spirit of world-wide celebrity as an able and luminous teacher. They deal with consciousness, mind, soul and modes of expression through brain, nerves, ganglia, the blood, and the machinery of the body. The book is an exhaustive exposition of anatomical and physiological science as thoroughly and technically so as the text books. In addition to this it is an exposition of how consciousness, both automatic and intelligent, is reached, and the manner in which hypnotic power and spirit force is exercised through the brain, nerves and other divisions of the human organism.

The newness of the teaching, if this term may be used, is in regard to consciousness and mind. The definition of Mind as a function, not an entity, as the schools have taught, is at once original in philosophy and self-convincing when stated. In this brief sentence the whole question is expressed with that force of condensation and clearness characteristic of Mr. Wright's trance utterance: "Mind is not consciousness, but mind is the function of consciousness, and it is the measure of the unfoldment of consciousness."

The temptation to quote in speaking of this unique book is very great; but it is just that sort of a book that comment by quotation only confuses and lessens its force. Nowhere has condensation left so little to be said. One of its characteristics is definition. In this respect no scientific exposition has greater claim to clearness—this relating to mind is one example. After reading you have a better idea than ever before of "cell," "nerve," "glands," "sensation," "idea," "law," as applied to nature, and many other terms used by science and in philosophy, which have almost a new rendering in the clearness of definition and their working in the complicated economy of life.

The chapters are seven in number: The first treats of "the Brain and the Trance State;", the second of "Mind" —"the" mind is not mentioned, and this fact reveals the core of the topic—not a thing, but a function. The third chapter is devoted to 'the Spirit Man in relation to the Psychic Man. It is enough here to state that by spirit man is meant the man built after the death of 'the body.' This to Spiritualists in the general is a revelation almost as it is to the scientist, and in its exposition the same severe method is followed. The statement that the continued personal consciousness is verily of the nature and constitution of man, and that man never vacates heredity, and that all experiences maintain their relation to the spirit man, and that perception of form is never vacated, are momentous declarations to all thinkers. Never before have these facts been so tersely and forcibly declared. They constitute in themselves an entire concept of the status of man in the spirit life. After reading this, where John Smith comes back and tells us it is really him, we can realize what he means—that it is the real John Smith. The whole chapter is so clear and so remarkable that it must exercise a controlling influence among thinkers in regard to this heretofore rather occult topic.

Chapter IV is one of the most lucid, masterly expositions as to the soul theory to which philosophy has access. The Spirit—Rushton—speaking in the first person takes the following position, and the quotation is full because it is here that what we call consciousness is manifested. He says:

"The soul I postulate, as a primal intelligence, a formative force co-related "in all the conditions of phenomenal nature. That is itself intelligence, and "that is the ruling principle in form and "thought expression. This soul I hold to "be the architect of all bodily structures under an environment of standing "heredity. That the surroundings "under which a soul comes into body "determines capability to express itself. The nature of the embodiment, "its simple or complex structure, fixing the order and power of its place in "nature and its intelligence. It seems "to me to be in harmony with the highest rational principle to believe that "the soul is a necessary intelligent entity, simple and uncompounded, an "element of thinking stuff that is in itself self-existent; that is, that is not a "derived or made entity, that it always "has existed, and that it always will exist. I believe this because if the soul "entity had been created it had been "created either by something like itself, "or something different from itself. "It could not have been created by "something different from itself because "things which have nothing in common "can not be the cause of one another; "if created at all it must have been "created by something like itself, which, "under those conditions would be the "same, and therefore but a continuation of the same stuff, therefore I believe that the soul is uncreated; that "the soul never began to be and will "never have an end.

"Under the present conditions of my "conscious expression, I am not able to "give the eternal biography of a soul; "I expect at some period of my spiritual consciousness to have a full view "of all that my soul has realized or "thought, or that it will have in the "future, in its relative possibilities of "expression."

With this concept of the soul, consciousness becomes understandable as the functioning of the soul's knowing, and renders thinkable the whole formula of nature, its phenomena and laws. Law in nature is not the mandate of a maker of laws, but the uniform manner in which the phenomena of nature are manifested.

Your space will not allow all that should be included in a notice of this book. If we are to have colleges for students in Spiritualism, it should be a text-book. And the so-called chairs of psychology in our universities would be doing something real if they, too, were to use it. It is both amusing and sad —as the mood may be—to see these travesties—the professorships of psychology in our great institutions. They never touch the soul or spirit—that would be unscientific—but root about in the debris of "mental-science," as they call it, and physiology.

Turning now to the paper of President Minot with which this notice begins, and contrast his almost pathetic call for light on the most important question now before science with the treatment of the subject in these lectures through Mr. Wright, and the wonder can only be why these learned men can so persistently shut their eyes before the light. To read the book is but to realize the blindness that seeks to solve an invisible intelligence and power by means of acids, alkalies and artificial motor agencies.

But it is to the intelligent Spiritualist, especially those who assume to lead and teach the inquiring masses, that this appeal comes. They can not afford to be ignorant of what this book contains. When it is read, studied and digested, the whole structure of false science and speculation about the objective, and subjective, vibration, throught-transference, telepathy, subconscious-self, and the swarm of pretentious platitudes injected into the literature of the day and in the platform utterances of too many who get access to it, will disappear and a healthy, idiomatic nomenclature once more be heard from in the lecture and the press.

More than this: Science itself with this book before it, can no longer sneer at ghost stories, witch, fascination, nor at nursery tales revamped to catch the credulous. It is here met on its own ground, with its own formulas explained and its own technical exposition reproduced by its own methods. Its vibrations, its waves, its correlations of force, its conservation of energy, its office of the brain, nerves, ganglia and their functions noted and recognized; the blood and its office, the foods, the stomach, the viscera, and the phenomena of chemical electrical, magnetic and polar powers all are recognized, admitted, and their action explained in harmony, with recognized results. They must respect the learning and knowledge displayed, the logic and force of its arguments and exposition—even if its postulates are not admitted. This will surely take care of itself. In the meantime, intelligent Spiritualists should do all that is offered them to do to encourage its circulation and reading among cultured and thinking people—because no such work appealing to the scholar and thinker has appeared in these later times. It comes when sorely needed to stem the tide of charlatanry that is overrunning our earlier literature.

DR. PHELON'S LETTER.

Brief Notes on Various Matters of Interest.

Some of the New York dailies, inspired, it is said, by the money of certain fashionable modistes, of which sex we know not, have opened their columns to the defamation of our San Francisco ladies. They have found fault with the styles and materials of dress which our ladies wear; as if they were not themselves the best judges of matters adapted to our climatic conditions and circumstances. Not only have these meddling ones shown their vicious ignorance of the peculiarities of this coast and climate, but they have dared to criticise the shape and carriage of the form divine belonging to their Western sisters, to the detriment of the easy, lithe, fawn-like movements of our growing and grown girls. It does not become the trainers of Mrs. Knickerbocker, who offer to the world, with self-satisfied content, that peculiarly malodorous bouquet, the "Four Hundred," to throw stones, especially at the active, aspiring, accomplishing women of this Coast, who are doing so much, even during the transition state of the fusing of many nations and tongues into a cosmopolitan whole. It is the ladies of the Pacific slope against the world, and they will win. They know their own desires, needs and business. They have no need of instructions nor criticisms from the lady of New York. I simply testify to that which I know.

Somebody was saying that the death rate of San Francisco was larger than any other city of the Union. This comes very naturally, on account of the great number of invalids, who in the last stage of some consuming illness, come here, hoping and seeking, if perchance, they may, by the assistance of the climate, overcome their negative position and rise once more to the fullness of pristine health and strength. So, often they delay their coming too long. Thus is increased our death rate, and the mortuary returns, from sources that are foreign to us, and are in no sense a part of the conditions on this Slope.

It really seems as if the Elemental of the Automobile held some spite against the people of means who are attempting to coerce him to their service. Hardly have the funeral rites of Charles Fair and his wife been completed, when Senator Stewart's wife, of Nevada, is killed in a similar manner. A cursory comparison of the machine with the bicycle seems to show there is a peculiar condition common to both: If we look steadily at something with which we desire to avoid contact, the guiding hand will follow the eye mechanically, and we will surely collide. This leads to the rule: "Look away from the thing you desire to avoid," when handling any of the self-balancing, vitality-propelled machines. Beware of the automobile elemental.

There are a great many professional men in this city. Perhaps the number of artists may be surprising to those who do not stop to reflect that within the State, in sight and hearing of each other, are more magnificent bits of scenery of ocean, mountain, forest and plain, than in any other of the United States. This was brought to my attention, a few days ago, while in the studio of C. A. Rogers, one of the industrious, self-sacrificing men, who, occasionally are drawn by their love of art into the profession. As a true artist should do, he believes in the fundamental truths of Spiritualism. And they whisper to him as the ego guides the hand, in the field or the studio. I wish that The Progressive Thinker family could have spent with me the hour I enjoyed in his studio. Its walls are lined with marine scenes; mountain views; groups of the wonderful redwood groves existing nowhere else save in this State; a number of scenes from the Chinese quarter of San Francisco; and an occasional portrait.

They are all sketched and painted from Nature, with the utmost fidelity of detail and color. Each is a study of the peculiarities of this Coast and its people. Mr. Rogers' sketches are made with a faithful adherence to the realities of form and color. Nothing could more fully bring these scenes into one's home, in all their truthful likeness, than the brush he wields. It is a treat for us, who can go out under the sky, and see the things that he saw. How much more of a feast for those who have only been able to dream of the beauties of this El Dorado, with all that is still undeveloped.

Having resided in ten states of the Union, I feel competent to say that California is a synopsis of all. A picture of a portion of her out-doors is an addition to any library, parlor or office. Especially is this true, when from the hands of an artist, so faithful to his ideals of truth, in every respect, as Mr. Rogers. Then, as one of us, he deserves our consideration as one from whose brush flows no sloppy work.

Perhaps those who desire to remember their friends during the coming holidays, may have a new idea. If they would like any additional information, they may address me at 500 Van Ness Ave.

Since my last letter, Buffalo Bill and his "Wild West" have been in camp here. There, riders of all nations, made a satisfactory showing to men, who, born and reared in the saddle, have become now, too respectable as citizens, to ride even a bicycle.

OF POETS.

Why They Are So Much Behind the Times.

Why, asks with great earnestness and spirit a certain reviewer, why do not modern poets yield themselves to modern conditions? Why do they continue to sing upon worn-out themes? Why do they not celebrate the real interests of to-day? Why does not some man appear capable of singing in joyous strains the glorious triumphs of the trolley car, the elevated railroad, the steam engine, the coal mine and the steel trust? Why, he asks, are there no poems about the advances of medical science, the discoveries of chemistry, the marvels of the x-ray and the devices for exterminating microbes? Why are the poor feeble-minded poets still twanging their useless lyres about brooks and sunsets, and flowers and such things, when they might sing about pile drivers and channel dredgers, the stock exchange and the wheat pit, the skyscraping building and the electric light? Why, in other words, have we no poetry truly representative of modern life.

These questions, in their spirit at least, are propounded in the greatest possible seriousness and obviously in good faith. As they come from a respectable and even eminent source and represent a new phase of an artistic problem it may be worth while to consider them with some gravity.

We do not have poetry about the material aspects of modern life because the subject is not capable of poetry. You might just as well ask why we don't have paintings of microbes and sewers and statuary about rolling mills. It is perfectly true that poetry must have some relation to human life and some appeal to human interest. So must painting, so must sculpture, so must music. Like the other arts, poetry is an appeal through the human senses to human imagination and sympathy. But like the other arts, also, it is very sternly limited by the requirements of moment, to the kindred realm of music. You might as well ask why do not the composers reproduce in their compositions the actual sounds of actual life? Why do they not give us the steam whistle and the boiler factory, the trolley car bell and the newsboys' shrieking extras? These are the typical sounds of modern life, but we should not care to hear an orchestra try to reproduce them, and we should not imagine for a moment that any such reproduction was related to music, however accurate might be the imitation or however characteristic of modern life might be the sound imitated.

In the same way it would be no doubt perfectly feasible to compose verses about microbes and armor plate. But the reason that no modern poet has ever essayed such subjects is not, as this eminent reviewer seems to think, because the modern poets are a lot of dull dreamers and idiots, but because such verses, when composed, would be no more poetry than the revised statutes of the State of Illinois. It is quite possible to appeal to the human reason about microbes, but not to the human sense of beauty, and that is the appeal that is alone the essence of poetry.

As a matter of fact we do not need poetic or other literature designed to increase our interest in the material aspects of modern life. The world is too much with us in a sense far other than that contemplated by the maker of that familiar phrase. The real province of poetry, like the sister arts of music, painting and sculpture, is to draw our attention away from the material things of life toward the things that are worth while, toward the beauty of the world, toward the sweet and kindly things of nature and life that alone make tolerable the wretched state of man. You might as well question the utility of roses, sunrise and sunset, stars and seas and mountains, shadows and sunlight, as to question the utility of trying to reproduce and express the feelings pertaining to these things. The Gradgrinds of criticism would have done with all this. Nothing is worth while, they say, but the literature that deals with material conditions and material aspects. Does the study of roses help a man in any way to accumulate a fortune or manage a trust? To perdition, then, with roses. Clouds, of course, you may deal with as producing rain and affecting the wheat crop. Brooks have their uses, for they sometimes turn mills, but on the whole are to be discouraged because the milling industry of the country is now in the hands of a trust which uses only steam. Sunlight may be treated as affecting public health and destroying bacteria, but to sing idle songs about the sunlight on a mountain and the blue shadows beneath—what nonsense!

But praised be nature for ordering things wisely. There be others in this world than Gradgrinds, and so long as fields are green and roses red there are likely to be those that love them and those that sing about them, and those that, seeing them and reading of them, feel that there are some things in life worth at least as much as grubbing for money or inventing car couplers.—Charles E. Russell in Chicago American.

NOBILITY.

It is not that the mountains make the men,
In solitary grandeur, but apart—
The towering hilltops can but serve to start
A sleeping nobleness to life again.
The great-souled natures find their province when
They join the toiler in the street, the mart,
Their honest, rugged sturdiness of heart
Kindling responsiveness unstirred till then.
For such is not the narrow, binding creed,
Nor struggle to excel at others' cost—
The bickering selfish strife to win who can,
On them the Pharisaic cult is lost:
Theirs is to seek and help the crying need,
To stir in all the majesty of man.

CLINCHING EVIDENCE.

The Forgery of Church Literature.

For more than a quarter of a century I have devoted much time to the problem of the origin of Christianity, and the result of my investigations is conviction that none of our church literature antedates the revival of learning. The Protestant church is not yet four hundred years old; how much older is the Catholic hierarchy?

Eusebius, the first and only historian of the church bordering on primitive times, begins his "Ecclesiastical History" with the birth of Jesus and ends it about the year 325. In that year the famous council of Nicaea is alleged to known as Iznek, some seventy miles south of Constantinople, a ruined city containing about 150 houses.

Eusebius is said to have taken a prominent part in that ecclesiastical council, being selected by its presiding officer, the Emperor Constantine, to deliver the opening address. But though our first church historian is said to have lived many years longer, during which time, as his biographers and commentators concede, he not only continued to write, but must have completed his "Ecclesiastical History," he makes no allusion to the council of Nicaea in that work.

This omission, as the annotator Valesius remarks, is very singular, and he might have added unaccountable.

A like omission is noticed by Valesius in Eusebius' "Chronological Canons," another work which also comes down to A.D. 325. And though in the same "Chronicon" there is a suspicious passage concerning the Nicene council, Valesius says: "It is sufficiently evident that these words were not written by Eusebius, but by St. Jerome, who in the Chronicle inserted many passages of his own."

The "Chronicon" was first published in a complete state at Milan in 1818, from an Armenian version discovered at Constantinople in that year.

Other works of Eusebius appeared as follows:

"Preparatio Evangelica," Latin, in 1480, Greek text in 1544.

"Demonstratio Evangelica," Latin, in 1498; Greek text in 1544.

"Ecclesiastical History," Latin in 1474, purporting to be a translation from the Greek by Rufinus, who is supposed to have been born about A.D. 350; Greek text in 1549.

The above dates are authoritative, but long after printed books began to appear, the conjectural dates are not reliable. Prof. Johnson says that no date in the fifteenth century can be trusted, and he assigns the composition of the "Ecclesiastical History" to the sixteenth century.

The learned Jesuit Hardouin (A. D. 1646-1729) says in his posthumous book that the earliest of the succession of Benedictine forgeries were in Latin, because it was some time after the revival of learning before the scholars mastered the Greek; and he believes that most of the Greek books were first written in Latin, pretending to be early translations.

Such is undoubtedly the fact as regards the first church history by Eusebius. The Latin is tolerably good, but the Greek text, which was a later find, is most wretched. The English translator of the "accurate Greek text published by Valesius," apologized for the ambiguous and otherwise defective style of Eusebius, being very different from that which prevailed three centuries before. Father Hardouin would have said, fifteen hundred years before.

"Why is it," says Hardouin, "that not one of the Greek fathers wrote good Greek? In the Gallic language there have been many changes in five hundred years; in the Greek no change appears in fifteen hundred years; all the pretended fathers and historians use the same dialect and the same syntax." And Prof. Johnson, after pointing out the blunders of the Greek text of Eusebius, concluded by saying that it reminds one of "English as she is spoke." I would rather say, "as she is wrote."

Eusebius attempts to disprove the date of the crucifixion alleged in what he calls the "Spurious Acts against our Savior," to-wit, in the seventh year of the reign of Tiberius, which would be A.D. 22, some three or four years before Pilate was appointed procurator of Judea (book i, chap. ix). He quotes Josephus for the date of the appointment of Pilate. His reference to the "Spurious Acts against our Savior" appears to point to the apocryphal "Acts of Pilate." Eusebius himself fixes the year of the crucifixion A.D. 29; hence the necessity of disputing an earlier date.

Pseudo—Eusebius died many years before pseudo—Jerome wrote the lives of "Illustrious Men," and the later forger, when he spoke of "the passion of the Lord in the year XXV," did not seem to know that his mythical predecessor had fixed the date of the passion four years later.

This discovery, communicated privately to the editor of The Progressive Thinker, has been ventilated in an editorial as a "clinch of evidence," and I am invited to discuss it further. There is much more evidence of the forgery —but for the present, let this suffice.

HOSPITALITY.

Blest be the spot, where cheerful guests retire,
To pause from toil, and trim their evening fire;
Blest that abode, where want and pain repair,
And every stranger finds a ready chair;
Blest be those feasts with simple plenty crowned,
Where all the ruddy family around
Laugh at the jests or pranks that never fail,
Or sigh with pity at some mournful tale,
Or press the bashful stranger to his food,
And learn the luxury of doing good.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

WESLEY AND THE GHOSTS OF EPWORTH

Methodist churches all over the world are making elaborate preparations to celebrate next June the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of John Wesley. In every country under the sun where the apostles of Methodism have penetrated, a watch night service will be held to usher in the day on which the founder of the church was born. There will be special communion and praise meetings, where the most gifted orators in the denomination will pay tribute to the great reformer.

Epworth leaguers are to hold song services, and the many Methodist institutions of learning, such as the Northwestern, Ohio, and Connecticut Wesleyan universities, will observe the day with fitting exercises, speeches, and a holiday.

In anticipation of this two hundredth anniversary celebration the Northwestern Christian Advocate is publishing an extensive biography of the reformer, written by its editor, David D. Thompson. In an editorial note Mr. Thompson says: "While we do not expect to present many new facts concerning the life and work of Wesley, we hope to present old facts in a new form that may render them of interest to those who have not read all the biographies of the founders of Methodism."

WESLEY'S BELIEF IN GHOSTS.

One of the most interesting features of Mr. Thompson's work is a long disquisition upon John Wesley's belief in ghosts. Other writers have touched upon this side of the great evangelist's character, among them being Isaac Taylor, James H. Rigg, Tyerman, and Overton, the present rector of Epworth. All of Wesley's biographers, Mr. Thompson included, have treated the subject with great seriousness, until now the "Old Jeffrey Ghost Noises" have come to be looked upon as opening one of the most important epochs in Wesley's life.

Dr. Rigg, in his character sketch of John Wesley, says: "No single man for centuries has moved the world as Wesley has moved it; since Luther, no man."

Mr. Thompson says: "The four men who have made the deepest impression upon the religious history of the world have been Moses, St. Paul, Martin Luther, and John Wesley; and of these, as a social reformer, Wesley was excelled only by Moses and St. Paul."

The founder of Methodism was born in the rectory of Epworth, England, June 17, 1703. Owing to the setting aside of the old English calendar and the adoption of the Gregorian calendar in 1751, the anniversary of Wesley's birth since 1752 has been observed June 28. He was the fifteenth child of his parents, and was christened John Benjamin, being so named after his two brothers who died in infancy. The second name was never used by Wesley.

The Epworth parsonage, at the time of Wesley's birth, was a three-story building of timber and plaster, thatched with straw, and had seven principal rooms—a kitchen, hall, parlor, buttery, with three large upper rooms and some others for common use. A small garden, a thatched barn, a dovecot, and other outside premises were attached. The whole covered about three acres.

John Wesley was well born. His father, Samuel Wesley, was a minister of the Church of England. His mother, Susanna Wesley, was the daughter of Dr. Samuel Annesley. To his parents the world is greatly indebted for whatever John Wesley accomplished.

RESCUED FROM FLAMES.

Very early in his life Wesley had an experience so thrilling that its memories remained with him until his old age. Feb. 9, 1709, when he was about 5½ years old, a fire broke out in the rectory, near midnight. The alarm was given by Hettie Wesley, who was awakened by burning pieces of wood falling on her bed. She called her father, who roused his family, and all escaped in their night clothes except little John.

He, with three sisters and his brother Charles, was sleeping in the nursery. The nurse snatched up Charles, the baby, and called to the others to follow. The sisters did so, but John remained fast asleep. When he awoke, shortly afterward, he called the maid. There was no answer. The room was filled with light, and putting his head out of the curtains he saw the ceiling afire. He jumped out of bed and rushed to the door. He dared not pass it, for all beyond was in a blaze. He climbed on a chest near the window.

In the meantime his father had made two efforts to rush through the flames to rescue his boy, but could not succeed. At last the boy was seen at the window. Some one suggested that a light man be set on his shoulders and lift the boy out of the window. On the first attempt the man fell, but the second was successful. Just as little John was being taken down the whole roof of the rectory fell in.

John Wesley always looked upon his escape as providential. In one of his early prints a house in flames is represented below his own portrait with the words: "It not this a brand plucked out of the fire?"

THE FAMOUS EPWORTH GHOSTS.

While John was a student at Charterhouse, London, there occurred those mysterious noises in the Epworth rectory which made profound impression upon the young man, and were, says Overton, "to some extent answerable for a marked feature of Wesley's character—his love of the marvelous and his intense belief in the reality of apparitions and of witchcraft."

The noises were first heard one winter's day in 1715 by Mrs. Susanna Wesley, John Wesley's mother. She was in her bedroom and was startled suddenly by a clattering of the windows and doors, followed by several distinct knocks, three by three. At the same time her maid servant, Nancy Marshall, heard, in the dining-room something that sounded like the groans of a dying man.

The young women of the family became greatly alarmed. Mrs. Wesley informed her husband, Samuel Wesley, of the circumstances and insinuated her belief in their supernatural character. He was greatly displeased and said:

"Sukey, I am ashamed of you. These boys and girls frighten one another, but you are a woman of sense, and should know better. Let me hear no more of it."

The next night Mr. Wesley was roused from his slumbers by nine loud and distinct knocks. Raps and thumps were heard all over the house, except in the study.

Mr. Wesley spoke directly to the author of the noises, asked what it was, and why it disturbed innocent children, and did not come to him in his study. The next night the noises were as boisterous as ever. Mr. Wesley pulled out a pistol and was about to fire at the place whence the sounds proceeded, when the Rev. Mr. Hoole caught him by the hair and said:

"Sir, if this is something preternatural you can not hurt it by firing your pistol, but you may give it power to hurt you."

The next evening, as Mr. Wesley opened the door of his study, it was thrust back with such violence that he was almost thrown down. Then there followed a knocking, first on one side, then on the other. He went into an adjoining room, where was his daughter Anne, and the noises still continued. He said to her:

ADVENTURED WITH A SPOOK.

"Spirits love darkness. Put out the candle, and perhaps it will speak."

She did so, and he asked the mysterious personage to speak. No answer came, but the knocking continued. He the said:

"Nancy, two Christians are an overmatch for the devil. Go down stairs, and it may be when I am left alone it will have courage enough to speak."

He then thought something might have happened to his son Samuel, and he said: "If thou art the spirit of my son Samuel, I pray thee knock three knocks and no more." No answer came, and all was quiet for the night.

Nothing more was heard for about a month, when, while at family prayer, the usual knocks were heard when he prayed for King George, and a thundering thump at the amen. Noises continued, latches were uplifted, doors flew open, the house shook from top to bottom, the rector's trencher danced upon the table at a Sunday dinner, beds were uplifted, etc.

Several clergymen and others advised Mr. Wesley to leave the old parsonage. His answer was: "No; let the devil flee from me. I will not flee from him."

Mrs. Wesley wrote to one of her sons to have him explain the mysterious movements. He wrote thus: "My mother sends me to know my thoughts of it, and I cannot think at all of any interpretation. Wit, I fancy, might find many, but wisdom none."

The attic from which these noises came was by Emilia Wesley called "Jeffrey's chamber," and the supposed ghost was nicknamed "Old Jeffrey," after an old man who had died there. The mysterious noises have never been explained, though it is believed by some that whoever or whatever caused them came through the dormer window of the attic, which was easily accessible form the outside, and that the gypsum floor, which reverbrates through the house in a remarkable way, had something to do with them. Dr. Priestly supposes these noises were a trick of the servants, assisted by neighbors.

This is probably the correct explanation, for "Old Jeffrey" was evidently a strong partisan and seldom permitted Mr. Wesley to pray for the King and the Prince of Wales without disturbing the family prayers.

Concerning the influence of this singular and unexplained, though not inexplicable incident of Jeffrey's ghost upon John Wesley, Tyerman writes: "There can be no question that its influence upon himself was powerful and important. He took the trouble of obtaining minute particulars from his mother, from his four sisters—Emily, Mary, Susannah, and Anne—and from Robin Brown.

"He likewise transcribed his father's diary, containing an account of the disturbances, thereby showing the intense interest he felt in the affair. In fact, it would seem that, from this period, Wesley was a firm believer in ghosts and apparitions. * * * * * * * * *

"Isaac Taylor thinks that the strange Epworth episode so laid open Wesley's faculty of belief that ever after a right of way for the supernatural was opened through his mind; and, to the end of life, there was nothing so marvelous that it could not freely pass where 'Old Jeffrey' had passed before it.

"Taylor adds: 'Wesley's most prominent infirmity was his wonder-loving credulity; from the beginning to the end of his course this weakness ruled him.' Other opportunities will occur of testing the truthfulness of Taylor's statement; but here it may be observed that for young Wesley to have regarded the noises at Epworth with indifference would have been irreligious and irrational.

"A metaphysician, vain of his philosophic powers, like Isaac Taylor, may 'deal with occult folk, such as Jeffrey, huffingly and disrespectfully,' and may pretend to 'catch in the Epworth ghost a glimpse of an idiotic creature' belonging to some order of invisible beings 'not more intelligent than apes or pigs,' and which, by some 'mischance, was thrown over its boundary and obtained leave to disport itself among things palpable, and went to the extent of its tether in freaks of bootless mischief'; but, in broaching such a theory, Isaac Taylor, wishing to be witty, makes himself ridiculous.

"John Wesley believed the noises to be supernatural; and Southey, as great an authority as Taylor, defends his belief, and argues that such occurrences have a tendency to explode the fine spun theories of men who deny another state of being, and to bring them to the conclusion that there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in their philosophy.

"We have little doubt that the Epworth noises deepened and most powerfully increased Wesley's convictions of the existence of an unseen world; and, in this way, exercised an important influence on the whole of his future life. His notion that the disturbance was occasioned by a messenger of Satan, sent to buffet his father for a rash vow alleged to have been made fifteen years before, has been shown to be utterly unfounded, but the impressions it produced, or rather strengthened, respecting invisible realities, were of the utmost consequence in molding his character and in making him one of the most earnest preachers of the Christian's creed that ever lived."—Inter-Ocean.

HOW TO GET WELL.

The Curative Properties of Literature.

There is a big lot of sound philosophy, and whole chunks of good common sense, worth more than all Klondike's nuggets of gold, embodied in the following, from the columns of the Chicago Tribune:

No powders, no pills, no medicine bottles, no druggist bills, just an armful of your pet books—that is the new way to get well.

The doctors know the new novels as they know materia medica. The nurses know them still better and make inventories of their contents as precisely as they bandage aching foreheads, or measure half teaspoonfuls of ipecac.

"A book is medicine for the soul," erudite travelers report, is the inscription above the door of the library at Thebes; very good, the moderns say it is medicine for the body. The trained nurses and the trained doctors prescribe them as the ancients prescribed salts, save that there being more sorts of books at their command than there were salts at the command of the oldentimers, they can and do prescribe books with greater discrimination.

It is this funny book for this melancholy convalescent, that thrilling book for that listless convalescent, the other peaceful tale for the other serene convalescent, always a convalescent to be sure. Books have not thus far pierced the mysteries of tuberculosis nor acquired the therapeutic strength needed to combat typhoid fever germs. They are contented to dedicate their medical efforts to the prosperous progress of the invalid, who has been diagnosed by the doctors, pilled and powdered out of peril, and given into the keeping of a trained nurse in a striped blue and white frock and cap to stay out of danger and hurry to recovery.

Dr. Eckels of the Cook County hospital is a firm believer in the assistance given the physician by good books. He places them, when properly selected, in the some category as music, which, by common consent, has long been reputed a potent influence with patients susceptible to suggestion.

"So far as I know," he says, "there has never been any systematic attempt to determine the value of books as a therapeutic agent. Hence we have no statistics to draw upon. Indeed, it would be difficult to carry out such a line of investigation on this subject in a way that would make our results conclusive. Still we may fairly conclude that there have been numerous instances in which judiciously selected books read aloud by a companionable nurse or friend have materially hastened convalescence. Especially does this seem true of those patients who, by temperament, are highly susceptible to suggestion."

One of the head nurses at the Illinois training school for nurses says that the subject of reading to the sick is always of supreme interest to her profession, and that the choice of valuable literature receives constant attention from the trained nurses. In their professional journals lists of new books found to be helpful are published from time to time as guides to those on the alert for such assistance.

In the hospitals, where patients are treated largely en masse and opportunity for the inspection of individual idiosyncrasies is slight, there is not the fine discrimination to special adaptation as there is in private families, where one nurse has but a single case to study and work for. The hospitals look for cheery, light, wholesome literature, which predisposes the patient to gladsomeness of thought and thereby to healthful functioning throughout the body. "Elizabeth and Her German Garden" was cited as a typically valuable book, which would suit many cases where the chief aim is to divert attention from ailments.

In a recently published autobiography of a nurse the author relates her experience with "Three Men in a Boat." She says that she went to the physician in charge of a patient who was improving, if at all, with discouraging slowness, and told him that she was going to try Jerome K. Jerome's "Three Men in a Boat"; that she knew that if that would not cure him nothing would. The experiment was successful, the patient convalesced with rapidity under the hilarious nutriment of the comic volume.

Nearer home was the Kansas farmer who was a dyspeptic, hence a growler. Every expedient thought of was experimented by physician and family to induce him to assume a peaceable frame of mind toward his associates, and a peaceable frame of body toward his food. In despair a trained nurse was sent for who should devote her entire time to his recovery. She tried without avail the ordinary methods for curing. When she turned to the family religious weekly for cheery reading and to the daily news for lively gossip she found a deaf listener.

She was extremely found of fairy tales. One evening she took a cozy seat beside him near the stove, and, in most subtle fashion, launched herself into a story of "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland." Her white-pated patient did not believe in the right of fairy tales to exist, much less did he ever read them. He knew nothing about the wonderful Alice. Not knowing her to be a "fairy tale" he was fascinated with her and her hare and duchess quite unaware. The stories were continued. From Alice they went to Grimm and Hans Anderson. The old man was eating, sleeping, and in his right mind before the fairy tale series had been exhausted.

A young boy lay in a small Chicago hospital attempting to recover from the effects of an operation. His chief peril came from the fact that he did not attempt enough. He was listless, with absolutely not a vestige of his pristine ambition in life. He refused food, did not care whether he got well or not, and gave himself up to melancholia. His nurse was reading him the Henty books. "I believe," she remarked one afternoon to the doctor, as that gentleman looked with some concern at the patient's daily report, "I believe we're not giving him the right reading. Tomorrow I am going to try 'Sherlock Holmes.'"

Here was a happy thought. The deeds of the renowned detective were an inspiration to the laddie. There was sufficient excitement in them to keep his mind in a turmoil of expectancy and wonder. "Gee whizz, but that's fine!" he exclaimed one day, his first day with several propping pillows rendering his posture erect. He could scarcely wait from day to day for the reading hour to arrive. He said nothing about dying in early youth, nor about recovery either, but he had received the invigoration which stimulated his system to recovery.

An intelligent young girl who suffered from nervous prostration lived in the country, lonely, with few congenial associates. She had for a friend a Chicago trained nurse, who wisely advised her that since she had not the means to make extended tours for her health she should do as much as possible in the way of reading jolly books by way of supplementing the out-of-door life she was cultivating.

"Helen's Babies" was the first book. "Eben Holden" followed. Mark Twain, tome after tome, came next. She subscribed for several funny papers. When at last improvement developed she declared it was not exercise in the open air but jokes that made her well.

"I couldn't be thinking about the queer feeling in the upper right hand corner of the middle of the back of my head when I was laughing at 'ze great Columbus,' could I?" she reported in a letter to her friend. "I'm sending with this mail for one of Sara Jeanette Duncan's books, and I have a great idea that I'll have the finishing touch."

"Them pictyre books did me a heap sight of good," was the declaration of a smudgy faced descendant of Erin to his nurse, as he made his departure from one of the city's hospitals. It was all he remembered of the three week of painstaking care which had been tendered him.

The trend of the article lies along the lines of Mental Science Cure or Suggestive therapeutics, which is taking hold on so many intelligent and inquiring minds at the present time.

By way of further healthful "suggestion," we advise full doses ad libitum, of good spiritualistic reading, such as is lavishly furnished from week to week by The Progressive Thinker, for the radical and permanent cure of the mental horrors of orthodoxy.

VIBRATIONS

As a Means of Communicating With the Dead.

Do you see that hot stove? Weigh it, let it cool off and then weigh it again, and you find it weighs less when hot than when cold, and why? Because heat overcomes gravity, which leads to the question of What is heat? Ask the average person what heat is and he will promptly reply atomic vibration, but that does not explain it.

Drop a pebble in the water and the wavelets recede at first, but soon come charging back until the water is deeper at the spot where the pebble was dropped than before.

Place a piece of iron on an anvil and strike it. The blow forces the molecules of iron together and at the same time drives out the ether, which permeates all matter. The molecules rebound and the ether comes charging back, separating the molecules and expanding the metal at each blow and generating what we call heat. Hence heat is really a fluid, which takes the form known to us as heat when the ether reaches thirty trillion vibrations per second or more.

Take a glass partially filled with water and place in a dry sponge and the sponge absorbs all the water.

HEAT IS A FLUID.

Fill a tank that is surrounded with coils of gas pipe with water, then let compressed ammonia gas gradually run into the pipe, and the expanding ammonia gas will draw all the heat from the tank of water, and you have a cake of ice, showing that heat is a fluid that can be absorbed as a sponge absorbs water.

Whether that fluid is ether or some other I will not at this time attempt to show.

The planet Jupiter, 85,000 miles in diameter, is hot. Being hot, and as heat, which means vibration, overcomes gravity or centripetal force, is one of the reasons why he is permitted to swing at a distance of 485,000,000 miles from the sun, and as he cools centripetal force will increase, and finally, with all planets, he will be drawn into the sun.

You ask what all this has to do with spirits, good, bad and indifferent? Let us carry the thought further and see.

All things in nature are grouped into species and families, whether animate or inanimate, and so it is with the occult forces in nature, but all become manifest only through the mediumship of vibration, and it is a knowledge of the law of vibration that enables us to communicate with the so-called dead.

In the effort of the positive to reach the negative through a carbonized bamboo wire a vibration of about 600 trillions per seconds is generated which we call electric light.

WONDER IS APPLIED.

Take an ordinary card table and let two persons set upon opposite sides with their bare hands resting upon the table. The table, like the carbonized bamboo, is a poor conductor, and soon a vibratory force is generated known as akas, which overcomes gravity and obeys the will of spirit.

If a spirit, who is in vibratory harmony with either of the sitters, is present, the table will soon commence to move, and intelligent communications can be obtained from the spirit world.

Now, reader, do not go off on an idiotic tangent exclaiming table dipping, because here is a problem worthy of a sage or philosopher, and if there were more philosophers the world would be wiser and better.

After a movement has been secured, hold a half-hour's sitting at least once a week until the force comes clear and steady, then tack upon the table what is known as a speaking dial.

It will require at least three months' practice before the vibratory forces will become harmoniously adjusted and reliable communications can be obtained.

When once developed, a stenographer can be employed, and long interviews can be held with the spirit world upon almost any subject.

DOLLAR ENSLAVES MAN.

If you ask why this has not more often been accomplished, I reply, because the average man loves the dollar more than he loves knowledge. Very few will give the subject the requisite time and thought necessary to success.

I have been using one of these dials for several years and derive not only a great deal of instruction, but also amusement from it.

The amusing features about it is that many persons upon seeing it work for the first time will not believe their own eyes and senses, even when it responds to their own touch.

It is said that man always goes to a distance for his gods and his heroes.

The Jews believed in Moses and the prophets, but did not believe in Christ, while man to-day believes in biblical miracles, but will not trust his own senses in studying the phenomena of to-day.—E. D. Titus in Chicago Record-Herald.

BOLD ANNOUNCEMENT.

The New Movement with God as an Organizer.

Thomas Cook, medium, is a bold innovator, and with God as "organizer," success ought to be certain. It is far better to read his "Bold Announcement" than to go to a circus or witness a farce at the theatre. Thomas being a Spiritualist and medium it may be interesting to note his claim to God as an organizer. He says:

"The beginning of the end; as the signs of the times tell of in more than thunder tones, is most clearly at hand; in the which will be gathered together the great armies of love, peace and righteousness (right seeing), on earth, as in heaven, to redeem man from condemnation, hate, selfishness and war.

"One branch of which is now being organized at Hot Springs, by the God of heaven; who is the great and Silent Generalissimo, Guide and Leader of this wondrous Spiritual army and movement; without whom man is nothing and can do nothing. Half a century of preparation enables the congresses of the spirit world to now make this final announcement to their brethren and friends of earth; that they, by being forewarned may be forearmed.

"Since the Lord God of heaven is its invisible leader, it can have no personal or visible leadership of individual men or angels; the Shibboleth, Slogan or war cry of each Spiritual soldier being:

"'I am in the Father, and the Father in me, the words I speak unto you I speak not of myself; but the father that dwelleth in me, He doeth the works.

"'Therefore I can of mine own self do nothing; as I hear, I judge; and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me.'

"To be worn as a breast plate by each soldier of this Spiritual and heavenly army, as a talisman of devotion to God and his cause on earth.

"This embodiment of truth and principle constitutes each person or soldier, male or female, "the Son of Man or Second Christ' that Jesus foretold was to come down from heaven to complete and finish his work on the earth, so inauspiciously began by him, many long ages ago. This band army and Spiritual forlorn hope who shall revive this cause, and work of Jesus and heaven, are a chosen, selected or "elected" few, who must literally fight their way into this Kingdom of Heaven and heaven's God—must fight, subdue and overcome self—must become right-seeing, meek and humble unto God, the Father; as a little child. As a soldier of war has to be drilled, even so must a soldier of love, peace and good will also be drilled into perfect obedience. Years may be required to effect even a tangible showing or beginning of this grand army, for it must necessarily have a very small beginning like unto planting a grain of mustard seed, or hiding leaven away in meal; but sufficient is known, seen and done to warrant the foregoing announcement. A hint is therefore sufficient unto the wise. They who are for us, for peace and good will on earth, as in heaven, can not be against us; and they who are against us can not in any way or sense be for us; and woe be unto such; for it will be the fulfillment of the figure of the sheep and goats. Hence, it will literally be "depart ye cursed" who willfully seek to take matters into their own hands and run things according to their own selfish will or liking.

"Soldiers of this new and divine order of love, pence and good will, can address the editor of The Spirit of Truth; or better join the army here or elsewhere, anywhere the sons and daughters of God, love and good will may rendezvous. This announcement is sanctioned by all the angels of heaven—is a voice from heaven to mankind."

It is gratifying to know that the above movement is sanctioned by all the "angels of heaven." That could not be otherwise, God being the organizer. This being a free country, the right to be foolish or wise is inalienable. In fact, to act the part of a semi-idiot, if one so desire, is not denied to him. The Spirit of Truth, however, represents one segment of Spiritualism—one of the numerous differentiations that are raising their heads everywhere. We extend to Thomas Cook, the editor, our hearty, long, deep and widespread congratulations! Blessed art thou, Thomas; with God and the angels back of you, you can't fail!

GREAT MOGUL.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Sycamore Grove Camp, Cal.

As the closing days of our Southern California camp meeting are approaching, it seems appropriate to give an account of it to your valuable paper, that its many readers may know the Spiritualists of Los Angeles are not dead but have held one of the most harmonious and successful camps ever held here. We have had some of the best talent procurable; among whom were Mrs. Lowe Watson, whose soul-stirring lectures attracted large audiences during her two-weeks' engagement with the camp; also our dear Mrs. Lillie, whose work is so grand and uplifting and which added such a power for good during her engagement here. The Lillies are a host within themselves, Mrs. Lillie's work together with Mr. Lillie's beautiful songs, makes them very desirable.

We have Moses Hull with us now for one week; to say he is attracting large, appreciative audiences by his eloquent lectures, but half expresses it. Several have become interested in the Morris Pratt Institute in Wisconsin and are going from here to attend.

Mrs. Cowells, of Oakland, has given excellent satisfaction to large audiences through her tests, each one clear-cut and always recognized. Mrs. Cowells is a lady and has endeared herself to all. There are many faithful home workers, among whom are Mrs. Maud Freitag, one of the best mediums in the world today, and as sweet and unpretentious as a little child; Mrs. Julia Knox, Mrs. Mary Vlasek, Mrs. Morrell, of San Diego; Mr. Parsons and Mrs. Foster, all are faithful, honest mediums.

There has been good attendance from the city and we feel much good has been accomplished, and it is with a feeling of sadness that we see the days go by, knowing how soon it will all have faded into the innumerable yesterdays.

Saturday, Sept. 6, was election of officers for the ensuing year; Mrs. Essie Ashby who has worked faithfully as vice-president, having been elected president; Mrs. Julia Knox, vice-president; Mrs. Helen Gardner, treasurer; Mr. W. G. Black financial secretary; and Mr. N. F. Vose, secretary.

Taken all in all it has been a month very happily and profitably spent and we know there will be better and larger camps in Southern California, as the years go by, for there is a concentration of spirit forces here and a beautiful climate for development. Yours for Spiritualism.

MAE E. R. HUNT.

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

HYPNOTISM.

VALUABLE WORKS ON SUGGESTION.

HYPNOTISM AND SUGGESTION, WHEN RIGHTLY APPLIED BECOME POTENT AGENTS FOR GOOD.

Mental and Moral Culture.

Hypnotism in Mental and Moral Culture. By John Duncan Quackenbos, Fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine, Member of the New York Academy of Sciences, Fellow of the New Hampshire Medical Society, Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Bear in mind, please, that this book treats of Hypnotism in Mental and Moral Culture. It should be in every family. Price, $1.25.

A Complete System.

Hypnotism, a Complete System of Method, Application and Use, including all that is known in the art and practice of mesmerism and mental healing, prepared for the self-instruction of beginners, as well as for the use of advanced students and practitioners. By L. W. D. Laurence. A good work for anyone to read. Price $1. Paper, 50 cents.

The Field of Hypnotism.

Hypnotism, by Albert Moll. The author says: "Various recent researches in the field of hypnotism have rendered it necessary to remodel in part the earlier edition of the work. I have brought the history of hypnotism down to the present, and have throughout, I trust, presented the subject in its present state. In accordance with a wish which has been expressed by many, I have especially developed a chapter on the medical aspects of Hypnotism." This is a work of over 400 pages, and is certainly very valuable. Price $1.50.

Hypnotism—Its Uses and Dangers.

Hypnotism, How It Is Done; Its Uses and Dangers. By James R. Cocke, M. D. Dr. Cocke has hypnotized altogether about one thousand, three hundred and fifty people. The greater part of these were Americans, some negroes, quite a number of French, a few Germans, and a few of the Northern races, such as Danes, Russians, etc. It has been his purpose to illustrate the differences in the hypnotic state as they occur in the various nationalities, and in that respect the work is very valuable. Price $1.50.

Its History and Present Development.

Hypnotism—Its History and Present Development. By Fredrik Bjornstrom, M. D., Head Physician of the Stockholm Hospital. This being a Swedish production, it will fit into your library very nicely, though you have all the other works on Hypnotism. Price 75 cents.

The Theory and Practice.

The Theory and Practice of Human Magnetism. Translated from the French of H. Durville. The preface by the publishers is as follows: "In these days when Magnetic Healers of positive and negative ability are inflicting their courses of instructions upon the public at prices ranging from $5 to $100, courses of instructions which are neither more nor less than 'rot' from cover to cover, there is a real need for a popular work bearing upon the subject of Magnetic Healing in all its branches, from the hand of one who is at least a scholar and a master of his profession." Price $1.00.

Mind and Body, Hypnotism and Suggestion.

Mind and Body, Hypnotism and Suggestion Applied in Therapeutics and Education. By Alvan C. Halphide, M. D., Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in Hahnemann Medical College. Illustrated. This work treats of the Antecedents of Hypnotism; the Development of Hypnotism; the Methods of Hypnotizing; the Phenomena of Hypnosis; the Theory of Suggestion; Suggestion in the Waking State; Treatment in Natural Sleep; Clinical Hypnotism; Suggestion and Education; Danger in the use of Suggestion; Criminal Suggestion. Really, the work is very valuable. Price $1.00.

Rationale of Mesmerism.

The Rationale of Mesmerism. By A. P. Sinnett. This work, too, is worthy of great praise as it contains the results of the labors of a master mind. It treats of Old and New Theories; the Mesmeric Force; the Real Literature of Mesmerism; Side Lights on Mesmeric Phenomena; Curative Mesmerism; Anesthetic Effects and Rigidity; the Nature of Sensitiveness; Clairvoyance and Mesmeric Practice. Price $1.25.

Suggestion—A Gold Mine.

Now we present a work of marvelous utility, one that should be carefully studied. It contains a mine of valuable information. Its title is as follows: Treatment by Hypnotism and Suggestion; or Psycho Therapeutics. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M. D. In this work, the new method, "Treatment by Suggestion," is exhaustively considered. Every branch of the subject is discussed in a masterly manner. Every healer should have it. Every physician will find it invaluable. Every one who wishes to become proficient in hypnotism will find it a valuable auxiliary in the work. Price $3.00.

Mental Suggestion From the French.

Mental Suggestion. By Doctor J. Ochorowicz, Professor of Psychology and Nature Philosophy in the University of Lemberg. Translated from the French. The ablest work, probably, ever published in France on the above subject. It is certainly very valuable, and no one can read it without having his knowledge vastly increased. The author says: "Hypnotism is henceforth part and parcel of Science, and Suggestion, which produces most of its wonders, no longer surprises us." Price $2.

An Experimental Study.

An Experimental Study in the Domain of Hypnotism. By Dr. R. von Kraft-Ebing, Professor of Psychiatry and Nervous Diseases in the Royal University of Graz, Austria. Translated from the German. This book gives the best German thought on Hypnotism. It will prove valuable in every library. Price $1.25.

If you wish to have a complete library on Hypnotism and kindred subjects, purchase the twelve books above mentioned. Indeed a single one of the volumes above named will prove of great value to every reflective mind. For sale at this office.

What All the World's a-Seeking.

RALPH WALDO TRINE.

Each is building his world from within; thought is the builder; for thoughts are forces,—subtle, vital, irresistible, omnipotent,—and according as used do they bring power or impotence, peace or pain, success or failure.—From Title-page.

The above books are beautifully bound in gray-green raised cloth, stamped in deep old-green and gold, with gilt top. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

Why I Am a Vegetarian.

An address delivered before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. By J. Howard Moore. Price, 25 cents.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

The Christ Question Settled.

Jesus, Man, Medium, Martyr. A symposium by W. E. Coleman, J. S. Loveland, Hudson Tuttle, Moses Hull, J. R. Buchanan, B. B. Hill, Rabbi I. M. Wise, Col. Ingersoll and what the spirits say about it. By J. M. PEEBLES, M. D. Whether this book settles the question or not, it will be found eminently entertaining, and brings together a mass of evidence to establish the historical character of Jesus. A large volume. Price, cloth, $1.25.

The Law of Correspondence Applied to Healing.

A course of seven practical lessons. By W. J. Colville. Limp cloth, 50c.

THE PRINCIPLES OF EVOLUTION EXPLAINED AND APPLIED.

A Series of Instructive Lessons by A. J. Weaver.

SPECIAL CREATION—RUDIMENTARY ORGANS—EVOLUTION.

The standard argument which has been in use for ages to prove the existence of a God who planned and made the universe, is what Archbishop Paley called the "argument from design." It is an appeal, not to the Bible to prove there is a God, but to nature. The gist of his argument is this: First, that every organized body in the animal kingdom and every part of that body, even the minutest part, is designed for the place which it fills, and, secondly where there is manifest design, there must be a designer.

His use of a watch to illustrate this idea became famous in his day among all theological students in Europe and America. A watch is made to measure time. It was in the mind of the maker before it was made. Every wheel and pivot and minutest part was planned beforehand for the place it occupies. Not the least change in the parts is possible. Not a cog but has a use and it is worthless in any other place. If perfectly made, it keeps perfect time.

This illustration he applies to nature. First, to the human body, which God planned and made for man to occupy while on the earth. He made the eye with which to see, the ear to hear, the nose to smell, the sense of touch to feel, the mind to think.

The wing of the bird is proof that it was designed and made for flying; the feet and legs, for walking; the lungs, for breathing; the stomach, for digesting food; the feathers, for protection; instinct, for propagating and sustaining life.

When God made cattle he gave to them horns, for self defence, to the lion and tiger claws to take life for food; to the deer fleetness to escape from its pursuers; to the fox, cunning to cheat and get away from the hounds. If He made birds, he also made worms to serve as food for their support. If He made cattle and horses and sheep to live on vegetation, He was careful to make vegetation in order that the demands of their nature might not go unsatisfied. If He made fish with fins and gills, He did not neglect to make water.

In this way he went through all the kingdoms of nature and showed that forethought was everywhere to be seen. He said utility was the universal law; that not an animal lived but had its use; that in no animal form, large or small, was there a bone or muscle or nerve or organ or tissue or ought else—however obscure and seemingly unimportant—but was of use and served its purpose in the economy of God.

This argument seemed impregnable. It bid defiance to all attacks. The keenest thinkers, even the most violent atheists and infidels stood bewildered and dumfounded before this solid and seemingly irrefutable evidence. And Christians and Deists rejoiced that at last the existence of God and the infallibility of Genesis had both been put upon a foundation that could not be shaken even by Hell itself.

This was the condition of the theological world half a century ago when evolution came into existence. It was greeted with jeers and laughter. "Man came from a monkey" was the name applied to this new idea and was used as a text for ridicule, not only in pulpits, but in political, social, and literary circles.

By and by thoughtful men began to read calmly and dispassionately the books of Darwin and Wallace. They found in them no attack on God, nor on religion, nor on Jesus. Neither the Bible nor Christianity was mentioned. There were no threats, no boasting, no abuse, no ridicule, no epithets, no conceit, no dogmatism, no authority set up, no claims for infallible truth were made; nothing but the utmost modesty, almost diffidence, was manifest. What did these books contain? They were full of solid facts, gathered from nature through thirty years of observation and research in various parts of the world, with their interpretation of the facts.

These books were of such a nature that no reflecting, unbiased mind could read them and not feel that if what was written were facts, it would revolutionize religious thought, discredit the reliability and correctness of the record of creation in Genesis, and utterly demolish Paley's great "argument from design" to prove there is a God.

The object of these articles is to put before the reader the facts, or the main facts in evolution, that he may be the judge and decide for himself whether a God outside of nature planned and made all things, or whether they have come into their present form through natural changes by inward forces under the operation of nature's laws; or, I might say, by the one law of cause and effect.

We must not forget that the essence of Paley's argument is that as in a watch there is not even one cog that is useless, so in organized life there is not a bone, nor tissue, nor structure but serves a purpose. Paley was an Archbishop and a learned man, but what would he say to the following facts to which our attention is called by evolution?

In man and in the lower animals which suckle their young, on the front of the chest of the males, are to be seen miniature breasts, empty and flat, similar to the breasts of females. Of what use are these? It is seemingly impossible that they serve any purpose whatever, useful or otherwise.

The human body is covered with stray hairs, thinly on some, less thinly on others. Who believes that these serve any purpose? That they do not is proved by the fact that if every one of them were extracted, no harm would be done the body. For what purpose is the beard on man's face designed? Is it to protect his throat and lungs? If so, why is it not given to woman? Do not her throat and lungs need protection? Or does God regard her of too little consequence to be cared for as he cares for man? In some of the Asiatic tribes men never have beards but are smooth faced like the women. How about their throat and lungs? No race of men has such large beards as the white race. Do its men have more tender lungs? Some white men have very little beard. Do they therefore have strong lungs? Moreover the beard does not grow till manhood. Do not the throat and lungs of boys need protecting? I do not deny but often the beard serves a good purpuse. That is not the question. Is it a special creation designed for a purpose.

The front teeth in the upper jaws of cattle and sheep and some other animals never break thro' the gums—never "cut." They are of no possible use. By their not coming to full growth, cattle are not able to crop grass as closely as the horses whose upper front teeth are fully grown. This imperfection in the teeth causes them to starve on the Western plains in great numbers, when the grass is short, but at the same time horses keep in good flesh.

Of what use is the dew-lap on the ox or the long hair on the fetlock of a horse? Of what use is a tail to a mouse, to a pig, to a dog, to a cat, to a squirrel, a rat, sheep, or lizard, any more than to a rabbit, a louse, a frog, a toad, a gorilla or a man, all of whom have no tails: Certain beetles have wings, hidden under covers of the skin, which are never developed, and so are never of use. There is in the wrist a small bone, found by the anatomist, which serves no purpose whatever, and in the head and other parts of the body have been discovered remnants of muscles, which are useless; so if removed, no harm is done.

Not only are there parts in organisms which are useless, but parts which are positively injurious. All cows have have extra teats which are of no use. They are generally smaller and are just back of the useful ones. They serve no purpose and are sometimes in the way of the hands in milking. My father had a cow which I used to milk when a boy whose value as a milker was much lessened by this defect.

In the throat of man is located what is called the thyroid gland (Adam's apple) which is not only useless, but which often becomes diseased and produces what is known as goitre. In Switzerland it is very common. In man, attached to the alimentary canal, is a small sack called vermiform appendix which serves no purpose whatever. Stray seeds often lodge in this sack, causing inflammation which very frequently produces death. In these days the patient's life is often saved by having this useless and injurious part removed by the surgeon's knife. It has no business in the body at all.

Furthermore there are some things in nature, imperfect, which could not be if planned and produced by special design. For example the potato. It has every appearance of having been designed for the food of man. It is valuable food but for its value we are indebted to the improvements made upon it by the hand of man. The potato is a native of America. It was not known in Europe when America was discovered. Sir Walter Raleigh found it growing wild in the mountains of the New World, just as nature made it. He sent some samples to his friends in England, but no one considered them fit to eat. The same thing is true of the apple. As made by nature it is a small, hard, bitter fruit, unfit for human use. The same is true of the peach and pear. Nearly all cereals in their natural state are imperfect. The sting of the honey bee is a good example of the imperfect work which nature often does. It has been considered a most effective means of defence for the bee. But when examined under a microscope the sting is seen to have a row of teeth on each side like a saw, and it has been found by experimenting that when it is thrust into the flesh of an enemy, it is withdrawn with so much difficulty that it is often torn out by the roots from the body of the bee, and the bee dies from the effect. What kind of a musket would that be for self defence which killed the man behind it while only wounding the man before it? To make the sting of the bee a valuable weapon, the teeth would need to be filed off so it could be employed with safety by the user.

Still further, there are things in nature which seem designed for one purpose, but which nature uses for another. It was one of Paley's arguments that the web-foot of the goose was unanswerable evidence that a web-foot was designed for swimming. It certainly seems like a good argument. But it is now discovered that "There are upland geese with webbed feet which rarely go near the water," and there is a bird called the frigate bird which lives wholy in the air and on the land and which has webbed feet.

On the other hand there are animals which are eminently water animals, like grebes and coots, whose feet are scarcely webbed at all. The water hen is almost wholly a water animal, yet it has long separate toes not webbed at all.

But I need go no further. I have given examples enough to show, I think, that nature abounds in proofs which overthrow the doctrine that everything is designed for use in the place it fills—a doctrine which is known as "special creation."

EVOLUTION.

Let us now turn to evolution, and by a study of its principles see if it is any more successful in explaining nature and accounting for her varied phenomena. No candid mind will deny that there are objections to both the theories—special creation and evolution. What we want, as seekers of truth, is to find the theory to which there are the fewer objections, and which will account in a reasonable way for the greater number of nature's phenomena.

Evolution teaches that man has come up from primal life germs, in the slime of the sea, by natural changes, under the fixed laws of nature, through all the animal conditions and forms below him, one by one, till he became human. It teaches that the propelling power was within and that personal will or design or intelligent planning by any outside power took no part in the work. It does not say anything about where the life germs which were in the sea, came from; whether there was a God who created them or whether they too were the result of previous evolution. Evolution therefore is not atheistic. It neither denies nor asserts the existence of a God.

"RUDIMENTARY ORGANS" ACCOUNTED FOR.

I wish now in the remainder of this article to apply one of the principles of evolution to some of the things in nature which I have mentioned, and let the reader draw his own conclusion as to which theory is the more reasonable. The theory of evolution is that man in his long journey up through the animal forms below him has outgrown the need of many things now in his body; but which still remain as relics or rudimentary organs—parts which were of use to him when a lower animal, but which became useless when he became a man.

I referred to a useless bone in the human wrist. Every finger has a bone in the wrist with which it is connected. This useless bone is a bone which was connected with a sixth finger which man possessed at some period in his past history and which in his upward journey he lost. The finger is gone, but the bone in the wrist remains. Instances are not uncommon—they are frequently reported in newspapers—where children have been born with an extra finger. This is the cropping out of an ancient habit or trend which is characteristic of the law of heredity and is called reversion.

I referred to remnants of muscles in the human body which now are not used. Some of these are the same muscles which exist in lower animals and which are used for erecting the ears, twitching the skin, and moving the scalp. Darwin gives numerous examples of people who could still use these muscles as well as can animals. Near the end of the vertebral column in man are remnants of muscles, similar to those in the horse or dog, for moving the tail. Nature outgrew the tail, but has not yet got rid of the muscle attached to it. I referred to the vermiform appendix. The time was, when man was in the lower animal condition, that this little sack was an aid to digestion, but that time passed away when man rose to a higher form and this little sack remains as a relic of what once was; now a positive injury which will probably be transmitted by heredity less and less till at some distant day it will cease to be.

I referred to tails on many animals as being useless and often an injury. Take the lizard for example: his tail is his most vulnerable part and he would make a better fight without it. Evolution teaches that the progenitors of all animals were once inhabitants of the water—not true fishes but yet water animals. Every water animal needs and has a tail with which to swim. One of the far back progenitors of the lizard, ages upon ages ago, crept out of the water and little by little began to live on the dry land. Nature brought about changes in his organization to adapt him to his new life as nature always does. He has at the present time in his history got rid of all his water characteristics but his tail. It seems in all animals that this is the last thing to go. But age by age will probably shorten it and lessen it in size, till at last it will be missing, as it is in the higher apes and in man.

I referred to the useless teats on some cows, whence did they come? Those animals which give birth to their young in litters have a row of teats on each side. Possibly the far back progenitor of the cow was an animal of this kind. On account of changes produced by nature she grew less prolific and gave birth to but two and then to but one at a time. Not having use for so many teats some of them ceased to be reproduced. The useless teats which now exist in some cows are possibly those not yet outgrown but which in time will cease to exist. They are rudiments or relics of a former state.

I referred to the stray hairs scattered over the human body as being utterly inexplicable, if everything is made by special creation for a definite purpose. But if evolution is true, man was once on a level with the ape and was covered with hair like other lower animals. As he grew out of the ape condition, because of reasons not yet fully known, he became denuded of hair and the stray hairs are relics left behind. There are examples of human beings in existence who are covered with hair. In Siam two children, twins, were born in this condition. Their photograph was seen by Darwin and I think by Mr. Wallace, who visited them. When I was a boy I used to visit another boy who lived a few miles away and with whom I frequently slept. I never shall forget the surprise I felt when I found that he was covered with a coat of hair which seemed to me at that time as thick as that of an ordinary pug dog. When he was dressed of course no hair was in sight, as his hands, face, and neck were nearly as free from hair as these parts were with other boys.

The remembrance of my experience with this boy leads me to think that men, and perhaps women, covered more or less thickly with hair, are living actually among us and this peculiarity not known even to their intimate friends; for most of persons would be slightly ashamed to have such a fact known concerning themselves and would keep it a secret. There are stray hairs covering a woman's body, as there is a man's, but they are very much thinner and shorter. It seems either that woman has made greater progress in outgrowing the hairy condition of her progenitors than man, or she did not have so much hair covering her as did her male partner.

May it not be that man's beard is the relic of the thick, heavy, shaggy hair which belongs to the throat, neck, and face of the male lion and of some other animals, but which is not found on the female.

A Tribute to a Good Man.

I arrived at Reed City, Mich., the 15th of September, and am booked for six weeks in Dr. Spinney's sanitarium, to rejuvenate and prepare for 15 years more work on this lower plane. A wire-call took me to New York and Mt. Vernon the 9th, to assist in commemorative expressions to the life and spiritual birth of Milton Rathbun, one of the noblest men I ever knew; a representative Spiritualist and a typical illustration of the ideal man.

The service was in a public hall, on Wednesday, Sept. 11. The Milton Rathbun stock company, of New York, was there in a body. All who knew him loved him. When the news of his death reached New York, the flag on the Hay Exchange was lowered at half-mast, for the first time in its history. When the body was carried into the hall, the whole audience, as one man, arose to their feet, and stood in reverent silence until it was deposited on the table prepared for it, amidst an enchanting Eden of flowers. Rev. Charles H. Pennoyer and Mrs. Helen L. Russegue participated in the services with eloquent and tender tributes and rare words of wisdom on the significance of death, and the reality and nearness of the spiritual world.

Miss Annie Horton sang sweetly and fittingly, and the whole was an illustrious presentation of the beauty and value of Spiritualism in life and death, and a sweet comforter to the bereaved.

Mr. Rathbun's last words, or nearly the last, as his breath grew shorter and speech difficult, were addressed to his two sons, and were printed in a large floral book that adorned his casket, presented by the Milton Rathbun Stock Company of New York; and these were his words: "Remember, boys, there is no death. The kernel of this world blossoms out into the glorious flower of eternity," and after a brief pause he added, "How beautiful!" and fell asleep.

His wife, Mrs. Harriet Rathbun, a writer and speaker of wide reputation, bore her cross bravely, while the heartache, concealed by philosophical calm, was evident to all who saw her.

A great good man has gone, where we all shall follow soon. Let us work while the day lasts, and be ready when the call comes. LYMAN C. HOWE.

An Easy Way to Make Money.

I have made $560.00 in 30 days selling Dish-washers. I did my housework at the same time. I don't canvass. People come or send for the Dish-washers. I handle the Mound City Dish-washer. It is the best on the market. It is lovely to sell. It washes and dries the dishes perfectly in two minutes. Every lady who sees it wants one. I will devote all my future time to the business and expect to clear $4,000.00 this year. Any intelligent person can do as well as I have done. TEXAS.

Annual Meeting of State National Association of Spiritualists.

September 5, 6, 7, and 8, 1902, S. E. 55, the annual meeting of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists was held in the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas. Of the thirteen chartered societies eight were represented by seventeen delegates. The convention was formed and committees appointed Friday, Sept. 5th, and the report of the officers for the year were read. Pres. John W. Ring urged a continuance of the missionary work which had been done during the year by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley and Mrs. Laura B. Payne, saying that to encourage the already chartered societies that are not strong enough to keep a regular speaker, by the visits of able missionaries, is the proper thing to do, and that on these tours of the state other societies can be formed.

Secretary Mrs. Nettie M. Wood likewise dwelt upon the importance of this orderly missionary work, reminding the convention that in a very short time Spiritualism will be so organized that national missionaries will go all over the United States under the auspices of the different state associations with much less expense than now when for want of thorough organization they are compelled to travel hundreds of miles to reach the field in which they desire to work. The finances for the year were, receipts $804.24, of which $689.15 was collected by missionary work. Of this amount $621.15 has been spent in missionary work over the state. There remains after all expenses, including an indebtedness which has hung over the Association for some years, are paid, a balance of $50.05.

Friday night a city official made an address of welcome which was responded to by Mrs. Laura B. Payne. Saturday the revision of the Constitution and By-Laws occupied some time; regarding missionaries and ministers the Constitution now reads, "We recognize mediumship as the channel of inspiraton, progress and power of Spiritualism, and as furnishing evidence of the truth of the same. To insure the best results, mediums need protection, encouragement and assistance in the exercise of their gifts.

"The Board of Trustees may grant 'Missionary Certificates' to such persons as they deem worthy to represent this Association by teaching the philosophy or demonstrating the phenomena of Spiritualism. Any person who may have thus served this Association for six consecutive months and who makes application bearing the recommendation of a local chartered auxiliary society, certified to by the secretary of such local society and attested by the president of the same, accompanied by a fee of five dollars ($5.00) and approved by a majority vote of some annual meeting, shall receive a 'Certificate of Ordination to the Office of Minister of the Gospel of Spiritualism' stamped with our official seal and signed by the president. This certificate shall be our permission to preach, to perform the marriage ceremony, to conduct funerals, to discharge all other functions of the clergy and receive all of the privileges usually accorded to the clergy.

"Each person holding a 'Missionary Certificate' shall report at least every three months to the secretary. Each person holding a 'Certificate of Ordination' shall give written report of official duties performed during the year, to the secretary at least thirty days prior to each annual meeting.

"Each person failing to comply with above prescribed duty or for any other cause that is adjudged sufficient by a majority of the official board, after due consideration, shall have his or her papers revoked."

The committee on resolutions reported: Whereas Modern Spiritualism is the recognition of universal principles operative in Nature, immortality a fact in Nature, and spirit communion the avenue through which continuity of life is demonstrated, we submit the following resolutions as touching topics now uppermost in progressive thought; Resolved, 1st. That Spiritualism teaches that there is a spiritual world of varying grades in co-relation with this world, which is as tangible and real to those living in that world as the earth is to us.

2nd. That Spiritualism teaches that the event called death is not disastrous nor a penalty for sin, but an event as natural as birth and calculated to let us into a world of unlimited possibilities.

3rd. That there is a higher system of ethics than has yet been recognized by State or Church; that when we look as carefully after those who bake our children's bread and wash and iron their clothes as we do on the system of ethics we teach them, the oncoming generation will rise to a higher standard of health, morality and intellectual attainments than the world has yet seen.

4th. That as temperance consists in a moderate use of things beneficial and total abstinence from everything injurious, physical, mental and moral, is essential to our well being, we declare that intoxicating liquors, opiates, tobacco and all unnecessary stimulants should be avoided. That we are opposed to any law or laws in our Constitution, National or State, recognizing any system of faith under the guise of religion.

5th. That all wars at this stage of human progress are brutal and morally injurious to the welfare of society and that all international disputes should be settled by boards of arbitration, thus ushering in the era of universal peace on earth, good will to men.

6th. That capital punishment is a relic of barbarism wholly inimical to modern ideas concerning crime, causes and their cure. We favor abolition of the death penalty.

7th. That compulsory vaccination is not only unwise, unconstitutional, and un-American, but dangerous to health, causing eczema, erysipelas, cancer, tumors, syphilis and often death.

8th. That we view with gratification the awakening interest in the higher inspiration and guidance of the spiritual world which under the name of Altruism has taken such thorough hold upon numbers of the workers in our cause and we feel that continual attention directed toward the working forces of Altruism is deserved, looking to the amelioration of suffering everywhere. We urge special meetings be devoted to this purpose among our societies and the proceeds thereof be given to the poor.

Resolved, That we hereby extend the thanks of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists to the Galveston News and Tribune for their courteous reports of our meetings; to Mr. Chas. Steding and Mr. J. D. Pruessner for the palms and ferns which so beautifully decorated the Temple during our meetings.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, John W. Ring, Galveston; vice-president, W. Lenox Fox, Dallas; treasurer, Wade M. Smith, Austin; secretary, Theo. Schirmer, Galveston. Trustees, Dr. J. F. McCarty, Comanche; Geo. A. Wilson, Houston; J. B. Jennings, Hillsboro; Mrs. C. W. Watkins, Dallas; Mrs. F. M. Overman, San Antonio. The president and secretary both residing in Galveston the headquarters for the year will be The Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Saturday night the Progressive Lyceum of Galveston presented the musical cantata by John W. Ring, "A Price for Beauty," and although it had been presented four times before the Lyceum room was crowded.

Sunday morning at 9:30 Progressive Lyceum was conducted. At 11:00 o'clock the ceremony of ordination was performed, whereby Mr. M. D. Tenney, of League City, was made a "Minister of the Gospel of Spiritualism." Rev. Tenney is a man of seventy-seven years of age and has been a minister in the Methodist and Congregational churches for over fifty years. "I consider," he said, "that I have grown into Spiritualism as naturally as a child grows to manhood, and I am filled with vigor and strength when I think of the wondrous, yet natural revelation, which has come to me now." He was attended to the rostrum by little Helen Bock and Maxie Obitz, two wee tots clad in pure white and in contrast to the aged candidate, was a touching sight which reminded one of the prophecy, "a little child shall lead them." At 8:15 p.m. the auditorium of the Temple was filled with people for the lecture of Mrs. Laura B. Payne, "The World's Cry Heard by Spiritualism." The following is a synopsis: "To every age, to every clime and to all peoples comes the answer to each urgent demand. It is the law of life, and we see it manifest everywhere, that out of the great storehouse of Nature is furnished the answer to every cry, the supply for every need. This is true in every phase of existence, from the worm that crawls at our feet to the highest intelligence, from the ant-hill with its hurrying, industrious community, to the most exalted planes of intellectual and spiritual operation. Glancing along down the past ages we find that out of the aspiration of the soul and the desire to know something of the life unseen, have arisen those creeds upon which the religions of the world have been based, and every religion has been peculiarly fitted to the age in which it flourished and to the intellectual and spiritual condition of the people of that time. In the very nature of things it could not be otherwise, for man can no more formulate a creed or create for himself a God beyond his mental capacity, than he can construct a boat or ship beyond his mental capacity to construct. The reason man formerly navigated the streams with a log raft was because he did not know of a better means nor did his necessities demand better at that time. The reason why he first used the ox cart for transportation instead of the railroad train was because he knew how to make a cart and did not know how to make a railroad train. Then at that time the cart answered his needs as to transportation better than would the train. And thus it is with everything concerning human progress, religiously, politically and socially.

"But it is of religion that I wish particularly to speak to-night. Some urge that Spiritualism is not a religion. It is not in the sense that its adherents must be bound by creeds and dogmas or that they shall worship some personal deity, but inasmuch as it meets the requirements of mankind at the present, morally and spiritually it may be termed a religion. In my opinion it is the religion which corresponds to this wonderful age in which it was born and to man's present intellectual and spiritual development. As in the religions of the past mankind sought and found that which satisfied his soul; so to-day a questioning, critical world no longer contented with faith alone, looks to Spiritualism for a demonstration of its claims of the church that the soul of man exists after the change called death. Spiritualism is in a sense a religion, and never in history has any religion or any teaching filled a greater demand, answering in so many ways the world's cry as does Spiritualism. It demonstrates through its phenomena that much of the teaching of the popular church is erroneous, consoles the mourner in her hour of grief and proves to the materialist the fallacy of his doctrine.

"Theology has long taught the doctrine of an angry God, a scheming devil and a burning hell. It has refuted that and made happy many a poor soul who constantly stood in fear of those creatures of ignorance. Amid the sound of weeping, when the whirlwind of destruction robs us of home and loved ones, by fireside where stands the vacant chair and at the grave's side, mingled with the thud of falling clods, its voice of sweet assurance that there is no death, drives back the demon of despair and bids the sorrowing ones look up. The world was fast approaching materialism. Thousands had like the great Ingersoll come to the conclusion that "life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities," when Spiritualism came controverting their theories and proving to them beyond a doubt that just beyond the cloud rift lay the fadeless fields of beauty, and that beyond the veil they should clasp again their loved ones.

"Then Spiritualism touches and answers every vital question concerning humanity to-day. We believe that reform should come from within, that every man is his own savior, that the highest code of ethics is the purification and spiritual unfoldment of self, and the best religion that which makes practical the Golden Rule. Spiritualism seeks to prepare the world for the inauguration of a social system whereby every man, woman and child may have a home, and where all may be enabled to earn an honest living. It hears the cry of want and suffering that comes from the poor and distressed the world over, and specially does it hear and list to the cry of the thousands of children in mills and factories, mere babes toiling their young lives away for a crust of bread, remembering what Jesus said of such, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven," And through its press, its platform and in every possible way, it is striving to make the world a better place in which to live and to answer the cry that continually rises from the grief and poverty-stricken world."

At the close of the address the ceremony of "Naming the Baby" was performed; Mr. Ring approached the rostrum bearing a floral star of pure white, as the choir was singing from his composition for such occasions. Soon, "Hail, hail, all hail the little child" sounded and Miss Lillie Pither entered with the infant candidate comfortably in her arms; closely followed the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Neidermann. "God's sweetest flowers are human children, said Mr. Ring, and we receive here one of the innocent and pure blossoms that in your presence she may receive a name. We believe that by the concentration of the parents, of you, as witnesses, and of the society, that good influences will be attracted to this child, and we pray for such." He then placed the floral star on the breast of the child and as a profusion of loose petals fell to the floor pronounced the name, Alva. The child was then placed in the mother's arms and she was very touchingly reminded of the responsibility of motherhood; then the child was placed in the father's arms and he was admonished as to his pledge of protection to wife and child, and each were asked to within their hearts renew the vows of love and constancy that in perfect harmony of thought and act they might form a character of rare worth to the world. The choir burst into an Invocation chant, "Heavenly Father and Angels pure and holy, we named thy gift for this station so lowly." Continuing, "Oh may thy watchful tender care be over her; oh, guide thou her aright," it resolved into a bright vocal march, "Joy, oh, joy attend thee, though thy life short or long, and may grace and patience be thy virtue and thy song," and the party passed out. Mrs. Payne pronounced the benediction and the large assemblage passed out, many stopping to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Neldermann and Miss Alva.

Monday evening at sundown some four hundred people assembled on the beach, near Lucas Terrace ruins, for memorial service of those who passed away in the Great Galveston Disaster of 1900.

Appropriate addresses were made by Mr. John W. Ring and Mrs. Laura B. Payne, the entire crowd joined in singing, "Nearer My God, To Thee," which seemed to blend with the murmuring waves in solemn requiem, and each person present received a flower from the society to throw upon the waves. "Let every hand," said Mr. Ring, "receive a flower and lovingly cast it upon the waves, for we are commemorating the dead of the world, for which the heart of the entire world has throbbed." Impressive to the extreme it was to see hundreds of people go down to the water's edge and cast a single flower or a garland upon the waves, just as the sun was sinking to remind one of the thousands who had sunken into the arms of the death angel on that eventful night of two years ago.

At 8:15 p.m. the convention was formally closed by President John W. Ring, after addresses by Mrs. Laura B. Payne and Rev. M. D. Tenney. Mrs. Payne said in part: "Spiritualism may never be organized, but the people who have been made glad by the comfort found in the knowledge which Spiritualism affords will soon grow into such complete organization that it will be a well-equipped ship to sail the seas of human existence and dispense the sacred cargo of love manifest in life's realities, of truth in life's every way and knowledge, peace and power to each child of earth. Texas is starting right with a thorough organization, and with well directed missionary work such as has been done during the past year, local speakers will soon be in every city and the country fed on the manna of Spiritualism for which it is already hungry."

Rev. Tenney said during his address: "I am so glad that after all these years of ministering faith to the people, I am blessed with this knowledge that I may add it to the faith of many as I have added it to my own. The world craves knowledge and comfort which was promised by the great teacher of Galilee, and in Spiritualism it is found. She occupies the minds of thinkers the world over and will eventually, and much quicker than we sometimes think, be the thought of the people everywhere."

The music during the convention by the Quartet Choir of Galveston, with Mr. J. J. Blood as organist, was a pleasing feature, and the members of the choir are worthy of mention. The missionary work is to be continued as best we may and we do hope for the time when adjoining states will be so organized that they can use the missionaries up to our boundary and then let us have them rather than have to pay railroad fare from far distant places for them to come to our State. With best wishes to the work and friends of the cause everywhere we are, respectfully,

JOHN W. RING, Pres.

Ashley Camp, O.

The thirteenth annual camp meeting held at Ashley, O., closed last Sunday, Sept. 7th, after a month of most harmonious and enjoyable meetings. The attendance was not so large as in other years, but all were in good spirits and pleased with the month's results. The last Sunday was all that could be desired. Old Sol burst forth in all his splendor after the earth had been moistened and the air cooled by recent showers. A fine audience listened to words of wisdom that fell from the lips of E. W. Sprague at the afternoon and evening sessions, the morning being a conference meeting which was interesting to all. We had with us through the camp E. W. Sprague and wife, Frank T. Ripley and Mrs. A. E. Kibbey, each one doing their very best. Mr. and Mrs. Sprague have been engaged for the next camp meeting.

Already plans for the next meeting are in progress with every prospect that it will surpass all former meetings.

The annual election was held Sept. 6. The following officers were elected: President, J. J. Beard, Columbus; vice-president, C. Heverlo, Ashley; corresponding secretary, Wm Randolph, Ashley; assistant secretaries, Miss Alta Johnson and Miss Frankie Heverlo, of Ashley; recording secretary, W. Granger, Ashley; general manager, A. P. Oliver, Ashley; treasurer, T. M. Seeds, Ashley.

The sum of $109.67 was put in the collection box Sunday afternoon. This amount was raised in 20 minutes by our good brother Sprague, who by his genial and most courteous manners reached both the hearts and pocket books of his audience. We have just learned a good friend has sent in our name for The Progressive Thinker and your last premium book, for one year. God bless the friend. There is no better Spiritualist paper than The Progressive Thinker and every Spiritualist should take it. MRS. ALTA L. JOHNSON.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1902.

Fortune Tellers Taxed.

Seers, soothsayers and fortune tellers are to augment the revenues of the city by $800,000. An ordinance, it is said, will be presented to the Council, which proposes to tax fortune tellers and astrologers $100 per year.—News item in Chicago American.

Could those in authority discriminate between the common fortune teller and the Spiritualistic medium such a law might have some effect for the good of Spiritualism, but as it is, this law would only bring litigation upon litigation and subject the genuine Spiritual medium to the disgrace of arrest and prosecution.

The city seems to be on the hunt of revenue to supply the deficiency created by an unwise, uneconomical administration of its financial affairs, and instead of going after the larger game where they would have to put up a hard fight at every step, have begun to look to the seers, soothsayers, fortune tellers, astrologers, mediums, etc., to fill the city treasury from the purse of the poor, where there will be the least resistance.

The Progressive Thinker is not bound, by its love for and obligation to Spiritualism, to defend the common fortune teller, but it is hard for even those of years of study and experience to discover who are mediums and who are not.

Many who in ignorance are advertising themselves as "fortune tellers," are real mediums, and yet are endorsed by no society of Spiritualists and know nothing of the Spiritual philosophy. They will be driven by such a law to seek shelter and protection under the canopy of the "Religion of Spiritualism." It has been the case in every city where such laws have been enacted, and Spiritualism has spread her broad wings out over those who have disgraced her, in her great anxiety to protect her own.

Until Spiritualism can shake off these parasites and know her own, this will occur in every instance where such an ordinance prevails, and the law is attempted to be enforced, therefore we should take steps to prevent such legislation or have provisions attached to said ordinance for the protection of those who are genuine mediums and belong to the ranks of Spiritualism.

Here is work for the State Association. Here is an opportunity to show discretion upon a matter of importance to the cause of Spiritualism. Here is a chance for the various heads of local societies to get together and discuss this problem of license and no license.

"Seers, soothsayers and fortune tellers," in the estimation of the common law would include Spiritual mediums, persons through whom the Spiritual phenomena are presented, and it might be easier to prevent than to fight such a law.

An Important Event.

A coming event of importance to Spiritualism and much interest to Spiritualists, is announced in the present issue of The Progressive Thinker. The opening of an institution of learning, under the auspices of Spiritualists, means much to the Cause of Spiritualism. There are rich promises of good contained in this educational enterprise, which may become a potent factor in the future status of our Cause in the world.

To aid students to a liberal, generous education is of itself a good and worthy object; to educate with freedom from anti-spiritualist prejudice, and with generous bias toward all truth, including the grand Truth of Spiritualism, is a marked advance beyond the spirit and mental attitude of colleges generally.

The conductors of the Morris Pratt Institute have it within their power to make the Institute a great force in the future success of our Cause. That they will be equal to the work, we do not doubt. The measure of their success will depend on the generous appreciation and aid of Spiritualists.

May the brightest hope and faith of its founders and workers be grandly realized.

Knowledge Still Wanted.

The Jewish Year Book gives the number of Jews throughout the world at 11,210,415.

This is the reputed progeny of a small tribe of Semites inhabiting the Lebanon mountains, in Palestine, all of whom are represented to have been slaughtered by the Roman army under Titus, else were sold into slavery.

The whole coast of Palestine bordering on the Great Sea, ranging from half a mile to fifteen miles in width, and filled with populous cities, belonged to the Phenecians. They were of the Semite race, like the Jews. Each used the same language and the same characters in writing. Each worshiped the same gods and practiced the same customs: The Phenecians had numerous and populous colonies, stretching along the entire southern coast of the Great Sea to Gibralter, and into Spain. What has become of these people? That is a problem which ought to be solved. Who will do it?

Common Sense in Mediumship.

Instead of unquestioning obedience to whatever a spirit—any spirit—wishes or dictates, we take it that in these matters, as in matters emanating from persons in this present life, our best judgment and common sense should be applied.

There are some mediums who apparently relegate their judgment to a back seat, and abnegate common sense, in their yielding to the impulses of their "controls." If the spirit so moved, they would stand on their heads, or perform any other ridiculous acts. We have been told of some persons, who, "under control," in a seance, got down on their hands and knees (or feet) and enacted the role of dogs—performing such acts as dogs are wont to do.

Why not—if the proper thing for a medium to do, as a medium, is to yield one's self up entirely to the "control," to be used merely as an "instrument" for the spirits to play any tune they please?

It was, if true, a disgraceful and exceedingly vulgar exhibition—whether incited by spirits or mortals—and equally without excuse in either case.

There is no safe or sensible way, save to exercise one's best judgment upon the thoughts and works of spirits in precisely the same manner and measure as we judge the words, thoughts and works of mortal men.

Man's mentality is not for the purpose of laying it aside in order to become the passive puppet of any person or being, spirit or mortal, high or low.

Mental power and spiritual growth are not acquired except by one's own thought and effort in the actual exercise of one's own faculties.

Another's acquirements in mentality and spirituality can not become ours by transfusion while we are in a state of unconsciousness; we can not have such qualities poured into us as molasses is poured into a "perfectly passive" pitcher or jug. Our own active minds must apprehend, weigh, judge, perceive the truth, or it is naught to our benefit, mentally or spiritually.

A person can receive inspirational thought when in his most positive, wide-awake, thoughtful state; can follow, consciously and appreciatively, and with clear mental comprehension, the thoughts given to him by spirit personalities.

In such inspiration is mental and spiritual growth and development to the inspired one. His mind is thoroughly active, alert, thoughtful, on strongest wings mounting with the mount of the thought given, into the higher regions of mental elevation and outlook.

In all this far and high excursion, the "medium" is himself; his individuality is wholly his own, under his own control; he is in the normal possession of his normal mental faculties; and his mind can expand and develop with the conscious perception and reception of the thoughts given him.

It is not necessary that a medium shall abdicate the throne of reason, or allow his individuality to be set aside, or be dispossessed of the full possession, use and exercise of his mental faculties. Those who give themselves up to the passive control of spirit influence, should consider whether in so abdicating the control of their own personality, they do not in greater or less degree, approach a condition of insanity.

Receptivity to good influences and good thoughts, and not blind passivity to any and all "spirits," speckled, gray or whatsoever and whomsoever—is the ideal mediumship.

Christ in London.

He is there, according to cable dispatches—evidently to stay. He stands at the head of a body calling itself Agapemonites, whose leader declared to a fully believing congregation that he was Christ.

His declaration was only intended for the faithful whose admission had been tested by secret masonic signs. Somebody from the outer world succeeded in passing the portals and gave the public this revelation.

The colony of Agapemonites has been living for over a year at Clapton, a quiet suburb of northeast London. Their leader is J. H. Pigott. He refuses to see any interviewers or any articles in the newspapers, but his congregation has made the following declaration:

"We have found Christ. He has come, as we know it. We saw him on Sunday. We care not for the world or the public. We have known for some time of his coming, and our hopes have been realized."

The brethren number over 200. They are neither rich nor poor, but comfortably off. They meet the needs of the church from their own purses and ask nothing from disbelievers.

There is no marriage among them, nor is there a baptismal font in the church. With the coming of the Messiah so nigh they did not have time for such vanities as courtship and marriage. Those who were already married lived as brother and sister.

It is the personality of Pigott himself which chiefly excites the outer world. He is the son of a rich landowner, whose family resided on their own estates in the west of England for many generations. He was educated at Cambridge university and became a clergyman of the Church of England. Then, according to his own admission, he led a wild life in many parts of the world. He had been gold digging in California, coffee planting in Ceylon, and salmon fishing in northwest America. He had been a sailor before the mast, leading a loose life. He was afterwards major in the Salvation army, which he quit to enter his present seat.

Pigott is a man 60 years of age, tall, dark, clean shaven, and ascetic looking.

We have had several Christs in this country—good, bad and indifferent. They are announced periodically, and attract some weak minded or semi-idiots to their standard. We hope more will come and they will, and finally they will disappear under the influence of deep disgust they will cause.

The Evidences Multiply.

Stonehenge, situated on Salisbury plain, near Amesbury, Eng., consists of two concentric circles of upright stones, inclosing two ellipses, the whole surrounded by a double mound and ditch circular in form. The vicinity abounds in tumuli, filled with ancient remains. The structure was credited to the ancient Druids, and was supposed to have something to do with sun worship.

A committee of antiquarians, for the purpose of strengthening the foundations, to prevent further destruction, found several feet below the surface unmistakable evidence that Stonehenge was the product of the new stone age, antedating the discovery of iron, and that its true history, if it could be known, would carry us far back in the night of time. Instead of a survival of the 5th century, as many have claimed, it is more probable it was the work of 10,000 or more years ago. The while the horizontal imposts are dovetailed to each other, and fitted by mortise holes in their undersides to knobs in the uprights. Verily, ancient man, destitute of modern conveniences, was a genius even in that rude age, thousands of years before creation, allowing ignorant churchmen to tell the story of the age of the world.

An Old-Timer.

In glancing over our old files back to the year one of The Progressive Thinker we came upon the following friendly and somewhat prophetic note, which we think good enough to republish thirteen years after its date and leave to the readers to judge as to the hopes of this old friend being well founded:

To the Editor: I have just finished reading the first number of The Progressive Thinker, and have made up my mind that it is just the kind of paper needed—spiritual and progressive. It is as a whole capital, and I am sure will supply a long felt want in the minds and hearts of the Spiritualistic public, which want I take to be an earnest desire for something really spiritual—news from the world of spirit, and good thoughts, the best of thoughts from this side the "Door of Death." By the way, do you know your article in that department affected me the most; yet the whole paper is on the right line, and I am sure you will capture the hearts and heads (and, I hope also, the pocket-books) of a vast number of thinking readers. Of course, there are other spiritual papers, and I would do nothing to lessen the circle of their influence, but none that I have seen are just like yours. We need all the influences for good and for spiritual development that can possibly sustain themselves. I often regret that there is so much contest and strife (at least apparently) in the ranks of Spiritualistic journalism. You will not fall into this error, I am sure; you will simply teach the gospel of glad tidings—a life of the spirit beyond the grave, wherein it will transpire that nothing but good deeds, loving intentions and pure thoughts can bring happiness and satisfaction; and this doctrine under such teachings as yours will finally be recognized as the true doctrine of life in our present sphere of being.

I like The Progressive Thinker ever so much, and shall take pride in doing what little I can to help it. Fraternally,

A. M. GRIFFEN.

ATTENTION!

Delegates and Visitors to the N. S. A. Convention.

To all friends in the West who intend to be at the Tenth Annual Convention of the N. S. A. in Boston, Mass., Oct. 21, 22, 23 and 24th:—Kindly send your names and addresses at once to this office, that we may forward the same to the Chicago office of the Western R.R. Commissioners, for unless we can satisfy those gentlemen of the number likely to attend said convention from their territory, they will not grant certificate tickets over their roads. It is important that we learn the probable attendance from the West at the earliest possible moment. Kindly notify us. We look for, and most earnestly desire a large attendance of delegates from our Western constituents, and also trust to have many visitors from that section, to the convention in Boston. Dr. Warne of Chicago wishes to arrange an excursion—similar to that which New England took to that city three years ago, and to Cleveland in 1900, we hope the Western friends will avail themselves of this opportunity to see the old historic city of the East. Convention will be held at Berkely hall, corner of Berkely and Tremont Sts., Boston, beginning Tuesday, Oct. 21, at 10 a.m.; day sessions will be free to the public. Hotel headquarters will be at Berkely hall, corner Boylston and Berkely Sts. A public reception will be held there on Monday, Oct. 20, at 8 p.m. All will be welcome. And friend who wishes to have hotel accommodations engaged, may address J. B. Hatch, 74 Sydney St., Dorchester, Mass.

Worthy of Serious Attention.

One of the ideas advanced, among the many, in No. 039 of The Progressive Thinker, and which I deem worthy the most serious attention, is by Dr. Wm. Cleveland, of Minneapolis, Minn.

I quote his own language: "The truths of Modern Spiritualism should be taught in our common schools, so that when our children grow up they would start in life with the knowledge that they were immortal beings."

This is a very proper suggestion, when we know that the Christian religion (!) has been taught, and the Bible read in the schools, until the people were tired of it and voted it out in many localities years ago.

One of the most numerous of the Christian churches makes the education of its rising generation a sine qua non not to be dispensed with, and which aims at keeping its votaries in ignorance on this vital question.

No scientific truths as well understood and demonstrated as are the "communion of saints," in these latter days, should be withheld from the rising generation. To do so is ignorance of the grossest character.

It seems to me that the Christian church should at once take the initiative and for so doing "the scriptures" give them abundant warrant:

"Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant."—First Epistle of Paul, the Apostle to the Corinthians, 12th chapter, 1st verse.

He then goes on to enlarge on the "diversities of gifts and the differences of administrations and operations."

"But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."

This, it seems to me, is authority sufficient to warrant the magnates of the "Church of Christ"—of which there are many claiming to be his true disciples—in spreading his true gospel.

Some of our very ablest propagandists, notably Rev. Moses Hull and his good wife, have been for many years preaching Bible Spiritualism, notwithstanding St. Paul says, "Let the women learn in silence with all subjection."—Epistle to Timothy, 2d chapter, 11th verse.

Yes, indeed, "let the women keep silence in the churches," and when they do so, the churches will go down. The women are their main stay, and have been from time immemorial. If the church interests are left in the hands of the men, it will soon go to pieces. "Revivals of religion" are common, and they were sixty years ago, and demonstrate the fact that a continual agitation is necessary to keep the people warned to "flee from the wrath to come." The study of "theology," as at present, will soon be a thing of the past and sink into desuetude, as it ought.

OCCULT FORCES.

Many Cured in a Remarkable Way.

SPIRITS AID THE CATHOLICS, CLUSTERING AROUND AN OLD BONE AND SENDING DOWN ON SUFFERERS THEIR HEALING MAGNETISM.

To the Editor:—The following from the New York World, illustrates an important point:

"Good St. Anne, our good mother; pray for me; cure me, for thy glory and the honor of Jesus in the Blessed Sacrament!"

Thousands of times this little prayer has gone up at the church of St. Jean Baptiste, Seventy-sixth street, N. Y. On one occasion it went up hundreds of times, for it was the feast day of St. Anne, mother of the Blessed Virgin.

Those who love little children have wept many times during the days that have passed. The poor little ones—blind, deaf, paralyzed, limping with hip disease or stumbling along with one foot far shorter than the other; some babies bound to boards and others gibbering away because the light of reason had never flashed into their poor little brains—it was a continual procession of them every day.

RECORD OF THE NOVENA.

"I never dreamed there was so much suffering in the world," said one of the priests, who has only recently come to the church from a little country town where babies are born normally because their mothers and fathers have never known the misery of the tenements and the lack of wholesome food.

The feast day marks the end of the Novena to St. Anne. During those nine days the relic of the Saint, a bit of the born of her forearm, two inches long, had been exposed for the veneration of the faithful. It is set in a plate of brass, protected by a disk of glass. Those who wanted could kiss the sacred relic and those who suffered could have it applied to whatever part of their bodies was afflicted.

It took a squad of police to keep the little church from being swamped. It scarcely holds 1,000, yet at times 3,000 souls have sought admission at the same time. Each aisle holds a bluecoat. He allows so many up and halt the He allows so many up and halts the others. Every fifteen minutes the procession comes. Upstairs they worship at the altar; downstairs they venerate the relic.

Over and over again good Father Roy, the priest in charge of the relic, intones his prayers. The voices of the people follow him in a confused murmur. Up and down along the altar rail he passes, presenting the relic in its little glass case to the line of kneeling faithful.

"Pray for me!" he bids the afflicted one say, and then "Good St. Anne!" rises again from the kneeling hundreds in the pews.

One of the most pitiful sights of the week was a little fellow strapped to a board. He was perhaps three years old, and some cruel disease of the spine had seized him for its own. It looked as if all his life had been concentrated in the great violet eyes that looked so wonderingly at the priest who bent over him. His tiny form was wasted; his pretty face was wan with suffering.

"CURE ME," LISPED THE CHILD.

"Good St. Anne," whispered the priest, bending over the boy, "pray for me."

"Good St. Anne, pray for me and cure me," lisped the child, while the priest rubbed him all over with the relic. There was hardly a dry eye then in the little sanctuary.

"Some day," sobbed the mother, "I hope to bring this cruel board and put it here, with these other things."

"I hope so," said the father kindly.

About them were two great stands filled with crutches, braces, bandages and all the devices of surgery to help the crippled. Every one had been put there by one who had been cured, and by St. Anne alone.

The mothers bring their children, their faces brave with hope. Some are in plaster jackets, others are bound in steel. The babies' faces are apathetic, but the mother-love shines in the faces of those who bring them.

The police know the cripples who come daily and there is a private entrance for them, so that they can avoid the long and tiresome wait in the crowds. Out in the street a swarm of venders have been coining money by selling rosaries, buttons with the picture of St. Anne, photographs of the church and dozens of other souvenirs.

Within the church there are two rooms for the sale of pious objects for the faithful. In one room a sweet-faced nun sells little images, devotional books, crucifixes and pictures. In another sits a sister who has charge of the membership of the Associates of St. Anne.

To become a member entitles one to many indulgences. Membership may be bought for the dead. Each associate participates in the good works and the prayers of the other members. Those who belong must wear the medal of St. Anne or keep it in some convenient place at home.

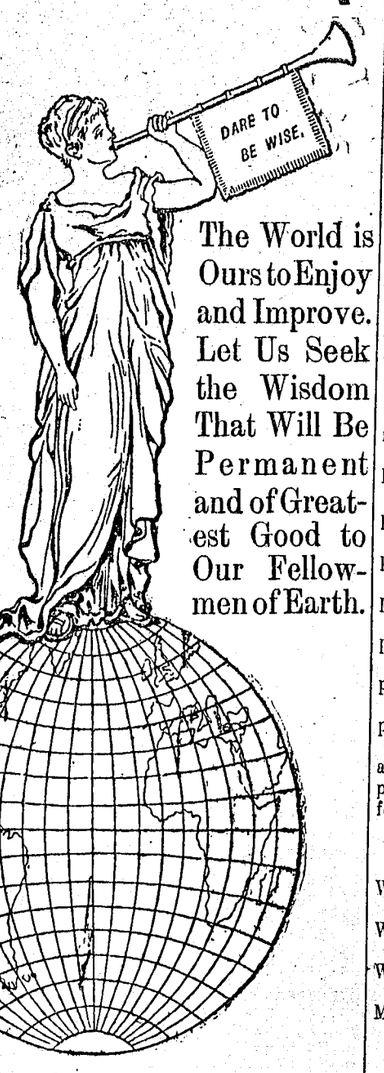
The week has seen many cures. Little Marian Oates, a child of six, who lives at No. 172 East Eighty-second street, for half her little life has been hobbling around with a brace, crippled with hip disease. Her little face, spiritualized by pain, was followed by many pitying eyes as she came day after day that the saint might cure her and to kiss the relic. Finally the time came.

"Take it off, mamma," whispered the child, pointing to the clumsy steel brace that supported her.

In sight of all the worshippers the mother unstrapped the iron and little Marian walked out of church unaided. The kneeling faithful burst out in praise of St. Anne!

Augustus Martin, a crippled pauper, had no money to go home and spent the night on the church steps. Then he left his cane in the collection and walked without it.

"One side was totally paralyzed," he sobbed, "but now I can walk alone. My cure will soon be complete."



In one day three children left their braces on the altar while Father Roy offered up a prayer of thanksgiving. They were little Grace McLane, of No. 1394 Second avenue, Mamie Dunphey, of No. 505 Baltic street, Brooklyn, and Margaret Leonard, of No. 324 East Eighty-first street. Two of them had hip disease and the third an affection of the knee that forced her to wear a brace.

Mrs. Peter Kiernan declared she was cured of paralysis. William Reilly averred that where once he was blind with cataracts he could see the light of day again, and hoped soon to have perfect sight again. There were many, too, who refused their names but told how they, too, had been cured of many of life's gravest ills.

In the above we find something for reflection—something to think about most critically. A bone—spurious perhaps—produces extraordinary results in a church impregnated to the brim with superstition and ignorance. Why so? Tell the cause, please. It is plain. That relic is surrounded by spirits. They possess strong healing powers, and they cure in many instances the sick. This is only another segment of Spiritualism under the cloak of the Catholic church. Spiritualism is world wide, and is cropping out everywhere. Spiritualists have no patent right on it, no exclusive claim to it. It existed in ancient times, and it exists to-day. Again I say Spiritualism is leavening the whole lump, hence can never become a religious sect in the sense they exist to-day. Give the Catholic church credit for having spiritual communion, though it is perverted for selfish purposes—to build up a creed.

Remember, please, that we send many of our Premium Books by express. If you do not receive your order promptly by mail; inquire at the express office. If not there, notify us at once.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to purchase any of these Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands." Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills an exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have NINE Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.
5.—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.
6—The Next World Interviewed.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printers art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

Something to Interest Women.

A very pretty illustration of civic patriotism appears in the offer of the two sisters, Miss Oliva E. Phelps Stokes and Miss Caroline Phelps Stokes, to give to New York City $100,000 off of a fairly appraised valuation of a magnificent property owned by them on Madison Square if the city will use the location for a needed public building. They want to see their old home, and that of their father, preserved for public uses, and will give so much for that purpose. And yet these public spirited property owners and taxpayers can not vote.—N. Y. Independent.

The Democratic platform of Vermont just adopted contains the following plank: "We favor the passage of a law giving women the right to vote on all questions, pertaining to taxing property of which women are the owners."

Washington Gladden says: "All men or women either, who own or rent stores or shops or offices which they occupy for business purposes, ought to be permitted to register and vote in municipal elections. They are stockholders in that great corporation which we call the city; they pay taxes, either directly or indirectly; they are immediately and peculiarly concerned in having clean streets, good sewerage and sanitation, cheap light, pure water, adequate transportation, in every interest which is represented, in the city government, and they ought to have a voice in the government."

GAMES FOR GIRLS.

Felix L. Oswald, A.M., M.D., writes to the Record-Herald: "Class legislation prevails wherever the strong get a chance to abrogate the rights of the weak, and the sons of Adam have not failed to exert that power at the expense of their sisters. Government without the consent of the subjected is despotism. Women are governed. Taxation without representation privileges is robbery. Women are taxed. All their political, social and personal rights are curtailed when they happen to interfere with the interests of male legislators, and injustice reaches its climax in the sanitary wrongs of the disfranchised sex. The main roads to health are barred to the majority of women, who nevertheless have to bear the double penalties of sanitary aberrations.

Discrimination begins in the nursery. Boys are permitted to indulge the instinct that prompts them to earn the blessing of physical vigor by outdoor exercise, while girls are treated like cabbage plants that can develop without stirring from their nook in the inclosure of a truck farm. In all but the most crowded wards of our large cities charity tolerates makeshift gymnasiums, foot-races tracks and ball-play yards, but they are not for girls.

Rompers in petticoats risk punishment whenever they stray beyond the lane that divides the paternal building lot from a public playground. John Stuart Mill did not hesitate to maintain that nine out of ten females of our species are "physically handicapped for life before they have exchanged their school dress for the garb of an assistant housekeeper."

HE MYSTIFIED THEM.

Herr Newman's Wonderful Mind-Reading Performance.

Much interest was manifested yesterday afternoon in the public test given by Herr Newman of his wonderful abilities in the line of telepathy. This young man, of Russian birth, gave a demonstration that convinced a committee of citizens of the genuineness of the professor's experiments and those who took part in the exhibition could not speak too highly of the man's powers.

To make the test thorough and plain ex-Alderman John Boylan was invited to act as chairman of the committee. Mr. Boylan is a plain, matter-of-fact man who generally takes exhibitions of this kind with a grain of salt and consequently he was a little skeptical when he started out yesterday afternoon. In fact he thought the test was to be a "fake," but when the exhibition was concluded his mind was disabused of this idea. He stated that the test was the most wonderful exhibition of the kind he had ever seen. In this opinion the former alderman was supported by the other members of the committee, all of whom were total strangers to the professor.

Herr Newman not only found the hidden article, but he mystified pedestrians who were in the central portion of the city about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Blindfolded, the professor drove a team of horses through Main and Market streets and the adjoining thoroughfares, dodging trolley cars and piles of brick, lumber and other material piled up in front of buildings in course of erection, as well as keeping out of the way of crowds walking through the burned section.

With Alderman Boylan on the committee were William Roe, Justice of the Peace Abe Cohen, John Hubertus and Harry Barber. While two members started out to hide the article the others remained behind to keep an eye on the professor to see that no one approached or spoke to him.

When the carriage returned Herr Newman mounted the driver's box and started off. The route he took was as follows: From the Bijou theatre, on West street, to Main, to Grand, to Prince, to Market, to Main, to Smith street.

At this corner he stopped. On the trip he had constantly requested the committee to keep their minds concentrated and once or twice when he seemed puzzled he cautioned them not to divert their thoughts.

Arriving at the store of John Hubertus they entered. The article, or rather articles, for the "hidden treasure" consisted of two penknives, an old coin and a warrant belonging to Judge Cohen, had been stowed away by the committee in a nook on the top of a transom in a reception room of Mr. Hubertus' house. Still blindfolded, the professor secured a ladder, standing close by, mounted it and found the articles.

From start to finish no one had spoken to the professor. All those who served on the committee were disinterested persons and the test was as free from suspicion of "fake" as it could possibly be. What made the exhibition all the more amazing in the eyes of the committee was that before the professor started out, he took a directory, turned over the pages and finding the proper leaf, ran his finger up and down the sheet and stuck a pin in Hubertus' name. This he did while blindfolded.

Herr Newman promises to give equally wonderful tests this week, and he has invited dubious persons to watch him. He appears at all performances, and his stay here is likely to create as much talk here as did the visit of the Boldwins to the Opera house some years ago.

It was Herr Newman who secured the confession from Martin Thorn, the murderer of William Guldesuppe, this confession being made while the accused was under hypnotic influence and in the presence of Inspector Byrnes, Coroner Tuthill, Lawyer Moss and other well-known New Yorkers. He has appeared before Nicholas III., Czar of Russia, and found a small watch that had been hidden away in the czarina's shoe. This was in the winter palace at Berlin. Seven years ago Newman was in this city and found a photograph of Chris Braun, then mayor. This photo had been hidden away in an ash barrel. The mind reader is only 28 years old. He was born in St. Petersburg, Russia, and commenced to read minds when he was but seven years of age. He appears at the Bijou theatre this week.—Patterson Call, N. J.

WHEN PA TRIED MENTAL HEALIN'.

When Pa tried Mental Healin' in the Fall of '04,
He says: "At las' I've found the art of livin' evermore;"
And a moisture born of pity dimmed
the luster of his eye,
As he said: "Oh, wretched mortals, in your ignorance to die!
W'en you might keep right on livin' if the fact you once opined
That disease is but a phantom of the morbid, restless mind.
Hallelujer!" said my father, in a jubilatin' awe,
"That the fact that Mind is Monarch is the glorious truth I've saw."

"Oh, do not cry, my little son," said Pa,
"for here's the truth:
Your pain is only in your Mind; it is not in your tooth.
Jus' set your Mind upon it, an' keep it
sot right there,
An' you'll be surprised to notice that it is not anywhere.
Don't tell me that your tooth does ache!
I guess I orto know!
An' quit that howlin' now at once, an'
give your Mind a show!"
And then I went behind the barn until my tears I slaked—
Perhaps my tooth wan't aching, but I know I thought it ached.

One day my Pa was pounding on a nail against the wall,
And he sort of missed the target and hit his thumb—that's all,
But the words my Pa then strewed around they were a grief to me,
And I thought I'd best console him, for his language was too free;
And so I says: "It doesn't hurt; it's only in your Mind,
And if you'll give your Mind a show you'll be surprised to find——"
I never did get farther, for he jerked me out of plumb,
And said: "Dern Mental Healin'! This hurt is in my thumb."

Since then my Pa's backslidden, and he groans and moans around,
And his books on Mental Healin' in the attic may be found;
And he often says, emphatic: "A man's a fool, I find,
Who insists a broken thumbnail is a phantom of the mind.
That cholerer's a delusion, an' that typhoid is a sham,
They's plenty of such imbeciles, but drat me if I am!"
And so I kind o' argue, though in confidence I speak,
That my Pa has good intentions, but his mind is middlin' weak.

Fundamental Basis of Immortality.

A Sermon by Rev. Holmes Slade.

We are told that "When John Quincy Adams was eighty years of age, he met in the streets of Boston an old friend who shook his trembling hand and said, 'Good morning; and how is John Quincy Adams to-day?' 'Thank you,' was the ex-president's answer, 'John Quincy Adams himself is well, sir; quite well, I thank you. But the house in which he lives at present is becoming dilapidated. It is tottering upon its foundation. Time and the seasons have nearly destroyed it. Its roof is pretty well worn out. Its walls are much shattered, and it trembles with every wind. The old tenement is becoming almost uninhabitable, and I think John Quincy Adams will have to move out of it soon. But he himself is quite well, sir; quite well.'" With that the venerable sixth president of the United States moved on with the aid of his staff.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in a few lines of poetry, has given a most comprehensive view of this our subject of all subjects:

"Death? 'Tis such a little thing—
Scarcely worth the mentioning.

"What has death to do with me,
Save to set my spirit free?

"In the great primeval morn
My immortal Will was born.

"Part of that stupendous Cause,
Which conceived the Solar Laws,

"Lit the suns and filled the seas,
Royalest of pedigrees."

In the treatment of my subject I seem to come at once, naturally and necessarily, to the idea of God, which is so plainly manifest in the stupendous activity and wondrous working power of creation. It is God that established the order of nature, and directs the concerns of the universe. His alone is the power and wisdom by which the work of the world is carried forward to its destined completion.

I might assume this without going into any argument to prove it; but let me say I am supposing everybody will acknowledge potency or power in the universe, without which nothing could ever transpire, or be brought about; God buoying up and penetrating this all in which we live.

But power alone is not competent to produce these vast processions of which we are cognizant. Mere force, as we all know, does not account for things as we see them. It takes something more than force to make the hands and feet effectual for their uses; the eye to see with; the tongue to talk with; and for the putting forth of the inventive genius displayed in all skillful performances.

Force might hold together the particles of material substance, and make them assume the form of a rain-drop, or even a planet. But there is no law by which it could organize these into a living, growing tree, or into a bird or man. It has been said, that "The force of wind simply might bring a ship into harbor, but left to itself alone it might send it on to some foreign shore at any one of a thousand points." If all the material forces in existence were to continue to act for millions of years, they could never cause a solid piece of iron to take root and grow, or to take lungs and breathe.

Do we not know with absolute certainty in looking at a watch that is keeping correct time, that something of mind action is involved in its contrivance? A person would be thought the greatest simpleton in the world, if he should insist of a watch that always pointed out the exact time, that it contrived itself; and we should be provoked beyond all manner of patience if another were to insist that all the words and sentences of which this discourse is composed, dropped from the dictionary, and fell into their places by natural selection. How many times would you have to throw down together the letters of the alphabet to make them spell your own name? Have you ever seen any of that capable matter that could perform the wonderful achievement of writing a book?

Our conception is, that that which underlies all things, and is the substance of them all, flows forth from the Divine Substance, making the finite rest upon the bosom of the Infinite! upon that Supreme Power which manifests itself through the world, and shapes the world. Just as light and heat flow from the sun to impart life to nature, and are the life-forces of nature, so God is the great spiritual life-force in us, and in all things; the current of His life flowing into us, and into them, as the blood into the veins, or the sap into the vine, and the vine into the branches. How else shall we conceive of Him, but that He is the life-giving Spirit, the power and energy of all things; the substance of all that is substantial; the only enduring amid the transient; the only permanent in the things that change?

The view which I entertain assumes spirit to be the only substantial reality, and denies the existence of being, or action, as distinct from God. Nothing is, or can be, absolutely real and eternal but God, and other things as they relate to Him, and as they are made to partake of the eternity of Him who is the Creator, the defence and life of all.

It is in God that "we live, and move, and have our being" at present; but why more at present than we have always lived in Him, and are always to live in Him? Out of Him we do not live, nor move, nor have any being; but living in Him we live forever by virtue of our relationship to Him. He is the life of our life, for we are constantly receiving our life from Him. You will understand that we no more live by the life that came to us yesteday, than we see by the light that came to us yesterday. We see by the light that comes to us at the instant, and we live by the life that comes to us at the instant. And though we differ from God in that we are individualized, finite spirits, while He is the one Infinte Spirit, yet the life of God and the life of man are identically the same, as a drop of water taken from the ocean is in essence, nature and quality the same with the ocean, differing only in degrees. Though the life of God transcends in fullness that of man, it is not in essence or in nature that they differ. Our very life is the life of God in us, and hence is as eternal as God Himself is eternal. Our spirits are a part of the Eternal Spirit which no death can touch.

It is said that God "only hath immortality," because we have no essential existence only as we exist in the Eternally Existing One. Our life is included in His life; and His being comprises our own. Created in the image of God, we are by our very natures participants of His immortality. We are sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, and He being immortal, we are immortal like Him.

Our minds are parts of the Infinite Spirit Creator, for all things are of Him, as having sprung from Him. We are born of His very substance, and by this kinship, this everlasting tie of our natures, we are bound to Him, and He to us.

I believe that the substance of the soul is the same as that which exists with, and in God, and of course is finite in the comparison as embracing all souls. Our substance is from His substance, our life from His life, our intelligence from His intelligence. The soul itself is the type of God, and is God to the extent in which it possesses in a finite degree, what belongs to God in an infinite degree. It is the miniature representative of Him, and must therefore be eternal, since to strike it out of existence is to destroy a part of Himself.

This will explain to us how we are to conceive of God as the Alpha and Omega; the First and the Last, the beginning and the ending; how He is the "All in all;" not the all of the totality of everything, which would make Him an eternal chaos of unimaginable and indiscriminate elements; but all that is permanent, substantial and enduring. Pope had this right in his Essay on Man, when he said:

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body nature is, and God the soul."

Spirit is the soul of matter, but God is the Soul of spirit, and of all essential being. He is the Soul of our soul. It takes all the parts of a thing to make the whole, and all the minds to make the One Great Mind. We are to conclude that we are each the image of God—all lesser divinities limited to our sphere of a narrower space, while God is unlimited. As all water is of the same nature or substance, as was remarked before, so all life is of the same nature or substance.

There may be many existing things, but only one existence, or one Being, the Being of beings. We may talk of a thousand things that are apparent, or seeming, which go and come, and pass away; like a book which I might be holding in my hands for the time being, and we might pronounce it substantial, as among the eternal verities. But all that is real, and eternal, and everlasting, is something more than book. To-day we say of it that it is a book, but yesterday it was not a book. It was water, or pulp, or rags, or color. We do not know what it was. Tomorrow we burn it up and it goes off into thin air; into gas, and smoke, and heat and ashes.

Truth is, we are in the presence of perpetual change and succession, coming and going in ceaseless transmigration; all material things do change, and fade, and pass away; and it is only in the region of the invisible that we find the absolute and eternal. This material world of ours in which we live, so frail and fleeting, so transient and evanescent, so full of mutation, changeableness and unsubstantiality, is but the shadow of the eternal which is behind it. The invisible world is the substance.

I come at last to this, that God is the substance of all infinite substances. Go back, back; get back behind everything else of which we can conceive, and be assured that whether we know it or not, whether we believe it or not, God is there. The great essential of all essentials is, that the spirit of infinite life and energy is back of all, that it animates all, and manifests itself in and through all, that it is the self-existent principle, or being, through which, or by whom, all has come, or is continually coming.

And we are clearly borne out in affirming that one of the principal grounds for believing in a future immortality for the race of mankind, is the fact that God is. We are because He is. We never could have been, only as the uncreated and self-sustaining life of all things imparted to us life. His existence and character is a pledge of our immortality. To know that God is infinite in His wisdom and goodness, is to know that we are to live on through eternity in a better and happier world. To declare that the destiny of any soul is even imperiled or insecure, is virtually Atheism, the same as to affirm that there is no God. We are warranted in concluding that if God desires or wills the good and happiness of any soul, He must desire and will the good and happiness of every soul, of all souls. God did not give existence to anything He has made, that it might live for a little time and then drop out of His universe and go into nothing, like a child blowing bubbles in the air only to see them go out again.

Let me state my thought here in a little different way. I will say that it was from the love of imparting something of His own nature, something of His life, which is love, to other offspringing creatures, and thus making them happy, that He conceived of man as being an image and portion of Himself, and a finite receptacle of His love. Being infinitely happy in Himself, and not satisfied to dwell alone, He spoke into a kind of separate being countless millions of creatures that they might be partakers of His enjoyment and be forever blest with Him; and now if He should go to work striking out of existence the beings He has projected from Himself, He would reverse the whole order of His creation, undoing His own work. Why should God, who takes no steps backward, cancel His creation? No, no! Ours is a life which the great Father who created and inspired it will never let die. Has God given the little bird an instinct as a sure guide to tell it when to migrate, and then has He given us this same instinct or intuition as no sure guide at all, and only to mock us with an unreal show of good?

It has stumbled many to perceive how the life and being in us is rooted and grounded in the eternal Being. We may not know where the divine ends or the human begins, or whether either begins or ends at all; but we may imagine that like the electric forces of our being, or the electric currents in the air, the Divine Energy is coming and going all the while. Every pulse of our being is made to vibrate with currents from the heart of God.

I am satisfied that of all the theories by which we shall attempt to assure ourselves of our endless continuance of being, this is altogether the most plausible and substantial. There is no other ground of warrant for our immortality. Truth is, we are rooted and grounded in God as the great Parent fountain of all souls and all things, for He is the primal underlying essence of all essences, of all essential things, and shapes of things, incidents and appearances, the elementary basis of all phenomenal and manifested being.

The view lends additional interest and force to many particular passages which we have relied upon to prove our Universalism.

This is Tennyson's:

"One God, one law, one element,
And one far-off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves."

And Paul to the same purport:

"Having made known unto us the mystery of His will, according to His good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ (who is 'the fulness of Him that filleth all in all'), both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in Him."

Also:

The reconciliation of all things to God "whether they be things in earth or things in heaven."

The same the Savior's prayer:

"Holy Father, keep through thine own Name those whom Thou hast given me * * * That they all may be one, as Thou Father art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us."

And more than all this, we have here fulfilled the sublimest of all prophecies, not confirmation alone, but unity, as pointed out by this language, unity of purpose in man, in God, in God and man 'til all shall be indeed one, and know no want of reconciliation to the divine will.

God's way is to work in us, to will and to do of His good pleasure, striving in the toil of life against the world's evil and for the world's good. To work the type of the Christian life in us, and so "work out your own salvation," as Paul has it, is the whole purpose of God for man. This is our salvation; to work out what He works in us, to bring us at one with Himself, in perfect accord with His Infinite Spirit.

A thing, perhaps, to be noted here is, that many persons insist upon the annihilation and creation of matter or substance. But there is not now, never was, and never can be, one particle more or less of substance at one time than at another, as so many are claiming. For there can be no conception as to how much nothing it would take to make the least imaginable something. In the science of language there can be no such thing as annihilation or creation. Creation is of the nature of formation or shaping, as we mould or shape putty without increase or diminution.

Nothing is plainer than that we derive our being from the efficacy of the Eternal Being, and are the individualized expressions of God, or the innumerable personalized manifestations of Him; images of His being, as I said, thrown off like corruscations of light and heat from the sun, or sparks from the anvil by the blacksmith's stroke. It is needful to understand that the millions of earthborn men and women are but so many deific expressions that have emanated from the underived Infinite Spirit, and that the universe, the earth, the sky, and heavens, are as full of compendious beings, or individual spirits, as a beam of light is full of motes, and these all ready to spring upon earth as bodies shall be prepared for them.

Having seen what God is, that He is, as we remarked, the substance of all infinite substances; as we say, sub-soil; under-soil; and stance; stands under, back of and behind everything else, projecting it into being; just as I myself am an understanding back of and behind this form of being which I wear, and which moves and manages this frame, and these limbs of mine; and which thinks and reasons, and makes me conscious of existence; may we not come to speak of man, and inquire if he be not also a spirit?

Let me bring before you, and mark the distinction as plain as I may, between the soul of man, and that in which it resides at present: as referred to in what John Quincy Adams says at the opening of this paper. The soul is the self of our being, and the body only transiently or for the time its dwelling place, the outward form of structure which we take on for our convenience in this earth-life. It is the tenement in which we now live; the instrument which we employ for our life-work; the clothing which we put on and wear for a time, but which we will be permitted to lay off when it can not be of service to us longer. God has given us these bodies to live in, to enable us to have a being in the midst of the visible and sensible things of the world. We are here that we may have some kind of bodily life, and some sensible communication with the things of earth and sense; and to take us out of these bodies is to take us out of the natural world altogether, and we go to be in spirit life. It is this that death does for us. It abolishes our relation to material things, and is the end of life to the visible person we here look upon, and call man.

We ourselves are not a body, any more than we are the houses we live in, or the clothes we wear. But we are in these bodies as the life of the tree or bird is within the visible form, and when these are laid off, we cease to hold intercourse with the external world through the medium of the senses, that is all. We cease to live as men and women (or as human, if that be it), that we may begin to live in our spirit natures.

When the body falls away, the man stands forth in the spirit world, a spirit among spirits. It is important to realize, not that a man has a spirit or soul, but that he is a soul; a self-conscious spirit and personality. We are never to think of ourselves as a body, or any organ of the body; for these are really no part of ourselves. We are intensely conscious of ourselves within ourselves; the active cause of external phenomena, without which nothing ever expresses itself, and nothing is ever done from the least to the greatest.

You will understand that in speaking of the man proper I am speaking of his spirit nature, and not of him as a physical being at all. The spirits of the dead are nothing but our individual selves apart from these bodies of ours.

That this is the Scriptural view of the subject will not be denied. In the book of Job it is said, "There is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." The Apostle Paul asks: "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" And he most emphatically declares that "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." The Apostle Peter when speaking in reference to the body has this language: "I think it meet as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me." "As long as I am in this tabernacle," this body. So then the body was not Peter, but Peter dwelt in that body, a body which he was shortly to put off, as he tells us the Lord had shown him.

Socrates must have shared a similar view, for when asked how they should bury him, he made answer, "Just as you please, if you can only catch me." He knew better than that he himself should be buried. To him death was an open door out of this life of the senses into the life of God in the spirit realm. Gently smiling he said: "I am never tired of telling Crito that the body is not Socrates."

With me, to believe in man at all, is to believe in a thing called spirit, or soul, or mind, or whatever. How is it that we can doubt of the reality of this spirit, or mind? Is there anything that we are more conscious of, than we are of this? Do we not feel that it is the mind that is stirring within us to produce any mental exercise or action? Are we not perfectly conscious that it is the mind, and the mind only, that thinks, and reasons, and remembers, and is susceptible of pleasure or pain? It is the mind that sees through these eyes of ours, that hears through these ears, through these tongues. The proper personality of our being is in this mind, feels through these nerves, and speaks through these tongues. The proper personality of our being is in this mind, or spirit, the seeing, hearing, feeling, sensitive soul, that dwells within the earthly tenement of our bodies.

We see through the window in the house in which we live, but it is not the window that sees. No, it is the inhabitant in the house that looks out of the window. And just so I would say, it is not these material organs of flesh and blood that see, but it is the inhabitant which we conceive of as dwelling in the earthly house of this tabernacle, that looks out of the windows of the body upon the world of nature, and by means of the eye of the spirit sees these natural objects and takes cognizance of them. It is this inhabitant that sees all, and hears all, and feels all, and knows all; yea, and that does all; for take the spirit from the earthly house and what can these windows of the fleshy tabernacle see? They can see just as much as the hands, or the feet, but no more.

As a spirit being you will understand me as affirming that man is possessed of all the faculties corresponding to those of his physical nature. That is to say, that the inward man is possessed of organs like the outward. There is an assemblage of faculties and functions, and a structural arrangement of aptitudes, with appropriate organs for their manifestation; such as eyes, and ears, and fingers, and all the spiritual senses corresponding to the material, adapting them to a spiritual existence, and the surroundings of a spiritual nature. Part answers to part in the spiritual world as face to face in a glass in the natural world.

There has to be all these to constitute such a creature as man is, and to enable him to lay hold of the spiritual objects that belong to this higher organization of his, the same as to his lower. As a spiritual being he must be a man with spiritual senses, as real as these physical senses which we experience during the objective life of this animal existence.

It is not long since I was reading the catechetical work of a materialist, in which it was conceded that the force by dint of which we feel, think and act, was the mind or spirit; but then it was contended that this mind was not real, but simply imaginary; like intellect, it was said; like memory, love, hatred, which were not really existing beings, but qualities of mind. That is, the mind does certain things; but there isn't any mind, or mind is simply quality of mind.

It was then asked, "Why cannot the soul be a real independent existence? And the answer was, "Because nobody was ever able to tell what the soul is composed of, wherefrom it comes, how it is joined to the body, where it retires during a period of swooning and apparent death, and where it goes after death." But now is not this just as true of all the elements, heat, and light, and electricity, and magnetism, and all the gases? What do we know of any of these, as to what they are composed of, where they came from, how they are joined to each other, into what they are changed, and where they go upon any seeming dissolution of them? What do we know of matter any way, in its primal conditions; what of that of which the objects we see are made? Of what are rocks and stones composed in their essential elements? What is water; what is air; what is heat and cold; what are liquids and solids? You can no more tell what matter is in its ultimate particles, than you can determine what mind is. You know just as much of the one as of the other. You know of matter only in its phenomena of effects, and just so you know of mind.

It is but little that any of us know, even of the motions and functions which we really perform or possess. Please tell me, if you can, how you do anything, how you lift your hand to your head, for instance, or perform any other act?

In the work referred to just now, it was told us in this way: "That if we have resolved to begin some action, the brain excites the correlative motor nerve, and the muscle contracts, and the part of the body which is connected with it begins then to act." I conclude that this is very nearly the truth. But what is the we, the power that is capable of resolving to begin some action, and how does it excite the correlative motor nerve, and the muscle supplying it? How is the contraction of the muscle effected? is the question. I am not denying that this is the case, as you will understand.

If you were to ask me what it is that moves my hand in any given instance, my answer would have to be, "the muscles;" and what moves the muscles, "the nerves;" and what moves the nerves, "why the mind possessing in itself the attribute of primal self-motion, disturbs the equilibrium of the nervous fluid, and that causes it to be moved." It is done, as I have no doubt, simply by the mind, or will power, acting upon the nervous vital fluid, and that upon the subordinate nerves, and muscles; and the hand, or foot, or any organ of the body, is moved just as we ourselves determine.

My body cannot move without the mind which calls the muscles into action. And is not the mind then a real thing? Is it simply imaginary?

It is a very plain case to my own mind, all the power that is in any of us belongs to something that is acting through this body, and not to the body itself. The body without the soul is dead. It is powerless, lifeless, unconscious, unintelligent. It can no more move than a railroad engine can move when the steam is shut off.

But I have digressed. Let me get back to my subject. Bearing in mind what I have said as obvious and explicit of our lives being included in the life of God, I am prepared to affirm that we never were born into spirit being. We never began to be, for we always were. And hence you will perceive that there is no need that we come into this world-consciousness in order to attain to spirit being, having always existed in God, in whom centers all the constituent elements, properties and attributes of existence, as the seeds of infinite variety.

The common belief that souls began to be at the birth of these bodies, or when ushered into this world, is by no means so self-evident as many are disposed to claim. It is no fatal objection to our having pre-existed that we are not remembering any previous life, for we are in a condition to view objects chiefly by the aid of our natural senses, and are outside the vibratory currents that are tangible to spirit life. Our present lack of recollection of our past life is no disproof of its actuality. And besides we are aware that in our sleep are all forgotten. The things of yesterday's experience, or a dream of the vious night, may be effaced from our remembrance beyond recall in this mortal state. Every night we lose all knowledge of the past, but every day we re-awaken to a memory of the whole series of days and nights. So in one life we may forget or dream, in another recover the whole thread of experience from the beginning.

And yet there have been those who profess to remember a former existence. Going into a trance, or psychological condition, they will relate to you the various things which have passed in their primeval or elementary existence, as though maters of common history. There have been persons in all ages, and among all nations, who have experienced an opening of the internal spiritual senses, and they knew things apart from the ordinary way of knowing them; as instance Paul in his being caught up to the third heavens, and hearing unspeakable words which it was not possible for man to utter, and not knowing whether he was in the body, or out of the body; also the vision of Peter upon the house-top, in which it was made known to him that he was to visit one Cornelius at Cesarea, and tell him the things he was to do; same was witnessed by Peter, James and John. We can be certified of any number of cases, places, and scenes, lying distinct in the mind, as of some re-enacted scene of a drama which had passed before the mind's eye. Our souls beginning to be in these bodies is most surely the beginning of our earthly life; but why must we say that we had no being whatever till we lighted on these shores and began to live here?

There are any number of souls that never have been born into this world. Some of them will not be born for thousands of years, and others will never be born at all. They are waiting, it may be, for their turn to come to take upon themselves the form of human bodies, and if the conditions shall never be complied with, their turn will never come, and they will lose (or gain it may be) whatever was to have been developed for them out of this stem of mortality. But that is no loss necessarily of life in the soul. It may be a gain possibly in some instances. This life at best is but a brief part of our eternal existence. It is only a journey in which we may be considered away from home. The scriptures declare that we are strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

Who does not remember the old couplet:

"We are traveling through this vale of tears,
To reach a better world beyond."

In some respects it is a vale of tears; and some of the Ancients affirmed that the most fortunate thing that could have befallen man was never to have been born into this world. They wept around the new-born infant and smiled upon death; for the beginning and end of an earthly life were to them the imprisonment and release of a soul.

Job and Jeremiah both pronounced maledictions on the day in which they were born; and the Savior said of Judas, "Good were it for that man if he had never been born." The most desirable thing for some persons might be, not to be born at all into this world; and the next most desirable thing, to die as soon as they are born; for they seem born to trouble as the sparks fly upward.

And what if a soul should never be born into this world? Why then it would shoot right by us here, and go as a naked soul into the eternal world, to be clothed upon with such an organization as it might please God to bestow upon it.

It would seem sufficiently plain from the language of scripture, that Jesus had an existence before He appeared on the earth. He says: "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me." "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father." In tracing the genealogy of Christ, as also the origin or man, by one of the Evangelists, we are carried back to Adam, and to God, as in the words where it is said, "which was the son of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God." This testimony would seem conclusive of His existence previous to His coming upon the earth.

And then there are many other passages such as the following: "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but He that came down from heaven." "The Son of man ascended up where He was before." "Glorify thou Me * * * * with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." I cannot see how the pre-existence of Christ could be more plainly asserted than in passages of this description.

The words of Jesus, "Before Abraham was, I am," I am regarding just as true of any one of us as of Him. We are all the offspring of God from having sprung off from Him, as was said before; for "of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things." The pre-existence of Jesus being assured, I can not see why our own pre-existence is not equally assured. And the souls of men having had no beginning, we do not look for them to have an end.

In that first account given us in the book of Genesis, as I am viewing it, man as a soul or spirit is first created in the image of God; not as a physical being; and afterwards there is the formation of the body for the man to dwell in upon the earth, in what is told us that "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul," or person. The man was made before he was made to dwell here.

This idea is favored in what is said in this same general connection, that God made "every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew," evincing that their being committed to the earth was not essential to their existence. Nor need we any more to be born into this world in order to attain to a veritable existence. The soul is older than the body.

Admitting that we have lived forever, and are to live forever, the doubt is of our having had conscious existence in God, and our carrying our memories with us into the hereafter life to be conscious of the things of this life. Plato affirmed that "the religious faculty in the human soul is its memory of a former existence;" and then why not, in one way, its forecast of a subsequent existence? He says, "I remember, hence I was; I think, hence I am; I anticipate, hence I am to be." With me, continued being implies self-consciousness. I admit that I cannot identify myself to-day as the person who lived yesterday, except by memory. Cut off the recollection of the past and you cut off the past altogether. If I could not remember anything before to-day, I should not know that I had lived before to-day. And what is memory but the recognition or consciousness of my mental operations as reported to my mind after they have taken place? To define consciousness I would do it in this way: I would say I am meditating, remembering, reasoning at this instant; and consciousness is that by which I know that I am doing these things. If I had no consciousness, I would do them, if I did them at all, without knowing it. I am holding that we have ever been present with God as a part of the Infinite Consciousness.

If I might accept of the scriptural account of Lazarus' decease, and have conceded to me that the spirits of the dead live on in another sphere of existence, that consciousness inheres in the mind, and exists apart from our bodies, and in what is called the death state; for Jesus assumed that Lazarus was still living, and so called to him in a loud, commanding voice to return to his natural life on the earth. His death, as all death, was simply a withdrawal from the outward material part of his nature, and what the Savior did was to summon the living spirit of Lazarus, in a personal address to him, to take possession of his body again, which was to inhabit the form from which he had retired, and come back to his consciousness in the flesh.

And all this is strengthened by what is said of the Savior, that He had power to lay down His life, and had power to take it us again. It was given to Him to lay off this body, or to step out of it temporarily, and afterwards to step back into it, or to take it on again. We may consider that there is a wondrous power of this general character in us all, if we did but know it. We know but little of the slumbering capacities of our natures that are wrapt up within us. They are to be viewed as the mind displaying its unfettered energies independent of this organization of ours.

People, in going through the process of drowning and being afterwards resuscitated, will tell us how in rapid survey the whole panorama of their lives passed before their minds in an instant of time. There was nothing of their most trifling experience that did not flash into conception. It was as though there had been a presence in them of all that they had ever done, or said, or thought, or known. And all these they had called up from their inner consciousness. It is said of Daniel Webster, that in his great constitutional speech in answer to Hayne, that there came a time when everything that ever found lodgment in his mind was present to be drawn from, and he had nothing to do but select the best. And I think these some of the hints of what we shall be when we get out of this chrysalis state into our thought-world, which will then be no other than our real world; hints of the worlds upon worlds that are lying in advance of us.

Let me take an illustration which may elucidate and help to clear away some of the more antagonistic points of my subject, and make plain to the mind what might be regarded as difficulties or objections. The illustration is this: that we ourselves are to the Being from whom we originally sprang what the running streams and rivulets are to the ocean. I have watched the falls of Niagara, seeing the water pour over them, and thought of it in this way: where does so much water ever come from, and where does it all go to, that it should continually replenish itself?

Stand by the banks of a river, the Mississippi, or our own Fox, and see its current move onward, and onward. You call it the river as you see it coming and going. But is that simply which lies before you the river? Think. Only in small part can it be so called, or considered, as the water you take up in your hand is not the ocean. If it were the current between the two banks that you see that constituted all of the river, it would roll on, and leave nothing but a dry bed or channel. And then that would be the last of the river, the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Amazon, the Niagara, the great, the everlasting falls.

No; the river, in its true and lasting sense, is its flowing on and on, continually flowing, from the many little streams, or from the driblets on the hillsides, and they fed from the falling of the rains, or the great fountain of the ocean whence they are ever supplied. And we do not see the river, as we might say. Or we see it just as we see the ocean, when we see so much of it as flows within the range of our narrow vision.

In this regard the river is a part of the ocean. Its waters first emanated from there to the clouds. From thence they were precipitated to the earth in the form of rain and snow and hail and sleet. And melting, and sinking away in the subterranean cavities of the earth, they soon sought the light in the shape of bubbling springs; and what we see is their hastening home to the great bosom of the waters as fast as they can go.

Now, this story of the rivers is, I think, our own story, at least in part. We emanated from God, the infinite ocean of existence. He is the Father of our spirits, and however widely we may since have roamed, and whatever the mutations through which we have passed, we may be sure that "we live, and move, and have our being" in God, and His spirit is never severed from our spirits. It is with us just as it is with the rivers that receive their waters from the sea, and return them to the sea again.

God is the one to whom, as the ultimate end, in their final tendency, all things aspire, and are to meet in Him as their common center. And yet in returning to Him we are not to be absorbed in a manner to be lost in our existence. Having projected us from Himself into separate being and individuality, we go not back again unto Him, save to coalesce with His Spirit.

I am aware that people sometimes talk of being lost in God as countless water drops are lost in the ocean. But are they lost? Is not every smallest, unparticled atom of water, just as incapable of losing its identity, or individuality, as the single grain of sand mingling with so many of its kind upon the sea-shore? It might be difficult to find a needle in a hay-stack, but I presume if found it would be no other than a needle. It would not be a hay-stack, or any part of one. We are never to lose our identity; and will see our friends as we are seen by them, and know as we are known.

And so when all shall go back to live in, and with God, as they once lived in and with Him, and were sent out on their mission to this earth-sphere, they will still retain their essential self-hood, the personality of their being distinct from the personality of God, for He is the infinite and we the finite; He is the source, we the stream or issue; He is the great Ocean, we the numerous rivers, or numberless drops, or unparticled atoms of water that go to make up the rivers that flow into the ocean.

Here then is the glorious consummation for which we are permitted to hope. It is the end of all things. The souls of men are related to God as the drops of water are to the ocean, or as the rays of light are to the sun.

As the question comes to each one of us: What am I? Whence came I? Whither am I going? let us consider that there is but just one conclusion. It is this, namely, that as all is of God, so all shall be to Him and for Him. There is every reason in the world for looking upon it in this way. It is the necessary circulation, as we may claim. We are tending upward to the abode of the Almighty to rest in His embrace.

Let us consider, friends, that we are descended from heaven, and thither let us go whither we derive our origin; and let nothing satisfy us lower than the summit of all excellence, by which we shall be united to the Eternal One; by which we shall live in His life, and be happy in His boundless Being, and His boundless bliss.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Method Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninty-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention, is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly due to catarrh. We are receiving hundreds of letters like the following:

Deafness Cured.

Springfield, Mass., Mar. 30, '02.

Gentlemen:—Received the Actina all right, and would say it has done wonders for me. I have been deaf about five years so that I could not hear the ticking of a clock, neither could I engage in conversation, as it was very difficult to make me understand even with a speaking tube. After treating with several doctors and receiving no help or encouragement from them, I expected never to hear again and tried to make the best of it. A friend called my attention to Actina, saying that it had cured her. Not having much faith in it I did not use it according to directions at first, but after having it about 6 months noticed an improvement, and in five or six weeks after was able to hear public speaking and converse with anyone without any trouble. Quite a number of the afflicted called on me and are greatly encouraged by my experience.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning." Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

LISBETH.

An Interesting Story of Two Worlds.

Elevating, Fascinating, Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price $1.00.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

By S. Weil. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents. This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion, that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and facts.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

You should sign your own name and address to the items you send in; otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

W. J. Hicks writes from Ottumwa, Iowa: "Ottumwa has been surprised. Why? Because they have been visited by Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, who opened the eyes of the people to such an extent that they do not know really what to say about Spiritualism. As one of our citizens remarked to the writer: 'Well, I do not know what to say or think. I have never heard Spiritualism explained so clear and with such forceful truth, truth that can not be explained away, and all I can say is that we in the church are asleep; yes, asleep.' Mrs. Cooley took for her subject parts of the first Book of Samuel, 31st chapter, and the masterly way that she handled this lecture was indeed a surprise. She brought out some strong points pertaining to mediumship, proving very convincingly that mediumship is accepted by the writers of the Bible; also showing that Samuel and Saul were both mediums, and also noting that in the decline of Saul's moral life he lost his power, (This, I think, is a good point for some of our mediums to take a lesson from) as does any medium who does not do right. Mrs. Cooley is the best and the most truthful speaker and medium that has ever visited our city. She has the praise of all. Her tests were far above the average. She gave very many, and not a single mistake, and we wish to say that if this noble work is to grow, it will be through just such mediums as Mrs. Cooley. The writer of this notice can state that never has he listened to a lecture by any one that gave as much general satisfaction as did the one she delivered on the 7th of Sept. in Ottumwa. We hope at some future time to be able to get her back again. She left here for Hayesville on the 9th, where she fills an engagement of one week. Her meetings here were in every sense most gratifying; the hall at her last one was filled to overflowing, as was her parlor seance given the night following her public meeting. Iowa is now beginning to wake up, and it is to be hoped that we will have more visits from her in the near future.

Mrs. Nellie Brigham is in Australia. The following is an outline of one of her lectures at Melbourne: "In my Father's house are many mansions." Many have thought it strange that in the teachings of Jesus so little is said of the future life; yet when He knew that the close of His earthly work was at hand, He comforted His friends with the assurance that He was going to prepare a place for them in His Father's house of many mansions, and that He would come again to receive them unto Himself, that where He was there they might be also. He had previously taught them more of the everyday duties of life, the duty of love and unselfishness, of humility and purity; He had taught them that sin lay in the thought, in the desire of the heart—and not in outward deed alone; He had taught them to measure a gift not by its intrinsic value, but by that which was left to the Giver, and told the rich men that the poor widow out of her penury had given more than they all. But when the time came that He must leave these who had so long been with him, seeing their need of comfort He told them of His Father's house of many mansions—out to those vast mansions goes not the soul of Judas alone, but every man to his own place. It is the great world of spirit, in which we dwell even now though encumbered with mortal bodies that hold us down to life's lower levels but out and away from this encumbrance, the path of endless progression is clearer and is for all. In that land are our dear ones waiting for us and freed from all earth's burdens and disabilities. This is the teaching of Spiritualism, readily proving itself to all patient, honest investigation. As the naturalist, taking the single bone of an animal found in the forest, can picture and prove to you the entire structure, as from the one petal of a daisy we know that there existed other petals, the golden centre, the stem, the leaf, the earth, sun, and atmosphere that surrounded it, so from the proven power of clairvoyance—seeing without physical eyes—from clairaudience—hearing without physical ears—we know that when all of the physical shall have been laid aside, we shall live on more truly, more really than ever.

Capt. C. P. Winslow, a noted magnetic healer, has arrived in this city, and is located at 310 Jackson Boul. He has resided for many years at Westboro, Mass.

Henry Voorhees entertains the idea that The Progressive Thinker each week contains as interesting thoughts as furnished at camp meetings. In fact, the information imparted in a single issue fills a niche that no camp meeting can, yet these gatherings do a work that is very beneficial to the cause, and should be sustained. Mr. Voorhees believes there are animals in spirit life, and in that respect he is sustained by many mediums.

Correspondent writes: "Mrs. C. B. Bliss Green, the materializing medium, after seven weeks' successful engagement at the Western camp meeting, has again returned to Chicago, and will resume her seances at 3141 Indiana Ave., where she will be pleased to see her many friends. See card in another column."

A. C. Priest writes from Spokane, Wash.: "We hold our Sunday night meetings at 7:30; also our Thursday night circles at 7:30, at 226 N. Post St. The reading room is open all day. Three tables are filled with Spiritual literature. We have a fine piano, a fine organ, a picturesque rostrum (which has never been devoid of the refining influwalls of the hall decorated with pictures, background to rostrum ornamented with the Spiritualists' emblem, the sun flower. Our hall is situated on the most respectable thoroughfare, opposite the Elks' Temple a fine building), and nearly opposite the Auditorium, containing the post office and theatre. The most important building in town. Our hall attracts notice from without by its especially neat appearance, a handsome sign upon the window in silver lettering, and neat board with silver lettering giving notice to the passerby of our meetings. This noble work in behalf our beloved Spiritualism owes its origin, continuance and maintenance to the untiring energy and indefatigable perseverance and excellent mediumship of Mrs. A. C. Priest."

G. W. Kates and wife will hold meetings in Erie, Pa., September 27 and 28, and Rochester, N. Y., October 5 to 12. They have open time to engage in the East the last of October and during November. Address them at 600 Pennsylvania Ave., S. E., Washington, D. C.

Mrs. A. C. Colford writes from Jacksonville, Fla.: "As I was passing through Jacksonville I naturally looked around for some medium I could visit. I saw Mrs. Buchanan's advertisement in the paper and attended her Friday evening trumpet seance. She is one of the finest trumpet mediums it has ever been my lot to meet; and I have visited several. I also attended one of her Sunday meetings and found her just as good as an inspirational and test medium. Spiritualists passing through Jacksonville should call and see Mrs. Buchanan, 112 E. 8th St., and they will get every satisfaction."

Mrs. M. C. Wilson writes in reference to Spiritualism. We have only space for a brief extract, as follows: "Spiritualism is something which the world needs more than anything else. It is a grand truth—more than sublime! It is something which once realized is sought after by all, and the question asked is, how can we learn a lesson from it, and how and under what conditions can we communicate with spirits? If the vail of materialism was drawn aside, we would see and know many of our friends, who have passed over, and would be flooded with light and love. There is no perfection for anyone, but to progression there is no end, and the more good done while in the material life, greater will the reward be when you shall have passed through the change called death, which is in reality the new birth. The heaven which is taught in the orthodox churches to-day is only a myth, and is pictured far different from what it is. Heaven is a condition which can be made in the home. Spiritualism is a truth which none should be ashamed of. It should be proclaimed by all."

Prof. J. N. Yakes writes from Milwaukee, Wis., of the formation of a new organization there called the First Golden Rule Society. The following officers were elected: Fred P. Snyder, president; Frank Foster, secretary; Ruth Edwards, treasurer; Gottfried Michaels, Byron Everett and Mrs. Cummings, trustees. The society has been favored with excellent lectures and tests, by Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates.

The Kalamazoo Spiritual Association commenced its meetings Sept. 14th, in the Auditorium. Mrs. Emma M. Nutt Moore has been engaged for the season as speaker and medium. On last Thursday evening a reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Moore by the Spiritualists of Kalamazoo, at the residence of Mrs. E. Olney. The house was decorated with sweet peas and asters. Mrs. E. Lawn, with Mr. Emmett Newton, assisted Mrs. Olney in serving refreshments. Mrs. Newton made the address of welcome, the guide of Mrs. Moore responding. Mrs. Moore will be pleased to hear from near-by towns, where a speaker and medium may be wanted for week night meetings. Terms reasonable. Address 828 South Burdick St., Kalamazoo, Mich.

Dr. A. Antrim Davis writes from What Cheer, Ia.: "Sunday evening, Sept. 14, Sister Georgia Gladys Cooley closed a course of three evening lectures with excellent satisfaction at our snug little temple at Hayesville, a small village in Keokuk county, where the society owns its temple for worship and the dispensing of light to the darkened souls roundabout. I do not now remember whether or not this is the second or third time Sister Cooley has dispensed the message of love and light joyously to our people, with personal messages to many waiting souls, when assured their dear ones are not waiting in the dark tombs for a resurrection, wherein they will not know their own forever more; but instead are assured that life and love is here and now, and vouchsafed to all who will gladly open the door of their souls for the angel dear ones to come in. Blessed are they whose pathway leads in the light. May the angel friends guide and assist Sister Cooley that all societies for whom she labors may greet her as warmly as we of Hayesville did, and part with glad good-bye for work well done."

A Hammond writes from Hot Springs, Ark.: "As my time is drawing to a close I send a dollar for another year of your splendid paper. You are making the best paper of all such publications and I am deeply interested in it, for our cause and the progress of the best thought of the age for mankind, and for the freedom for all to give their opinions on all sides, whether wise or otherwise. We can learn best in such a way what is the truth upon all things and hold fast to that which is good and true. You don't need to give 'premiums' for such a paper, but if they will extend its circulation and still wider knowledge by the premiums, it is still more blessed. I add 25 cents for Bro. Tuttle's work offered as a premium. I read all his writings I can get, for he is the most sensible and practical and able writer of the day in our cause. I don't see how you can publish so large a paper at $1.00 a year and give premiums at so low a rate, and such valuable ones."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

A paper published at Williamsport, Pa., says: "A large and appreciative audience greeted E. W. Sprague and wife, missionaries for the National Spiritual Association of the United States and Canada, last evening in Red Men's hall, every seat in the hall being occupied by those eager to learn more of modern Spiritualism. Mr. Sprague took for his text 'If Man Die, Shall He Live Again?' presenting arguments in a clear and forcible manner, claiming emphatically that Spiritualism is the only religion able to prove beyond a doubt the continuity of life beyond the grave. Following this able discourse, a collection was taken to assist in the building of a suitable Spiritual temple in this city. Over $300 was collected within a short time. The First Church of Spiritualism was chartered in this city on May 10, 1900. Its steady growth in membership necessitates the erection of a new building. Some time ago a suitable piece of ground was secured for this purpose, and the temple will be built in the very near future. Mrs. Sprague gave a number of spirit messages and tests, all of which were recognized. The national missionaries conclude their engagement here with a meeting in K. G. E. hall, Third and Market streets, this evening at 7:45. All are invited to attend and hear these able exponents of modern Spiritualism."

C. A. Kiehl writes from Williamsport, Pa.: "We have had with us during the past few days Brother E. W. Sprague and wife, who held four meetings here, and it is remarkable how much real good, both to the public and our society, that came from them. It clearly demonstrates the urgent need of more missionaries in the field to further advance the cause of Spiritualism. At a business meeting Tuesday evening, by unanimous vote our society was chartered with the National Association. Pennsylvania should have a State Association by all means. The time is now at hand for such a move. Mrs. R. W. Barton is engaged by us for this month, also during November. We are proud of her work, and feel that other societies would do well to secure her services. Frank T. Ripley will be with us during December.

F. P. Wilmarth writes: "Frank T. Ripley of Boston, Mass., is with us at The Warner Spiritual Temple, corner Robberson Ave. and Calhoun St., Springfield, Mo., and will remain with us through September and October. He began his engagement here on Sunday, Sept. 14, and we are highly pleased with his way of handling his discourses on Modern Spiritualism. He has made many friends here already, and we shall try and make his visit to Southwest Missouri a pleasant one. The Folsom lyceum is progressing finely under the direction of Josie K. Folsom, pastor of the Warner Spiritual Temple."

T. J. Stayner writes: "When a young man, if I had been taught the truths contained in your good paper, I would not have so much to unlearn. My advice to young people is to read The Progressive Thinker, and they will never regret it."

The summer vacation being over, Mrs. Hamilton-Gill will devote special attention to her Thursday night and Sunday night circles, and wishes her many friends to know that she has left Bishop Court, and has settled permanently at 665 West Adams street, this city.

W. E. T. writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "I wish to express my pleasure and satisfaction of the two articles in your number of Sept. 20, written by A. H. Nicholas, and the spirit message through the mediumship of Dr. C. H. Brown, by John Dudy. These articles are to me very instructive and exceedingly interesting, and will do much good, for they lift one up higher, and give us warning of what is before us. Oh, what a privilege we have at this time in having the way so clearly pointed out to us that when we pass over we shall not have to wander about, but will know what we may expect, and that our dear ones will be in waiting for us. I do hope that we may get much more on this line, for there is a satisfaction to all and it will stimulate us to take warning, and not have to undo much that we have done, after we enter the port, for it is for eternity."

The First Spiritual League Church will open services at Haymarket Building, 161 W. Madison street, on 4th floor, commencing on Sunday, Sept. 28th, at 8 p.m., and continuing thereafter. Mrs. M. A. Jeffery Burland will lecture and give tests, assisted by other good mediums. Take elevator to the 4th floor.

K. W. Walker writes: "I have been attending a number of Mrs. Hamilton-Gill's Thursday evening circles at 665 West Adams street, and have witnessed there some very remarkable tests; one peculiarity in Mrs. Gill's work is that her guides give perfect strangers the most convincing tests. I will recall two or three very recent ones. One evening a gentleman was present for the first time. Little Nannie surprised him by saying: 'There is a lady over on our side who wants to send a message for some of her friends through you. She is no relation, but she lived in Philadelphia when you did. Her name is Mary N— [a most unusual name]. The people she refers to are now in this city.' Then followed the message. The gentleman said the test was absolutely correct. To another gentleman who was present she said: 'You have in your pocket a very strange paper. On it are two spirit pictures, which look like photographs pasted on it, and there is an inscription around each, and a message. You did not get it from this medium.' This gentleman said that he had the identical document in his pocket, and that he was a stranger to the medium, and so I might go on indefinitely. Surely, it is easy for us to obtain proof that the so-called dead do live."

Will J. Erwood writes from La Crosse, Wis.: "The fall and winter season in LaCrosse, Wis., opened Sunday, Sept. 7th, with two splendid meetings, and good attendance, a feature being the securing of five members. The writer, after having served this society for a year and a half, has been again installed as regular speaker for the present year. The society organized by Bro. Brooks a little over a year ago, has grown from a membership of about a dozen, to one of fifty-five, and is one of the strongest in the Northwest. Here the good friends have banded together and have demonstrated the possibilities of co-operation. Sept. 10, 11 and 12 we were visited by the National missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates, who gave us three rousing meetings. In the estimation of the writer the work done at these three meetings was of the very highest order. Bro. Kates gave us three of the most able addresses it has been my pleasure to hear for a long time, and Mrs. Kates a number of remarkable tests, to persons who were absolute strangers to her. LaCrosse is well supplied with workers, who are keeping the interest alive. Beside the writer we have, Francis Wheeler, Miss Fannie Christie and Mrs. Payne. The next convention of our State Association is to be held here in April. In connection with the State Association, let me ask the friends to remember their annual dues, and also that the writer is doing missionary work for the association, and would like to hear from all points in the State where meetings are desired."

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE.

Important to Spiritualists—Opening Day, September 30, 1902.

Dear Brother and Sister Spiritualists: The long-looked for day is at last at hand. The event that we have prayed for and worked for, and asked the angels to hasten is now with us in the opening of the school that shall give the workers in the Spiritualist vineyard the advantages they could get in no other place in the world.

The opening of this school is one of the most important events that has ever taken place in Spiritualism since the Rochester rappings shook old theology, and will usher in as bright a day as burst over the night of superstition and bigotry but little more than half a century ago. It brings to Spiritualists a clearer understanding of the truth, through practical teaching, and fits the teachers of both the philosophy and phenomena to be instructors and leaders both by "precept and example."

There will be exercises in the Temple Hall of the Institute on the opening day, preliminary work in the forenoon and regular work in the afternoon. President Moses Hull will lead the exercises, assisted by the superintendent, Prof. A. J. Weaver.

Every Spiritualist who has the good of the glorious cause at heart, and who would see this, the first college of its kind in the world a success, should make an effort to be present that day.

Whitewater is on the Prairie Du Chien division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R. R. The Institute is one block north of the depot and easily reached. We hope there will be such an attendance of workers and friends that Father Pratt's heart will rejoice that he was led to make this magnificent gift to the cause he has so many years championed.

Come and see the school and help at its opening. Fraternally,

CLARA L. STEWART, Sec.
Whitewater, Wis.

The Illinois State Spiritualist Association.

The annual meeting of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association for the transaction of business only, will be held at 4203 Evans Ave., Chicago, at seven o'clock Tuesday, October 14, 1902.

The following amendments to its constitution will be considered: Changing date of the annual meeting to the third Wednesday in February; empowering the official board to fill vacancies thereon until the next election; providing for individual members with full voting privileges; establishing life memberships with voting rights, upon payment of ten dollars. Other matters of much importance will be considered, among them the election of delegates to, and future relations with, the N. S. A. Let every chartered society be fully represented. Friendly visitors invited to be present.

Spiritualists Should Read Oahspe.

"Having everything spiritual in appearance, as they are corporally on the earth."—Oahspe.

The interesting article of Jas. C. Underhill, of Hammond, Ind., giving accounts of "subjective trance visions," and accounting for them as "psychological effects," ar, "partaking of the subject's previous conceptions and beliefs," prompts the writer to suggest another way of accounting for these occurrences. The Oahspian revelation or explanation teaches that all things of the earth have their counterpart in heaven (the spiritual state), and that mental pictures, forms and scenes, have their counterpart if not their origin in the angel world; that what is now counted "religion" in its varied phases, is, in fact, identity, materialized, so to speak, according to the influence or prominence of its so-called "false" adherents, continuing in the travail of spiritual bondage to "false gods," and false conditions from birth, yet comparatively "happy" or content in the peculiar "heaven" or dynasty of their own creating.

All persons denominated Spiritualists, convinced of angel communion, should read Oahspe, the "new" revelation, or bible, and they will find an accounting for many of the most perplexing problems and their causes, and reasons therefore, why the world is in its present plight, and the straight way out.

This unchallenged work has been laid upon the earth some 20 years, and can be found in all, if not nearly all of the libraries of the great cities of this continent, and dates its birth with that of Modern Spiritualism, the beginning of the Kosmon Era in 1848.

The book itself is a marvelous miracle, and the one to be most pronounced in the whole realm of phenomena. Its creation, the manner of it, the time of it, and the conditions of it, will of itself awaken many Spiritualists to organic work and action.

The simple story of the book, told in words unsurpassed in the realm of religious or secular literature, is attracting the notice of those for whom it was written and published, and they are coming into lodges and communities under its inspiration and direction in many parts of the United States.

Detroit, Mich. JOHN A. LANT.

Reincarnation.

To the Editor:—E. W. Conable, editor of The Path-Finder, in the August issue devotes considerable space arguing in favor of the theory of reincarnation. The only proof he offers, to my mind, is this:

"It is a fact incontrovertible that there are those gifted with certain powers, who can see distinctly the severing of the ligaments of life and the departure of the spirit element or Ego from the physical body at death. This same trained or gifted vision can also distinctly see the presence of the spirit element or soul or Ego hovering around the bedside where a birth is about to take place, in readiness to engraft itself on the new body."

Now I would like some of the latter "incontrovertible facts"—that the Ego is clairvoyantly seen "hovering around the bedside where a birth is about to take place, in readiness to engraft itself on this new body."

If such information can be obtained anywhere one would think it could be obtained through The Progressive Thinker. Can any of the clairvoyants who read the above confirm the statements of Brother Conable?

I should like Hudson Tuttle's experience on this question also. Yours for more light. D. EDSON SMITH.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the N. S. A. will open at Berkley Hall, Boston, Mass., corner of Berkely and Tremont streets, Tuesday, October 21, at 10 a.m. The business sessions will be held morning and afternoon, October 21, 22, 23 and 24. Grand entertainments will be held each evening, at which noted mediums and speakers will be present. A grand lyceum entertainment, one evening. Twenty-five cents admission to the evening meetings will be charged to help defray expenses. Delegates are admitted free upon their cards. No admission to daily sessions.

The headquarters of the convention will be at Berkely Hotel, a most beautiful, commodious and comfortable hotel. It is on Berkely and Boylston streets. Visitors and delegates will be furnished special rates as follows: Rooms, single person, $1.50 per day; two persons in room, $1.25 per day each. Board and room, $3 each person. No compulsion to anyone as to hotel, or rooming house; delegates and visitors who wish can take rooms and meals away from the hotel; restaurants and rooming houses are plenty in Boston. Reception to all at hotel, Monday, October 20, at 8 p.m.

Railroad rates can be secured by asking your railroad agent, a few days in advance, to secure certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists Convention in Boston. The rate will be one fare and a third for round trip. Holders of these tickets must be at convention Friday, October 24, to have them signed by special ticket agent from the railroad office who will be there that day. The N. S. A. secretary must sign the tickets, but her signature will not suffice; each, ticket must be countersigned by the railroad agent.

The following important amendments will be offered at convention:

Constitution—Offered by the Trustees of the First Spiritualists' Association of Washington, D. C. Amend Section 3, Article VI, to read as follows: "No local society shall have exclusive jurisdiction within the city, town or district, in which it is located; but additional charters shall only be granted by the board—in such localities—after thorough investigation and careful review of the facts—afford ample evidence that the cause will be benefited thereby."

By-Laws—Offered by National Spiritualists Association Board. Amend Article II, Section I, by striking out the words State Agents, in second line; also amend all other sections in By-Laws by striking out the same words wherever they occur.

Amend Article IX of By-Laws by striking out entire Section I and make Section II read Section I, and Section III read Section II.

Amend By-Laws by striking out Article XI entire.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
Secretary N. S. A.

At Unity Camp.

The fine and pleasant weather Sunday, together with the fact that the gifted speaker and wonderful test-giver, Mrs. May S. Pepper, would be with the association, had the effect of attracting a large audience to Unity camp, in Saugus, where meetings are being held during the summer months.

At eleven o'clock a conference meeting was held, under the direction of Vice-President Samuel Merchant. This was addressed by Mrs. May S. Pepper, and other mediums, and was an interesting and enjoyable service.

The front of the platform in front of the auditorium pavillion, was profusely and prettily decorated with choice flowers, and presented a beautiful appearance.

The afternoon meetings began at two o'clock. President Dr. Caird announced that the day marked the anniversary of the passing away of the lamented President McKinley, and in commemoration of his memory "Nearer, My God, to Thee" was sweetly sung by the soloists of the association, with cornet and organ accompaniment, the audience joining heartily in rendering this favorite hymn, which was so dear to the heart of the departed president.

Mrs. Sadie Hand, of Boston, was next introduced, who gave an eloquent invocation, in which she expressed thankfulness for the improved condition of Mrs. McKinley, the beloved and estimable wife of the martyred president, and beseeched that the Divine Ruler comfort and be with her hearers and all in need of assistance.

The singing of "Beulah Land" followed.

President Dr. Caird read the following report of the association for the years 1901 and 1902, which showed an encouraging growth in membership, and the association to be making rapid progress and in flourishing condition. Membership, Sept. 1st, 1900, was 41, paid; 10 not paid; total, 51. Membership, Sept. 1st, 1902, 91 paid, 12 not paid; total, 103. A gain of 52.

Cash, Sept. 1st, 1900, $144.96; lyceum and other property, estimated, $100; total, $244.96.

Cash, Sept. 1st, 1902, $526.16; camp property, $500; lyceum and other property, $100; total, $1,262.16, a gain of $917.20.

Collected through circles and outside society, and paid for music books and flowers, $85.25.

Donated to State Association Veterans' Home, N. S. A. and others, $165.50.

President Caird announced the following committees:

Supper—Mrs. A. A. Averill, Mrs. E. Metzger, Mrs. Charles Etter, Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Lizzie Garland.

Membership—Mrs. Charles Ward, Mrs. Samuel Merchant, Mrs. Harriet Parks, Mrs. Charles Etter, Miss Josie Williams, Dr. Nichols, G. A. Badger, Oscar Fitzallen, Charles Staples, Mr. Huntington.

Ushers—Chief, John O. Allen, Mrs. Alice McIntire, Mrs. Lou Upton, Mrs. Jennie Atwood, Mrs. Veasey.

Mrs. May S. Pepper was introduced, and was given a hearty reception. She complimented the association on the success which it had achieved, and said it was fortunate in having such an able president as Dr. Caird. In the course of her talk she spoke reverently of our angel loved ones in the spiritual world, and made an earnest appeal that Spiritualists in the earth-life work for and establish a purer and more fitting temple in which to court their presence.

The service was brought to a close by singing "The Morning Light is Breaking."

At 3:30 o'clock another service was held, when Mrs. Pepper occupied the platform until five o'clock, during which time she read articles and gave many tests in a manner which has made for her a reputation as a medium of remarkable and wonderful power.

The association has a building fund established, having already a neat sum in the bank, which is to be devoted to purchasing a desirable building site, and in the near future the association is in hopes to have a commodious temple of its own in which to hold its meetings.

Kola Plant CURES HAY FEVER AND ASTHMA.

The Kola Plant.

FREE. The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma. In the short time since its discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into general use in the hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific cure for Hay-fever and Asthma in every form. Its cures are really marvelous. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes March 8th, 1902, that he used Himalya on six different Hay-fever patients last fall with satisfactory results in each case. Mrs. M. A. Scott, Crosby, Mich., writes March 6th, 1902, that Himalya completely cured her after fifteen years persistent suffering of Hay-fever and Asthma. Rev. J. L. Combs of Martinsburg, W. Va., wrote to the New York World, July 23rd, that Himalya cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, editor of the Farmer's Magazine, Washington D.C. was also cured although he could not lie down for fear of choking, being always worse in Hay-fever season. Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya truly a wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should use it before the season of the attacks when practical, so as to give it time to act on the system. If you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, in order to prove the power of this new botanical discovery, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to The Kola Importing Co., No. 1162 Broadway, New York.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

NEW EDITION
THE LYCEUM GUIDE
BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

Do you want to organize a society for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM

furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.
It furnishes a system of evolution of interest, growth; not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school.
It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.
It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.
Many Spiritualists living in isolation; have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.
Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.
Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.
The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Eddie Kusel Q. Does the press hold forth the right incentive to boys when it urges them to enlist in the army and navy?

A. It gives the most erroneous and ruinous. The glitter of war eclipses the glory of peace. I give you this one illustration from countless others, as telling the whole story.

The English press gave superlative praise to Col. Barnaby, and held him up as an example for imitation, "an honor to human nature" and source of inspiration to ardent and generous youths. Of all examples his should be the lost to a right-thinking man. He scented the battle afar and hurried to the carnage. He volunteered for the purpose of fighting, and the love of carnage. He had no grievance to redress; the Arab people he drew his sword to destroy, had done him no wrong. His nation complained of none. There was not the least excuse for the war; no necessity for a battle, and yet this lauded hero put revolvers in his belt, sharpened his sword to lead a band of red-handed robbers and assassins to kill a free people fighting for their homes.

He was found after the terrible battle, on the burning plains, "his hand grasping the throat of the Arab whose spear had given him his death wound." Can a more revolting picture be imagined than this of two men, one reared in Europe in the concentrated light of nineteen centuries of Christianity, the other in Asia under the rule of another faith, meeting in the hell of battle, and like furious beasts, rushing at each other with bloodshot eyes and demoniac curses on their distorted lips; thrusting with spear, gashing with sword, at last clenching in final death-throes and choking the life out of each other? There they lie on the reeking sand, under the burning sun, glaring in its light with protruding eyes, lips drawn from gleaming teeth, and their distorted features purple with hate, which death intensifies!

The hero, champion of Christian against Moslem faith! Such unthinking adulation is the cause of immeasureable harm. It lowers the standard of moral excellence and presents a vicious example. His courage was that of the brigand, for heroism he had not. The hero immolates himself for a great and noble cause. Byron enlisting for the liberty of Greece is in contrast to Barnaby volunteering to butcher the Arabs contesting for the freedom of the desert.

Let me add the example of the laudation of Kitchener, and as a background for his blazing decorations for "valor," the dark "veldt" of Africa, with a hundred thousand English sons and fathers stretched dead, staring at the sky, and half as many more Africaners keeping them silent company. Half as many more, and a brave nation enslaved because they desired freedom! Noble war! brave generals! Butchers of mankind, who should receive execration instead of praise. How long before mankind will be ruled by intelligence and love, and not by brutal instinct?

F. G. Lowry: Q. What of obsession, as illustrated in the following instance of Fay, a young man sentenced for three years for burning a barn. He says he hears voices which ordered him to set the building on fire. They constantly tell him to kill himself. How can such cases be cured?

A. No one can be obsessed by the powers of evil, unless he is first in sympathy by his organization. An angel can not be influenced by a being of a lower order. This has the force of an unchanging law, and may be taken as the basis of all attempts at the solution of this subject. Hence it is that the plea of obsession should not furnish excuse for the acts of the obsessed. They should be held responsible. No hypnotist can hold such perfect control over a subject as to be able to compel him to a crime he would not do of his own impulse under urgent circumstances. The mental tendency is only quickened.

In this particular case, and it may not be wide of the mark to say that of a hundred similar criminals ninety-nine are erotic perverts. The indulgence of passion leaving them at the mercy of every passing suggestion, whether from their own unbalanced minds, their companions or spirits, as they invariably select as associates the bad, the same order of spiritual beings came to them, and they are accessible to no other.

If at some better moment the influence of a person endowed with unselfish desire to bend their thoughts from self-indulgence to higher objects, could be excited, there might be hope of success.

Imprisonment is a necessity, for the safety of the community, but so far as the criminal is concerned only intensifies the causes which lead to crime. The criminal usually is beyond hope when he again is free. It is childish folly to imprison such perverts for a stated time. They have shown that it is dangerous to allow them liberty, and should be confined, and every effort made for their advancement, and not allowed their freedom until reclaimed.

Mrs. Abbie Ryerson: Q. My mother, 98 years old, is disturbed by hearing talking, jabbering in different languages which she does not understand. She is made unhappy thereby. She has been, and is, a good woman, and she ought not to be thus haunted. She sees also unpleasant things, as wild and horrible animals in procession. What can be done to improve her condition?

A. It is inferred by the correspondent that this more than octogenarian is obsessed, but the disturbance of the brain produced by the rapid waste in the declining years of life fully explain these mental phenomena. It is not unusual in the declining years of life, and as it is caused by disorganization of nerve tissue and deficiency of blood supply, from the hardening and contraction of the arteries which supply the brain with nourishment, nothing is left on this side in the way of cure or alleviation. The spirit must submit to the infirmities of the wornout earthly body until it casts it aside, and exchanges the wornout garment for the raiment of immortality.

Pensioner: Q. Was there every any law prohibiting pensions to soldiers not church members?

A. The Pilgrims in 1636, in order to encourage the soldiers who went out to fight the Indians, enacted that all who returned maimed should be maintained by the colony. But there was this proviso: Every soldier before the march began was examined as to his religious faith, and the ranks "purged," to use the word of an historian of that period, of those who were not orthodox. This forethought not only prevented doubters of the rigid faith of the Puritans from becoming pensioners, it excluded them from the army. Whatever success or honor gained in the massacre of the native owners of the coast was to be given by the godly.

HER LAST RECEPTION.

This is her last reception. Dressed with care,
Adorned with blossoms, smiling in repose,
The precious lady welcomes us.
We meet
To do her honor ere her body, used
By her sweet spirit, serving it so long,
Is laid away. Its use is ended here.
A beauteous temple for a royal soul,
It will not be forgotten.
She has found
Life can go on without it.
Joy of joys
Must be the confirmation of this dream—
Cherished so tenderly by every heart
Beating around me in this house to-day!
We can go on, unfleshed, in fuller life
Than we have joined in here!
So we believe;
That is the last white hope which brightens death,
And lights the Lethean waters!
Safe across,
Upon Heaven's heights, they signal back to us
The golden truth of immortality.
We meet in honor of her victory
O'er suffering and death. To miss her much—
Remember her with love, and gratitude,
Try to grow gentler and more saintly-wise
From her example—that will be our aim.
Now she is veiled behind the gauze of death,
And we may praise without offending her
Rare modesty. Let us in love bestow
The subtle flowers we saw bloom in her life,
The while she walked among us in the flesh.
Truth, was her lily; she was true as truth!
Roses her darlings—she was warm as they;
Pansies her adoration; like to them,
Unostentatious, sweet, and beautiful,
She won us silently. Pinks charmed her too;
Their spicy sweetness seemed a part of her!
So, while her body lies amidst earth's blooms,
Let us believe her gentle soul is here,
And bends to take our garlands on her brow—
Our wreath of honest praise.
Good-bye! God speed,
Our sister into Heaven's completest rest.

THE BREAKERS AHEAD!

The Restfulness of Perfect Love and Trust.

Two classes of minds always have existed and always must exist, they seem as necessary as are the centripetal and centrifugal forces in the world of matter. In old times it was said: "The Jews ask for a sign, and the Greeks seek wisdom." And this mental distinction applies as truly to the minds of modern times.

Some have no power to stand alone. They seek an authority to lean upon. The weak-kneed piety of the world leans on the old established churches. Whatever is very old must be respectable and may be true. Another class of minds perceive that the truth is its own best evidence.

The same law that forms a dewdrop is seen to be the law that rounds the earthly and all other globes. They are unable to see that any human dicta can possibly be unchangeable and suited to all times and conditions. They regard all seeming miracles as the effects of universal laws, not understood; and they have a settled conviction that any departure from the established laws of the universe, for temporary purposes, would involve chaos. If these minds err, it is apt to be because they erroneously assume that their conception of nature's laws is correct, adequate and entirely sufficient.

These two classes of people can not well take permanent delight in each other's society. But still let us be patient and courteous, and not jump at a conclusion that a man who views problems in some other way than ours, is on that account, a bad man.

In the absence of such charity many good men in all ages have been deemed irreligious. It was so with Socrates, with Jesus, with Luther, and is so with A. J. Davis and many another. The learned and saintly Spinoza was a prominent instance of this sort of injustice. Pre-eminently pure and good and charitable, he saw the presence of God in the inner life of every insect, every bird, every living creature. Because he could not conceive it as true that the cosmic creative power, was a glorified man—Jews and Christians united in denouncing him as an atheist. He was rather intoxicated with the idea of the presence of God, everywhere, permeating life and matter as its inner consciousness. Without a subject or mind (i.e. spirit) there could be no objectivity or seeming outwardness in Nature, to arrest the attention. A perceiving mind is certainly indispensable to any sort of knowledge.

The summer sun does not shine for a few trees and flowers, but for joy of the whole wide world. The sombre pine on the mountain waves its boughs and rejoices in the light. The little meadow violet lifts its blue cup to heaven and whispers "Thou, oh sun, art my God." The waving wheat in a thousand fields rustles in the wind and says "Thou art my sun." So, the Inner Light sits effulgent in heaven, not for a favored few but for the whole universe of life. There is no creature so poor or so lowly that it may not look up with a child-like confidence and say: Holy Light! Thou art my life, my love, my all!

This too is a spiritual perception—an insight of the Spirit. But there are many manifestations nowadays, passing under the name of "Spiritual" that do not give evidence of individual disembodied human intelligence, but are the result sometimes of clairvoyance, which is a branch of human knowledge; sometimes of psychometry, which is a gaft of the human mind, perhaps stimulated or assisted by outside spiritual influence, but also capable of culture and use without direct individual control. Sometimes the works might be those of actual magic, such as are performed in the East by special organizations and yet not directed by any individual disembodied soul.

To account for these, which are not really spiritual and yet do away with the supposition that they are fraud and sheer imposition, would be a great discovery for science, and if proved would help many sincere minds into a better road for investigation than that they have pursued.

In ancient times, "Black Magic" or "witchcraft" was prohibited. Living by it as a profession was illegal. This was undoubtedly a separate order of practice from spiritual or inspirational gifts. Whatever else it did or did not mean, it meant the exercise of some mental power prejudicial to the moral and spiritual interests of the people and hurtful of genuine spiritual gifts: as much so as hypnotic bunco steering is morally indefensible to-day.

To such a class belonged a great deal of the sorcery and magic and other practices in the East and to such some so-called spiritual manifestations must be attributed.

That there is some relation between the old practices of magic, sorcery, or witchcraft and the other various secret sciences, and Spiritualism, is just as apparent as that there is relation between ancient alchemy and modern chemistry. But modern chemistry is an immense advance on the groupings of the old alchemy. So, by analogy, is modern spiritual philosophy a great advance when it is worthily entertained.

"Of the many thoughts, the peculiar illustrations and the every-varying conceptions of the philosophy, nothing more than the several published works need be perused by way of definition and of amplification. Nor is it necessary to urge the oft-repeated proposition that these "thoughts" are not infallible, but explanatory and suggestive to other minds only; bearing as they unquestionably do, the inevitable impress of the writer's individual inspiration and characteristics."

But the great central ideal, the Living Heart of the Spiritual Philosophy is, I believe, inherent in all spirit in its central integrity, and will be ultimately congenial to all varieties or grades of mind. And in the great opening future of mind on this planet, it will pervade, shape, sway and regulate all the vital interests of humanity. Its central inspiration, upon which all its principles revolve, is the love of all wisdom. Understanding the universe is a legitimate aspiration of every progressive, truthful, human mind. To grow into intelligent "rapport" with the central sphere of all wisdom; knowledge and truth is the birthright of a human being. It is the aim and object of a spiritual education. That is the education of the spirit. It involves the meaning of the solar plexus. Those who strive to attain this knowledge of truth are the elect. The "non-elect" are those who will not seek it. No power in the universe can give to man a field of wheat when the seeding has been only weeds. So it is with the field of the life of man.

The growth of real life is to be measured by its growth in Love; Love itself is to be measured in its progressive states by its inner restfulness, its trust and peace, its victory over every form of fear. "Perfect love casteth out fear."

When the central spirit life is first awakened to affection, it is disturbed and agitated. It fluctuates with every shade of hope and fear alternately. It rushes from one extreme of confidence to the opposite of doubt. But this is only while the depths of love nature are filling. The heart beginning to love is like a New England bay into which the Atlantic is rushing. The waters swoop in with violence, stirring up the sand and sediment. They dash and murmur on the edges of the shore. They break upon the jutty rocks, throwing up the spray in wild laughter. They whirl and chafe among the rocks and the whole bay is agitated with strife and counterstrife of the swirling waters, until they have nearly reached their full height, lifting the shipping from its mooring. Then when great depth is gained, the shores are full, and no more room is to be found for the floods, the great bay begins to tranquillize itself, to clear its surface; effacing every wrinkle, blowing out every bubble and hushing every ripple along the shore, then it looks up with an open tranquil face into the smiling sky and reflects the glory of the sun or moon and stars that have drawn it thither.

So, too, does the soul, while filling with love, whirl with disquiet and fret its edges with wrinkles and eddies and little worries; but when it is filled and bursting with love, it rests and looks calmly up discerning the Great Love of the oversoul whence it came.

SPIRITS TALK TO FRIENDS.

Messages Sent Back to the Living by Those Dead Many Years.

The State Spiritualists' Association began its session at 10:30, with an open conference, at which several prominent Spiritualists made remarks upon subjects in which they were interested.

Next the committee on resolutions made their report, presenting a long set of resolutions setting forth the principles and rules which seemed favorable to the promulgation of Spiritualism.

There was some criticism offered on a portion of the resolutions which expressed the hope that there would be a proper adjustment of the interests involved between capital and labor, and that a universal peace should be looked forward to with the ultimate result of a universal disarmament. It was maintained that this was getting too far beyond the purposes of the Spiritualists, that it was of a political nature and ought not to be incorporated as a part of the resolutions.

The champions of the resolutions explained that the matter was not of a political nature and that it was not proposed to agitate in favor of any laws, but it was simply an expression of hopes for those things which were essentially the essence of Spiritualism. The resolution prevailed.

At a later meeting there was a program given by scholars of the different lyceums which was very interesting. Mrs. M. S. Skog and Mrs. E. A. Sauer were the conductors.

The most interesting part of the afternoon's session was the test given by Mrs. Ella White in psychic reading. Articles such as rings worn by persons in the audience were taken by her, and the image of which she became conscious was imparted while she was in an entirely conscious state.

The dead gave messages to the living and the living heard them and wept. Spirits left their happy state in the spirit land to come to friends in the audience at the Unitarian church last evening with messages of comfort or warning. Mrs. Z. B. Kates was the medium through which the spirits spoke to their friends. She interpreted the messages through a language of influence.

Mrs. Kates walked up and down before the platform as though stirred by mighty influences, and her voice rose now in passionate utterance and again softened almost to a whisper, as she conveyed to one old lady the message that her husband was waiting beyond the grave to welcome her with open arms and to another that her baby sister, now a woman greeted her.

To one old lady who sat in the third row of seats, her silvered hair crowned by a small black bonnet and her gold-rimmed glasses shining in the light, she said: "I feel the influence of a spirit. I have a strong sense of the presence of a gentleman. He seems to bring so much power, great strength combined with tender feeling. He must have passed away quickly for I have a feeling that I could close my eyes and waken in a moment in another world. He is above the usual height, broad-shouldered, with a clear cut face and his hair is a little silvered. He honored truth more than anything else." He leaves me and walks down the aisle to you." (Mrs. Kates walked down the aisle to the old lady and took her hand). "When you sit in that little chair in the twilight he puts his hand on your forehead. He tells me to say to you that he will be the first to meet you when you pass into the spirit world. Tell me am I correct, he is your husband is he not?"

The old lady nodded assent, and pressed her handkerchief to her eyes. Mrs. Kates turned to a young woman sitting next to the old lady and placing her hand on her shoulder said: "He tells me that you are his daughter. Is that correct?"

The daughter sobbed assent.

The medium then turned again to the old lady and asked: "Do you know John, Elizabeth and Jane and Jo? They all come to you." The old lady and her daughter said that they recognized the names as those of departed friends.

A moment later Mrs. Kates said: "I see the form of a gentleman. He gives me the name of Owen. There will be two or three here who will place him. Now he gives me the name William Owen. He lived in the mental world more than in the mechanical. He passed away some distance from this place. He was broad-shouldered, above medium height and of magnificent physique. He had clear, dark gray eyes, dark hair, pushed off his forehead. I can not go to his friend in the audience he wishes to speak to. Will he come forward?" A few moments elapsed, and then the medium had an influence which directed her to a young man in the second row of seats. He professed to recognize the spirit as a friend of his father and acknowledged having had messages from him before.

The medium asked: "And he ever try to give you a spirit picture?" The young man replied that he had.

Under the influence of another spirit, Mrs. Kates exclaimed that she saw a lady, but that the name was not clear, but finally she gave it as Mrs. E. S. Hall. A voice in the audience claimed acquaintanceship with the spirit and was given a pleasant little message in which the spirit said that after passing into the spirit world it was more astonished at finding that it was itself than at anything else.

Mrs. Armstrong, in the spirit world, held communication with an old lady dressed in black who sat in one of the front seats. She gave the old lady a prophecy that when Indian summer came peace would come to her. She was a woman who had died in an operation, and in the spirit world she held up a handkerchief which Mrs. Armstrong had given to her friend. The old lady in the black gown said that she recognized her friend.

"There comes to me the influence of a spirit and I see the form of a gentleman, rather elderly, and I judge he had decided mannerisms. He has a clean cut face, gray hair and beard and carries a cane of peculiar design. He comes to you." With this preliminary, Mrs. Kates walked to the center of the church and reached out her hand to an elderly man in the second seat. Mrs. Kates described the disease of which the man died, and other of his characteristics and said, finally: "Let me ask you, is this your father?" The man addressed said "Yes."

The medium then asked: "Do you recognize the names Jennie, Mary, Sarah?" and to this question the answer was "Yes."

A child in the spirit land influenced the medium to walk up to a very old and very thin woman, and ask: "Do you remember the date, April, 1873, and the great change you made then?" The old lady did not remember the change or the date, but recognized the names. The medium continued: 'You will find a small black ledger under a black shawl in a small trunk that you have at home, and on the fifth page of that book you will find that date."

Mrs. Kates gave several other messages that were communicated to her, and those who received them seemed to be fortunate enough to recall friends who answered the descriptions given.

Will J. Erwood also gave tests at last evening's meeting, and addresses were given by Mrs. C. D. Pruden and G. W. Kates. Mrs. Maud Ulmer Jones gave a number of vocal solos. Today's session will open at 2 o'clock and will consist of music, addresses and tests.—Minneapolis Tribune.

CALIFORNIA.

State Spiritualist Association Convention.

The recent convention of the California State Spiritualists' Association was in many ways a notable one in the history of the Spiritualist movement. The attendance was good—nearly one hundred—and those present were notable for the singleness of their devotion to the cause and the ascendency of the spiritual attributes. Harmony and good will prevailed from the instant Vice-President C. H. Wadsworth called the convention to order at 10 a.m., Friday, September 5th, to the moment when Mr. J. Shaw Gillespie, the new president, declared it adjourned at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday evening, September 7th.

The first day of the convention was devoted to the roll call of officers, the seating of delegates, reading the minutes of the last preceding convention, appointment of various committees and the transaction of general routine business, interspersed with addresses by Allen Franklin Brown, Editor Thos. G. Newman of the Philosophical Journal, Mrs R. S. Lillie and others on timely questions. In the evening an entertainment was given by the various societies of San Francisco, the Sun Flower League, Ladies' First Spiritual Union Aid Society, and Mediums' Protective Association, to the delegates assembled and their friends, after which there followed a dance and banquet in honor of the same, about 125 sitting down to plenteously laden tables.

On the following day, Saturday, the routine business was completed, resolutions were adopted urging that the board to be elected should send into the field one or more active organizers, hold mass conventions, and carry out similar movements tending to strengthen the state organization, spread knowledge of the true faith and harmonize all interests in Spiritualist ranks. Then followed the election of the new Board of Directors, which passed off without engendering the slightest friction of an unpleasant nature, though attended with the keenest interest on the part of all present. The board as elected and subsequently organized is composed as follows: J. Shaw Gillespie, president; J. Munsell Chase, vice-president; W. T. Jones, secretary; Chas. J. Hasman, assistant secretary; Mrs. A. E. Wadsworth, treasurer; W. M. Rider, all of San Francisco; and Mrs. Emma E. Shaw, of Oakland, H. H. Nichols, of San Jose, and F. H. Parker of Santa Cruz.

The evening was given over to the rendition of a varied and delightful program of songs, psychic readings, and addresses, among the participants being Allen Franklin Brown, and Mme. E. Young, the popular local medium.

In some respects the great day of the convention was Sunday, morning, afternoon and evening. It was one continual succession of good things, literary, musical and spiritual, and held the interest of the spectators to the very last moment. The morning was devoted to conference work, Mrs. Sarah Seal presiding, and directing the proceedings with that rare tact and judgment which make her pre-eminent among conference leaders here. The state board went before the convention in debt, and at the morning conference the work of raising a fund to pay it off was begun with excellent results, and was continued afternoon and evening with such success that when the convention closed the board was not only out of debt, but had a neat balance to its credit—over $200 having been raised during the convention, much of the credit for this being due to the energetic and tactful work of Mrs. Anna E. Gillespie.

The new board have lost no time in getting down to work. Before the convention adjourned they met and began in earnest their work by commissioning Allen Franklin Bsown as missionary and organizer and mapping out as far as possible a line of work for him. This he has begun in earnest, having held two meetings already, one in Oakland and one here, and he goes to Oakland again on Sunday. A call for a mass convention has come in from Berkeley.

In closing, as a member of the State Board and its press representative, I wish to return thanks to the old board for their many courtesies and friendly and timely suggestions; to Mrs. Lillie, Mrs. Gillespie and Mr. Brown for their admirable addresses and sympathetic utterances both on the floor of the convention and elsewhere, which did so much to foster and sustain the feeling of amity which universally prevailed; and to the many mediums present, whose untiring zeal achieved for themselves the esteem of all present, and potently assisted in extending good will throughout the assemblage.

Are You Under Some One Else's Thumb?

BE A MASTER YOURSELF.

Do you wish to be a man of mark, a man of power in your community? Do you crave wealth, social position, influence or fame? Would you win in business life, in politics, in love, in all that you undertake? It is for you to choose, whether you will go through life in an ordinary commonplace way, or whether you will be eminently successful, looked up to, honored and respected among your associates; happy, contented and at peace with the world, with every comfort that money can provide, with every enjoyment that the gratification of your ambitions can give. Personal Magnetism, or Hypnotism, the power that rules the world—can be mastered by all. Thousands of men and women who had practically given up in despair, for whom the future seemed without hope, have been able to realize their hearts desires after they have learned the wonderful secrets of this marvelous science.

The lives of great and successful men such as Napoleon, Lincoln, Carnegie, Rockefeller, showed that they all possessed in a marked degree the power to influence others,—to hypnotize men. You can develop this wonderful power to even greater extent than such famous men as these; You can become a master instead of the mastered, a leader instead of a follower. You can learn in a short time at your own home how to exert an almost magic influence over your friends and associates, cure diseases and bad habits without drugs or medicines and perform hundreds of thrilling scientific experiments, you can entertain your friends by the hour, or use your remarkable power in secret to work out your ambitions and desires. It costs you nothing to learn the truth in regard to the most mysterious, fascinating and wonderful power known to man. Our new free book tells you all. Twenty eminent specialists wrote it, the finest engravers illustrated it, the best printers printed it; it is truly a work of art, a book for every home. The invaluable knowledge within its weird mysterious cover is worth more than a college education to any one who has his own way to make in life, who wishes to be master of his destiny. Read what others say and write for a copy of this remarkable book to-day.

John M. Gaed, Palmer Lake, Colo., says:—"I wish to express to you my sincere and heartfelt thanks for sending me your free book on Hypnotism. I am now practicing what you teach as a profession. Your book has enabled me to get in touch with my patients quickly and control them, and so far I have cured every case that I have treated."

Mrs. May Chapman, 59 Clarendon St., Boston, Mass., writes:—"I feel impelled to write and tell you how pleased I am to see Hypnotism placed upon so elevated a plane and to know of its high moral and spiritual aim or purpose to uplift humanity. I wish every man and woman in the United States could possess your free book on the subject."

F. Wm. Reiner, of 702 W. 6th St., Sterling, Ill., writes:—"I will cherish the memory of the day when I wrote for your free book and will always thank its authors for their help and goodwill."

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

"THE UNKNOWN"

-BY-

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as to Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo, Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

CALIFORNIA.

The Spiritualist State Convention.

The State Association met at 10 a.m. on Friday, Sept. 5, and after reading and approving the report of the Committee on Credentials, 42 delegates were seated and given badges.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

The following committees were then appointed:

On Credentials—F. H. Parker, Dr. H. M. Barker and Mrs. Ella York.

On Resolutions—H. H. Nichols, Mrs. Emma E. Shaw and Dr. R. B. Tripp.

On Reports of Officers—J. M. Chase, Dr. H. M. Barker and Mrs. H. F. Michener.

Press Committee—Allen Franklin Brown and J. M. Chase.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie introduced Mr. Allen Franklin Brown and on motion he was elected delegate at large, and an intermission of ten minutes was taken for the purpose of social enjoyment and rest.

Mrs. R. Parker, Santa Rosa, was elected a delegate at large.

Mrs. Fanning, of Berkeley, said that she would see that a spiritual society is organized there during the year.

Mrs. Sarah Seal made a plea for the mediums to become members of the Mediums' Protective Association and unitedly work for their own protection.

Frank H. Parker of Santa Cruz said missionaries should be employed to form societies as auxiliaries to the State Association.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Called to order at 1:20 p.m. Upon roll call of delegates, 43 were found to be present. Reports of officers were postponed to Saturday morning.

Communications—From Mrs. Eudora Mareen regretting her inability to be at the Convention.

Cablegram from London, Eng., from Mme. Florence Montague sending greetings to the convention.

A telegram was received from Hon. H. D. Barrett, president of the National Association, and read to the convention as follows: "Greeting to convention. Success to its work. Spiritualism forever." [Applause].

Also a letter from Mr. H. W. Richardson, president of the New York State Association, sending cordial greetings.

On motion it was agreed to charge an admission fee of 10c for Saturday and Sunday evenings.

Allen Franklin Brown outlined plans adopted by other States, i.e., for holding mass conventions in cities where halls, music, etc., are offered free, the Association furnishing speakers and paying their transportation and advertising out of the collection.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie advocated employing missionaries and organizers.

Thos. G. Newman, editor of the Philosophical Journal, made an eloquent and inspired address, advocating unity of purpose and action in order to overcome all opposition and promote the interests of the cause at large.

In answer to a question Secretary W. T. Jones reported that seven speakers and mediums holding endorsement from the State Association were residents of Los Angeles.

A committee of five was appointed by the President to prepare a plan for harmonizing all interests in the spiritualistic field in California; the committee to report Saturday morning; all suggestions to be referred to the committee. This committee was: J. M. Chase, Allen Franklin Brown, Thos. G. Newman, Frank H. Parker and Wm. H. Rider.

Mrs. G. W. Shriner offered to furnish a room on the first floor of her new building for headquarters, library and reading-room for three months free. A vote of thanks was tendered to Mrs. Shriner for her generous offer.

Mr. J. M. Chase outlined a plan now in contemplation by the Ladies' Aid Society, Sunflower League and other local organizations to secure a hall large enough for them all.

Mr. Thos. G. Newman, answering the question, "What Can We Best Do to Advance the Cause of Spiritualism?" said we must wake up and be able to supply the great need of humanity for truth. Grasp the New Thought and give it to others freely, urging united effort to secure this end.

SATURDAY'S SESSIONS.

At 10 a.m., after roll call, Dr. W. P. Phelon was elected delegate-at-large.

The Secretary then read his report, and also the report of the Treasurer, and both were referred to the Committee on Reports of Officers.

The special committee presented the following report, which was adopted:

"Your committee appointed to consider ways and means to harmonize all elements in the ranks of the Spiritualists of California, would respectfully report: That in the opinion of your committee the harmonizing can best be brought about by active and general propaganda work through missionaries, mass conventions, and literature, and to this end would we suggest that the State Board be requested to appoint one or more active and efficient organizers; that the Secretary be requested to arrange, as far as possible, circuits for this work; also to hold mass conventions in different parts of the State such as the National Association is now holding, and with similar requirements."

Mrs. Lillie, Mrs. Seal, W. T. Jones and others discussed the idea of maintaining headquarters. Mrs. Seal urged that the local societies contribute a stated sum for its permanent establishment. Thos. G. Newman made a forceful speech in favor of having a good room on the first floor, and that the expense be assumed by local societies. Mrs. Gillespie followed, approving the sentiment. Twelve o'clock having arrived, the convention adjourned to 1 p.m. in the lower Scottish Hall.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convention called to order by Vice-President C. H. Wadsworth at 1:30 p. m., and the roll was called.

The chair appointed Mrs. Gillespie and Mrs. Ford as tells, and the election for directors resulted as follows: J. S. Gillespie, J. M. Chase, Mrs. Emma E. Shaw, H. H. Nichols, Wm. M. Rider, Frank H. Parker, C. J. Hasman, Mrs. Anna E. Wadsworth and W. T. Jones.

The Directors retired and elected the following officers: President, J. Shaw Gillespie, 748 O'Farrell St., San Francisco; vice-president, J. Mansell Chase, 319 California St., San Francisco; secretary, W. T. Jones, 305 Larkin St., San Francisco; treasurer, Mrs. Annie E. Wadsworth, 420 Eddy St., San Francisco; directors—Mrs. Emma E. Shaw, 1255 Broadway, Oakland; H. H. Nichols, 441 Vine St., San Jose; Wm. M. Rider, 533 Folsom St. San Francisco; Frank H. Parker, 125 Pacific Ave., Santa Cruz; assistant secretary, C. J. Hasman, 1015 Post St., San Francisco.

The following were elected as delegates to the National Convention: Prof. C. P. Longley and Miss Wink.

In the matter of donations to the N. S. A., societies were reminded to forward their donations to the secretary before Oct. 1.

A resolution was adopted thanking all who had taken part in or contributed to make the convention a success. Also to the press for reports given of our meetings.

The next annual convention will be held in San Jose.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the retiring Board.

Adjournment of business sessions.

PUBLIC EXERCISES.

On Friday a reception and banquet was given to the delegates which proved a success and a credit to the committee having the matter in charge.

Saturday night's program was as follows: Inspirational address, Mr. Allen Franklin Brown; tests and messages, Mr. John Slater; vocal solo, Miss Maud E. Campbell; spirit messages, Mme. E. Young; instrumental music, Prof. and Mme. Young.

A conference meeting of unusual interest, conducted by Mrs. Sarah Seal, was held on Sunday morning.

In the afternoon a large audience was entertained with instrumental selections by Prof. Young and Prof. Solomon; address, Mrs. L. E. Drake; vocal solo, Miss Maud E. Campbell; messages, Mrs. C. Stewart; vocal solo, Miss Lottie Armstrong; address, Mr. Thos. G. Newman; instrumental music Mrs. A. S. Norton.

The I. F. T. Bible Society and Church of San Francisco sent congratulations upon the success of the convention and to the new Board of Directors, which were read from the platform by President Gillespie.

A subscription was started for the benefit of the State Association, to pay off the old indebtedness and to create a fund for future work, with most happy results, over $200 being subscribed, thereby creating a working fund of nearly $100. In order to afford all who were not present at the convention an opportunity to contribute to this fund, the Board of Directors has decided to leave the subscription open for one month, and to ask all who wish to contribute to it to send their offerings to the office of the Philosophical Journal, or to the Secretary, W. T. Jones, 305 Larkin St.

A large audience assembled to enjoy the closing session of the seventh annual convention. After the opening selection of music, Mr. F. C. Manchester rendered a vocal solo, followed by an address by Mrs. Anna L. R. Gillespie; a violin solo by Miss Isabel Seal (accompanist, Mrs. Alfred Seal); an inspirational address by Mrs. R. S. Lillie closed the most interesting convention in this history of the Association.

Let us hope that the work accomplished and all its deliberations may result in uniting the Spiritualists of California into one harmonious band, all working together in one common cause—that of making the world better and happier. W. T. JONES, Sec.

The Last Shall Be First.

And, behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last.—Luke xiii:30.

After the death of the physical body will come the birth into spiritual life. Then will those who were poor in earthly goods become rich in the enjoyment of peace and happiness in the life beyond the grave. Those who were rich in this world's goods and who delighted in vain-glorious displays, will find that their wealth avails them naught; that they can not advance or progress on the merit of the money which they left in earthly banks. It is only by intellectual and philanthropic work that the soul or spirit progresses in the spirit life. There the poor and oppressed will be free of their cruel task-masters. There the sick of body and mind will be cured and made well by the magnetic fountains of divine purity and power.

The selfish rich will find that it is only by earnest effort they can live down the past and mount upward in the scale of spiritual life. The poor person who delighted in good deeds while living on the earth plane, will, upon passing into the spirit life, suddenly find himself rich in the good deeds which have been accumulating for years. He meets his friends and they welcome him with joyful greetings.

How different it must be with the rich man who has gained his fortune by the enslaving of his fellow man. Does he meet smiling and happy spirit friends, or does he drift into the companionship of evil beings who terrify his soul by saying: "You are one of us, come and join us." It is true that man dislikes to talk of the punishment of sin. He may set aside or put off the twinges of conscience, for a brief time, but the day of reckoning must come. Then according to his thoughts and deeds will be his companions in spirit life.

The rich who delight in trampling on the rights of others, will find that their gold will avail them nothing against the encroachments of old age and the coming of death. After death it is the poor man who will rise to heights of happiness and enjoyment in the freedom from the toil and struggle under earthly task-masters. It is then that the hitherto poor and oppressed will find opportunity for the development of talents which were held in restriction by the unceasing toil for daily bread.

Those of the rich who were generous; who were thoughtful of their fellow man, will be hailed with joy by the denizens of the angel world; as benefactors of men and true saviors of their earthly brothers. In the spirit land all will receive their reward, not for the wealth and magnificence of earth, but for their good deeds, their intellectual and moral advancement and their purity and goodness of life. Of what will that reward consist? Of a consciousness of life well lived. In the joy of greeting our loved and loving relatives and friends.

The pleasures of a pure life are greater than a life of pomp and cold-heartedness. In heaven or the spirit world the positions shall be changed. And, behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last.

The Home Circle.

Believing it will interest the readers of The Progressive Thinker to hear how Spiritualism is progressing in the capital city of Texas, I will give a short history of a home circle that was started last winter in a small room on Lavaca street by a few young men. They held circles Sunday and Thursday nights. After a few sittings one of Austin's most respectable young men had developed clairvoyance and clairaudience, and is at present a trance speaking medium as well. A week ago a spirit who gave his name as Thrittheim lectured in the German language, and last Sunday Spirit Allen Claren lectured in the English language through this medium. Both lectures were very elevating and instructive. One of the spirit controls of the medium is a Doctor Eberlin whom he was personally acquainted with as a boy. The doctor passed out years ago and now he has made many wonderful cures where the medical profession has failed. He has on a couple of occasions brought the roots in the circle with which he cured his patients. He is also the spirit control of the circle.

Last spring Mr. and Mrs. Kates and later Mrs. Cooley, missionaries for the N. S. A., visited our city, lectured and delivered spirit messages and assisted us in organizing a society. We are now chartered under the Texas State Association with the assistance of the untiring medium, Anton Luthy, whose sincerity no one doubts. We expect to do good work in the fall and winter when the temperature has moderated and become more agreeable. Some of the older Spiritualists after we got our charter very liberally assisted us financially. About a week ago we were donated a lot valued at $75 which is very encouraging. So the Austin Spiritualist Association has come to stay.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Jacob Bullion departed for a higher life at his home in Mesick, Mich., Sept. 6. Mr. Bullion had been a great sufferer for over two years, but being a firm believer in Spiritualism bore his affliction patiently, and when the time for separation came, passed from the material into the spiritual without a struggle.

A. D. Enos, of Rio Delta, Cal., formerly of Breedsville, Mich., passed to spirit life from the home of his sister of Ravenna, Mich., Sept. 11, 1902, aged 72 years. He was loved by all who knew him for his kindness of heart and upright living. EVA TRUESDELL.

Mary Effie, daughter of G. W. and Ellen Beam, passed to higher life Sept. 8, 1902, aged 26 years. Typhoid fever was the cause. She was very patient throughout her illness of eight weeks' duration, and seemed to have warning of her transition. She leaves behind parents, one sister and two brothers. She was an esteemed member of the Spiritual Searchlight Society of Sheridan, Ind. GERTRUDE BAKER.

Passed to higher life, George MacIndoe, in Fairlee, Vermont; he leaves a widow and six children on this side. Our brother had living faith in that vast beyond, where he now solves the problems of eternity. His home has many times been a Bethel to the writer. Erant, Mich. ARZELIA C. CLAY.

Horace Thompson met the great transition Sept. 11, at his home in Florence, O. He was 76 years of age, and had been a Spiritualist almost from its advent. He was born in the then wilderness of the Western Reserve and is thus one of the oldest of the pioneers. A man respected for his honesty and unselfish life. The funeral was held in the Methodist church on Sept. 13th, Hudson Tuttle officiating.

WHY BE SICK?

Dr. J. M. Peebles the Famous Physician and Scientist Has Perfected a System of Treatment that Gives Hope to Every Sufferer.

Read His Valuable Book "A Message of Hope"—It will Explain to You the Wonderful Treatment and Tell How You Can be Healed.

Why will you continue to suffer when there is a treatment at hand that will cure you? Dr. Peebles and his associates, all physicians of wide experience and reputation, have perfected a system of treatment that promises health and strength to all.

J. M. Peebles, A.M., M. D., Ph. D.

Many of their cures seem almost like miracles, for hundreds of those restored had traveled far and wide, trying this doctor and that, without getting any relief and were about to give up in despair when they began the treatment of Dr. Peebles.

They are able to do such wonderful cures because they work in harmony with nature, and employ her mighty healing forces in connection with mild, scientifically prepared medicinal remedies. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the depleted system, enriches the blood, improves digestion and assimilation, gives strength and tone to weakened nerves and muscles, and permanently repairs wasted tissues and organs, causing thousands of the sick to rejoice at being healed.

Why don't you sit down, at once, and write the doctors a plain, truthful letter as to your condition as you see it? If you will do this, they will carefully examine your case and send you a full diagnosis of your condition, and tell you truthfully whether or not they can cure you. This will cost you nothing, and if they find they can cure you, they will make their charges so small that anyone can afford the treatment.

If you are sick, write them at once for their full diagnosis and professional advice which will be sent without charge, together with their wonderful book, "A Message of Hope," which will explain fully this grand system of treatment and give you information that will brighten the remainder of your life. The transition of George Washington Williams at the age of 80 occurred at Stroudsburg, Pa., on Sunday, Sept. 7th, at the Burnett House where he had resided for the past 7 years. He had been an ardent follower of the philosophy of Spiritualism the best part of his life, having attended the meetings in Philadelphia at the time the first association of that city was organized. It was one of his last requests that a representative of the First Association should officiate at his funeral services. This honor fell upon Mr. A. Groom, one of the board of trustees, and conductor of the lyceum. The service was held at the Burnett House on Tuesday evening, Sept. 9th, at 8 o'clock. There was a large attendance.

SPIRITUALIST MEETINGS.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

Epilepsy Cured.

At Last a Positive and Permanent Cure for This Terrible Maladay Is Discovered.

The renowned Brain and Nerve Specialist, Dr. Charles W. Green, of Battle Creek, Mich., has at last found a positive cure for Epilepsy, or Fits.

Epilepsy has baffled the medical world since the time of Hippocrates, and not until the Eminent Specialist, Dr. Green, patiently worked out his great cure has a positive cure for Epilepsy been known. The Doctor has used it in every case of fits he has treated in the past five years, hundreds of whom had tried everything they could hear of before taking his treatment, and he has yet to find the case, not due to injury, that it will not cure.

Mrs. Lizzie Green, of Boston, says: I cannot thank you enough for my deliverance from that terrible disease, Epilepsy. I had suffered with it for thirty years and had tried everything I could hear of, but the attacks only grew harder and more frequent. I had given up all hope when one of my neighbors told me of your great cure. I should not have written this if she had not urged me, for I had been fooled so often that I had resolved to pay out no more money. God bless her for urging me for you cured me and saved me from a life worse than death." Do not experiment longer with "Free Cures" and worthless nostrums containing injurious hypnotics, etc., but write at once to Dr. Charles W. Green, 214 Monroe St., Battle Creek, Mich., for full particulars of this great and tried remedy. It will cure you and brighten the end of your life. Write at once giving full facts about your case; the doctor will tell you exactly what can be done for you. Remember the treatment is positively guaranteed.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.

It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful number. Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

LIGHT OF EGYPT.

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1. The Language of the Stars, paper, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

REINCARNATION.

A Leading Work On That Subject.

This is a newly edited and revised production of Mr. Walker's great work by News E. Wood, A. M., M. D. It is brought down to date by the addition of new matter. It has the following fourteen chapters: "Reincarnation Defined and Explained," "Evidences of Reincarnation," "Astral Pictures of Successive Incarnations," "Objections to Reincarnation," "Reincarnation Among the Ancients," "Reincarnation in the Bible," "Reincarnation in Early Christendom," "Reincarnation in the East To-day," "Esoteric Oriental Reincarnation," "Transmigration through Animals," "Death, Heaven and Hell," "Karma, the Companion Truth of Reincarnation," "Western Writers on Reincarnation," "Mr. Walker's Conclusions." As the book stands, it is the most complete, logical, clear and convincing work on the subject extant. Price, postpaid, in handsome leatherette, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

All That Is Good in It Has Been Appropriated from Spiritualism.

JUDGE S. J. HANNA OF BOSTON EXPOUNDS THE DOCTRINE OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE—PRAISES MRS. MARY EDDY—TELLS OF HER LIFE AND THE GREAT DISCOVERY SHE MADE—SCORES JUDGE ARNOLD'S DECISION.

"The soporific effect of a drug may stupefy the mind so as to produce temporary relief, but hurt it cannot; heal finally and effectually it does not, for it has dealt at best only with effects. It has not reached the root cause."—As reported in the Chicago Herald.

This statement of Judge Septimus J. Hanna of Boston before the Christian Scientists was declared to be the underlying principle upon which members of the faith throughout the country base their beliefs. Judge Hanna, who is the editor of the Christian Scientist periodicals, delivered his lecture at the Third Church of Christ, Scientist, Washington boulevard and Leavitt street, before an interested audience. He came from Boston in behalf of the board of lectureship of the namesake church of that city. In the course of his address he said:

"So far as Christian Science has a creed it is found in the tenets of the mother church, which constitute its declaration of faith. All who become members of this church must solemnly subscribe to these tenets.

TENETS OF THE CHURCH.

"They are as follows:

"1. As adherents of truth we take the inspired word of the Bible for our guide to eternal life.

"2. We acknowledge and adore one supreme, infinite God. We acknowledge one Christ, His Son—the Holy Ghost or Comforter, and man in the divine image and likeness.

"3. We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin, and the understanding that sin and sickness are neither real nor eternal.

"4. We acknowledge the atonement as the efficacy and evidence of divine love, of man's unity with God—and the great merits of Christ Jesus, the Wayshower.

"5. We acknowledge universal salvation as demonstrated by Christ Jesus, in the power of truth over all error, sin, sickness and death; also the crucifixion and resurrection of the man Jesus, which enabled human faith and understanding to perceive the great possibilities and living energies of divine life.

"6. We solemnly promise to strive, watch and pray for that mind to be in us which was also in Christ Jesus, to love one another, and to be meek, merciful, just and pure."

The speaker elaborated on the meaning of the tenets and took occasion to eulogize Rev. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the "mother of Christian Science." He told of her holy life and the great discovery she made when he found that she had been herself cured, according to the Christian Scientist idea, without the use of medicine.

BASED UPON THE BIBLE.

Referring to Christ the speaker said: "His whole life was given over to healing sickness, feeding the hungry, comforting the sorrowing, making whole the broken-hearted, raising the dead, and showing others how to do likewise. Is there a more practical work than this? I say, then, that Jesus was both the greatest idealist and the most practical man the world has known.

"Christian Science is based upon the Bible. The mosaic decalogue and the Sermon on the Mount are its articles of faith. The church tenets which I have read and commented on, restate in few words the spirit of the decalogue and Sermon on the Mount. Christian Scientists are taught, from the beginning to the end of their text-book, to emulate Jesus in all His ways. The sincere Christian Scientist earnesly endeavors to carry out this teaching. In the measure that he falls short of this he fails of his discipleship.

"One of the leading points in Christian Science is that sickness is not of God; that God never created it and never sent it; that He has nothing whatever to do with it. When we speak of sickness we do not mean merely physical sickness, but every kind of discord, sorrow and disease. These, according to Christian Science, are all the result of human error, not of divine truth."

The speaker asserted that vice of all kinds, all moral and physical defects, were not the work of the Almighty, and that they could be cured. Drunkenness and other vicious habits, he maintained, had been cured by Christian Science treatment. Through the same methods, or faith, he declared families are reunited every day, and that there is no ailment of the flesh or soul which cannot find some succor if the full realization of the Christian Science doctrine were understood.

SCORES JUDGE ARNOLD.

Judge Hanna is particularly incensed at the decision of Judge Arnold of the Common Pleas Court of Philadelphia in his refusal to grant a charter to the First Christian Church, Scientist, in that city.

"Judge Arnold takes a prejudiced view in refusing to grant the charter," he said in discussing the matter. His denial was on the ground that the application for a charter covered a double enterprise; that the church is an organization for profit and for the sale of Mrs. Eddy's books, neither of which is true. No attempt is being made by the Scientist church to boom Mrs. Eddy's books. It is nothing less than preposterous to presume that the whole church is formed for the promotion of the sale of Mrs. Eddy's books. Either Judge Arnold was badly prejudiced or he was wrongly informed on the aims and the teachings of the church.

"I do not know of another state in which a church has to apply to the courts for a charter, and I feel that whatever the decision of Judge Arnold may have been, not having read it except the extracts in the newspapers, could he have known the true facts in the case he would have acted differently."

Christian Science is based on the Bible. As God never created sickness, the other fellow, the Devil, must have done that dirty work. He ought to be ashamed of himself; and the God, too, who made him, ought to be doubly ashamed.

Christian Science flourishes because it is tinged with orthodoxy. Christian Science teaches us to emulate Jesus in all things. He cursed the fig tree, so must each Christian Scientist do the same when they find a fig tree in like condition—curse it! Christian Science is good in some respects, and just so far it has appropriated Spiritualism, and no farther. Its bad aspects will gradually disappear, and pure Spiritualism take their place. HOPEFUL.

IT GREW.

"Sin has many tools, but a lie is the handle which fits them all."—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

First somebody told it,
Then the room wouldn't hold it,
So the busy tongues rolled it
Till they got it outside.
Then the crowd came across it,
And never once lost it,
But tossed it and tossed it
Till it grew long and wide.

You are not simply to be kind and helpful to others; but whatever you do, give honest, earnest purpose to it.—J. T. Trowbridge.

THE TWO CULTS.

Christian Science and Spiritualism

Christian Science, says the Chicago Chronicle, is well known in the field of the dog doctor and veterinarian in Chicago; thus demonstrating that this method of treatment is not known in the east alone. Dumb animals have been cured of ills and injuries by scienc treatment applied by Mrs. Jennie H. Jones, a curist living at 248 Fifty-seventh street.

Mrs. Jones has demonstrated to her own satisfaction and to the wonderment of Mrs. H. S. Hayden, 5720 Rosalie court, that Christian Science as a cure for dumb creatures is invincible. Her experiments have been upon dogs. They were as successful as they were interesting. During the past few months Mrs. Jones has cured nearly a dozen dogs of various ailments and injuries. Her surprising success coupled with a love for animals has induced the determination that she will devote her life toward advancing the power of Christian Science in the field where the veterinarian and expert on animal diseases have ever been alone.

Mrs. Jones is a member of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Drexel boulevard. Nearly a year ago her pet Blenheim spaniel, which has won several prizes at local dog shows, was run over by a heavy wagon. Unable to relieve the sufferings of the dog, which she carried to her home, she determined to take it to a Christian Science practitioner to see if something could not be done to relieve it. The practitioner and Mrs. Jones worked on the dog for five hours, at the end of which time they were thrilled to see the animal recover from its injury and suffering and scamper about the room livelier than ever.

Mrs. Jones took the dog home, marveling at the cure and determined then and there that a new field was opening for Christian Science. A few days later she learned that Mrs. Hayden, a neighbor, who is a dog fancier, was greatly alarmed because of the illness of three of her dogs, one a Blenheim valued at $500 and two Japanese spaniels worth as much. She went at once to Mrs. Hayden's home and related to her the marvelous cure science had performed and offered to give Mrs. Hayden's animals the treatment.

Mrs. Hayden consented and three of the sick dogs were taken home by Mrs. Jones, who began to treat them. The dogs improved rapidly, until all were cured in a short time. All the dogs had combined distemper and pneumonia and had been pronounced uncurable by a dog doctor. All the afflicted animals are now in perfect health.

Since that time Mrs. Jones' services have been in demand and her reputation as a doctor of dogs has spread throughout Hyde Park.

"I have proved beyond a doubt," said Mrs. Jones yesterday, "that Christian Science will cure dumb animals. It is easier to cure animals by science than it is human beings, because one does not have to overcome the fears and doubts that exist in the minds of persons. The dumb animal will do what he believes he can do, whereas a man or a woman will wonder and fear and doubt. The mind of the animal is not distracted with a thousand other things, and, therefore, the power of science does not meet the resistance found in the mind of human beings.

"In watching the results of my own experiments I have become enthusiastic over the discovery that science is more easily applied to beasts than it is to mortals, and I am convinced that there is a great field for applying Christian Science to the suffering creatures of the animal world. I firmly believe that great progress will be made in this work within a short time. It is not a new discovery either. For some time we have heard of wonderful cures effected by science upon animals, but to the general public this is a revelation."

The above statement contains some truth. The dogs got well. The method used to accomplish this remarkable feat was spirit-force—nothing else. Mrs. Jones is simply a medium through whom beneficent spirits work. A rose you know, by any other name smells as sweet. TRUTH SEEKER.

THE SCHOOL OF LIFE.

Experiences and Lessons of Mortal Life.

In these chapters I am endeavoring to set forth the true philosophy of life as it is handed down to us by intelligent spirits who have gone up through the vestibule of suffering into bright and glorious promotion and intelligence. They are interested in our well-being; they are seeking to promote our welfare, and bring to us the tidings of immortal life; they love us and crave our love in return. If we give earnest heed to the lessons they teach, they will lead us in ways of pleasantness and paths of peace. If we press forward persistently in pursuit of the right course from our present standpoint, though we meet with trials, we shall reach Beulah Land and the Celestial City.

The heavens may be obscured at times, but the clouds will pass away and the light appear. So it is with our loved ones whom we may mourn at dead.

Their love is as constant as the light of the celestial odies. It is only our inner vision that is obscured, and we fail to pierce the veil and recognize dear spirits whose watchful care and sympathy are still our own. With our dull perceptions we are often unconscious of their presence, although they try to lead us toward the right. Failure does not discourage them; they never turn away in despair, but remain with us, through our successes and failures, to the terminus of earth's tollsome journey.

Our spirit friends can help us in many ways, but they can not and will not do our work for us. Our work is not completed in the pilgrimage of earth life; it is only begun while traveling this valley; and here is one of the finest fields of usefulness and labor to employ the progressive spirit.

If you imagine you have overcome all impediments and will be in Paradise as soon as you shall have passed the death line, you are destined to be disappointed. As man reaches forward in thought and aspiration and presses onward with his endeavor to know and understand more, he may look ahead in the boundaries of the heavens, to the distant star and think "it may be my privilege yet to explore that glorious orb and learn its conditions and its life. My race is onward, my end I shall not find, for progression is boundless. I may learn and strive and achieve through all the ages that are to come."

Within this material covering dwells the spirit, the real individual, which can not be destroyed. It grows refined in the progressive life of immortality. We are all destined to be beautiful sometime.

As time goes on spirits do not say "We grow older," but they say, "We find ourselves developing—becoming radiant in the light of the everlasting."

Many of those who were unknown, unsung, unhonored in earthly life, now stand exalted in spirit. It is neither station, wealth nor worldly power that measures the spiritual being, but experience, love, knowledge, purity, beauty.

The world has thought too much of names and too little of principles. It has worshiped heroes and forgotten the heroism. Great men and women, in the true sense of greatness, do their work, and leaven the work to tell the story of their greatness. They do not resort to egotism to make people believe they are wise and great. The earnest worker has little time to talk. Those who are forever blustering and building castles in the air are the ones who never lay the first stones for the foundation of one on earth.

Spiritualism is the solid granite foundation upon which we can build; upon which we can rear a dwelling-place in the Summerland; for as we build here, so will our home be there. By its truths we may know and declare that life is continuous. Through it we are taught the laws of compensation; through it comes the unfoldment of a helpful, kindly brotherhood among kind, thus preparing a brighter road to the Summerland.

There is no mystery connected with the revelations of spirits; they do not say we must believe this or that in order to be saved, for salvation does not depend upon faith. Happiness or misery depend upon works. The laying aside of the physical body makes no change of character or identity, therefore it becomes necessary for us to make our life here as we wish it to be in the hereafter.

The object of human life is self-development, the individual unfoldment of intelligence. The person who profits by experience gained upon any plane of existence, gathering up the lessons, studying them closely that he may incorporate their results into his life for future guidance, will be prepared to learn by discipline, to profit by experience and to expand in knowledge upon other planes of life.

The man who feels an energy or stirring impetus within him, and seeks to put forth that power to the best of his ability, will find himself expanding in various directions and enlarging to such an extent as to enable him to undertake other work and understand higher laws. But the one who sits down quietly, ignoring the impulses and possibilities of his being, feeling that he can do but little, will find his powers going to waste; therefore when the time comes for him to pass onward to another life, he will discover that he is unfitted to undertake any study or employment of another life, for he has not improved the lessons of the earthly state or the knowledge of its laws and expressions; therefore, even though he be divested of the physical body, he will be obliged to remain in contact with earthly elements until he has acquired that discipline which will enable him to rise above his groveling condition.

We believe that a life in the spheres of the spirit world awaits every mortal—it is the heritage of human life. Age after age points out new avenues of travel, new stores of knowledge to be gained, new lines of research, new opportunities for the mental expression of the soul that is pressing forward for the advancement of the spiritual nature. The hopes and longings for the hereafter are the promptings of a higher world—the footprints of angels on this shore of life.

To glide evenly over life's pathway requires no effort and brings no reward. To conquer adverse conditions develops character, and to work out our destiny requires that we meet the obstacles of life with courage.

"Do you wish the world were wiser?
Well, suppose you make a start,
By accumulating wisdom
In the record of your heart.

"Do you wish the world were better?
Then remember day by day,
Just to scatter seeds of kindness
As you pass along the way.

"Rid your mind of selfish motives;
Let your thoughts be pure and high;
You can make a little Eden
Of the sphere you occupy."

A. H. NICHOLAS.

THE EVILS OF MEAT.

Spiritualists, Make a Careful Note.

The riots and other uncivilized disturbances that have been caused by the soaring prices of the beef trust are significant in the fact that they show the people's pitifully ignorant trust in beef. While our college orators are announcing how highly civilized we are in this century, men are fighting like wild beasts over wagons filled with the dead and decaying carcasses of animals, destined for human food. In the matter of food we are still cannibals. We fancy we are Christians because we considerately abstain from eating our own species, while we fight to obtain pieces of the dead bodies of other animals, still reeking with blood and the accumulated filth known chemically by the euphonious name of "retrograde metamorphosis," but which we dedicate in a human corpse by saying lightly "mortification has set in."

People are maddened to the verge of rioting because the beef trust compels them to pay 24 cents per pound. Do the people understand that even under the former prices for every ounce of nourishment they obtained from the best beef they were obliged to pay at the rate of not less than $1 per pound? And along with this pitifully small proportion of nourishment they had to pay for and swallow large quantities of free uric acid, besides other poisons never intended for the human stomach.

Who is to blame for the people's trust in beef and other kinds of flesh as a necessary part of human food?

There is no gainsaying the fact that physicians are largely to blame for it. We saw the statement recently that but two of the medical colleges of this country have a laboratory department of dietetics—the medical school at Harvard and the one belonging to the University of Minnesota. That such a condition could be possible in this age of progressive thought seems incredible, but it explains the attitude of the medical profession toward vegetarianism. They are simply ignorant themselves of the science of dietetics—and that is precisely what vegetarianism is.

On another page we have given a narrative from Dr. Alexander Haig, the eminent English specialist, whose monumental work on "Uric Acid in Disease" has revolutionized the treatment of all diseases of the kidneys and other uric acid diseases. Dr. Haig became a vegetarian because of his scientific experiments in diet as a factor in disease. It was through his advice that Prof. Eustace Miles, the author of "Muscle, Brain and Diet," became a vegetarian. In the light of such books as Dr. Haig's, the physician who to-day persists in telling his patients that they need meat to keep up their strength marks himself as not up-to-date in his profession. Even Sir Henry Thompson, who, like the majority of physicians, is not a vegetarian, nevertheless says: "It is a vulgar error to suppose that flesh is a necessary part of diet." If this be true, why should any civilized nation permit such cruel and demoralizing places as the stock yards within its boundaries. The people, however, are beginning to understand that their trust in meat as a necessary part of diet is unscientific and that the road to health and strength does not lie through the stock yards and the drug stores, but through the use of nature's simple, pure and perfect food. The unanimity of the medical profession against vegetarianism deters many from adopting it. On this point Dr. Haelwen cautions his readers against accepting the unanimity of the medical profession as necessarily truth. To illustrate this he tells the following incident: "Fifty years ago a young man tramped the streets of London in order to get his life insured. He went from one insurance office to another and could not get a single doctor to pass him because he was a teetotaller. The whole medical profession was against him. That young man said: 'I will start an insurance company of my own.' He did so and in the year 1891 he took the chair at the fiftieth anniversary of the U. K. Temperance Insurance Society, a living example of the liability of medical men to unanimously hold erroneous opinions like other human beings. We need not trouble about the unanimity of the medical profession."

The unanimity of opinion of vegetarians is the test, and that is all on our side.

SOMETIME.

When Our Ideal Good Shall Be Realized.

There is a time—we call it, "Sometime. A vague sweet word, which ever beckons us onward, as we seek a realization of our dearest hopes and loftiest ideas.

A fond sweet mother sits gazing on her sleeping children; a noble-looking boy, and a lovely daughter, dreaming of that "Sometime"—when they will have grown to manhood and womanhood; she pictures her son as a man, noble and grand, full of wisdom, beloved and respected by all, against whom no one can speak a word of reproach. A daughter fair, full of winsome beauty, whom to know, all must love. But alas, and alas! The son contrary to all her teachings is led astray into sin and vice, and wanders far from home and mother. The daughter, early in life, passes into the world of spirit, while the mother lives on sad and lonely.

A young man whose life seemed full of a promise of coming greatness, is stricken down with disease; but full of hope he still dwells in his mind on that "Sometime," when he shall be well and strong again, and be able to do all he had planned. He gazes on the Western sky, and thinks he discerns in the tints of the beautiful sunset a promise that all his hopes will be realized. He falls asleep; no more to awaken in mortal form.

The soldier upon the field of battle thinks of the "Sometime" when, having won fame and renown for his bravery, he shall return to his home, and the fair maiden, whom he left in sorrow one beautiful summer day, to fight for his country—for freedom and liberty. But alas, for his hopes, the bullet did its fatal work, and the soldier was laid to rest in an uknown grave.

The weary toilers for daily bread, look forward to a glad "Sometime," when the fruit of their labors shall furnish them a home and competence so their last days may be days of rest and quiet happiness. But how often are their hopes but a vague sweet dream.

The artist dreams of a picture that shall make him famous.

The poet will weave a poem, the singer compose a song, that will make the world better, more bright and beautiful in the wonderful "Sometime." "Oh, sweet Sometime," in which that is done, what we have planned. The days of our earthly existence are not long enough for us to work out all our lofty ambitions and grand desires. But though this be true, shall all life's hopes and dreams be in vain? In all this vast and mighty universe of seen and unseen wonders, is there no place where the dreams of this beautiful "Sometime" may be realized?

Ah, yes! comes the answer from the unseen world all about us. The weary and heartsick, the tired, sad and lonely ones of earth, shall find rest, peace and happiness. The mind of man is infinite in its capabilities. The earth does not afford him opportunities of growth, so that his soul powers may reach their highest unfoldment. But there is a land, a spiritual home adapted to his needs harmonious and satisfying in its completeness. In this land he will find the "Sometime" that he missed during his earthly journey. In this spiritual "Sometime" the fond mother will find again her noble boy, even as she fondly hoped on earth. Full of wisdom, beloved and honored. Freed from the earthly form, he has learned how to rise above all sinful thoughts and desires, and become a worker and a benefactor for suffering humanity. Wise spirits have taught him how to find his nobler self, and fulfill his destiny. Here too she finds her daughter, grown to womanhood, and with an angelic beauty that far transcends any dream of earthly loveliness, for it is of the spirit, and as she clasps this vision of light to her once sad heart, and gazes on her noble son, her heart rises in thankfulness for this spiritual "Sometime" that has brought light to her out of a great darkness, by giving her back the loved of her heart.

The young man lying upon his couch of pain and suffering sees as his eyes open upon scenes celestial, the land of promise the "Sometime" of his dreams. It flashes instantly through his mind, that in this land of beauty, his hopes will be realized to a greater extent than they could have been had he remained in the mortal form; and he is satisfied. His soul is full of peace; no more fears rack and torment his mind, for here he finds every noble desire, has its recompense.

Here the soul is satisfied in its home relations; here harmonious homes are again formed, similar to the ones of earth, by kindred hearts; reared in shady dells, or by sparkling rivers, as the taste of the owner desires. Here loving hearts long severed are reunited, and the ideal home of the "Sometime" is created. Here the weary toilers of earth find at last a place of rest, a home with perfect peace and happiness. Here the sin-sick soul is taught its first lessons toward a nobler life.

Here the crushed and broken-hearted can have a chance to rise; to develop those gifts which were by force of circumstances obliged to be left uncultivated in earth life; now, behold! they blossom in beauty, giving joy to many souls.

Here the artist can paint pictures beyond the pen to describe all glorified and beautified by the loveliness of spirit, as they will be. The poet can write poems that will glow and scintillate with living light, and bring souls closer to the Infinite mind. The singer can trill such delightful songs, so sweet yet so grand, that the souls about them will rejoice, and be glad they lived.

Oh, glorious "Sometime," that shall bring fruition to all the children of the earth!

Created for some wise purpose, think on, dream on, Oh, mortals! But let your thoughts ever tend toward the best good of all life. Let your thoughts be ever growing more noble and grand, so your spirit may be able at once to reap a rich harvest in the beautiful "Sometime." CLARA MARSH.

AT THE HOME CIRCLE.

A Departed Soldier's Message.

In a series of sittings, commencing September 10th to the 12th, we received the following:

If in an idle moment your mind reverts to childhood days, perhaps you can remember your little playfellow who was your companion in many a childish sport. Your mother was my childish ideal of what a mother should be, and longingly I waited for a word or look from her that told me I shared in her esteem.

Still fresh in my mind is the vision of the old sawmill where we used to fight out battles without regard to military tactics, and the swimming pool in which our mothers would warn us that we would surely be drowned some day, but their predictions never came true; we were saved for some fiercer evil than that. You went your way to the north. I went my way to the south. 'Twas a weary waiting, the same ceaseless grind of poverty, and to a boy of my disposition that had dreams for the future, the roll of the drum and the flying of cannons aroused all the fire within me, and when war was declared with Spain, I was one of the first to the front; but my dream of glory was never to be realized on this earth. Day after day of weary waiting for the call to the front, I sickened and died the death of a dog, a disgrace to a civilized country.

Talk about heroes. Any man could be brave in the face of danger, but to drag out a weary existence waiting, waiting, waiting, takes all the heroism out of his constitution. To die in active service defending your country is glory, but to die like a dog in camp is hell. You can talk of the glories of a military career, but I tell you it makes demons of the men. Think of it, sick, hungry, dying, and not a friendly hand to guide; no loving woman's care, nothing but men, devils, and demons in human form. Oh! for a touch of the angel hand of a mother, the tender care of a sister, or the loving kiss of a sweetheart left behind. Oh, God, have mercy on such a deathbed. Surely all our sins on earth were not equal to this punishment; but I must not complain. It is glory I seek. Well, it's over, all the homesickness, pain and disgust.

It seemed as if all the furies of hell were turned lose to torment us. Hunger, thirst, despair, and last but not least the terrible homesickness and the uselessness of it all; who was to be benefitted by it? A few bloodthirsty politicians. They will rear a monument to us and say: Poor fellows; they died a pitiable death; then forget all about us in their struggle for supremacy in the political world. But nevertheless the record is against them, and they will reap their reward. Though the mills of God grind slowly, with exactness grinds He all. Vain indeed are the honors of the world. History repeats itself, the rank and file suffer and die; and a few demagogues with vampire appetites fight over the victories their brave soldiers won. Shame on such conduct.

But our brave good president has been a victim to the assassin's bullet; such was the ending of a noble career. The good and the bad, the brave and the true, all must meet their last foe and conquer death. When death came to me I was unable to fight. I yielded to his close embrace, and instead of a foe I found a friend—releasing me from the vile body emaciated by sickness, and I found myself being clothed upon by raiment soft and, white. Here was the glory I had tried in vain to reach on earth, but it came to me without striving on my part. How light, how buoyant I feel as I passed through the beautiful ether, freed from my cumbersome body. Like a bird on the wing, I pass from one glory to another, surprised, enchanted by the visions I see.

All the striving after unattainable things, the disappointments I suffered, only brought me nearer my goal, and I find that only here can such longings find complete satisfaction. As I now look back over my past life I realize that all things work together for good to those that love the Lord. Perhaps had my earthly dream been realized, ambition might have shut off from my gaze the beauties of paradise, and sordid gain would have thrown me into deep despair. I am an explorer of the universe, and as I wend my way through the spheres of life, I come in contact with poor benighted spirits that grope in utter darkness; the light has gone out of their life, and why? Because on earth they worshiped their God of self. Passions, appetites and love of earthly honor completely blinded them to the higher life, although they intended to sometime start on the road to glory; that is, when death should knock, he would find them quite willing to wing their way to mansions in the skies. But what is their amazement on reaching this place, to see that they have not even a hovel in which to rest their weary souls. They find that one cannot live for self alone on earth, then be exalted through eternity, but must earn the bread of life by unselfishly helping others. Thus it is that some procrastinate and do not learn the real lessons of life until brought face to face with their real selves. Then they must commence away down the ladder, and what a weary climb it is. Thus you see it is not the rich in worldly goods, not those vested in authority that have the supremacy here, but those who on earth, though lowly born, sought not for wealth and honor, but rather to do right, laying up treasures that would last through all eternity. Riches are not to be despised, nor earthly honors if honorably obtained and rightly used. The prostitution of such things is where the wrong lies, and worshiping them instead of the true God.

NATURE THE AVENGER.

Vengeance Is Mine, Saith Chemistry.

Some may regard it as superstition for me to believe that nature avenges our wrongs, but in the light of cause and effect there is more truth than sentiment in the belief.

Everyone knows what conscience is. What we feel for a misdeed is nature's response—vibrating for an unharmonious effect on our interior consciousness. We are not exceptions. The same occurs to others when wrong, even though they may temporarily oppose it with a bold front. But the greater the strain, the greater the reaction. Nature does not relent. She is a sure winner.

We may not recognize our own victory in the suffering or downfall of another, who has wronged us—nor may we note any advantage in it for us. But if we have not attracted any discordant vibration upon ourselves by ill-feeling, uncharity or personal vindication, the reward may be sensed in the gratification of having been forgiving. That is also a response of Nature acting on our consciousness, but for a harmonious—a pleasing effect. The result is happiness, if nothing else, but with inspiration added, if sensitive to thought-vibrations.

The non-sensitive, however, loses nothing; for the force expended on him for a pleasing effect, is converted into power instead, and that enables him to make good his wrongs suffered. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord," thus becomes a truism, if rightly interpreted, and man remains content to await its coming.

That nature plans a downfall for the wrongdoer need not be accepted. But that he plans his own downfall is an assured fact.

As intemperance or lust punishes itself, selfishness or hatred does.

As one devitalizes the nervous system, the other vitiates the blood and leads to organic troubles that make life anything but pleasant. Thus nature needs no special legislation to rule her subjects. She does so through Chemistry, as the following from Paul Tyner shows:

"The proportion of oxygen, nitrogen and hydrogen in the body of an individual, at any one time, are not only an absolute indication of his bodily condition, but will indicate his spiritual condition also. That is to say, the character and development of the ego itself determine the composition of the body, and the proportions of oxygen and nitrogen will be blended in exact relative proportions with the good and evil in the man's nature. Every good thought increases the proportion of oxygen as a deep breath does, and lessens that of nitrogen, making the body finer and more beautiful. Every evil thought or impulse increases the nitrogen and has the reverse effect on body and soul."

This knowledge of things unseen should have a better moral effect on would-be unbelievers than some of the real superstitions taught as divine revelation. Their boast is that they only believe in science. Well, this is science and the test can be found in themselves. No kind of faith is needed for acceptance. The proof of the pudding is in the eating; and a little analysis of self might reveal to many effects for which they have laid the cause themselves. As the tree may be known by its fruits, the unjust may know what they have made of themselves by what they are suffering. ARTHUR F. MILTON.

A BUNCH OF MIGNONETTES.

There is a legend of the Mignonette,
A pretty story told in language quaint
Of a sweet maid whose dreamy eyes were set
Above earth's level, as those of a saint,
In pictures olden, looking far beyond
The walks of daily life to visions fond

Beholding, men would thrill with tender awe,
Catch of her peace to lighten strain of theirs,
Helped to plod on again by what they saw,
A newer fervor urging oft-pressed prayers.
Till she became to hearts despairing sign
Unquestioned, living, of a love divine.

Then one, 'tis said, shrinking from thorns rude thrown
By hands beloved, appealingly did wail
"Give us some flower that nourished may be grown
About our homes, to cheer when woes assail,
That we may think thy spirit is beside
And somewhere in its daintiness doth bide."

One moment those sweet eyes did earthward turn,
On the petitioner fell tiny seeds,
That planted in earth's gracious bosom, yearn
Only to fructify for human needs,
Become more beautiful, more full, more blessed
As newer pangs amid their blooms are prest.

They who from their abundance cull to give
Have as reward the beatific sign,
So strong of old, that in their gift doth live
The potent balsam of a love divine.
I lay my cheek against the flowers and cry:
Beauty of beauties, who and what am I,
Daring to sorrow over earth's born pains,
Where aught so perfect, to console obtains,
And one friend taught of pain, remembering mine,
Offers this symbol of a love divine.

OCCULT MYSTERIES.

IN THE OCCULT WORLD.

A Man in Whom Is Combined Three Distinct Personalities.

They Do Not Seem to Indicate Control by Three Spirits.

In Earl W. Hood exist at least three distinct personalities.

His mind passes from one to the other of its three phases without his willing it and without his knowing it.

Sometimes gradually, sometimes instantly, Hood's being is transferred from one personality to another. While he lives as one person he can remember nothing of what he did, of what he said or thought as another of his three selves.

Hood is no Jekyl-Hyde who knowingly transforms himself from a kindly being to a tigerish brute. He is no lunatic who, raving, now imagines himself one creature, now another, again a third. Hood has lived in three absolutely different personalities.

The remarkable facts in Hood's case were discovered and proven by J. Allen Gilbert, Ph. D., M. D., of Portland, Ore., a surgeon of reputation in the United States Marine Hospital service who has deeply studied psychology and psydro-therapeutics.

In his search for this extraordinary history, in putting together bit by bit the connected story of Hood's three existences, Dr. Gilbert brought to his aid—

Hypnotism.

At the word the suspicious smile incredulously.

Hypnotism! How many crimes, how many deceits have been perpetrated in that name! But be kind enough to remember that the mental action and volition of a hypnotized man are almost completely controlled by the hypnotizer.

Hypnotism the Only Way.

By hypnotism, and only by hypnotism could Dr. Gilbert command Hood to assume one or other of the three personalities of which his being is made up.

But—

The histories Hood told were not related while he was hypnotized.

Hypnotism was employed merely to transfer Hood from one personality to another, and his history was then taken during his full consciousness in the ensuing personality.

And then the facts related by Hood when fully conscious were found by inquiry of disinterested people to be true.

That this extraordinary case may aid science to discover some of the secrets of mind, to solve some of the problems of psychology, Dr. Gilbert has read a paper on Hood's multiple personality before a trained medical society; he writes of it technically in the New York Medical Record, one of the standard medical journals of the country, whose wise and dignified editor, Dr. Shrady, would not publish a line designed to becloud or deceive the medical profession.

Are you still skeptical that Earl W. Hood is a triune being?

Learn, then, that Hood in one of his personalities enlisted in the United States Army.

As another of his beings Hood deserted—if one can be said to "desert" who was absolutely ignorant, who had entirely forgotten that he had sworn to serve his country as a soldier.

The army never forgets nor forgives desertion. So, when Dr. Gilbert, seeking to verify some of Hood's statements, wrote to the military authorities, they promptly arrested Hood and jailed him.

Dr. Gilbert convinced the medical authorities of the War Department that Hood deserted unconsciously in that he enlisted in one personality and deserted in another. And Hood was promptly released.

Hood was admitted to the United States Marine ward of St. Vincent's Hospital, Portland, Oregon, on February 20 last, after being accidentally injured. He is a well-nourished, muscular man, twenty-three years old. He is 5 feet 10¾ inches tall and weighs 180 pounds. He is perfectly healthy and has no liquor or drug habit. Please bear that in mind.

On February 20 he fell from a barge on which he was working and struck the left side of his head on a log in the water eight or ten feet below. He was stunned for a moment, but rallied, crawled up on the log and was taken ashore. He said his "head burned like fire all over." He walked like a drunken man and was taken in an ambulance to St. Vincent's, where he was under the care of Dr. J. O. Cobb.

After apparent recovery from the injury for which he was admitted, Hood continued to act queerly for more than a month. He manifested symptoms which could not be explained by mere concussion of the brain, which, of course, was indicated by the history of the accident and his condition on admission to the hospital. Three times he was discharged as improved and three times he returned to the hospital. He could tell a few things he did during his absence, but could not recall them when they were repeated to him.

His symptoms were so peculiar that Dr. Gilbert was called in consultation on April 1. He learned that during one of his absences from the hospital Hood had signed a receipt for his wages. Yet Hood could not remember this. Dr. Gilbert, an expert on hypnotism, knows that memory is often stimulated and recalled in the hypnotic state. To aid his diagnosis the doctor wished to gain from Hood a complete account of all his doings since the accident. So, with Hood's consent, Dr. Gilbert hypnotized him.

In hypnotizing Hood it was impossible to get control of his eyes until after his arms and hands were controlled. When Dr. Gilbert fixed his eyes on Hood's eyes the patient complained that his eyes hurt. Nevertheless hypnosis was induced slowly but successfully in about a half hour. Then, in answer to the doctor's questions and commands, Hood, speaking in a muffled voice, gave every detail of his life in and out of the hospital after he fell from the barge and every detail was afterward verified. To bring him up from the hypnotic state Dr. Gilbert exclaimed:

"You will awake and find yourself perfectly well in every respect. You will awake when I count five. Now—one, two, three, four, five!"

Hood awoke.

A Change of Identity.

But he was not the same Hood.

To the intense surprise of Dr. Gilbert and Dr. Cobb, Hood awoke the very picture of fright, the personification of mental distress.

"Where am I?" he asked, trembling like a leaf.

He was quieted and many questions were put to him. He knew absolutely nothing of his accident nor of being in the hospital. Dr. Gilbert quickly recognized that he had before him a case of double personality at least—that Hood was another man for the time being.

He gave his age as eighteen years and said he had never been in Portland. He spoke of events that occurred yesterday, and by questioning him it was found that "yesterday" was a Friday in September, 1898. "Yesterday" he had fought with his father at Glenrock, Wyo., where he had worked in the coal mines. Still greatly disturbed in mind, Hood was put in the ward to quiet down and to get acquainted with his new surroundings. He was told he was in Portland.

"Portland, Maine, or Portland, Oregon?" he asked.

He knew none of his companions in the ward; it was necessary to show him his cot, his hat, all his belongings. In very truth he was a stranger in a strange land. Growing quiet, that same afternoon the history that follows was drawn from him and was told in a perfectly clear-headed and intelligent manner. Dr. Gilbert writes:

Born December 15, 1878 or '79—not sure which. Born at Nemaha City, Neb. Mother died when he was three years old. One brother, one half-sister, one step-sister, father, two grandfathers, two grandmothers and a stepmother, giving their names and addresses. Moved to Nebraska City shortly after birth and then to St. Paul, Neb. Ran away from home when fourteen years old and went to relatives on mother's side. Omitting details, he went to Bloomington, Omaha, Ashland, and finally to Lincoln, Neb., and enlisted for the war with Spain. Went as far as Chickamauga and took sick with a fever of some kind. Cannot remember how he got back to Nebraska; the first he could remember he was working in Oxford, Neb.

During this lapse, I learned subsequently, he had been hunted for desertion—the desertion, however, not being true desertion, for he changed personalities in camp and left, not knowing that he belonged to the army. Omiting again, he went to Oxford, Mascot and Glenrock. While there his father and stepmother quarrelled, and in his attempt to interfere he and his father quarrelled. During the quarrel, it seemed to him, his father hit him on the head with something. That was the last he could remember until he woke up here in Portland.

There was no headache in this. Perfectly well in every way. Refused to take medicine because he said it was nonsense for a well man to take medicine. Said he never saw but one steamboat in his life and that was on the Missouri River. It must be remembered that the patient has lived in Portland since last August. On questioning, he knew nothing of Portland, nothing of his house which he and a chum had built, and nothing of the chum or anything related to him. Although he had never seen a steamboat except one on the Missouri River, in another self he afterward said he had fired on the steamer Columbia between San Francisco and Portland and had become very seasick. Furthermore, numbers of river steamers and ocean lines are to be seen daily in the Portland harbor, on the very beach of which he has lived since August. Absolutely no clue could be hit upon by which to connect him with the life he lived in Portland. Letters on his person were strange to him and their contents worried him.

Explanation of the "X" Signs.

It should be stated here that Dr. Gilbert, to guide even his scientific readers through the intricacies of Hood's mental changes, designates that strange creature in his "united self" as X, and in his three personalities as X1, X2 and X3. It was X2 that fell from the barge.

On April 3, with his consent, Hood was again hypnotized to be thrown back into his former self, into his only other self, as Dr. Gilbert then believed. After passing through a stage of transition, which was then unsuspected but which was proved afterward to be X3, Hood was back again in the self in which he lived before the accident on the barge. He knew absolutely nothing of the twenty-four hours he had just passed in another personality.

Says Dr. Gilbert:

"No clue could be hit upon by which to connect him with it. He thought it was April 2, and being told it was April 3, was somewhat surprised and supposed we had kept him hypnotized for twenty-four hours. The following history was then taken, the man apparently normal except that the old headache was back again. His life was traced backward and found to lead from Portland to San Francisco, Denver, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Edgemont, S. Dak.; Chadron, Neb., and finally to Glenrock, Wyo. Here he said his father and he had some sort of trouble. Could not tell how the trouble arose. His father threatened to shoot him and he ran away.

"Again repeated attempts were made to connect the two lives by going over in detail the experiences as related by him in the two respectively, but no connection could be made between them. By putting together the two histories there still remained large gaps which were unfilled by the experiences related while in the two respective personalities. The gap from Chickamauga to Oxford and numerous others of less importance remaining unfilled, and having received confirmatory evidence from answers to letters of inquiry sent out, I felt sure of a third personality and hypnotized him April 24 to throw him into this suspected personality.

"He was successfully thrown into it, and when he roused from hypnosis into the third state he was again a stranger to us and his surroundings. I acted on the difficulty experienced in gaining his confidence when he awakened the first time in a strange personality.

"When questioned in regard to Chickamauga and his experience there, he said he did not belong to the army there, but there were a great many soldiers all over the fields. He said, 'I was awfully sick and I haven't got over it yet.' In this personality he suffered continuously with pain in his head and abdomen. He was a typical tramp throughout, beating his way on trains, and working only enough to support life when it could not be done otherwise. He described in minute detail his wandering through Chattanooga, Nashville, Green Brier and Springfield, Tenn.; Henderson, Ky.; Evansville, Ind.; Carmi, Ill.; St. Louis, Jefferson City, Kansas City, Liberty, Red Cloud and Oxford, having isolated and disconnected experiences in Cheyenne, San Francisco and Portland. Here again repeated attempts failed to connect him with either of the other two lives.

"Thinking that perhaps these gaps might be filled in by getting a still more complete history of his three lives, on April 26 he was thrown by hypnotism into each of the three lives successively and questioned concerning the lapses, but without avail."

Soon, as the cap and climax of his remarkable hypnotic experiments, Dr. Gilbert threw Hood into his "united self." Hood became impatient and resented the frequent hypnotizing. So Dr. Gilbert decided to try, by suggestion, to unite this strange man's lives into a unitary consciousness.

He hypnotized Hood, repeated to him in their proper sequence all the events he had learned in all his lives, awoke him.

Remembered Through Hypnotism.

Almost incredible to say, Hood then remembered his complete history and consecutively, mark you. There were but few gaps in his story; he recalled everything vividly. But this uniting of his three selves into a conscious unity did not prevent his subsequent lapses back to X1, or X2 or X3. Dr. Gilbert relates this weird incident:

"On June 25, 1902, he was released from prison and discharged from the army. After a ride home with him on the electric car from Vancouver Ferry, Dr. Robinson and I left him as X near his home, with the promise from him that he would come to my office the next day by noon. He did not come. I searched for him, but did not find him at home, and met him while searching, on June 27. When asked why he did not come to my office he said he was afraid to come any more, because he had a horrible dream night before last, and he decided he had better stay away from me. He knew nothing of promising me on the car to come to my office, nothing of his imprisonment at Vancouver (except what he thought was a dream), nothing of the beard which he had involuntarily raised while in prison, etc. In short he was X2 again. The dream he had was hazy, but he said he was behind bars and the guards made fun of him. There were a great many soldiers there. Mrs. Gilbert and I were there, too, and I had something to do with his imprisonment. This dream will be readily recognized, not as a dream, but as his real experience at Vancouver when I went to present his case to the officials May 16, at which time Mrs. Gilbert was with me. At that time, it will be remembered, I found him changed to X2 and changed him back again to X1, X2, X3.

"After finding him in X2 now again we walked to his scow near by.

"After explaining to him briefly what had happened I again hypnotized him and by the usual method changed him to X. He awoke as X and knew all as before as well as his prison experience, discharged and experience as X2 since his discharge.

"There cannot be the shadow of a doubt as to his wonderful case, which must excite the intensest interest of all students of psychology, which may yet illumine the mysterious workings of Mind."

Dr. Gilbert hypnotized Hood and transferred him from one to other personality before the military officers at Vancouver. Other physicians of equal reputation, at first incredulous, now declare that their own observation of Hood has removed all their doubts.

The Hood of one personality resembled the Hood of another much less than do many distant cousins, said Dr. Gilbert before Hood was released from prison.

"X1 was in perfect good health, jovial, bright, knew the names and addresses of all his relatives and could give an accurate account of his boyhood days. He had rather accurate dates for everything. Was eager to educate himself, though he was only an ordinary laborer as a rule.

"X2 was quiet in disposition, preferred to be alone, had spells of sleepiness, always had some headache, knew but little of his relatives, and that was learned subsequent to age eighteen; a good mechanic, ambitious, and inventive; desirous for an education and distinctly religious in character.

"X3 was a typical tramp, largely due to the fact, no doubt, that he began life where he did. Though eighteen years old at Chickamauga, when asked where he came from he answered, "Didn't come from any place." Worked only enough to exist; severe pains in head and abdomen; always hungry; all in all, a lower type of man by far.

"All three personalities had a remarkable memory for details. The same name was retained in all. In addition to the three personalities described there was still another state which may possibly be a fourth, but each time he was thrown into it he was semi-delirious and no definite information could be obtained from him. The place of this state, in its relation to the personalities described, is difficult to determine. In it he raved with pain and was always thirsty." This state may account in part for some of the gaps remaining unfilled.

Changed by the Accident.

"In his united self he is radically different from what he was previous to the barge accident. Previously taciturn and fond of solitude, in his united self he became social and settled moodiness disappeared. He still manifests the old ambition for an education, though at present he chafes under the monotony of his wait in prison until the routine of Government formalities shall be accomplished. Under the circumstances his ultimate release would seem to be a mere matter of time, but the worry and mental excitement incidental to his arrest give him almost continuous headaches, and at times plunge him into a despondency which makes him wish he were dead.

"After the fusion of his three lives the first time, a minute and detailed history of his boyhood and early manhood was taken in order to see if any cause of the trouble could be detected. As a boy he received very rought treatment from his father, but no definite cause of his condition could be discovered. Though changes of personality occurred two or three times under what seemed to be a definite factor, such as the fight at Glenrock and the fever at Chickamauga, yet these things cannot be considered the sole cause of the trouble.

"The changes from one personality to another were at times gradual, instead of abrupt. At times memory of one stream of consciousness faded out gradually as the other came into prominence. One of the changes which occurred in my presence was of this type. Several times in one personality short preceding experiences were vaguely recalled and thought to have been dreams, showing that at times either the different selves overlapped, as it were, to some extent, leaving the period of change indistinct in each, or else—what is more probable—the events supposed to have been dreamed were experiences of the same self under a sort of psycho-epileptic seizure.

Since Hood's release from the military prison he has lived in Portland on a scow that lies near the east approach of the Burnside street bridge.

He is industrious, he seems to be a normal young man. But no human being can tell at what instant he will be transformed into one of his other selves.

So it has been proved Hood had certainly had three personalities.

Dr. Gilbert tells of another, a semi-delirious state, which may possibly be a fourth.

Hood's "united self" is undoubtedly a fifth personality.

The World's Sunday Magazine reprints Dr. J. Allen Gilbert's record of his investigations on this case by permission of Dr. Gilbert himself and of Dr. George F. Shrady, of the Medical Record.

SUBTLE OCCULT FORCES.

Find Expression Where Crimes Have Been Committed.

"On all that it can reach within these walls—sentient or inanimate, living or dead—as moves the needle, so work my will! Accursed be the house, and restless be the dwellers therein!"

As related in the Chicago Daily News, does the anathema of Lord Lytton's "Brain," malignant and destructive, its dreams put into action, "invested with a semi-substance," battling against the countervailing resistance of human will, brood upon the "castle" of H. H. Holmes to the discomfort and terror of some of its occupants? Since Frederick Bartholin's announced intention of living in the Calumet avenue house, surrounded with such recent evil associations, many have asked themselves or others whether the influence of crime, manifesting itself in ways not understood, can hang over the scene of tragedy long after the event itself has ceased to be of interest.

Neighbors of the Bartholins believe it can and their views are re-enforced by present experiences of persons now living in the great rambling structure at West 63d and Wallace streets, Chicago, wherein 1895 so many of the victims of the arch-murderer, Herman Mudgett, or as he was better known, H. H. Holmes, met their ghastly doom.

In a suite on the third floor of the partly renovated building, about the center of the western portion, live Charles Hines and his wife, Cora. Opening off from Mrs. Hines' bedroom is a shaft or chute descending to the subterranean passages wherein Holmes prowled in the days of his dark career. It is known that down this shaft he lowered the bodies of those whom he slew in the "castle," to incinerate their flesh and prepare their bones for articulation, as was his custom.

Since Mrs. Hines, who recently moved into the flat, has slept in this bedroom she has been disturbed constantly by one horrifying dream—a dream which, with unimportant variations, still takes one fearful form—of plunging down the shaft. Strange to say, the dreaded influence does not pass with the night. During the day, though she feels wholly at ease in her living rooms, whenever she enters the bedroom, she says, she is impelled by some irresistible fascination to approach the window opening upon the chute. At the same time a sense of terror creeps over her, a fear that she is about fall headlong down that Via Dolorosa, which in the past probably engulfed the forms of Minnie and Annie Williams, Mrs. Julia L. Conner and her daughter Pearl, Miss Emeline Sigrand and perhaps others of whom no record remains.

Mrs. Hines says she is not of a nervous temperament and, being overcome with amazement at the peculiar sensations she has experienced, she determined recently to test the effect of a night in the room upon another. An opportunity offered itself in a visit of her mother, Mrs. M. Hildreth, whom, with no hint of her purpose, she installed in the apartment.

In the morning her mother emerged pale and agitated after a troubled night and recounted a dream, in all respects, like that which had afflicted her daughter—an incoherent and formless nightmare in which the only decided sensation was one of dropping into gloomy depths to some mysterious and harrowing fate.

The shaft to-day, as in 1895, makes quick connection between the rooms on all floors and the basement wherein the bodies were either cremated or buried deep in quicklime and it is only in the immediate vicinity of the descent that the inexplicable feeling of dread is said to steal over one. The emotion is felt in no other part of the house.

In this respect the fact parallels the invention of Lord Lytton, who, in his story of "The Haunted and the Haunters," ascribes the recurring blood-chilling events of the narrative to the influence emanating from a secret room which served as a starting point or receptacle for the "shadow" cast upon it by the baleful "brain," that even in death would not relax its hold. Whether the famous shaft of the "castle" is under the malign power of Holmes or is merely the abiding place of spectral influences sent in uneasy warning by one or more of his victims Mrs. Hines does not pretend to say, but she is convinced that only the obliteration of the grewsome passage will remove, or at least drive to the underground chambers, the subtle "power" which has disturbed her, waking or asleep, on every invasion of its domain.

I have no doubt but what this house where so many crimes have been committed, where so much heart-rending sorrow has been caused, is so thoroughly saturated with villainous psychic forces that the above phenomenon was manifested — "plunging down the shaft."

But no less remarkable was the strange connection—the wonderful occult bond of loving sympathy existing between the twin-sisters, Mrs. Emma Hax Smith and Mrs. Bertha Hax Foreman, of St. Joseph, Mo., as related in the New York World.

They looked alike, they had identical dispositions, tastes, inclinations. Truly can it be said that, as children, they "shared each other's joys and sorrows." Indeed, when one suffered physical pain, the other's sympathetic nature seemed to share it. As young girls they were inseparable, as married women live near each other, nor did new ties, they live near each other, nor did new ties, new duties, new affections, diminish their intense sisterly love—"twin-sisterly" love, if that expression conveys a better idea of the strength of their mutual devotion.

Mrs. Smith fell ill not long ago—her physicians were intensely puzzled to find that Mrs. Foreman exhibited the same symptoms as her sister, but was entirely free from their cause.

It became necessary to operate on Mrs. Smith in the attempt to save her from a quick and agonizing death. She was anaesthetized and the operation was performed, without the slightest pain to her, of course.

It was Mrs. Foreman who suffered. She knew her twin was under the knife, and no merciful anaesthetic blunted her senses or emotions or dulled her acute sympathy with her sister.

It was Mrs. Foreman who felt, or thought she felt, the sharp steel severing her nerves, who endured every terror, every agony from which her sister was preserved by unconsciousness. And, mark you, there is no difference between believing that you suffer and actual suffering.

The operation was unsuccessful in saving Mrs. Smith's life; she soon died.

Remarkable to say, while her twin sister was passing away, Mrs. Foreman continued to be desperately ill.

And yet more remarkable—when Mrs. Smith died Mrs. Foreman's sufferings ceased. But her body had been so racked, her mind had been so tortured, her sympathy had been under a tension so exquisitely painful that she, too, was very near death.

Such are the plain facts that now intensely interest physicians and all else who know them. The father of these twin sisters was the late Louis Hax, of St. Joseph, who made a fortune in the manufacture of furniture. Mrs. Smith was the wife of Harry A. Smith, president and general manager of the Smith-Hax Furniture Company. The sisters were educated with every refinement, which, perhaps, rendered them more susceptible to nervous impressions. Both have been surrounded with everything that money can buy and occupied a fine social position. Mr. Smith's home is a handsome brown-stone house on Farson street, in the fashionable part of the city. Almost across the street is Mrs. Foreman's residence.

Mrs. Foreman and her friends do not try to explain why she, who was in perfect health, fell ill, while she suffered vicariously when her sister lay unconscious under the knife, or why she ceased to suffer when her sister died. They know only that these strange things happened. The operation on Mrs. Smith was performed in the Ensworth Hospital, amid surroundings that no house, however luxurious, could afford. Where every surgical precaution looking to success could be taken. The surgeons in the hospital know the facts as here related.

"I had never known of such a case before," said Dr. D. A. Martin, one of the surgeons. "I think Mrs. Foreman's suffering can be accounted for only on the theory that it was caused by the strong sympathy that existed between these two sisters.

"Properly speaking, Mrs. Foreman was not ill at all; she suffered no real pain. But her sympathetic mind was wrought up to the highest pitch and she felt, or thought she felt, the pain her sister would have suffered had she been operated upon without the use of chloroform. It is an absolute certainty that Mrs. Smith did not suffer pain while on the operating table or afterward. She was utterly unconscious to all feeling; her death resulted from shock. Mrs. Foreman's suffering, therefore, was caused by an overwrought mind."

As has been said, the sisters' strong love for each other, remarkable in their childhood, was still more remarkable in their womanhood. Mrs. Foreman married and went with her husband to Denver, but so strong was her attachment for her sister that they managed to see each other frequently. Although hundreds of miles apart, they often believed they knew each other's thoughts, and felt that in their mutual sympathy they were very close together. After her marriage Mrs. Foreman travelled much abroad and was absent for months, but communication between the twin sisters was never broken. They cabled to each other at frequent intervals, and flashed their thoughts to each other under the sea.

Often after their reunion they found that, while they were separated, they had been doing the same things or thinking of the same subjects, at the same time. Learning this, their friends will think they had been in telepathic communication. But Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Foreman positively disclaimed the possession of telepathic powers. They said:

"We are exactly alike in everything; we love each other, therefore we can almost read each other's minds."

Their physicians say they cannot yet tell whether Mrs. Smith's death will have a permanent effect on Mrs. Foreman, who naturally is a strong, vigorous and healthy young woman. Her profound grief, they say, may result in nothing serious, but, on the other hand it may affect her deeply and permanently.

Who can fully fathom the occult world?

No one.

Of the subtle forces therein, man has only an exceedingly limited knowledge. The 19th century will no doubt be regarded as the beginning of an Occult Age that will to a certain extent reveal many mysteries now but little understood.

OCCULT INVESTIGATOR.

Strange Manifestations.

Two miles northwest of Bryant, Jay Co., Ind., is the farm owned by J. R. Sanders. Wife and I went there to ascertain facts. The house is one story and a half; good size for a farm house. The family at present consists of mother and son. The father has passed to spirit life. The manifestations were first seen by the little grandson (only four years of age). The child was out playing. As he was approaching the house he saw a man looking at him through the window. This window is in the north room, upstairs. He ran into the house and told his grandma that there was a man looking at him through the window. Ever since April faces and forms of people come and go. One day you can see one class of phenomena, then a change. No sun and no direct rays of light can strike the window; it is in the shade. I saw three distinct faces, and each one different. You get away from the window forty feet and you can see better. This window is in the north room, the room in which Mr. Sanders passed away. The family is in good standing and members of the Campbellite church.

Mrs. Sanders says she saw several young ladies in the window. I saw two faces close together. This window consists of 12 panes of glass. Every Sunday the yard is full of people going to see the faces on or in the glass.

Pennville, Ind. R. W. BOWMAN.

"Meatless Dishes." Very useful. Price 10 cents.

FROM INDIA TO THE PLANET MARS.

A MOST REMARKABLE WORK.

Fascinating, Interesting and Instructive.

By Th. Flournoy, Professor of Psychology in the University of Geneva.

"This is an account of the experiments with the 'Geneva Medium,' Helene Smith. In her trances she lives the dual existence of an Indian princess and of an inhabitant of the planet Mars. Professor Flournoy and his fellow scientists have for more than five years experimented with these astounding physical phenomena."

This is a work of thrilling interest. It has excited great attention in this country and in Europe. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

OLD AND NEW PSYCHOLOGY

By W. J. Colville. Reports of twenty-four distinct lectures, recently delivered in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia and other prominent cities of the United States, have contributed the basis of this volume. Price, $1.00.

Out of the Depths Into the Light.

By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price, 25 cents.

THE TALMUD Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry, and legends. Also brief sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polano. 359 pp. Price, cloth, $1

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price, 15c.

Practical Methods to Insure Success.

A valuable little work, full of practical instruction in matters pertaining to physical, mental and spiritual health. Worth many times its cost. Price 10 cents.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

Crimes of Preachers.

An interesting book along its line and useful to Spiritualists attacked by the clergy and their followers. Price 25 cents; for sale at this office.

DEATH AND THE AFTER LIFE

THE PRINCIPLES OF EVOLUTION EXPLAINED AND APPLIED.

A Series of Instructive Lessons by A. J. Weaver.

LAW OF ADAPTATION.

The old idea of the Universe and especially of every organized form both vegetable and animal, was, that it was a machine, and came into existence by the hand and from the mind of a Master Mechanic, just like a steam engine or the Brooklyn bridge. This is no doubt the world-wide impression with the masses, and by some it is considered almost irreverence to God to deny or even question it, and an essential part of religion to teach it.

If a child asks its mother what makes the lily white, the rose red, or the pansy many colored, most mothers will reply without hesitation, "Because God made it so, my child." If the lover of nature, in a pensive mood, wanders through the wood, stops and breaks a branch and, as he looks at it, wonders why the maple leaf is of one shape, the oak of another, and the beach leaf of another, or, as he casts his eyes upward, why the pine tree has needles while the walnut has leaves, or as he enters the garden, why apples grow on trees while currants grow on bushes and strawberries on vines, or as he plucks a rose and wounds his finger, why the rose has thorns and the lily does not, or, as he inhales its sweetness, why one flower is fragrant and another nauseous, or why the vine creeps on the ground or climbs the fence while the shade tree spurns assistance and stands alone; or, if he is a traveler and goes where nature is wild, and wonders why elephants live in warm countries but die in cold, or why the polar bear lives amid ice and snow but dies in the warmth of the tropics, or why the kangaroo is found in Australia and the sloth in South America, and nowhere else, or why a bird has two legs and a dog four, or a bird has wings and a dog has not, why kittens and pigs are born in litters, but colts and calves singly; why a dog or cat drinks water by lapping, while a cow or horse drink like a man; why a negro has almost always black hair and all leopards have spots while the white man has variously colored hair and the horse varies in hue; why a fish is covered with scales and not with hair, or why a horse is covered with hair and not with fur, or why a cat is covered with fur instead of having a bare skin like the trout and the human race? To these and a thousand similar questions which arise in the enquiring mind only one answer has ever been of universal acceptance through all the long ages of the past and that answer has been, "God wanted each animal to be just as it is, and He made every object exactly as he wanted it,"

Evolution, however, attempts to answer these questions in a different way, without reference to God. It teaches that to those and to all similar questions an answer can be found in nature; that all forms of organized life with all their organs and parts are but the results of the operation of natural laws; laws also with which man is familiar but to which he has failed to look to find adequate answers to his questions.

Evolution attempts to do for organized matter just what science has already done for unorganized matter that is, to account for it and all its phenomena by the operation of principles existing in nature.

The time once was when there was no other explanation for the existence of the rainbow, the rain fall, the earthquake, the lightning stroke, the thunder's roar, the eclipse of the sun, the ocean tide, the fall of meteors, the echo of the human voice from hill to hill, the rising and setting of the sun, the changes of the moon, the movements of the stars, the change of the seasons, day and night, the drifting clouds as though alive, the winds, the storms, the sleet, the frost, the snow, the ice, the fog, the mist, the reddened anger of the sky, the destructive fury of the tornado, the strange caper of the whirlwind among the dead leaves, the fantastic figures of the frost on the window pane, the sinking of the sun daily towards the south in its course for six months ending with the 21st of December, and then its daily return for the next six months. The time was when there was but one explanation for these strange phenomena, which filled the ignorant mind with superstitious fear and wonder and blind spiritual devotion; that they were the direct acts of a Supreme Being invisible to the eye.

All these things which I have mentioned belong to the realm of unorganized matter. Now, inasmuch as science has demonstrated that all the forms, changes, and phenomena of unorganized matter are wholly the result of natural instead of supernatural causes, so it is not improbable that all organized forms with all their parts, functions, and phenomena, have also natural causes rather than supernatural. Is not this more than probable? Evolution is only the continuance of the work, which science has done in the inorganic field of nature, into the organic field of nature. It therefore has the prestige and trend of past scientific thought on its side to begin with.

ADAPTATION.

The presence of adaptation of part to part in organized bodies was considered proof that the bodies were mechanically made. The argument was this: That inasmuch as the fact that every part of the steam engine—from the smallest to the greatest—is specially adapted to every other part, is proof that it came from an intelligence outside itself, so the fact that every part of an organized form is adapted to every other part as, for example, the liver to secreting bile, is equal proof that it, too, came into existence from the mind and hand of a Creator from without.

WHAT EVOLUTION DOES.

Evolution accepts the presence of adaptation in all organized bodies, of part to part, and of all to some end, but it explains this presence differently. Instead of its being put there and doing its work by a special power from without, as is the case with the engine, it is there and does its work by the indwelling of life principles within.

Not only does one part of a body adapt itself to another part, but the entire body adapts itself to its environments and to any change in its environments by its own inherent power. In this way low organized forms gradually change into higher and more complex forms as the forms are thrown into new surroundings which call for new efforts. The law of self preservation demands this.

HE EYE—WHENCE IT CAME.

Let us select any organ of an animal form—the eye for example—and see how the first eye came into existence in the animal world under this principle. The bottom of the sea swarms with minute animal forms of every shape and variety imaginable. They also abound in stagnant pools, swamps, decaying matter and even in living flesh often as in swine. Millions of them are too small to be seen by the eye. They are called Protozoa by the naturalist. They are animals of a single cell. They arise from protoplasm in water bottoms and were the first form of animal life on earth and for innumerable ages the only form in existence.

The lowest of this order of animal life is called the Moneron. This animal is a small globule of jelly-like substance with no eyes, no ears, no nose, no mouth, no head nor brain, no nervous system, no bony structure, no heart, no sex organs, no liver but only a stomach and the sense of touch. It is but little else than a stomach and probably knows no desire but that of hunger. Its stomach is all over it and within it. When atom of food is drifted by the water against it, it begins to turn outside in, taking the food inside, where it remains till digested, and then the animal turns back into its normal condition. To this series of life belong the germs of all the animal forms that have ever existed on earth, including man.

Fish which are born and live in dark caves do not have eyes. So had these animals been living in a world of darkness their natures would never have needed eyes; so would never have desired or demanded eyes, and eyes would never have come to them. But living in a world of light, their natures began to seek the light, as nature does in the vegetable world, and, little by little, imperceptibly, the formation of an orifice for an eye, began to develop through which the smallest ray of light could come. This minute opening was all there was to the eye at first and probably for ages. Through it no objects could be seen nor distance measured because it contained no lenses. It simply afforded a means by which a glimmer of light was able to reach the optic nerve by which the animal could discern a difference between light and darkness. That was all the eye meant in the Protozoan or first age of animal life on earth. It was only the beginning of an eye. The lenses came long afterwards when it became more needful for the animal to distinguish objects and measure distance.

And the lenses came very slowly from a very crude beginning. The slightest improvement made through animal instinct in one age was transferred by the law of heredity to the next. Age by age showed an improvement, but it was very slight. Any change of environment by which new needs were created helped the improvement. In the lapse of long ages what might be called an eye thus came to exist, but even then it was a crude affair. As animal life rose into higher conditions, new improvements appeared and were transmitted to the offspring.

But even to-day the eye has by no means reached perfection, though in some people and in some animals it is nearer perfection than in others. Some people have such poor eyes they can scarcely distinguish color, and some see objects with less distinctness than others. One of the great scientists of the world, Helmholtz, has said, if he should contract with a manufacturer for a set of lenses and he did not make a better set than is found in the eye he should not hesitate to refuse to take them. The skill of man in inventing the telescope, the microscope and various kinds of eye glasses, has in part made up for the natural imperfections or deficiencies in the human eye. The principles of Evolution in a nutshell, is, that animals do not see because they have eyes, but they have eyes because they wanted to see.

THE HUMAN EAR.

The origin of the ear, not only in man but in all mammals, or animals which suckle their young, offers a fine illustration of another method which nature adopts in her processes of production. The distant progenitors of mammals were water animals—not true fishes but lower than the true fish—and had gills for breathing air in the water. As they began to practice getting out of the water and little by little living on land, the gills became by degrees useless. Some of them remained and are found to-day in mammals as rudimentary organs. The young, before they are born, possess these gills in the sides of the neck, and there are examples of children being born with them plainly visible and still open through which water would pass.

Two of the gills, however, one on each side, were capable in a slight degree of receiving sound waves from the air. These two therefore did not go into disuse and waste away to mere rudiments like the others, but continued to be of use to the animal for hearing. By constant use they became better adapted to the reception of sound and in the lapse of ages through natural processes they became the ears of all mammals.

THE LUNGS.

Every fish possesses what is called an air-bladder. This is a vessel filled with air by which the fish maintains its equilibrium in the water. Fish breathe through their gills. When the progenitors of man and of all mammals, which at first were water animals and possessed air-bladders, began to live little by little on land, their gills and air-bladders became worthless for what they were previously used. But the animal needed lungs and must have lungs or perish. Fortunately the air-bladder was full of air, as are our lungs when we inhale; so in a crude way the air-bladder began to act in the capacity of a lung. In the lapse of time it adapted itself better and better to its new vocation and became a fairly good breathing apparatus.

There are many reasons for believing that lungs came in this way, two of which I will give. One is that the air-bladder in the fish is in a similar position and is of a similar structure as the lungs in land animals. Another is that there are certain fish which, while living in the water and breathing the air in the water through their gills like common fish, also come frequently to the surface and breathe the free air through their air-bladders. These facts tend to show that an organ, used by nature for a long time for a certain definite purpose, may have its function changed by the animal and be used for an entirely different purpose. Darwin gives many similar cases in the lower orders relating to other organs. Is not this the true explanation for the existence of the law of adaptation which is everywhere visible in organic nature?

RELIGION AND ASTRONOMY

A Communication from Dr. Stevenson, of Vancouver, B. C.

I do not know how much progressive thinking has been going on here; most people think more than they say. Man is a multifaced animal; but the influence here has been on the whole adverse to our—not faith, but knowledge.

This has been owing, as you have been told already, to fakeism—swindlers in our garb. I have, however, been going ahead in my own way, writing for the local secular press. In this way I avoid carrying "coal to Newcastle," dropping radical thoughts right down into the bosom of the churches.

This I have been doing for many years, just as if I was grown for the purpose. I have settled down on two subjects scarcely touched upon in the radical ranks. These are "Sun Worship in its Relation to Christianity," and "Christianity in Relation to the Strong Drink Problem."

I wish to stir up the Spiritual speakers in regard to both these matters. It is my opinion that the hardest blows can be struck against old superstition from these standpoints. It is nothing new to say that Christianity is only a phase of Sun Worship, but I believe I have struck on a way of presenting it which makes it a most effective weapon. To go off into the starry heavens is to risk losing your audience in incomprehensible abstractions, and reminds me of a man looking for his hat when it is on his head. After an introduction on Mythology in general, in which I point out that savage man in all ages personified every thing, I proceed thus:

The Sun, the great Deity, was said to be a child of the Virgin Dawn, a sufficiently immaculate conception. His birth is heralded by a star and He is received with acclamation by the hosts of heaven. These, however, find it necessary speedily to disappear. It is He who ascendeth into heaven or the heavens and descendeth into the underworld.

He is the chap who not only walketh on the water but dances on it; that calms the storm; that makes many loaves out of few; many fishes out of one; turneth water into wine. He is the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer, constituting a Trinity in One. His holy day is Sun's-day or Sunday.

He is the great Conqueror. There are wars in the heavens always, but He is always the victor. He overcometh even the grave of night, and is the resurrection and the life. In Him (the Sun) we live, move and have our being. He is the Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world—the "Light of Lights."

And who so well fitted to become the judge of the quick and the dead as He whose sleepless eye, an eye which never shuts even to wind, is ever gazing on His creatures. This Father who art in Heaven!

In short the Solar Mythology is identical with the Christian theology. I wish all radical speakers to take up and add to this subject, and try it on their audiences. It takes the bottom right out of their stupid belief.

It should be pointed out that from worshiping the Sun, mankind varied their attentions to worshiping men or persons who were said to possess the qualities of the Sun; and these persons or their pictures were marked by the Sun's rays being placed about their heads. The Sun being worshiped as the Savior of the World, so these impersonations were also said to have been Saviors, the twelve apostles, representing the twelve signs of the Zodiac. A little consideration will add more illustrations of the identity of the Christian theology with the Solar Mythology.

With regard to my second theme I beg to enclose a letter recently printed from me by one of our local secular papers.

One of our Baptist clergymen was persuaded to lecture on temperance. His lectures were of the usual type—horrors of strong drink, pauperism, crime, etc., all true enough but only half the story. Immediately after his first lecture I handed him personally a lecture of my own on "Religion and Rum;" but he took but little notice of it, his second lecture being similar to the first. I now attacked him in the "News Advertiser," a respectable and conservative daily paper, suggesting that he tell the whole truth as I had taught him. He gave a third lecture ostensibly to answer me, but did not do so. I now gave him and the public this enclosed letter which I wish you to republish. It speaks for itself and indicates my line of attack on this subject.

And so it has come about that I have been in an isolated manner, and in my own fields, working for public enlightenment.

The chief answer I have had has been attempts at boycotting, the principal tooth left in the Christian head.

But I believe in later years I have been receiving help from invisible sources, placing me beyond the power of the boycotter. Having after many years helped me in this manner, some other road seems opening for me.

Meantime I close this letter. My subscription is, I suppose, out for The Progressive Thinker. I cannot renew it just now, as I am preparing to visit Japan. If I tarry there long or am likely to do so I must have The Progressive Thinker, to the great merits of which I have pleasure in adding my humble testimony.

Dr. Stevenson's Letter to the News-Advertiser.

I was present on Sunday evening to hear Rev. Dr. Grant's third lecture on the liquor question—"Religion and Rum."

I had great expectations after the information and suggestions I had given him that he would have the courage to tell the whole story but I was disappointed. He did not deny my statements for he dare not do that. I have taken the precaution to sound the clergy on the subject and I know that there is no answer.

In 1884 I delivered a lecture in Victoria on "Religion and Ruin," throwing the dreadful facts of Christian drunkenness and heathen sobriety in the face of the Church. I thought then that I was original in the matter but having published the lecture I sent a copy to the late Professor Grant of Kingston University, when he told me that nearly all intelligent persons knew it was all true. Most of the clergy know all about it. But this knowledge is kept from the people, in general. What are these terrible facts? They are in part and mainly as follows:

1. There is a drunken area of this earth; it is Christian; and a sober area which is heathen or non-Christian.

2. The line of demarcation between these two areas is sharp and well defined. The drunken area is the Christian area precisely, not only with reference to countries and peoples but even to communities. Abyssinia, is the only old Christian country in Africa. It is an abyss of drunkenness while all around are sober countries. Turkey is the only non-Christian country in Europe and the only sober country.

EXPLANATION

With Reference to the Coming National Convention.

Learning that there seems to be many comments, and some dissatisfaction expressed in regard to the matter of the hall secured for the convention of the N. S. A., I feel it only right the friends should understand fully why Berkeley Hall was engaged with its limited accommodations. The first preference for a place for the convention to meet, selected by the directors of the Massachusetts Association, was the First Spiritual Temple, Newbury and Exeter streets, as they thought that this was a building belonging exclusively to Spiritualists, but circumstances over which we have no control rendered this impossible, therefore this place had to be abandoned. The next choice was Paul Revere Hall, Mechanics' Building, but upon going to see about that as early as last March it was found that the Mechanics' Fair was to open about the 22d of September, and last over into the last of October or 1st of November, and all the halls in the building were reserved for that event.

Chickering Hall was the next choice The committeed waited upon the superintendent and learned that it would be impossible to have that hall as the college would have the use of the halls day times, and as the convention meets four days with three sessions a day, the friends will readily see that this also was impossible. We were not in despair nevertheless, and Steinhiert and Berkeley Halls were left to consider, with preference for Steinhiert in regard to location; Berkeley in preference for seating capacity and ante-rooms. As committee on halls I was given full power at the last directors' meeting held at that time in May to choose the one of the two I thought the best, but knowing that there were many to satisfy, I felt it would be better to consult with some one in authority, and I waited until our president of the N. S. A. arrived in Boston on a flying visit, and I laid the whole matter before him as it stood, and Mr. Barrett told me by all means under the circumstances to engage Berkeley Hall, as it was the best thing to do. The directors of the State Association also thought that some one society sould have the responsibility of the rent, and they did not wish the committee to incur any debt they could not meet, and as the response to the call for aid toward the hall expenses is coming very slowly, it would seem that they were very wise in the caution. I hope this will explain a matter that seemed obscure. J. B. HATCH, JR.

Dorchester, Mass. Hall Committee.

And to-day, said Canon Farrar, "When a drunken man is seen issuing forth in Nazareth, the Mohammedans point the finger of scorn at him and say 'That man is a Christian,'" The only drunkards to-day in Palestine are in the little Christian communities.

Mr. Grant said nothing of the sober countries; nothing of why they were sober, nor why we should of all mankind have to bear the burden of drunkenness, and this, too, despite the fact that I personally handed him a copy of my Victoria lecture immediately after his first lecture with all the facts. En passant, I will loan any one a copy who wishes to have the whole thing dished up to him.

Another momentous fact is that those sober countries owe their sobriety to Prohibition—not to prohibition in civil law but in religion!

Three-fourths of mankind are sober through prohibition and yet this splendid fact is never mentioned! To even allude to it might enlighten the people and thus make the collections of tithes more difficult for this Prohibition is heathen.

The fight between religion and alcohol is older than history. To discuss it thoroughly would lead into mythology especially Sun Worship. The Sun-God being the manufacturer of wine, it was called the liquor of the God or Gods—the nectar and ambrosia of the Sun worshiping Greeks and other people. It thus became associated with religion—the most damnable alliance that has ever cursed mankind. Surely, any sane person must see that alcohol is the very worst partner religion could have. One pulls upward, the other downward. Alcoholic and prohibitive religion have warred from the earliest times.

It has been the terrible misfortune of Caucasian race to have had nothing but alcoholic religions and it has never been else than drunken. Surely the thoughtful reader can now see the light breaking on the subject. Now the blatant prohibitionist of to-day, knows nothing of the world's greatest Prohibitionists. Let me tell him. They were Mahomet and Buddha. Gibbon told the world long years ago that Mahomet was the greatest because his Prohibition was unqualified. It was clear cut and unequivocal, and many thousands of millions have thereby been able to live at least sober lives. Buddha has ten commandments, five of which are for those who lead religious lives, and to these only, did the mandament, "Thou shalt not drink intoxicating liquor" apply particularly. But the people generally in deep reverence for his saintly life, took the commandment to heart also and Buddha backed up by Confucius, Laotse (head of state religion of China) and Shintoism in Japan, and later on reinforced by Mahomet, has brought sobriety to the vast millions of Asia and Africa. It is a shame that even the poor Chinaman is sober and he won't be corrupted. But I fear for Japan. Let me warn them of the dangerous character of the man with the bottle and the book! Beware!

The man with the barrel is behind him. Curiously enough the agent of damnation has been made the agent of salvation. The ancient Hindus said that drinking wine conferred immortality. But what would you think of a man talking about music for three or four hours and saying nothing about Haydn or Handel or Verdi? And so of every profession. Yet Mr. Grant has talked for hours, yea, I suppose all his life, about Prohibition and has not even mentioned Mahomet or Buddha or the others. As well describe the American Revolution and leave Washington out. And he says that he would like the saloons to be built alongside the churches. I say amen, but would suggest that the contiguous walls be of glass so that he and others like him might touch glasses with the saloon man in brotherly love as they deal the liquor out.

Now the sane reader must see the condition under which drunkenness survives and flourishes. It is a religion having alcohol in alliance with it. Christianity is the only surviving alcoholic religion and Christians are the only surviving drunkards.

A HOME FOR MEDIUMS.

Another Noble Proposition by Theodore J. Mayer.

Abous eight months ago, one of our best workers, and also one of our most liberal men of the far West, and myself donated $750 apiece towards a Mediums' Home, with the understanding that the rest of the Spiritualists of the United States should contribute a sum equally as large, viz., $1,500, towards putting in repair and making ready for occupancy the building which the N. S. A. had purchased at Reed City, Mich., adjoining the Sanitarium of our good brother and energetic worker, Dr. Andrew B. Spinney of the same city. After many urgent calls, and many letters written by our president and secretary, and kindly published by our Spiritual papers, we succeeded in collecting $500, or only one-third the amount that two individuals had contributed and paid into the treasury of the N. S. A. This was very discouraging, indeed, and yet, —although the Spiritualists of the whole country had not complied with our agreement—both of us concluded to let our $1,500 remain in the treasury, and to use it for the purposes of helping some of our former public mediums, who had labored faithfully for the Cause, but who are now in their declining years in needy circumstances, and thus to keep them from absolute want, after their lives spent for the advancement of humanity.

Most religious denominations take care of their ministers, and even the members of their congregations, who come to want, and only the Spiritualists —who through their mediums are permitted to come into closer communion with their departed loved ones than any other religious body—have permitted some of their great workers to die in want, and some of them to expire in the poor house. This state of affairs should certainly not be allowed to exist in our ranks. It is a shame and disgrace to our Cause, and we never will succeed until we are just to our aged and infirm mediums, and provide a home for them in their declining years.

I have recently given a great deal of thought to this matter, and although not a rich man by any means, have concluded to come once more before the Spiritualists of this country with a proposition—which might certainly be considered liberal on the part of anyone—which if accepted and acted upon by the rest of the Spiritualists will not only secure a Home for our Mediums, but at the same time, will considerably enlarge the N. S. A. headquarters for its future valuable work for humanity—in fact it will actually more than double the present office room, the library accommodations, and the present apartments for dwelling purposes. In short, I propose to donate to the N. S. A. the spacious dwelling house or residence No. 602 Penna. Ave. S. E., which adjoins the present headquarters of the N. S. A. at 600 Penna. Ave. S. E., in fee simple, if the Spiritualists at large will raise $15,000 in cash between now and the close of the convention in Boston, October 24th, 1902. The house I propose to donate is a beautiful structure, built of red brick with brown stone trimmings and a mansard roof; it has three stories and a splendid basement, contains thirteen large rooms and a spacious bath room, with all modern improvements. It faces two streets—to-wit., the front faces Penna. Ave. S. E. and the rear faces C. St. S. E.—thereby making each room a front room. This house has a beautiful double salon parlor, 14 feet wide and about 40 feet deep, the floor of which is on a perfect level with floors of the offices of the N. S. A. headquarters. To make it all one floor, space for office and library purposes all that would have to be done is to cut a door or an arch between the present office at 600, and the hall of 602—the house which I propose to donate to the National Association, under the conditions which I have already stated. Thus, we will have a floor space of about 1,200 feet in all for office and library purposes, and still reserve the balance of the house for dwelling purposes, thereby still enabling us to receive a revenue by renting it to an officer of the N. S. A. or to some other Spiritualist, until we have grown sufficiently large to need the whole building for office purposes. The houses, 600 and 602, have large halls and these halls and the parlors have large sliding doors, thus enabling us to have the four rooms thrown open into one large and grand room of about 1,200 feet of floor space. All the rooms on the basement floor have steel ceilings, the whole house—of 602—has been newly papered and painted throughout, at a cost of $300, and it looks really beautiful. It is rented at present to a very nice family, who, no doubt, will take excellent care of the place, until such time that the N. S. A. needs it, which I hope will be very soon.

At present we can do very well without it, thereby collecting rent of $600 per year, which added to the rent of $20 per month, which our secretary pays, would give the N. S. A. an income of about $840.00 per annum in rent alone, or 4 per cent. on $21,000, besides the use of the present office and library by the N. S. A.

Dear Mr. Editor:—I send you under separate cover, by express, the front elevation of both buildings, the present headquarters, No. 600, and the adjoining house, 602, or by me called "The Annex," which I propose to donate. The front of 602 is not as wide as that of 600, it is but 20 feet front, but the land and house are much deeper and longer than the present headquarters; the interior wood work is all in natural wood, and the grounds and building cost me about fifteen thousand dollars. Therefore, I request the Spiritualists at large to contribute fifteen thousand to the Mediums' Home—contributions to be sent to the N. S. A., 600 Penna. Ave. S. E., Washington, D. C. I only ask them to give as much together, as I am willing to individually contribute. Who is the Spiritualist who would not be glad for the N. S. A., and the Cause, to have fine buildings and the best of accommodations for headquarters in the Capitol City of the United States? Thoughts are Things, and fine and impressive appearing headquarters will have a powerful psychological effect upon all who come in contact, not only with our officers, but with any intelligent Spiritualist in the land.

Now then, Dear Editor, kindly give the foregoing lines and the front elevation space in your valuable paper, and accept my sincere thanks for the same, in advance, and may the Spiritualists of the United States be prompted to be liberal and meet my offer at once. Let us do our charity work whilst we are living, and not wait until we have passed over only to find that our wishes were disregarded by our kindred, and that our wills were contested in the courts. Let us do our charity work whilst we can personally superintend it, and know it is done to our liking, and then have the great pleasure of seeing the beautiful seed we planted grow to a grand tree, under whose shelter all of our grand but disabled workers can be protected from the burning rays of the sun, or downpour of a raging storm.

I propose to do most of my charity work while I am in the physical form; I try to do something each day, for I wish to grow in soul, and to have such a degree of happiness as the selfish individual, who negects his opportunities to be helpful to others, has not the slightest conception of, for I have learned that while a soul is growing in unselfishness, it is also growing in power to defy the evil forces of darkness that so often try to retard progression, and becomes a force within itself that is simply marvelous. Therefore, my aim is to do good when and where I can, for the spiritual result is always happiness. Yours for the truth,

THEODORE J. MAYER.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. Chas. W. Leadbeater, of London, England, one of the leading lecturers and authors of the day on Theosophical and Ethical subjects, will deliver a course of free lectures Sunday evenings at Steinway Hall, Van Buren Street, between Michigan and Wabash Avenues, beginning October 5th, under the auspices of the Theosophical Society.

Mr. Leadbeater is a co-laborer with Mrs. Annie Besant, has studied and lectured in many countries, and has just returned from a lecturing tour through England, France, Italy, Switzerland, Holland, Sweden, etc.

A few of Mr. Leadbeater's works are: Invisible Helpers, Clairvoyance, The Astral Plane, Dreams, The Christian Creed, The Devachanic Plane, Our Relation to Children.

Among the subjects of Mr. Leadbeater's lectures will be the following:

"Man and his Bodies."

"Karma; the law of Cause and Effect."

"The Three Objects of The Theosophical Society."

"The necessity of Reincarnation."

"Character Building."

"Life after Death."

"The Nature of Theosophical Proof."

"Records of the Past."

"The Ancient Civilization and Religion of Chaldea."

"The Ancient Civilization and Religion of Peru."

"Use and Abuse of Psychic Powers."

"Possibilities of Human Consciousness."

"Ancient and Modern Buddhism."

"Clairvoyance; What it is."

"Clairvoyance; In Space."

"Clairvoyance; In time."

"Clairvoyance; How it is Developed."

"Invisible Helpers."

"Dreams."

"The Rationale of Telepathy and Mind-Cure."

"The Rationale of Mesmerism."

"The Ancient Mysteries."

"The Human Aura."

"Theosophy and Christianity."

"The Practical application of the Teachings of Theosophy to every day life."

"The Future that awaits us."

The public are cordially invited to these lectures, which are free. To those who are so inclined an opportunity to contribute toward defraying expenses of hall rent and incidentals will be given.

Those desiring to have regular sittings reserved in the boxes or other parts of the house can secure the same at a small cost for the course and contribute in this way.

The lecturer's expenses are borne by the Society at large.

The Theosophical Society was formed at New York, November 17th, 1875. Its founders believed that the best interests of Religion and Science would be promoted by the revival of Sanskrit, Pali, Zend, and other ancient literature, in which the Sages and Initiates had preserved for the use of mankind truths of the highest value respecting man and nature. A Society of an absolutely unsectarian character, whose work should be amicably prosecuted by the learned of all races, in a spirit of unselfish devotion to the research of truth, and with the purpose of disseminating it impartially, seemed likely to do much to check materialism and strengthen the waning religious spirit. The simplest expression of the objects of the Society is the following:

First—To form a nucleus of the Universal Brotherhood of Humanity, without distinction of race, creed, sex, caste or color.

Second—To encourage the study of comparative religion, philosophy and science.

Third—To investigate unexplained laws of Nature and the powers latent in man.

No person's religious opinions are asked upon his joining, nor any interference with them permitted, but every one is required, before admission, to promise to show towards his fellow-members the same tolerance in this respect as he claims for himself.

The Society, as a body, eschews politics and all subjects outside its declared sphere of work. The rules stringently forbid members to compromise its strict neutrality in these matters.

Many branches of the society have been formed in various parts of the world, and new ones are constantly being organized. Up to December 27th, 1901, 640 charters for branches had been issued.

From President Cowperthwaite.

T. A. Bland, M. D.—My Dear Doctor: I have read and re-read your book, "In the World Celestial." It is a beautiful book, beautifully written. It cannot fail to impress the reader with high thoughts and noble aspirations. While I do not find myself prepared by my past education to accept all its teachings, yet I believe that it will do good and only good, to those who read it; and if they can trust in the sublime faith taught in it, it will surely make their lives better, and happier, and illuminate their pathway to the World Celestial. I congratulate you on being able to write such a book, couched in such beautiful language, and I hope it may have a large sale among the best class of readers. Youre fraternally,

A. C. COWPERTHWAITE.

The writer of this letter is the president of the Homeopathic Post Graduate Medical College, and the leading professor in it. He is a famous medical author, and the most eminent practitioner of that school in the West, and he has won, and wears all the honors that the literary and medical colleges have to confer on distinguished scholars. Add to this, that he is a prominent official in the leading Baptist church of this city, and one can understand the high compliment he pays to Dr. Bland's book. The above book is for sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600,000 selling Dish-washers. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easily. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home.

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb has a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

JOYS BEYOND THE THRESHOLD

A Sequel to The To-morrow of Death.

By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French. The To-morrow of death was written to develop the idea of the principle of the permanence of the human soul after death, and its reincarnation in a chain of new beings, whose successive links are unrolled to the bosom of ethereal space. "Beyond the Threshold" continues on the same lines, enlarging and expanding the idea by reasons and considerations drawn from science and philosophy, claiming that the certainty of a new birth beyond our earthly end is the best means of arming ourselves against all weakness in the presence of death, and that the help offered by science and philosophy to that end is far superior to that of any of the existing religions. From beginning to end it is interesting, entertaining, instructive and fascinating, and whether one accepts it all or not, much will have been learned and much pleasure enjoyed in its perusal. Price, $1.25.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1902.

Is It Well With the Children?

We are glad to note indications of interest in the spiritual instruction of the children. From several localities our correspondents have mentioned the fact of the formation of Children's Progressive Lyceums, and stating that such were a means of aiding our Cause by a healthy and natural growth in the teachings, the knowledge, the facts, the philosophy and ethics of Spiritualism.

Spiritualists who have received the light of our great truth, and apprehend its wide variance from the popular religious notions, should earnestly inquire whether it is wise and well that the children in their families shall receive the training and instruction that is given in the ordinary Sunday schools, and have their minds filled with unreasonable and unnatural dogmas of orthodox faiths, to the exclusion of Spiritualism, and the formation of a strong bias against it.

How many such children there are who, thus receiving Sunday school instruction, look with veiled or unconcealed contempt on the Spiritualistic views of their parents, and cast ridicule upon and manifest hatred against Spiritualism.

The Progressive Lyceum would have moulded their minds to a different pattern—an open, free-thinking, truth-loving mind—ready to receive truth whenever found.

Is it well for the children—is it well for our Cause—it is well for society and the world, that the children of Spiritualists should be turned over to the nurseries of the orthodox churches, to be trained and indoctrinated, and filled with notions which all intelligent Spiritualists abhor and reject?

If Spiritualists will give thought to the subject, they will become convinced that the languishing condition of many Spiritualist societies is the direct result of their neglect to give the children the benefits of the Progressive Lyceum.

Think earnestly—act wisely.

The work of the Progressive Lyceum means much for the Cause of Spiritualism in the way of solid, permanent growth. In very many local instances it means all the difference between a sickly, miserable existence and a healthy activity, vigor and strength.

Progressive Lyceums may be composed of few or many. Even one family or two may have one at home, that will prove of interest and induce mental and moral progress to all concerned.

The Lyceum Guide, by Emma Rood Tuttle, gives every detail needed for organizing and conducting a lyceum. It contains everything helpful in instructions, and exercises, with recitations, songs, etc. Any woman, or man, can take the Guide and go ahead successfully with a lyceum.

Very much to Spiritualism depends upon the answer to the question: Is it well with the children? We earnestly hope Spiritualists who have the good of the Cause at heart, will seriously consider the question in its relation to the present and future success of our Cause, and govern themselves in accordance with the decision of their best judgment.

Church Finances—Influence of Spiritualism.

The financial movement nowadays that does not go by millions is looked upon as of little account, but it would hardly have been expected a few years ago that religious denominations would set to work to raise millions and set them apart as a special fund for various purposes. When we remember the difficulties encountered and the various devices once resorted to to meet the running expenses of churches the present financial operations or religious societies read like the story of Aladdin's lamp.

The beginning of the twentieth century ushered in a jubilee year for the churches, and nearly all of the denominations resolved to make a vigorous and concentrated effort to establish a jubilee fund. The aggregate amount of this fund was set at $50,000,000. Of this amount $40,000,000 has been raised, and the remainder will be in hand by the close of the year. Indeed, the prospect is excellent that the sum determined upon will be exceeded. Some of the details of this great financial operation are interesting. The Methodist denomination has been prominent in the work. The Methodists north alone have raised $17,000,000 and their Canadian brethren $1,250,000. In England the Calvinistic Methodists have raised $500,000, the United Free Methodists $600,000, and the Wesleyan Methodists $4,500,000. The latter will devote a large part of their fund to the purchase of the old London aquarium, close by Westminster Abbey, which will be converted into a Wesleyan churchhouse and be the headquarters of Wesleyans the world over. Besides these funds the Canadian Presbyterians, who started out to get $1,000,000, already have $1,430,000. The English Congregationalists have raised $3,312,000, and the English Baptists $1,250,000. There are numerous other denominations to hear from, and there are yet nearly four months of work ahead. It would not be at all surprising if the fund reached $75,000,000 at the close of the year.

It is to be remembered in this connection that the collection of these millions has not in any way interfered with the regular collections for the support of missionary enterprises and for the running expenses of the churches. On the other hand, it is claimed that the latter have been considerably increased. Certainly this is a most gratifying exhibit. If it be true that "money talks," then it is talking in a most convincing way as to the great interest at present in the cause of religion and the fundamental prospect of the churches.

The above from the Chicago Tribune illustrates an important fact—that that there is some emotion, incentive, prompting or feeling that actuates church members to give freely to promote the welfare of their respective sects. If the amount stated above were raised for humanitarian purposes exclusively instead of being devoted to promulgate a peculiar doctrine, then the act of giving would have been truly angelic.

It has been said that Spiritualism has no hospitals, no asylums for the unfortunate, no place of refuge for worn-out mediums, and no system of effective work that may be regarded in its broadest sense as humanitarian; but it must be remembered that Spiritualism is only in its infancy, as it were, and that one of its great missions seems to be to liberalize and uplift the churches, and as they have the wealth, they can do humanitarian work more effectively just in proportion that they become liberal and spiritualized. In that one respect alone Spiritualism is doing a grand work.

Success.

People often think because they fail in all their financial schemes that they are total failures in life. If this were all of life that might be true. But as this is only a few moments of the great eternity in the existence of spirit the failure to accummulate great wealth upon this plane is very small and insignificant.

We cannot all be millionaires; there would not be enough wealth in the world to bring about that result. We cannot all be presidents, senators, congressmen, governors, or mayors. A few must succeed that the many may be employed.

Some work with their brain and some with their hands and feet. Some are adapted to one kind of work and some to another. If all men developed their muscle and not their brain the work of this life would progress slowly. If all men worked with their brain and not with their hands the work of the world would be left undone.

Therefore, if you are not a success in one way you may be in another.

Mother nature builds no two forms alike, neither does she crown beings with laurels they do not merit. In her estimation all men are equal, no matter what estimate they place upon themselves or upon their fellows, she sends her reaper out and gathers in the harvest of beings. She opens her great broad motherly bosom and welcomes all back without preference or prejudice; without petting one and scolding another; considering all are progressed if they have been born to her, whether they have been covered with jewels or rags, whether the face has been covered with coal dust or toilet powder, whether they had accumulated millions or only mills, whether they worshiped an iminaginary Deity or a wooden God, or no God at all, she just spreads her loving arms out and embraces all and gives them a pass into the great eternity.

It isn't worth while to worry about an insignificant failure, for while you pause to worry others are pushing on to the very success you should achieve. It is worth while to be up and doing in some direction. There is always an opening for those who push in the right way and at the right time and the world is so wide and so large that there is room for all.

Remember the words that have come down through all the past years: "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.

Credulity and Fraud.

A prominent thinker of Greenwood, Ill., writes: "I have not been in receipt of Spiritualistic papers of any kind for several years. There seemed to be so much credulity on the one hand and fraud on the other, that I finally lost heart, and with the collapse of the "Religio" I gave up further search through spiritualistic periodicals."

The above plaint from a prominent Spiritualist and advanced thinker, is worthy of serious consideration.

That there is any amount of crime being perpetrated throughout the world continuously, is known to all. No one is allowed to occupy a prominent position without being the constant subject of suspicion.

Every bank clerk here has to give bonds for his good behavior, honesty and integrity.

Every car conductor has safeguards thrown around him.

Detectives are employed in all the large stores to watch the customers and see that they do not steal; especially do they carefully scrutinize the clerks in the evening when they pass out of the store.

None of our large cities can elect aldermen that do not commence at once to steal. In this city the Civic Federation, Voters' League, Citizens' League, the various prominent Clubs, all are required to keep the aldermen in line with honesty and integrity.

See St. Louis, Mo., and St. Paul, Minn., overwhelmed with the filth of dishonest officials.

That there is more or less faking in the ranks of Spiritualism no one can for a moment doubt. Schools in Chicago, Boston and San Francisco have been established to teach the apt student to imitate as far as possible genuine mediumship. Even illuminated paraphernalia to clothe the fake spirit is furnished, and the effect produced on the gullible, thereby is said to be remarkable.

In Cleveland, Ohio, there was a law suit to get possession of bogus illuminated paraphernalia to assist a fakir in producing spurious materializations. But however numerous such disgraceful episodes may be in the ranks of Spiritualism, it does not destroy the fact that spirits do communicate through hundreds of reputable mediums, hence no one should be discouraged because the trickster and counterfeiter have invaded our ranks.

Wherever money can be made, there the disreputable will congregate and carry on their nefarious work. They can be found everywhere—in banks, in the pulpit, in the various religious sects, in office, in positions of trust and honor—in fact the fakir, the charlatan, the trickster and swindler have come to stay until the masses evolve out of their present debased condition. Hence we say never give up a grand and beautiful truth because the disreputable may sometimes cluster around it.

"Haunts, Ghosts and Ghosts." By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY WITCHES WERE BURNED.

Many of Them Were Mediums.

Richmond, Va.—Dr. J. B. Hawthorne, of this city, one of the ablest and best known Baptist divines in the South, recently made a startling discovery—that one of his puritan ancestors prosecuted the witches of Salem, and not only so, but as judge of the court before which they had their trial, condemned more than 150 to death.

Dr. Hawthorne was in Boston a short time ago and took a run to Salem to see the relics of that remarkable period of America's history, near 1641, when one hundred and fifty women were executed for the practice of the black art.

It is well to know that some years ago, when Dr. Hawthorne's family were preparing their family tree, it was learned that their ancestors did not come to Jamestown, as was thought, but were Puritans, and had come to Plymouth Rock some years after the arrival of the Mayflower.

While at Salem on his recent visit, in the company of some erudite and literary friends, he was deeply interested in the many relics of the punishment of witchcraft. The very house in which the witches were confined was shown him, and the graves of the 159 executed witches were modest, green mounds before him. They were all commenting on the remarkable circumstance of such depths of superstition so close to the tip-top civilization of the present day. Dr. Hawthorne accorded congratulation to himself that none of his ancestors had been guilty of this crime against intelligence and good order.

"Don't you talk too fast," said a member of the party. "Come with me to Boston to-morrow and we'll see that we can see."

The next day they went to the magnificent public library which Boston is justly so proud of and looked up the lists of the people who were identified with the Salem proceedings.

Lo! William Hawthorne's name led all the rest. He was prosecutor of the witches at first, and so well did he perform this service and so severe his arraignment, that he became immensely popular. He was made judge, and had the honor of presiding over the court which condemned the 159. This William Hawthorne was a great-grandfather of Nathaniel Hawthorne, the author, who exhausted a vocabulary rich in words of abuse in abhorrence and condemnation of the persecution of the witches, and Dr. Hawthorne, of this city, who is a champion of religious liberty, is unquestionably a lineal descendant.

Two thoughts take shape in Dr. Hawthorne's mind. One is, "that it is a wise descendant who knows his own ancestor, what manner of man he was," and the other: "The iniquities of the father shall be visited upon the children to the third and fourth generation."

Resuscitation of Those Supposed to Be Dead.

According to a special telegram from Indianapolis, Ind., to the Chronicle of this city the medical profession of the middle west has been startled by the announcement authorized by the Indiana Society of Physicians and Surgeons that Dr. C. W. Littlefield, one of its most prominent members, a physician of central Indiana, has discovered what later may be proved to be one of the vital principles of life and life's maintenance. He asserts that he has demonstrated by actual experiment the truth of his declarations, and his announcement is indorsed by the conservative approval of the Indiana Medical society, before many of whose members several of the experiments have been conducted.

Where death, according to Dr. Littlefield's declarations, is not due to the consequent waste or destruction of a vital organ life can be renewed. The physician in several experiments obtained results in lower animals and on insects which went far to prove his theory.

In demonstrating his theory Dr. Littlefield makes use of a light salt solution saturated with oil of the body. The compound is allowed to stand exposed in an atmosphere of free ammonia. Just such condition as this induces, he asserts, exists in the healthy and normal body so long as cell-building and cell-destruction are carried on and the lungs continue to perform their regular office.

In the resurrection of the dead insects and animals on which the physician had operated a powder derived from this magnetic chemical fluid has been employed. The animals or insects, first of all, were either drowned of chloroformed or subjected to some other form of asphyxiation. After all signs of life had ceased and after all heat had left the bodies and rigor mortis had asserted itself, but before decay or decomposition had set in, the subjects were placed on a warm plate or cloth heated to a temperature corresponding to the normal heat of a living body. This accomplished, the doctor covered the body entirely with the powder. Signs of life generally were seen within three or four minutes following this treatment, the length of time requisite varying with the length of time that had elapsed after death resulted.

Animals also have been killed by electricity and have given a similar response to the treatment, even after all signs of life have been absent for three or four hours. Within half a dozen minutes after the first signs of reviving have appeared the animal displays indications of a normal condition. Half an hour later, to all appearances, the subject is in quite as healthy a condition as before its life was taken.

A strange feature of the experiment thus far conducted is the fact that no animal yet resuscitated has appeared gratified at its awakening.

Dr. Littlefield, accordingto the declarations which the Indiana Medical association approves and indorses, has not yet discovered how much time may elapse after death before his powder will fail to be effective. A dog was allowed to remain dead eight hours and upon application of the powder revived in seven minutes. Dr. Littlefield recites an incident declaring in effect that he has already tried the potency of his theory on a human being. This, however, is a recital aside from that indorsed by the medical society. He asserts that a boy who fell through a hole in the ice last December lay dead to all appearances for two hours. Attending physicians abandoned hope of saving the lad and the body was given into Dr. Littlefffeld's hands. He conveyed it to his laboratory and there submitted it to the powder restoratives. After ten or fifteen minutes the body showed responsive signs and within thirty minutes the boy had recovered.

"NOTHING TO ARBITRATE."

The children may shiver when north winds blow,
"There's nothing to arbitrate";
The babies may cry when the fire's low;
"There's nothing to arbitrate";
Let the stoves be sold when the snow drifts high,
Let the Frost King bite as he hurries by,
Let the mothers weep as their loved ones die—
"There's nothing to arbitrate."

There are men whose faces are sad and wan,
But "there's nothing to arbitrate;"
There are breasts from which hope has forever gone,
But "there's nothing to arbitrate";
The ones who are turning the humble away
May have to appeal themselves some day—
Will the Master then turn unto them and say:
"There's nothing to arbitrate."

'Spirit Echoes." By Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

"Christ Not a Spiritist."

It will thus be seen that no one, not even Jesus of Nazareth, has ever been able to give us an approximate notion of the specific conditions of the future life. All that Jesus tells us is in general terms. But it is a noteworthy fact that what He did say as to the future life accords exactly with the inductions of modern science. It is also noteworthy that, if spirits of the dead communicate with the living, Jesus was not aware of the fact. Considering His perfect knowledge of the laws of the human soul, and that it was His mission on earth to bring life and immortality to light, it seems not a little strange that He should neglect such an opportunity to prove His thesis and at the same time to supply us with exact information regarding the conditions of the future life. But it seems, according to Spiritists, that the hysterical women and neurotic children of the present day know very much more about those conditions than Jesus ever pretended to know. The utter worthlessness of their testimony, however, has already been shown.—T. J. Hudson.

Apparently the chief object of Mr. Hudson's life is to overthrow "spiritism." To this end he works in his articles in the newspapers, in which he hashes and rehashes and re-rehashes the "Law of Psychic Phenomena" with all of its perverse inconsistencies and wild assertions and conclusions.

"If spirits of the dead communicate with the living, Jesus was not aware of the fact." So says Mr. Hudson.

We invite Mr. Hudson to take his Bible and turn to the Gospel by St. Matthew, chapter 17, and read:

"And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart.

"And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light.

"And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him.

"Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias."

Mark ix, and Luke ix, relate the same occurrence, with variations.

Were Moses and Elias (Elijah) dead?

Did their spirits communicate with the living on this occasion?

Was Jesus aware of the fact?

Were Peter, James and John aware of the fact?

Please arise and answer, Mr. Hudson.

And please take note that, whether your answer be yea or nay, it puts you "in a hole"—as the saying is.

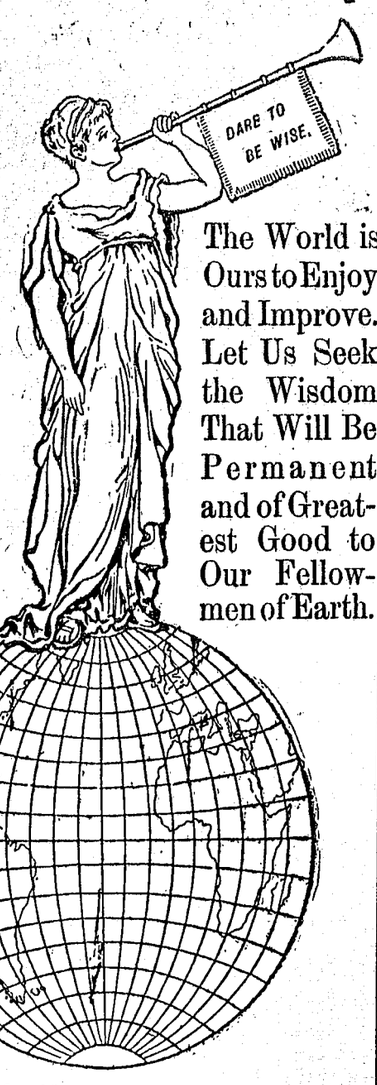
If you answer nay, you discredit the Gospel account.

If you answer yea, you controvert and deny your own statement which you put forth as positive fact.

And there you are—and there we leave you.

To All Christians and Spiritualists.

You should know that the writers of the New Testament knew of spirit influence, control and obsession; that such persons who are afflicted among us can and should be healed and be free men and women. The following may remind you of teaching by ancient writers, and this can be compared to the knowledge and power at this time in mankind—"And immediately the spirit driveth him into the wilderness." "And Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and was led by the spirit into the wilderness, being forty days tempted of the devil." "And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went seven spirits." "And, lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again and hardly departeth from him." "And he said unto them, go ye and tell that fox, behold, I cast out evil spirits, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." "And, behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bound together, could in no wise lift up herself," etc.



Now, in this state, people are held in prisons as insane men, women and children when they are influenced, controlled or obsessed by evil and ignorant spirits, and these can and should be healed, made free people, healthy in minds and bodies.

Men and women, now, are possessed with the gift of the Holy Ghost, if they live right lives and can heal people. Christians, Christian Scientists and Spiritualists are now especially adapted to do this work wisely. Take heed of yourselves; if any person trespass against you, rebuke that person and if any repent, forgive them.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printers art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

CONSECRATION.

Dedicated to Lilian Whiting.

To a brave, sweet spirit, to earth life born,
Enshrined in a fragile, fair womanly frame,
There came while yet in life's early morn
A clear voice divine, breathing her name,
Crying "Awake! thou soul dutiful."

Like child Samuel she answered in swift response
"Lord, here am I—Thine own to command!
I love Thee, and Thy law—shall obey at once
Thy will—be the duty afar, or at hand
For Thy love makes all beautiful!"

"Look, then," spake the voice, "o'er this world and find
Whence cometh this sound of groanings and cries
From earth's children beloved, by self made blind
To the wisdom and love which helps souls to rise;
Show thou them the world beautiful.

"For the dear Lord of Love hath anointed thine eyes,
The Spiritual meaning of life to discern;
Teach thou that this transient life holds in disguise
That deeper beauty for which all hearts yearn;
Make plain the world beautiful!"

"Lord, I hear, and believe!—through earth's mists I behold
With the eyes of the Spirit this beautiful world,
And weak though I seem, loving Thee makes me bold
To send widespread the words neath love's banner unfurled,
'God's worlds are all beautiful.'"

"All beauty and goodness in Spirit have birth,
And love is the power which shall make man perceive
That true loving's true living; and doing's true worth;
And that happiness comes to those souls who believe
In the present world beautiful."

"Lord, I love, I believe!—and I now consecrate
All, all that I am to Thy service divine!
Where'er I may roam—whate'er my estate—.
In this world, and all worlds, where love has a shrine,
I'll unveil Thy world beautiful!"

So undaunted this "shining one" goes on her way
Through the pathways where stumble sad women and men
Who feel only earth's hardships, and slip in earth's clay;
She uplifts, bids them stand, and look upward—and then
They behold the world beautiful!

DR. PHELON'S LETTER.

Brief Notes on Various Matters of Interest.

The same sort of people settle this State with its natural proffers of golden ores, as located a trading station in the sloughs of Lake Michigan. It was for the same purpose they pushed out from the sea-girt isle, whose forces have for centuries dominated civilization. This purpose they called freedom of conscience, but it was really freedom for the exercise of the will-power, the expansion of the Selfhood, that was the guiding impulse of the Puritan.

Plymouth Rock, Chicago, California, how suggestive are each, of changing conditions. A bit of rock, water-worn by the storm-tossed Atlantic until just large enough, receives, one by one, the disciples of the newly developed doctrines of eternal and absolute will. This pushing, stirring, dominate force lingers on the Atlantic Coast, long enough to gather from concentration, renewed power for physical action. Then commenced a movement that brought out of the water and the mire, a glorious city, intensified type of vitality, energy and will in manifestation. But the end is not yet, the pioneer, with rifle and the revolver; the pick, the pan, the hard tack rations moves steadily on, until the last Sierra is climbed. The winter-marked rock of Plymouth has become an area of territory, one-third larger than all of New England with New York thrown in. Who will have the courage to deny the guidance of the whole movement from its incipiency to the now, is in the hands of the ever vigilant, ceaselessly moving, irresistible powers of the Unseen.

There are other points of similarity. Our Puritan forefathers soon in their career perceived that knowledge led to wisdom. Early in the beginning of things, two universities were founded, Harvard and Yale. Although these were sealed with the seal of the old Covenanter, the founders forgot, will endures no trammels, not even its own. These institutions have done, are doing well, their work.

Can our readers tell why the Spirit of Senator Stanford's son, after it had passed into the great Unknown, should be the controlling power to put the Stanford millions into the Leland Stanford University, at Palo Alto? If the Stanford University had not been spirit-born would there have been the suggestive power needed to induce Mrs. Phebe A. Hearst, the liberal minded patroness of the State University of California, to locate and endow the foundation of another great scholastic institution at Berkeley. To those who acknowledge the presence and influence of that which forever lives and forms the minds of men, this is worthy of some attention. This meditation was suggested by the banquet given since my last, by Mrs. Hearst, at her Hacienda near Pleasanton, in honor of Dr. George A. Reisner and wife. Dr. Reisner, the noted Egyptologist, has lately returned from a tour in Egypt, in the interest of the State University of California, at Mrs. Hearst's expense. The institution is enriched thereby with many rare and valuable curios, which hereafter can only be found in the archives and treasuries of the University.

There is something peculiar in the avidity with which the modern Egyptian seizes upon the possession of the Mother of present civilization. If we were they, it would not seem so strange for us to be claiming everything of our own in sight.

To this banquet sixty guests were bidden to do honor to the accomplishment of the distinguished traveler. The utmost that light, color and hieroglyphical form could do, were lavishly displayed to emphasize the unity of the land of the Nile with the movable sands of this ocean-born State. On the tables were models of those Egyptian galleys, which impressed upon ancient nations the potent prestige of the Old Egypt. Instead of being filled with full-armed warriors in their interiors were massed the Lotus of the East and the Rose of the West.

The attendants who administered to the guests were Nubians, whose skins were more than tanned, fairly carbonized by the fervid sun. They were clad in white, turbaned and wearing red sashes. It was easy to see why in their native fastnesses they were of the unconquerable.

There seem to be but one feature of ancient feast that was modified. In the days of Rameses and the Pharoahs, guests reclined on couches. But perhaps even the "select" of to-day, might find it difficult, reclining to eat and drink, using their fingers for forks. Even if those present had on a similar occasion, eight or ten thousand years ago, graciously greeted each other, as they were shown their places on gold embroidered couches, from whence they could look upon the Sphinx and distant Pyramids, possibly some of their accomplishments might have been attenuated by the potent force of hereditary, and not thus be available.

Leavink aside the filmy intangibles, Mrs. Hearst's design of bringing the Nile to California, for a few fleeting moments and thus idealize the real was done. Like the inallenable condition of all similar experiences, there was lacking but the one perfect element. The reality of this beautiful Egyptian dream of an hour was wanting. Those present will not soon forget this vision so superbly mounted in all its fittings, by the gracious hostess, and served as a setting to the remarks and slides illustrating Dr. Reisner's work in the dusty niches of the land of life in the long ago. A NEW MAGAZINE BY MOSES HULL

To the Editor:—Will you allow me space in your paper to say that as soon as I shall have received the names and postoffice addresses of one thousand people who will become regular subscribers, the money not to be paid until the first number of the magazine shall have been recived, I will begin the publication of a monthly magazine, in connection with and in the interest of the Morris Pratt Institute. This magazine will contain not less than forty-eight pages of original matter per month. Probably the name of the magazine will be The Curriculum. It will be devoted to the higher developments in philosophical and phenomenal Spiritualism; and more particularly Spiritualism in its organic and educational work. It is the intention also to put many of the more important lessons taught in the Morris Pratt school and not elsewhere into this magazine. This magazine will be invaluable as an educator to old and young. The subscription price will be one dollar per volume of twelve numbers. No money will be wanted until the magazine is received. The magazine will not be printed until I get the one thousand names. All who wish this magazine are requested to let me know at Whitewater, Wis., at the earliest convenient moment.

Still spending my all in the cause of a higher, better, more enlightened and more religious Spiritualism.

IMMORTALITY,

As Related to the Evolution Theory.

To the Editor:—The following article was published in the World's Advance Thought in 1887. The ideas expressed were new and original with the writer, and I have not met a person since who entertained like views. But they have been verified by spirit William Denton in the series of letters recently published in The Progressive Thinker.

Those of your correspondents who are discussing "The Origin of Life," will find the subject handled from a standpoint not yet touched by them.

And those who are becoming better acquainted with animal kind, as human kind are more humanized, and see in them "our fellow creatures" and wish to know if they will have their pets and hear the music of the feathered songsters on the spirit side of life, will find something interesting.

EVOLUTION AND IMMORTALITY.

I have seen a just criticism by John Franklin Clark of "a popular preacher's" views of immortality, as reduced from the evolution theory. The preacher bases the immortality of man upon individual attainment. This view is pretty well aired by the critic, and its fallacy plainly shown to the rational mind. The critic then proceeds to give the evolution theory of immortality; as he understands it, and, as he claims the only ground upon which it can be a fact. He, too, makes it depend upon attainment. He, however, finds it in the child, of which the preacher's logic deprives it—dooming the innocent, of whom Jesus said "of such is the kingdom of heaven," to eternal death.

Mr. Clark makes immortality depend upon what he calls an ultimate form; man, being an ultimate of evolved forms, from that necessity becomes immortal.

He says: "If the human form is the ultimate of evolved forms, then it must of necessity be enduring, because to be the ultimate it must be cosmical to the evolved universe, containing all its elements and inherent qualities, being a finite expression of the Infinite. On the other hand, if the human form is not the ultimate of forms, then it does not contain all of the elements and qualities of Infinite Being finited, therefore could not be cosmical to the evolved universe, and through the processes of evolution it must of necessity be succeeded by a higher and more perfect form."

To many Spiritualists there would be serious objection to this theory. One would be the uncertainty that is thrown around the subject by failure to impart the necessary knowledge as to where to draw the line between the highest evolved form—the one containing all the elements and qualities of the evolved universe—and the one next below it.

According to the teaching of Physiology there have been great changes in the human form since the first specimen stood erect upon our earth. The first was but a slight change from the baboon, chimpanzee, or what not—the highest animal form. Many thousand years, if not millions, must have passed since then in the process of evolution before the highest and perfect form was evolved; and we find ourselves in the same dilemma as regards knowing who is immortal that the preacher's view leaves us in; nor do we know whether we are immortal at all.

The first forms could not have been immortal, because they have been succeeded by more perfect ones; and who shall say but that ours may be succeeded by still more perfect forms? The critic will have to help us out of this dilemma by pointing out the time when immortality dawned upon our earth, and the hitherto reign of death was changed to life eternal.

Here would be another objection to this theory; this eternal life is not an inherent principle of soul entities, but depends more upon quantity than quality—nothing but an aggregation of everything can endure. Still we are told that "substance is self-existent and eternal in duration." Well, if some of this eternal substance takes form and expression in a horse, does it not do so by a self-existent soul germ, the ultimate of which is perfection of that soul germ as a horse? and is not the horse soul entity as enduring as the human soul entity?

The natural inference is that all the varying forms of animal life, including man, came from characteristic soul germs, and if one of them is "enduring" all are. I can see no other grounds upon which to predicate the eternity of man than the prior existence of soul-germs in which inhere the intelligence and all the attributes and faculties of mind expressed by human intelligence, and which is immortal by having emanated from Infinite intelligence.

Then why should it have been such a long and labored task for Infinite causation to produce from an eternally enduring substance an enduring form? Starting, as evolutionists say man did, in the mineral, through the vegetable to the lowest form or organic life, and passing through and occupying reptile, fish, bird and animal life to man, and in him only, as the highest type, is the Infinite able to produce a form having the enduring qualities of the first substance.

This logic besides disparaging the Power in which we have our being, is fatal to all organic life below the crowning one—man. Because the life that is in the varying grades does not belong to them as the soul characteristics of distinctive species, but belong to the transient man-soul that is, for the time occupying the form for the purpose of expressing and unfolding certain faculties, or, in other words, getting the experience of reptile, fish, bird and animal life, and when this done—the work finished—the man-soul passed to the higher form—it would have taken with it all of the life, soul and spirit of all the species below the human, and they must cease existence in toto.

This destruction of all animal life would be a grave objection to this theory. But it is the testimony of many spirits that animals and birds exist in the spirit world. The pet canary, cat, dog and horse are there; and existing there, is proof that they endure the shock of death—the theory about cosmical forms being the only enduring ones to the contrary notwithstanding.

As spirit is a permanent and real substance, we will presume that the substance which Mr. Clark finds possessing the qualities of "eternal duration" to be spirit; for by calling things by their right names we know what we are talking about. And taking the generally accepted view of spirit, that it is the substance forming the body of the discarnate soul; and also that it enters into the composition of the spirit world and all forms of vegetable life upon it; and that it constitutes the life of matter, and the formative and animating force of everything that has life on earth, in the vegetable, animal and human kingdom; and, escaping from the human body as we know it does at so-called death; and still serving the man-soul in the capacity of an ethereal and more sublimated body, adapted to a life in a spiritual state of existence, why should it not so escape from the dying bodies of the animal life it has animated, and serve the animal-soul in the capacity of a more sublimated body adapted to a spiritual state of existence? And the same also of vegetable life?

As this spirit substance is not the knowing principle in man or animal, it would be subordinate to it, and be used by it as matter is used in forming the bodies of the varying species, each of which is an externalized expression of the soul entity, and adapted to the place in life it is to fill. This is illustrated in the horse, the cow, the sheep, the bulldog, etc.

That the varying grades of animal life came into existence in the evolutionary order—the lower being followed by the next higher, is of course true. And the law of evolution has been operative in the progress of mankind from an ignorant, savage state to the civilized and more enlightened state of the present day; and also in the development of the inventive genius of man, so plainly marked in the last fifty years.

But the theory of evolution for the origin of the man or animal life, is as contrary to nature as that of a special creation. They each produce something from nothing—intelligence from the mineral in which none exists. But the processes of nature under the law of evolution evolving what is involved, and soul germs having been involved, and with intelligence the primal Force, we may rest assured that in whatever form life is manifest, in the vegetable, animal or human, that life and form is eternal. Therefore,

All are parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and Life the soul.

A NEW DEFINITION.

Love Your Fellow Man as Yourself.

In one of my papers I find this headline, "A Parson's Noble Act." Following this line is a statement that in consequence of bad health, he had seen proper to use "Electric Bitters" as a remedy, and found in them a panacea for all his physical ills in life. I am only a layman, not a parson, and have looked through death's door frequently, and doctors have prescribed stimulants as the only remedy, but I placed my trust in a higher power, and would not accept help from Satan, and when I read of a minister of God, using strong drink, Satan's right hand bower, even if used as a medicine, and recommending it to his flock, and the world of unredeemed sinners, as being a good medicine to cover his own weakness in the opinion of people, when I think of this I am not surprised at the inside knob of church doors being so often turned to admit of the silent but disgusted egress and departure of so many of its best members and intelligent and thinking class of people. And again let me say that since the day that Christ stood upon the mountain in Galilee, and in his sermon said to the Jews, "Love thy neighbor, as thyself," this unexplained command has been ringing down the endless lane of theology and recording the failure of many of his professed followers to the present day; and I regret to say at this day when a greater light has been cast upon the world, that Spiritualists should take up with the same unexplained hue and cry as the most formidable induction, and powerful key to the spiritual door of heaven, "love your fellow man as yourself;" love and regard all the human race as your brothers. The great masses of the people, when you speak of love understand you to mean parental or connubial affection, which is a sentiment impossible for us to feel for the entire human race.

I strive to do right, but find untold numbers of people that I can not endure near me, on account of their ways, both acted out and shadowed forth in their features, gestures and manner of speaking. If you could prune and clear them of all this I might love what was left, but there would be nothing left to love, as they have no subjective being or mind, but are only an Adamic machine, controlled entirely by the animal faculties or objective mind. Then I ask why enlightened Spiritualists do not give the proper meaning and interpretation to the word "love"—namely: "Respect and sympathize with your fellow man and try to correct his evil and unpleasant habits and ways, as you do your own;" but while we continue to cry aloud, love your fellow man as yourself and as your brother, without further explanation, I am not surprised at so many of our most ardent Spiritualists falling out of the ranks and declining to strive in such a hopeless and impossible contest for the spiritual prize.

I AM MOTHER NATURE'S CHILD

Let me linger here in poverty with others who are poor,
Lest a greed for gold withhold me from a grand celestial tour.
Let me join misfortune's army and be wholly reconciled
To whatever may befall me, I am
Mother Nature's Child.

Let me weep with those who sorrow,
let me suffer others' pain,
And within my conscience ever satisfaction entertain.
Let my spirit take its freedom and my soul be undefiled;
Let no shackles bind and hold me, I am
Mother Nature's Child.

Let me go and talk to Nature by the brooklet in the spring;
Let my rhythmic soul there warble with the happy birds that sing;
Let me touch the trees that quiver in the breezes blowing wild,
Let me sleep upon Earth's bosom; I am
Mother Nature's Child.

Let the sunlight kiss my forehead and the evening, wet with dew,
Soothe my eyelids down in slumber till the earth is passed from view,
And my soul be bathed in sweetness
from a fountain undefiled,
In a world that understands me; I am
Mother Nature's Child.

I am one of Nature's children, I am one within the whole;
I must be as Nature made me; in harmony with soul;
I must live and love forever as my Mother Nature styled,
For within my very being I am
Mother Nature's Child.

DR. T. WILKINS.

FUNERAL OBSEQUIES OVER THE REMAINS OF HON. MILTON RATHBUN.

Mr. Milton Rathbun, of 18 Summit Avenue, Mount Vernon, N. Y., departed this life for the life beyond death, while with his wife and two sons, he was visiting relatives and friends at Riverhead, Long Island, N. Y., of peritonitis, Sunday morning, September 7th. The seriousness of his illness was not known till very near the last. The announcement of his death came as a sad surprise to his friends.

Mr. Rathbun was born at Verona (formerly called Rathbunville), Otsego County, N. Y., on the twenty-third day of August, 1844. He was the son of Solomon and Hannah Rathbun.

His earlier days were spent in New England. As a young man he entered the feed and grain business under Mr. Hallock, and came into the ownership of the business in some fifteen years, which business came to be known as the Milton Rathbun Company, at 454 South Avenue. Six months ago he capitalized the business for $150,000, and made it a stock company, with himself as the president and chief manager. Mr. Rathbun was interested in large mining enterprises in Nebraska. Among his business associates, and especially his employes, Mr. Rathbun was very popular; a man of sterling integrity and character. All his people were noted for veracity.

He married in New York City in 1873 Mrs. Harriet M. (Lee) Fales. He leaves a widow who is the president of the Westchester Woman's Club, one of the most successful clubs of the kind in the country; president of the Westchester County Political Equality (Woman's Suffrage) Club, and treasurer of the New York State Spiritualist Association. He leaves two sons, Frank Hallock and Charles Stewart, the first a graduate and the latter an undergraduate of Harvard University; one brother, Frank of New York City, and two sisters, Mrs. Lombard of Bronxville, N. Y., and Mrs. Kipp of Mount Vernon, N. Y.

Mr. Rathbun's private library was probably the largest in Westchester County. He was a Universalist in his religious affiliations, was interested in the new thought, but was most especially identified with Spiritualism. Many people came to learn of Spiritualism through him, and the faith has gained several hundred per cent in influence, if not in adherents, in the vicinity in which he lived, for many miles about and at a distance.

The funeral service was held Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 10th, at Willard Hall, Rev. C. H. Pennoyer, minister of the First Universalist Society of Mount Vernon, Mrs. Helen L. Russegue, a Spiritualist lecturer of Hartford, Conn., and Rev. Lyman C. Howe, a Spiritualist minister of Fredonia, N. Y., officiating.

Says the Mount Vernon Daily Eagle: "The services were impressive in character, not alone for the words of eulogy and comfort of the officiating ministers, but by the choice flowers which represented in their fragrance and delicate arrangements the feelings of the numerous friends and business associates of the deceased. The bier rested in front of the platform, and around it were arranged the numerous floral pieces, the handsomest seen in this city."

The Produce Exchange of New York City, of which Mr. Rathbun was an honored member, sent a massive wreath of English Ivy and white asters, which required four men to carry. The Haymarket Exchange of New York City sent a large floral piece of roses. The employes of the Milton Rathbun Company sent an open floral book of white immortelles, on which were these words, the last spoken by Mr. Rathbun, in purple immortelles: "The kernel of this world blossoms out into the glorious flower of eternity."

The Westchester Woman's Club sent a large wreath of white roses, carnations and lilies of the valley, on a standard, the base of which was Southern myrtle. There were other choice designs.

There was a large attendance at the services. Delegations were present from the Produce Exchange, the Haymarket Exchange, employes of the Milton Rathbun Company, from the Council and members of the Westchester Woman's Club, and many prominent Spiritualists, and other friends.

THE DISCOURSE.

Rev. Charles H. Pennoyer, minister of the First Universalist Society of Mount Vernon, opened the service by giving the announcements, making the following remarks and offering prayer. Mr. Pennoyer said in part:

I do not think of Mr. Rathbun as having left us; he has rather changed his place of abode. It is not as if he were gone. He is still with us. It would seem as if it might well be true that he is with us now as ever, and more fully. I shall not speak of him as gone, but as among the living; not as alone in the past but as also and rather in the present. It is not that he was, but that he is.

And this is what Mr. Rathbun would tell us if we would only listen.

With the Buddhist and Egyptian Scriptures, with Socrates and Plato, Mr. Rathbun's thought is of the body as being the dwelling place of the spirit, for time, not for eternity; with Seneca and Cicero, with Fichte and Starr King, his thought is of what we so confusedly call death as really a progress in life; with Orville Dewey and Leigh Hunt, his thought is of the authority of our Spiritual natures in things spiritual; with Sophocles his thought is that no man ought to desire longer life in this sphere than that provided for him; with Confucius and Hawthorne his thought is that Divinity has ordered it all well; with the Hindus, with Paul and Carlyle, his thought is of the reality of the unseen; with Parker and Browning he knew himself to be immortal, and now the better; with Zoroaster and Paul his belief was and is that he should know and be known there as here. With Mr. Rathbun there is no here or there; with Epictetus and Fenelon, with Herder and Whittier, with Emerson and Jesus, his trust is in the Father Spirit and Over Soul as doing better for us and for him than we could think of doing for ourselves.

Mr. Rathbun is known as a reader of the world's best literature, and as making its best thought a part of himself. Only a few days ago I found him reading with great delight the wonderful sermons of Frederick Robertson, the great English preacher.

His belief is not in authority for truth, however, but in truth for authority. His protest is ever against mercantile standards of spiritual values, as one says it. To him as to the Transcendentalists, "Truth is its own evidence," "Beauty its own witness," and "Religion its own reward."

God is within us, through us, about us, the All in All. With Paul at Athens, "In him we live and move and have our being."

With the New Thought exponents, he believes in "the power of silence;" and in this sense prayer was his very life and breath.

He was in early life a Hicksite Quaker, and so it was very natural that his thought should be of "the indwelling power of the soul to rise above book, priest and formulated creed, and cry to the Eternal, 'In thy light I see light.'"

He carried this thought even further. Jesus says, "I am the resurrection and the life." Mr. Rathbun believes that the kingdom of God is within us; that the secret of power and growth and life, of comfort and bliss and perfection, is from within ourselves. "I am," is his thought, "by the help of God within me, through me and about me, rise above temporal things, appetite, pleasures of this little while, imperfections, suffering and death, and feel and know myself to be immortal."

He has no creed. His simple thought is of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man; that religion is summed up in love to God and love to man. With Ballou all minds are of one family; with Channing, the same truths exist in all spiritual spheres, to be the law and life of all souls, and to unite them into one family and brotherhood. Salvation is through and by character; and "character is destiny."

Mr. Rathbun's thought is of the greatness of the human soul; of its possibilities of unfoldment; of its possibilities irrespective of time and space; of its possibilities of communon with the Eternal and of communication with all moral intelligences, and so he is a Spiritualist. It is not a belief with him against reason, but as altogether reasonable. The "sweet reasonableness" to him of his faith in the revelations of Spiritualism, is known of all. His belief is in the things which eye hath not seen nor ear heard.

He believes with Universalists and other liberal religious thinkers in the spiritual progression of the race, and in the final harmony of all souls with God.

He knew that if the earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. He has been clothed upon, having a more spiritual body. First is that which is natural and after that which is the spiritual.

His convictions are real; so real that he did not, nor did he desire to, conceal them; so real that he accepted the responsibilities of having convictions; so real that he lived and lives for them and in them and through them. He died in his faith. His pity is for those who have no great convictions to live for, no convictions which were a reality and comfort in the spiritual life.

He is a friend to all. If it were not for a faith that tells me he is now among the living, I should feel the loss of a friend, and of one who has helped me much. It is a friendship which I prize most highly. Many of your lives have come in touch with his life, and you have thanked God, oh, so often, that he were living, and now you do the more in that the world has been bettered therein.

The sunshine of his spirit is real and was and is felt of all. His belief is in harmony, the secret of his life. His home was and is full of the spirit of harmony. His own soul was and is harmony itself. The poise of his soul was and is great. His personal influence was and is serenity and peace.

This has been Mr. Rathbun's Easter time, his resurrection morn; he is not here; he is risen, risen to fuller opportunity, greater power, larger usefulness, to higher life.

With Plutarch, let us feel that we should not come to the funeral of a good man with lamentations and mourning, but with the singing of hymns. Let us have joyful hearts, our souls uplifted in the faith which he has shown, in the hope that was his and in the love which he exemplified.

Mr. Pennoyer read as scripture selections from a passage by Ralph Waldo Emerson, the prophet-minister of Mr. Rathbun's life. The reading was: "Of what import this vacant sky, these fuffing elements, these insignificant lives full of selfish loves, quarrels and ennui? Everything is prospective, and man is to live hereafter. That the world is for his education, is the only sane solution of the enigma. All the comfort I have found teaches me to confide that I shall not have less in times and places that I do not yet knew. All I have seen teaches me to trust the Creator for all I have not seen. Whatever it be which the great Providence prepares for us, it must be something large and generous, and in the great style of his works.

"The love that will be annihilated sooner than be treacherous has already made death impossible, and affirms itself no mortal, but a native of the deeps of absolute and inextinguishable being."

MR. PENNOYER'S PRAYER.

Our Father and Mother, Thou Over Soul who art in heaven, on the earth and in hell, we need thee every passing hour. Thou dost supply all the demands of our natures; and thou wilt answer our spiritual longings. Thou wilt satisfy the desires of our spirits, the desires which thou hast given us. Thy ways are our best ways, and infinitely better. Thou dost better for us in every event of life than we could think of doing for ourselves. In thy great love thou doest all things. In our little loves we must interpret all thy ways. Love is the best interpreter. Love will seek and find its own. Love will know and be known of its own.

Our friend has ascended. May he, being lifted up, draw us unto him. May he now inspire us with the memory of his lofty faith, his noble hope and his aspiring love, so that we may bear all things, believe all things, hope all things and endure all things. May the reality of his glad-day inspire us to all trust. May the outward separation be felt as only outward, that the life of our friend goes on and on, that he is nearer to us now than ever, and that he will grow nearer and dearer to us as the days come and go.

And now what can we do for him? What can loving hands and hearts do for him who has gone on? We cannot help him by being sad. We cannot do for the body, but we can build up our lives in the fulfillment of the divine promise of our natures, and by becoming more spiritual grow nearer to him who has only gone before.

We do not ask that Thou shouldst make life easier for us, but that Thou shouldst give us strength to do what our hearts and hands find to do. We pray that as we go from here we may be more eager to give ourselves to Thy service, more inclined to love Thee and Thine, as though we had here learned in this hour's revelation to know the deeper meanings and responsibilities of our common life.

May Thy spirit's light be our spirits' grace, that we may grow unto all good, unto the perfect day when thy will shall be done and Thou shalt be all in all in us. Amen.

Miss Aimee Horton, soprano, sang as solo, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say," by Harriss. Mr. A. N. Carhart of Brooklyn, N. Y., piano accompanist. Mrs. Helen L. Russegue, a noted Spiritualist preacher of Hartford, Conn., made a very strong, clear, feeling and helpful address, which was most impressive. Mrs. Russegue is a speaker of much power and her words of comfort added much to the brightness of the occasion. She spoke of Mr. Rathbun as a man of great industry and honesty of purpose. She closed her beautiful remarks by reading "After Death in Arabia," from "The Light of Asia," by Edwin Arnold. Miss Horton sang "Lead Kindly Light," one of the favorites of Mr. Rathbun.

The services were brought to a close by Rev. Lyman C. Howe, a widely known Spiritualist minister, who resides at Fredonia, N. Y. He had been a friend of Mr. Rathbun for twenty-eight years, and all the while he had grown in his love and admiration of the man. His was an ideal manhood. His psychic influence was markedly strong and beautiful. The first speaker, however, had referred to the man himself. He would speak words of comfort to those now weeping. The first speaker had correctly reported the world in which Mr. Rathbun lived. The universe is indeed a material universe, but is also and the more a spiritual universe. Death is only an incident in life. There are no accidents. There are no accidents or failures with God. Without hope we are of all men the most miserable. With Spiritualists the fact of immortality is demonstrable and known. Spiritualists know that immortality is a fact. Spiritualism, furthermore, is the only religion capable of scientific proof. The speaker then went into a trance condition. While controlled he spoke most eloquently words of comfort to the weeping friends. Any attempt to correctly report Mr. Howe herein would be a failure. His remarks created a deep and most favorable impression upon his hearers. In the course of his remarks Mr. Howe quoted from a poem by Mrs. Julia Kinney-Scott, in the "Rose of Sharon," a Universalist paper printed forty years and more ago.

During the hours of service the flag at Haymarket Exchange on Thirty-fourth street in New York Cit, was at half-mast, an honor never before paid any individual. The flag at the Produce Exchange was also at half-mast.

The interment was at Verona, N. Y., Friday morning, when a friend read at the grave from "Thanatopsis," by William Cullen Bryant.

The departure of no one from this vicinity would be more widely felt by all classes of citizens. The services were in the opinion of one who is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, the best thing done for this vicinity in a long time.

UNDER THE STEEPLE.

If you please, Mr. Preacher, I've come up to say,
With a little girl's thought, that I heard you pray;
Heard your long, earnest prayer, explaining to God,
That you knew of His love and His chastening rod.
Heard you talk of sweet Heaven and the heavenly host,
Then of the poor children eternally lost!
Then you said God was love—almighty and wise,
Yet would fail to have homes for all in the skies;
All this brought a state of confusion
o'er me,
And then through my tear-drops I scarcely could see.
Soon I became restless and moved some about—
You paused at one time, for you heard me, no doubt,
If you did, sir, I hope you may pardon me,
'Twas caused by my not understanding,
you see.
We were out for a walk—dear papa
and I,
We heard the sweet music and couldn't pass by;
And it seemed so pleasant and restful
in here,
The rose-scented air and birds singing near
The bright winsome faces from Sunday
School time,
The sweet happy voices united in rhyme—
With all, I just thought as we joined in the song,
That the straight path to Heav'n couldn't be very long.
But when I heard talk of 'Original Sin,'
Of God's mighty wrath and how wicked we'd been,
I grew very anxious—felt ever so queer—
Thought God might be present and that
He might hear!

Well—yes, I'll return if you'll tell me
the day,
When naught of God's anger or wrath
you will say,
But talk of the beauties and duties of life,
That teaches the way to surmount
earthly strife.
When you'll tell us of Nature, whose generous hand
Has wrought all the wonders of ocean and land,
Or, tell of the principles dwelling within
The heart of mankind that lead him from sin—
Of all that is helpful to body and soul,
But naught of beginning and naught of the goal—
Just pleasantly talk of the beautiful now;
Say each should help others to lift from the brow
All lines of sorrow and furrows of care,
Or traces of evil, mayhap lurking there.
Kind Sir, tell the day when this sermon
you'll preach,
And I'll come and profit by what you may teach.

THE FALL OF THE LEAF.

A maple leaf, ill-fated maid,
Whose wooing long had been delayed,
At length was ruined and betrayed,
In quite the usual way.

An Autumn wind with soft caress
Implored her long their love to bless,
And fly with him. She murmured
"yes,"
And thus she went astray.

With blushes mantling her fair face,
She leaped into his rude embrace,
She leaped to ruin and disgrace,
And flung herself away.

Her sisters whispered of her shame
And blush to speak the lost one's name.
When their turn comes, do just the same
Forever and for aye.

BOOK REVIEW.

PERFECTING THE EARTH; A PIECE OF POSSIBLE HISTORY BY C. W. WOOLDRIDGE, B.S., M. D., UTOPIA PUB. CO., CLEVELAND—336 OCTAVO PAGES.

This is a beautifully printed and bound book, written by an earnest soul, fully imbued with the prophetic spirit of a new and better day. His views may be Utopian, but they express the spirit of unrest which quivers in the atmosphere of the present, gaining tension as the electricity of an approaching storm, to spend itself quietly in refreshing rain or to burst in the shivering bolt of destruction.

Prophets and seers have through their spiritual sensitiveness in all ages felt this spirit and have created an Eden, a Paradise where error has been conquered by truth; the darkness overwhelmed by light. Some made it material and the outgrowth of conditions here; while others in despair projected it beyound the portals of the grave.

The present author is strictly utilitarian and materialistic in his most fantastic schemes. It is right here that the new heaven is to be evolved out of the old earth, and to be peopled with men and women—only immeasureably better. Nor does he put the time away into an indeterminate future. It is all to come in the present century. It is to begin in a few years—we have to wait only until 1913! Then as his narrative runs, the United States finds itself at peace with all the world, yet has an army of 500,000. There is nothing for this army to do, and its general, Goodwill, prepared to use the army in constructing works for the public benefit, pledging to make it self-supporting, and in the end lead it out of military life, into that of civilians.

The proposition is accepted and the army begins the vast work of irrigating the desert tracts of the West. The pages are devoted to the full and complete development of this scheme. The plan pursued in irrigation is worked out in detail on original lines. The laying out of the city, the plan of the public buildings, are all novel and show not only a fervid fancy but a wonderful amount of thought. The architecture is unlike anything preceding it. The system of education, of public amusement, of commerce, all are new. It is the individual absorbed by the state, yet becoming stronger and gaining more advantages by such absorption.

So realistic is the narrative, that the reader can not resist believing that there must be such a wonderful settlement in the heart of the western desert, which it will well pay him to traverse the continent to see.

A pleasing story, full of interest and instructive, if the reader will lay aside all prejudices and sit down as to a play, not to criticise but to be amused, and to enjoy all that is commendable.

That all Utopian schemes of salvation of mankind from degradation and poverty are impractical, must not be allowed to mar the beauties of the dream-picture. Yet we pause and ask, would we be contented with the position of the people of this Utopian city, with every physical want gratified, and a knowledge that we should not be left destitute in age? No conflict, no striving, only obedience to the government, which through its officers is mother and father, and keeper. Human nature must radically change before such a state would be possible or desirable except to those who are defeated in the present struggle.

We can not otherwise than hold that government is not to care for the individual as a "ward," but to allow the individual to care for him or herself, and the more completely this is accomplished, the better the government.

A beautiful tree may be grown in some sheltered valley where no winds can reach it, and the crags above protect it from the lightning stroke, but if the builder wanted a strong beam to resist the shock of waves, or a plank to bear the grinding ice or treacherous reef, he would not take the tree sheltered from adverse winds, but go up on the mountainside, where an old oak had made desperate battle for life since the time the acorn was dropped in the rocky crevice, and for the passing of two centuries had been the target of the tempest. Every strand of its knotted stem has been braided tight and made strong by an extra pull of a tornado. It has been tempered by the winters' zero winds, and the hot breath of summer. Then with sharpest tools hew out the beam, cut from the gnarled limbs the knees that shall restrain the ocean's rage; saw the plank that shall hold back the impact of the iceberg! They will not fail when the day of trial comes. In human life, it is not the quiet, and rest of the assurance of a full stomach and a covered book which meets the demands of the aspiring soul, nor gives it the strength without which it is deprived of its just heritage. The "struggle for existence," is not without its advantages. For government to supplant it by other methods, even if successful, must sacrifice the individual. The struggle may be modified, and obstacles removed to allow full and free activity which should be the aim of all government, but the individual must be left to strive for himself if his highest attainment is reached.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Scientific Bible. Reason—Revelation—Rapture. Twentieth Century Testimony. Nature and "Me"—One. Knowable, Human, Natural, Personal God. Self-Eternal Substance. Natural Law. By Mary A. Hunt. Published for the author by F. E. Ormsby & Co., Chicago. Pages, 76.

This book is a bold enterprise expressing in verse the enthusiasm for an ego-centered world-conception. The odd title with the hardly defensible "Me" in quotation marks is not very promising, but the verses read fluently, and rise in many passages to a height of ecstacy which will carry away those who think and feel like the author. How far the pantheistic and ego-centered views are tenable is another question, and we may doubt the logic of the proposition that God can not be what we are not. Here is a specimen of the author's verses on God:

"Then out of Thee we cannot go,
Nor Thou from us depart,
Thou art our Head and Hands and Feet,
Intelligence, and Heart,
For what Thou art, we too must be,
Thou Infinite I AM,
All finished, uncreate. We live
To love Ourselves—Thy Man."

The nature of the "me" which attends to its natural growth and duties untaught is characterised in a series of instances among which one is described as follows:

"The honey bee no tutor has,
No lessons hard to spell,
No architect helps her to build
Her geometric cell.
She sips the dew and sucks the sweets
To mix her loaf of bread,
No book has she—no recipe
To bake it brown or red."

SORE EYES CURED.

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision.

Granulated Sore Eyes Cured.

Nashville, Tenn., Aug., 1901.

Gentlemen:—Having used your Actina for three months I am anxious to tell you of the results of that treatment. My eyes have improved very much since I used the Actina. The eyelids, were in a sad state, are no longer granulated or painful; the red inflammation in the eyes has entirely disappeared, and the agonizing pain that I used to suffer almost constantly has left almost entirely. Respectfully

Belmont College. MISS L. FLEURY.

Severe Inflammation of Eyes Cured,

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 5th, 1899.

Gentlemen:—Last winter I was troubled with inflammation of the eyes almost the whole winter, and used to go to the doctor every day sometimes for several weeks in succession, but since I have used Actina I have not had one spell of inflammation. I feel very grateful to you and wished I had heard of Actina a great deal sooner. Yours truly, AUGUST Y. FRY.

182 Oak Street.

Hundreds of other names can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial, post paid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Ass'n, Dept. T, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

OTHER BOOKS BY LILIAN WHITING:

Kate Field, A Record. Price $2.

A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. Price $1.25.

The World Beautiful. Three Series. Each $1.

From Dreamland Sent, and Other Poems. $1. These books are for sale at this office.

LISBETH.

An Interesting Story of Two Worlds.

Elevating, Fascinating, Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price $1.00.

WISDOM OF THE AGES.

Revelations from Zertoulem, the Prophet of Tlaskanata.

A Mine of Valuable Reflections and Suggestions.

This work was automatically transcribed by George A. Fuller, M. D., a gentleman who stands high as a lecturer and medium. It is a mine of valuable reflections and suggestions. The paragraphs are short, suggestive and inspiring. Every one of them leads to something higher, grander, nobler. Price $1.00.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE

PART I.--The Pentateuch.

Comments on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lillie Devereux Blake, Rev. Phebe Hanaford, Clara Bewick Colby, Ellen Battelle Dietrick, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, Ursula N. Gestefeld, and Francis E Barr.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.--PART II.

Judges, Kings, Prophets and Apostles. Comments on the Old and New Testaments, from Joshua to Revelation. The comments are keen, bright, spicy, full of wit, the work of radical thinkers who are not ignorant of the higher criticism. There is not a dull page in either of these books, but each is a galaxy of the bright minds of the day and throw a new light on the Bible teachings relating to woman. Price of each, paper, 50 cents.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

You should sign your own name and address to the items you send in; otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

Alex. Macy writes from Nantucket, Mass.: "I have the book, 'A Wanderer in the Spirit Land,' which gives us the ethical and natural principle. As ye sow so shall ye also reap the effects. Effects follow causes that is generally conceded by all. They are not fully conscious that every cause has a direct effect. Every act and every thought has a direct action on our lives. I can not estimate the value on our lives of some of the articles in The Progressive Thinker. I have had the benefit of being a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker for six years in San Jose, Cal., and have followed it two years in Nantucket, Mass., since my home return.

The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature, holds services at Nathan Hall, 1565 Milwaukee Ave., corner of Western Avenue, at 7:30 p.m. Mrs. W. F. Schumacher, pastor.

John T. McClure writes from Denver, Col.: "The Spiritualists of Denver are not dead but are 'sleeping.' They are preparing for active work in the near future. Our altitude, which is one mile above sea level, and the ozone in the mountain air, are conducive to higher thought and that unfoldment which is our destiny under natural law. Mr. J. A. Edgerton's institutional church is doing good work, and several other organizations will soon open with regular weekly services. May we live in the domain of love so wholly that we will know no ill feeling nor enmity to any being, be a growing power for good, be nearer to our loved ones and to our spirit teachers who are endeavoring to lift us to live more perfect lives."

J. L. Hite writes: "The first annual Spiritualist camp meeting held in Hite's beautiful grove one mile west of Pleasantville, Ohio, from September 7th to September 15th, was a grand success in every respect. The speakers were Simon Ketell, Mrs. A. E. Kiby, of Cincinnati; Mrs. Ewbanks, of Columbus; and a Mr. Niburn, of Boston. The attendance was good, considering the orthodox community; the tests were grand, and in nearly every instance were recognized. In starting this camp it is the intention to get the people to think for themselves, and to study the Bible to gain more knowledge of the future state of man. There is already a desire for another meeting next year. If nothing prevents there will be."

H. F. Coats writes: "September 21st the Rev. T. W. Sherk was greeted at Kenwood Hall by a large audience. His subject was 'Present-Day Opportunities,' and while it was his first time to lecture upon a Spiritualistic platform, he handled his subject in a manner that pleased and instructed his audience. Misses Bessie and Porter McAdoo rendered some very fine violin solos, and we hope to have them with us each Sunday evening. Many spirit messages were given to prove the philosophy that we live after the so-called death, which is necessary to the investigator."

Summoned through supernatural visition, Mrs. Alice E. Chapin, a well known woman of San Jose, Cal., started a short time ago for India, where she will devote the rest of her life to missionary work among the heathen. Mrs. Chapin is a middle-aged widow, whose husband was a Union soldier. She is a graduate of the San Jose State Normal School. For a number of years she has resided at a farm on the Senter road and conducted a Sunday school for the benefit of the children of the neighborhood. A few months ago, while engaged in her housework, Mrs. Chapin says a voice from the spirit world advised her to enter the missionary field and finally commanded her to lay aside other pursuits and consecrate her life to this service. She was at a loss as to what field she should enter, but while attending the Second resbyterian Church in this city on July 3 she heard an appeal for missionary workers in India. Mrs. Chapin then sold all of her possessions, including the ranch, and prepared to leave for India. She goes without the backing of any mission board, and will use her own funds. It was only by the strenuous insistence of friends that she was prevailed upon to take first-class passage instead of steerage, so anxious was she to save all for her missionary work. Mrs. Chapin went to San Francisco to-day, and to-morrow she will leave on the Honkkong Maru for India.

D. W. Hull has been engaged to lecture for the First Spiritualist Church at Tacoma, Wash., for three months, and in consequence of which he will be obliged to postpone his trip to California till near the holidays. His address is 919½ Yakima St., Tacoma, Wash.

B. F. Sayers writes from Coshocton, Ohio: "I wish to speak to the many readers of your valuable paper about a rising young medium, Mr. G. W. Way, formerly of Wheeling, W. Va., now located at Washington, D. C. He is a trance speaker and a fine test medium. We have had him with us for two weeks, and he has made many converts with his convincing tests. I predict for him a bright future. He is a man with extraordinary good habits. We will be glad to welcome him to our little city at any time. He leaves for his home October 1st, and can be addressed at 7 N. St. N. W., Washington, D. C."

Channing Severance writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "I have never fully forgiven you for shutting off the Hull-Jamieson debate, but if you get that intellectual combat into book form within a year or so, I may by considerable effort and the assistance of the Lord, succeed in softening my heart. Meanwhile I pass along $1.25 to renew my subscription and for Mr. Tuttle's book which you virtually offer to give away. Hoping that 'Infinite Intelligence' will continue to smile upon you and the Progressive Thinker, I am yours truly."

Mrs. C. T. Lyons writes from Waverly, N. Y.: "Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, N. Y., have just closed a three days' engagement with the Progressive Spiritualist Association. They are missionaries for the N. S. A., and I am sure there are no greater workers in the field. I congratulate the Association in that they have secured those so well adapted to the work. Mr. Sprague enlightened his hearers on 'Phenomena, Philosophy, Science and Religion of Spiritualism.' The four addresses he gave were listened to with deep interest. They were followed with readings by Mrs. Sprague, which were recognized and acknowledged correct. They will ever receive a warm welcome with the Spiritualist Association of Waverly."

Dr. Noyes writes: "Since leaving Lily Dale, Mrs. Noyes and I have held two spiritual meetings at I. O. O. F. Hall at Rochester, N. Y. Sunday, Sept. 21 at Syracuse, N. Y., at the First Spiritual Association Hall, we had a large attendance. The Society here is young in the work, but I think the friends will build up a strong society, but within the week they will lose one of their dear friends who has done much for the cause and the society, Mrs. Brewer, who leaves for Chicago to study medison. We met here an old friend and coworker, G. C. B. Ewell, who is conducting quite a large sanitarium."

Charles T. Schneider, of Beaver Falls Pa., has opened his Spiritual hall for lectures and tests. There was much interest manifested in the lecture and tests.

John F. Havens writes that Spiritualism is flourishing at Tell City, Ind. Thirty-one members in the society. Four mediums are developing; two two trance, two trumpet, and one writing. Mr. and Mrs. Elmo were there and gave good satisfaction.

Albert Unsworth writes from Port Huron, Mich., that there are many Spiritualists there who take no Spiritualist paper whatever, hence have no practical knowledge of what is going on in our ranks. They are very ignorant in reference to occult or spiritual subjects.

The Baltimore American says: Mrs. Lillian Whiting, a literary light of Boston, is one of the latest converts to the belief that communication is possible with the spirit-world. Miss Whiting was an intimate friend of the late Kate Field, the journalist. Recently, she says, Miss Field from the world of spirits, directed her to give to Mr. Stedman a letter written by Edgar A. Poe. "Of course," explained Miss Whiting, "I heard no physical voice but the impression was just as vivid as if someone had actually spoken. I heard Kate's voice say, 'Lillian, give the Poe letter to Mr. Stedman.'" It now appears that Mr. Stedman, unknown to Miss Whiting, was preparing an edition of Poe's writings for publication and needed the particular letter which Miss Whiting sent him. This matter is well worth consideration and investigation by the Boston Society for Psychoal Research. Of course, the great majority of persons will be skeptical, but it is as true now as it was in the days of Shakespeare that there are more things in this world than are dreamed of in our philosophy. Miss Whiting may have deluded herself into the belief that she received a message from the spirit of Kate Field. Such things are always possible. But who can say with authority that communications with the spirits of the departed are impossible?

A. C. Fisher writes from New Haven, Conn.: "The cause of Spiritualism is dear to me. You are engaged in a business that is far above the mass of mankind; in fact it is much more desirable than a throne in the largest empire of the world."

T. S. Russell writes: "A special course of lectures is in progress at Hopkins' Hall, under the auspices of the Englewood Spiritual Union. Hon. Ex-Senator Warren Smith, of Tennessee, delivered three lectures. Last Sunday his subject was the 'Philosophy of Death. Then What?' The hall was well filled, and the discourse excellent. Sunday the 28th, he speaks in the afternoon and evening. Subject will be the 'Existence of Evil, Its Cause and Cure, Theologically and Scientifically Considered.' Spiritualism has few, if any, more forcible exponents than Bro. Smith. Our regular services are under the charge of Harry J. Moore and Mrs. Gehring during October and Mrs. Marion Carpenter during November. What a feast is ours, and still more to follow."

The Cleveland Plaindealer says: "A colored workman engaged in tearing down old Grace Episcopal Church at the corner of Prospect and Erie streets declares he has seen a ghost in the ruins. The specter, he says, wore a millinery creation composed of a black cloth, and the rest of the figure was also robed in the same somber hue."

The Columbus Dispatch, Ohio, says: "The trustees of the Spiritual Temple, corner Sixth and State streets, have arranged for a special series of meetings for fall and winter. Speakers and test mediums have been secured as follows: Rev. H. J. Moore, of Chicago; Mrs. Lole Prior, of Atlanta, Ga.; Miss Lizzie Harlowe, of Haydenville, Mass.; Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids; Miss Marguerite Gaule, of Baltimore; W. J. Colville, of England; Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit; Rev. B. F. Herrick, of Alliance. For the month of September, Rev. H. J. Moore is the speaker. Next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings special night services will be held at which Miss Marguerite Gaule of Baltimore, will take part. The public is invited to attend a reception on Monday evening in honor of Miss Gaule and Rev. Mr. Moore, in the temple parlors."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

A Texas paper speaks as follows of a lecture by Mrs. Laura B. Payne: "Mrs. Payne delivered a very pleasing address from the subject, 'The World's Cry by Spiritualism,' and the ceremony of naming the baby (christening) was performed. In this ceremony flowers were used in place of water for the child is accepted as pure and innocent and flowers emblematic of purity are used. The candidate was Alva, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Neidermann. Monday evening at sundown appropriate services commemorating those who passed to spirit life in the great Galveston disaster, were held on the beach near Lucas Terrace ruins, and a profusion of flowers were strewn upon the waves, which serve as winding sheets for so many thousands. At 8 p.m. the convention was formally closed by President Ring after addresses by Rev. M. D. Tenney and Mrs. Laura B. Payne."

A striking instance of the Hawaiian terror of witchcraft has just come to the notice of the police at Honolulu. A young native woman appealed to the authorities to take care of her husband, who, she said, was being driven insane by a "kahuna," the name applied by the natives to the old Hawaiian sorcerers, who are supposed to have the power of praying their victims to death. Ninihua was the name of the victim of witchcraft. His father-in-law was ill on the island of Kauai, Ninihua sought the aid of a Hawaiian kahuna, but could find none in that district. The natives told him that Mitimura, a Japanese kahuna, was very successful in curing sick people. Mitimura was employed. The Japanese pronounced numerous incantations and went through a weird rite that combined the Hawaiian and Japanese ideas of effecting a cure. The prayers of the Japanese kahuna availed not and the father-in-law died. The Japanese had evidently become enamoured of the pretty Hawaiian wife of Ninihua, for in spite of the fact that Ninihua had paid him liberally, the Japanese persisted in demanding some additional remuneration. Finally the real purpose of the Japanese became evident when he demanded boldly that Ninihua surrender the woman to him. The Japanese declared that the spirits had ordered the exchange. Ninhua and his wife fled to the island of Maui. The Japanese followed them. He declared that he was praying Ninihua to death. The young man's health failed fast. Finally he came to Honolulu. The Japanese followed and renewed his demands." Superstition and ignorance have a foothold everywhere. Spiritualism will gradually eradicate the same.

When one has great wealth it is angelic to use it for the benefit of others. Here is an incident that explains itself, occurring at Lyndhurst: Great lawns trampled by scores of little feet, happy childish voices filled the air, the whirr of an automobile, the clatter of horses' hoofs (each with its gladsome and unaccustomed burden), the chant of a phonograph and a woman's delighted laughter—this was the annual children's party given by Miss Helen Miller Gould yesterday afternoon at her beautiful home, Lyndhurst, at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, N. Y. The guests, more than three hundred of them, were gathered from among the poor children of Tarrytown and Irvington. The girls, that is the larger ones, are members of Miss Gould's sewing classes. The graduates were present yesterday, those who have reached the age of eighteen and have gone through the dressmaking course, which has fitted them to make their own way in the world. When the annual party which has been so close to the heart of the mistress of Lyndhurst was started some years ago it was given to afford pleasure to the small folk on the estate—the families of the men employed there. It was characteristic of Miss Gould that as soon as she found how much joy she was giving her little people she became anxious to have the less fortunate share it. The babies of three and four were gathered into a kindergarten, and during this last year Miss Gould has arranged a manual training school for the thirty boys growing up at Lyndhurst, and these with skilled eye and hand were eager contestants in games of dexterity.

The Rev. William Wickert, an aged and retired Methodist preacher of Buffalo, is visiting friends near Cortland, N. Y. He was extremely tired one Monday night when he went to his room, and for the first time in twenty years forgot his evening prayer and went directly to bed. In the morning the omission troubled his mind and all day he declared that his evil genius pursued him. While he was shaving his razor dropped from his hand and, falling upon his left foot, inflicted a cut. Taking an after-breakfast walk a dog attacked him and bit him. He went into the house and sat down after that, but in the afternoon he started for Cortland to get his mail. While hitching up the horse the animal stepped upon the foot he had injured in the morning and increased his lameness. On the way to Courtland one of the wagon wheels came off and let the wagon fall to the ground with such force that the old man was thrown out. The wagon was fixed and he resumed his journey. He left the horse standing in front of the postoffice, as usual, while he got his mail, but when he went out it had trotted off home, leaving Mr. Wickert to walk. These experiences were very curious, but in no way connected with his omission of prayer.

The Chicago American has the following from Carlisle, Pa.: "Wizardry does not prosper in Carlisle. Mrs. Sarah McBride, who wove magic spells in the esoteric atmosphere of Jail alley, was fined $50 and costs and sent to jail for eight months by Judge Biddle. Although Mrs. McBride had a husband and children to care for, all her affection was centered upon the occult. She had charms and amulets for every situation in life. Bible texts, framed in cardboard; magic rings and wands, rabbits' feet of phenomenal virtues, stuffed owls, and, in fact, a collection of such amazing variety that recently it was proposed to place it in a local museum. When the spirits were propitious the necromancer of Jail alley was able to see into the depths of the earth. That is how she found out that a treasure of $30,000 was buried on the property of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Zug. They gave her something more than $500 on account when she gave them the information, but when they looked, their eyes, not being magical, could not find the money. By that means Mrs. McBride came into court, where she was promptly convicted. As she is sixty years old, the jury, while convicting her, recommended her to mercy, and Judge Biddle took this into consideration in imposing sentence."

Great alarm is felt at the Vatical, Rome, because of information received there to the effect that influential Filipino priests have started a national church independent of Rome and are rapidly extending the movement among the natives, seizing upon catholic churches for the use of the new organization. Perceiving now the mistake in delaying the Taft negotiations, Pope Leo has ordered Mgr. Guidi, the apostolic delegate to the Philippines, to leave for Manila Oct. 1, there to conciliate the natives and stamp out the schism, which complicates the Filipino question seriously, inasmuch as it is believed that the United States Government would look with favor on a Filipino church that was independent of Rome.

Great alarm is felt at the Vatican, ists of Cincinnati, Ohio, held memorial services in the Temple in memory of the late President McKinley. There was a very large attendance. Miss Minnie Robruck sang "Lead, Kindly Light." Mr. E. H. Brook gave the Spiritualistic interpretation of his life, saying his influence over the world was greater to-day than ever; that as an arisen soul, he, with other great souls, were still working for the nation and the people he loved so well.

Correspondent writes: The evening of Sept. 24 was the occasion of the wedding of Mr. Halbert W. Sinn and Mrs. Cora L. Strickler, at the residence of the mother of the happy groom. A quiet home-wedding, such as Spiritualists delight in, and there exemplified. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. O. M. Hewitt in his usual felicitous manner; when, after congratulations, a bountiful wedding feast was partaken of, amid the flowers and plants that seemed to transform the home into a fairy bower. The groom is one of The Creterion Company, now rendering for the delight of our citizens, "Yon Yonsen," and so left for his place of duty immediately after the supper, accompanied, of course, by the bridal party for the theatre and the evening's entertainment. May the married life of the happy pair be as pleasant as its beginning.

The Denver Post says: "Pueblo, Col., Sept. 24.—Both Engineer George Andrews and his fireman, Thomas Philbin, who were killed by the blowing up of engine No. 1101 at Monument last night, had a premonition that something was going to happen on their run to Denver, and neither would have gone out yesterday had there been any way out of it. While at the roundhouse here yesterday morning Fireman Philbin, in talking about the big engine to a number of friends, said that he did not want to go out yesterday, but that he had to obey orders. He said he felt that something would happen. Engineer Andrews also said that he would rather remain in Pueblo for the day, as he did not feel right about taking out the engine. Friends laughed off the fears of the two men, but to-day they recall the words with dread. Before leaving Pueblo Engineer Andrews made a thorough inspection of his engine and as he was always careful, local railroad men cannot understand how the accident happened."

A very enjoyable golden wedding celebration was arranged by the children of P. L. and Hannah M. Porter, on Friday evening, Sept. 26, at their residence, 307 S. 53rd Ave. About twenty persons were present besides the family, their son Frank being absent on business. The program consisted of singing, music by graphophone, flashlight pictures, an enjoyable ice cream and cake luncheon and a benediction impromptu poem by Mrs. Baldwin.

Mrs. E. A. Craig writes that she has had a delightful time at Lily Dale Camp. She thinks that great improvements will take place there in the future. She looks hopefully forward to the time when Spiritualism will stand forth purified and exalted, to take its proper place in the world. Mrs. Craig's home is at Waco, Texas.

E. J. Bowtell lectured at Pine Grove, Niantic, Conn., Aug. 17 and 31; Sept. 7 and 14. For the Providence Spiritualist Association, Providence, R. I., Sept. 21. Is engaged by the Olneyville Spiritualist Society for the season commencing Oct. 5. Can accept engagements for week day meetings and occasional Sundays during the season. Address Box 82, Olneyville, R. I.

Subscriber writes from Springfield, Mo.: "If the mediums whose manifestations are all of earthly or mundane origin were exposed every time they were found out, there would be less such work going on. If the Springfield people had followed those so-called mediums, who say that they can bring all things desirable to you, taking money and jewelry in return when they know that they do not intend to follow out their promises, and brought them to justice, the people of that city and other cities as well, would have been far better off financially. Nine per cent of the mediums who have come to this city to enlighten the people, both in spiritual and material things, have advertised in such a way as to make the public believe that they could bring all things to a desirable end, both in business and love affairs, and have left the city suddenly with the money which they gather in from the rich and poor alike. Such people as these can not receive too severe a punishment and should be exposed wherever they go. They hurt the cause of Spiritualism, causing people in all positions of life who are seeking the truth, to turn away in disgust, and is it any wonder?"

Dr. C. P. Winslow writes to us claiming that the Bible should not be accepted in any of its data, or taken as reliable. "The God, the Infinite, can not be comprehended by the finite mind." The doctor's ideal man was the lamented Col. Ingersoll—"the brightest mind, the most exemplary man of the 19th century."

Dr. R. McL. Angus writes from Toledo, Ohio: "I have open dates for fall and winter to serve societies as lecturer and test medium. I am much interested in circle and lyceum work. Terms very reasonable. Address me at No. 620 Madison street.

Mr. Theodore S. Bosley and Mrs. Esther Gideon Thomas, a prominent medium, were married September 16, 1902, at Seattle, Wash. At home Fridays after September 25, 2225 Second avenue.

On Sunday, September 22d, Rev. H. W. Thomas, being detained in the city to officiate at the funeral of a prominent member of the People's Church, sent Dr. T. A. Bland to fill an appointment to preach in the People's Church at Leland, Ill. Dr. B. says that the large audience seemed much pleased with his discourse, which was full of progressive ideas along Spiritualistic lines. Many of his auditors expressed the hope that he would visit them and preach them another sermon in the near future.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the N. S. A. will open at Berkley Hall, Boston, Mass., corner of Berkely and Tremont streets, Tuesday, October 21, at 10 a.m. The business sessions will be held morning and afternoon, October 21, 22, 23 and 24. Grand entertainments will be held each evening, at which noted mediums and speakers will be present. A grand lyceum entertainment, one evening. Twenty-five cents admission to the evening meetings will be charged to help defray expenses. Delegates are admitted free upon their cards. No admission to daily sessions.

The headquarters of the convention will be at Berkely Hotel, a most beautiful, commodious and comfortable hotel. It is on Berkely and Boylston streets. Visitors and delegates will be furnished special rates as follows: Rooms, single person, $1.50 per day; two persons in room, $1.25 per day each. Board and room, $3 each person. No compulsion to anyone as to hotel, or rooming house; delegates and visitors who wish can take rooms and meals away from the hotel; restaurants and rooming hofises are plenty in Boston. Reception to all at hotel, Monday, October 20, at 8 p.m.

Railroad rates can be secured by asking your railroad agent, a few days in advance, to secure certificate tickets to the National Spiritualists Convention in Boston. The rate will be one fare and a third for round trip. Holders of these tickets must be at convention Friday, October 24, to have them signed by special ticket agent from the railroad office who will be there that day. The N. S. A. secretary must sign the tickets, but her signature will not suffice; each, ticket must be countersigned by the railroad agent.

The following important amendments will be offered at convention:

Constitution—Offered by the Trustees of the First Spiritualists' Association of Washington, D. C. Amend Section 3, Article VI, to read as follows: "No local society shall have exclusive jurisdiction within the city, town or district, in which it is located; but additional charters shall only be granted by the board —in such localities—after thorough investigation and careful review of the facts—afford ample evidence that the cause will be benefited thereby."

By-Laws—Offered by National Spiritualists Association Board. Amend Article II, Section I, by striking out the words State Agents, in second line; also amend all other sections in By-Laws by striking out the same words wherever they occur.

Amend Article IX of By-Laws by striking out entire Section I and make Section II read Section I, and Section III read Section II.

Amend By-Laws by striking out Article XI entire.

THE HARP OF MEMORY.

There's a magical harp of a thousand strings,
With melodies soft to the heart it sings;
It thrills with the cadence of tunes that rung
With the echoing gladness of voices young,
And it brings us the brightness of long ago
When the sun of life is descending low.
Its songs are the songs of the days gone by,
With the sweet refrains that can never die.
It whispehs them out of the vanished years,
In a glimmer of smiles and a mist of tears.
For memory's harp, with a tender tune,
Opes the way to a path with roses strewn.

There's never a life that does not hold
The power to touch its strings of gold;
No heart so sad but in some recess
Is hidden a song that is meant to bless,
For memory holds a magic sway,
And its harp is a harp for all to play.

Though oft there steals through its soft refrain
The tearful sound of a saddening strain,
Remember that sorrow has chastening power—
Both sun and shade refresh a flower,
And the richest music must ever be
In the soulful strains of the minor key.

O! magical harp, sing on, sing free;
Whatever thy echoing chord may be.
'Tis memory's voice that sweetly sings
Is hidden a song that is meant to bless
And the heart responds in melodious lays
To returning songs of remembered days.

Battery of Evil Forces.

At the church of Spiritual Unity, St. Louis, Mo., Rev. W. F. Peck took up the recent developments in the boodle investigation for review. He said, in part:

"What a battery of evil force was forfed when the 'boodle combine' in the disgraceful house of delegates were gathered in criminal conclave. How the invisible demons must have laughed when these faithless public servants called upon the Almighty to witness their devilish compact. Can we doubt the existence of excarnate devils when such incarnate wickedness stalks the earth? More. Can we doubt that these conscienceless men were themselves possessed and influenced by these invisible 'unclean spirits?'

"And the wealthy bribers and tempters. What of them? The legend relates that the pure-souled Jesus was starved and tempted by the devil to do evil by the offer of wealth and power incalculable. In what respect was this legendary devil any more devilish than these present day corruptors of public officials? Is it unreasonable to surmise that these tempters are possessed of devils? obsessed by evils and unclean spirits?

"What protection have we against these evil influences, and how may they be exorcised when in possession? Prevention is far better than cure. 'Resist the devil and he will flee from you.' No unclean spirit in all the universe can possess an absolutely unwilling victim. The soul that aspires to righteousness and closes its doors to the vile and sensual may defy all the devils. No devil ever yet obsessed a saint. As no soul can be enslaved against its own will so its freedom will depend upon choice. There is no power in the universe that can save a man against his will.

"We may point him the way of life but hemust walk in it himself. Salvation is not a gift, it must be earned, says Emerson. 'Nothing can be had for nothing.' In every human soul is the germ of angelhood, the Christ spirit. All it needs is room to grow. Cast out the devils of greed and selfishness, fortify yourselves against the demoniac's influences and the angels will come in their place, and you will realize the kingdom of heaven while yet on earth."

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. (Including Methods and Instruments." By H. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. For sale at this office. Price 75 cents.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

THE OTHER WORLD AND THIS.

A compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature. By Augusta W. Fletcher. M. D. In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings. Price $1.50.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

By S. Weil. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents. This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion, that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and facts.

NEW EDITION
THE LYCEUM GUIDE
BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

Do you want to organize a society for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM

furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM. It furnishes a system of evolution by internal growth; not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school. It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.
It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.
Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.
Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.
Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.
The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

"X," Toledo, O. Q. Is there any assurance of the claims to the antiquity of the so-called Mother Shipton's prophecy and will you publish the same?

A. It is stated that these verses were first published in England in 1485, forgetful that no printing was done in England at that time and long afterwards. It is a recent production and a confessed forgery. The doggerel about which so much has been said is as follows:

Carriages without horses shall go
And accidents fill the world with woe;
Around the world thought shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye.
Waters shall yet more wonders do,
How strange, yet shall be true;
The world upside down shall be,
And gold be found at root of tree.
Through hills man shall ride,
And no horse or ass be at his side.

Under water man shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk,
In the air men shall be seen
In white, in black, in green,
Iron in the water shall float
As easy as a wooden boat.
Gold shall be found 'mid stone,
In a land that's now unknown.
Fire and water shall wonders do,
England at last admit a Jew.
And this world to an end shall come
In eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

The editorial which usually accompanies the verses, wisely remarks that every prediction has been fulfilled except the last. As the prophecy was written after the event, this is not remarkable. The final two lines reveal the intentions of the writer to create a sensation by this old prophetic howl, by framing the predictions before they were fulfilled. The day of the pessimistic prophet has passed, when the religious bigot, evidenced his divine mission by lugubrious moaning of the coming end of the world, or minor disasters. Why must the prophets always predict evil? They would be far more successful if they would speak of good things as surely to be expected. As an example, there were any number of astrologers, and regrettable to say mediums, who by wonderful calculations of the planetary positions, and revelations from the seventh sphere, where spirits are supposed to know everything, who were sure King Edward would not be crowned—not one that he would be.

Oh for the cheerful-faced prophet of good!

J. A. Whitfield. Q. As I am almost entirely alone in my belief, in this place, how can I sit for the purpose of receiving communications?

A. It is always desirable for a circle to be formed of several interested and harmoniously minded members. But if this is not possible, one may often gain desirable results by sitting alone. For this purpose it is best to retire to a room devoted to the purpose and at a fixed and appointed time. For the hour hold the mind free from every thought but an earnest desire for the presence of spirit friends. Even should no tangible manifestations be received the time will be well spent for the harmonizing of the mind and the strength it will give. Nor should immediate response be expected from the spirit world. Patience should be mtaintained for the desired result is one of priceless value.

Mrs. F. D. McCormick. Q. Four years ago I lost my little girl of eight years. My sorrow is just as great as on the day she died. My thoughts go to her, and my soul cries out for her to come to me and tell me where she is. Yet she comes not nor puts her arms around me and say she loves me. What would I not give to know that my darling is happy. The thought of reincarnation sends a sickening chill over me, and if I were forced to accept it, would drive me mad—to think of her living again as some one else! How can I receive assurance?

A. It is not strange that this mother should shrink at the thought of reincarnation, which as effectually blots out personal existence as oblivion itself. Her heart cry is that of countless mothers, and nowhere else can they find a balm except in the blessed assurance of Spiritualism. Her mind is so shrouded in the thick clouds of grief, that the coming of the dear child near to her is prevented, and the very earnestness of her appeal excludes the answer to her prayer. Until resignation comes, as come it will, by time, that soothes the most cruel stroke of grief, or by knowledge, the gentle spirit must be repelled. Then it becomes a duty for the mourner to assuage his grief, and not reflect its shadows on the spirit. It becomes his duty not to close the door in the face of spirit-friends, anxious to enter.

Why should we regret? Does not death unlock the gate of eternal life and swing it open wide for the ascending spirit? True, "out of our hands she passed," but into gentler hands than ours. The waiting angels received her in their tender arms, arrayed her in new robes of their sphere of light, and she knew not the change. She received an angel mother as her own, and after the pain of the second birth had passed, her life became a constant joy. She will perfect herself in the future life, as she would have done had she remained, and if our spiritual perceptions are sufficiently quickened we shall see her from day to day and year to year in her ascending course. We shall see her sweet spirit, taken from earth unsoiled and spotless as the calla's bloom, mature so delicately and spiritually that we shall be glad that her feet were not called to press the flinty pathways of earth life; that she was not called to drink its bitter cup of pain, nor bear its heavy burdens of cares.

Mother of an angel, weep no more. The time will come when your regarded loss will count as gain.

The spirit child is as anxious to make her presence known, as the mother is to receive the knowledge. If the mother is to become sensitive to the presence of her child, she must adjust herself to the laws and conditions which are essential. These have been repeated many times in this department.

Protestant. Q. France is a Catholic country; why is it that government is driving out the convents?

A. It is not waging war on all convents, and is not opposed to them on religious grounds. The government passed a law making it obligatory for all places of public employment to be open to inspection. Many or most of these convents are engaged in some kind of manufacture and employ a large number of children. Public inspectors were appointed to visit all such institutions and inquire into their methods, the number of people employed, etc. This is just such a law as the United States should have, and the numberless nunneries and convents in this country wherein tens of thousands of people, the majority women, are confined by impenetrable walls, as though condemned to a penitentiary, without means of communcating with the external world or of escape. It is doubtful if there is a man of any party who dare propose a law which shall compel these convents to open their doors to a government-appointed committee! If they are all right, why this secrecy? Why refuse admission to any one? They are under the Catholic priesthood declared above the laws of the land, and within their sacred portals, no inquiry is allowed.

The French government is better than the state religion. It clearly sees the iniquity and crime which may be concealed under the cloak of the church and demands publicity. Many of the convents have yielded, but others have not, and it is against these the government has acted.

Resolution of Lookout Mountain Camp Meeting Association of Spiritualists.

Whereas, twenty years ago a movement was inaugurated to establish a permanent Campmeeting Association of Spiritualists on Lookout Mountain and for that purpose a hotel and the land since known as the Natural Bridge Spring subdivision of the town of Lookout Mountain was purchased by this corporation, and the balance represented by notes for $2,400, dated August 1, 1895, and falling due three years thereafter, carried for several years by J. M. Cuplel, a member of this Association, and after his death carried by Jerry Robinson, president of the Association, and with fees due the solicitor for the Association remains unpaid; and

Whereas, The hotel on the ground was burned several years ago and has not been rebuilt; and

Whereas, After a struggle of twenty years and the death of almost all who were identified with the movement in its conception and repeated efforts by circular and otherwise to obtain the cooperation of Spiritualists to aid us to make a success of the venture, and failures to accomplish anything in that way, we are satisfied that the venture is a failure and that it is to the interest of its stockholders and of the survivors of those who inaugurated it and of Spiritualism that a bill be filed in the Chancery Court of Chattanooga to wind up the corporation, sell out its assets, pay its debts and divide prorata with the stockholders what may be left.

Therefore, The directors of this corporation are authorized and required to co-operate with any creditor or creditors, or stockholders or stockholder, in any litigation necessary to wind up this corporation, and request said Jerry Robinson to file the bill, believing it to be best for all parties in interest, some of the stock held by parties who are not Spiritualists, that this corporation be wound up. JOHN McDOUGALL President.

IMPORTANT MATTER FROM OUR FOREIGN EXCHANGES

HARBINGER OF LIGHT, MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

REMARKABLE PHENOMENA IN MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

I was privileged to be present, with about a dozen others, at the invitation of Mr. Stanford, in his rooms, Russell street, on Tuesday evening, June the 24th, to witness some of the most extraordinary phenomena I have ever seen during the 31 years of my experience as a Spiritualist. The medium was Mr. Bailey, who was previously examined by Mr. Stanford, in order to be assured that he had brought no objects with him into the room, and the conditions otherwise were such as to preclude the possibility of fraud or deception. The two controls were a high-caste Hindu, from whom I have been in the habit of receiving communications myself, through two other mediums, since the 16th of July, 1898, and Dr. E. Robinson, who passed away in 1864, and was during his lifetime a distinguished Orientalist. He filled the chair of Syro-Chaldaic literature, in the Theological Seminary of New York, having previously visited the Holy Land, Bible in hand, for the purpose of exploring the localities mentioned in it, which led to the publication in 1851 of his "Biblical Researches in Palestine, Sinai and Arabia Petrea," for which he received the gold medal of the Royal Geographical Society of London. His last, "Researches in Palestine," were published after a second visit to that country in 1854, and are a treasure house of erudition. I mention these circumstances because they will help to explain why he is still deeply interested, as a spirit, in oriental archaeology, and why he has brought to Mr. Stanford numerous manuscripts from Egypt, Asia Minor and Persia, but recently exhumed, which manuscripts are still in Mr. Stanford's possession; and I have had an opportunity of examining them as well as the very ancient coins and relics similarly brought from the East.

The first phenomenon I witnessed was one familiar enough in India, where for centuries it has been produced by Fakir mediums. I was requested to plant a mango seed about two inches below the soil in a flower pot on the table. I did so, and was asked to examine it ten or twelve minutes afterwards, when I found a green shoot had been sent up about two inches in length. I was requested to look at the seed itself, and on doing so found the outer husk had opened and was beginning to decompose, and that four or five little rootlets had been sent out from the bottom of the seed as well as the spike above. I carefully redeposited the seed in the soil, and after a lapse of another ten or twelve minutes I found the green shoot had gained about an inch and a half in length, and that from it had issued three perfectly-formed leaves.

The second phenomenon was the materialization by Dr. Robinson of one of his hands, which appeared as a luminous object nearly a high as the ceiling, and gradually coming down to the table, seized a pencil and wrote upon two sides of a sheet of paper which it then placed in my own hands the following words: "Dr. Robinson, greeting to Brother S——. Light for the last days." (I may add that on the following Friday, Dr. Robinson, speaking to me through my own medium, assured me that the handwriting was a fac simile of that which he had employed on earth, and gave me an explanation of the rapid germination and growth of the mango seed, showing that it had been accomplished in strict accordance with natural laws).

Then followed a series of phenomena, directed by the Hindu control. A heavy object fell upon the table with a thud, and on the light being turned up it proved to be an African fetish. The body was composed of a human femur, almost as dark as mahogany, and clothed, so to speak, with a neatly arranged garment of millet straw. On the largest of the three superior tuberosities was rudely carved a human face, a small piece of mother of pearl, triangular in shape, being inlaid to represent the nose, while the head was covered by a kind of cap or turban, woven together of coarse human hair, much as a bird's nest is. Two of the tuberosities of the lower extremity served as feet to the grotesque idol.

This was followed by a divining rod, tipped with ebony, which the sorcerers are accustomed to throw in order to ascertain whether the answers of their deities to their invocations will be propitious or otherwise; this being determined by its position where it fell. Such at least was the explanation offered to the sitters by the Hindu control.

Another instrument of a somewhat similar character, but tipped with ivory, was likewise thrown upon the table.

Fourthly a species of plastron, or possibly apron, composed of the skin of a large tiger's head, and worn as an ornament, arrived in the same mysterious manner, and was found to have dependent from it four of the radial bones of the human arm, brown in color, and polished apparently by much handling.

All these objects had been specially brought for presentation to Dr. Peebles, in order that he might take them to America with him for the purpose of proving how such articles could be instantaneously conveyed from the centre of a continent thousands of miles distant to a room in Melbourne; and could be just as instantaneously decomposed in order to accomplish the apparently miraculous exploit of passing matter through matter. One of the objects brought a few evenings previously was a leopard skin, measuring about six feet from the neck to the tip of the tail.

Here are tangible proofs of spirit agency. They are solid, incontrovertible facts not to be got rid of by argument or ridicule. You can weigh them, measure them, handle them, scrutinize them with the utmost minuteness. All the semi-scientific jargon about telepathy, unconscious cerebration, hallucination, the sub-liminal consciousness, teleo-logical automatism, cryptomnesia, the disaggregation of personality, etc., etc., which is talked by puzzle-headed pseudo-scientists, is powerless when opposed to the evidence of the senses in phenomena of this kind. Here is a medium in deep trance, seated in a chair at a large table, surrounded by a dozen or so of intelligent and watchful observers. On each side is a vigilant onlooker who would perceive the slightest movement on his part; but he does not stir hand or foot. Presently a heavy substance is heard to fall from the ceiling apparently, and this proves to be an object which no money could purchase at the moment in Melbourne. It may be the swathings of a mummy from Thebes, with the sand of Egypt clinging to its fibres; it may be a head dress worn by the hill tribes of India; it may be a living bird and its nest from the tripoe; it may be a manuscript from Susa or Persepolis; it may be coins of early Rome or ancient Greece; it may be live fish and moist seaweed from the South Pacific, or the personal ornaments of an African chief on the banks of the Congo. There, they are! Who brought them? Not the medium; not any human being assembled in the circle. Then "Unde derivatur?" That is the question. Deny spiritual intervention and you land yourself in a fog thicker than that which darkens the intellects of some of the most densely stupid of the opponents of spiritualism.

Subjoined is a list of the ancient manuscripts brought into the circle by spirit agency, and now in the possession of Mr. Stanford. The interpretations of the hieroglyphics and hieratic writings, it should be added, are furnished at the time by Dr. Robinson, the "control" of the medium. The latter has no knowledge whatever of Egyptology. The figures denote the date on which the documents were received:

12. 5. '02.

Greek Period, 84 B. C.

Is a record of discussions by philosophers in Temple of Alexandria, written by Athenos, a philosopher unknown to history. Contains allusions to Alexander as a military hero, and to Diogenes. Likewise has reference to the Alexandrian Library, founded by Ptolemy Philadelphus.

23. 6. '02.

Hieroglyphic, Egyptian, on papyrus, a cartouche. Date, Ptolemy, Soter 1st, who ruled Egypt after Alexander the Great. Subject—Hymn of Praise to the Winged Sun, Rah, the Sun God, "Oh, Rah, Spirit of Life and Light, Thou lightest this earth and under world.

Thou hast decreed justice. Osiris, Thy Lord, offers this prayer unto Thee."

28. 4. '02.

This not original, but a copy by a scribe named Athen adorus. In classical Greek, and relates to the conquests of Alexander the Great. Copy made in the second century A. D., original supposed to be lost. Faintness of writing ascribed to inferiority of writing fluid, which was not so good as that used by those who lived B.C., that of ancient Romans and Egyptians very superior. This MS. was not written in Egypt, unless copied at Alexandria. It may have been carried to Egypt.

7. 7. '02.

5 Coins Produced, "Electron" Metal, Date—Alexander, the Great.

No. 1. Manuscript—Fragment of skin, Hieratic. A copy of an inscription on an obelisk; date, Tholmes III.—Pophmos, beloved of . . . and Rah, who set up this obelisk have made this monument before the Temple of Ammon Rah. . . . . .

No. 2. Manuscript of skin, Hieroglyph. A warrant for the execution of Pharmeres, an officer of the Royal household, the offender had stolen grain at a time when children were crying for bread. "To deliver such an one, Pharmeres, that he may be executed," Osiris decrees that he who robs the fatherless shall be punished.

No. 3. Manuscript, Hieratic and Hieroglyphic papyrus. "The priests of Osiris, the great King, decree offering a sacrifice, a great gathering or convocation unto the exalted of the sun—Rameses, beloved of Thah," decreed of the priests, Ammon Rah.

No. 4. Manuscript, partially open, papyrus, Greek 2nd century. A dialogue between two Greek philosophers concerning the writings of Aristotle, with comments.

No. 5. Manuscript. Copy of an inscription on obelisk. Date, Augustus Caesar. B. Architect, Obelisk before the Palace of Thosmos, before the Serapeum and termed the Great Obelisk.

FREETHINKER.

SACRED SHROUDS AND HOLY NONSENSE.

The present outbreak of fervid fanaticism evoked in France by the latest Catholic mystification, the Sacred Shroud of Jesus, bearing a "photographic impression" of his form, is suggestive and discouraging. We may regard, with a certain equanimity, the ordinary manifestations of ignorance or imbecility provoked by the monkish exploitation of sacred relics. It is a commonplace matter of fact that, if one class of people ardently desires a thing, there is always another class quite willing to supply it. And, while thousands of otherwise perfectly rational persons find a supreme delight in believing the impossible, there will be Christs and Schlatters, pilgrimages to Treves and to Lourdes, anatomical specimens of deceased holiness that are always absurd and often obscene, pious bric-a-brac, and histoires a dormir debout. We are accustomed, in these matters, to dishonest acquiescence on the part of people who certainly know better. But it is more than surprising to find prominent members of the Academie des Sciences giving their support to a wretched imposition like that of Turin.

St. Gregory thought it unbecoming and sacrilegious to make an exhibition of reliquaries; but for the past thousand years Holy Mother Church has found it an extremely profitable source of revenue. Why, indeed, should Pope Pecci be "choused out of his share?" The Mussulman has his Mecca; why not the Christian his Lourdes? Is not the Cathedral at Turin as good as the Temple of Siva? Is not the anatomy of Christ as venerable as that of Theseus? One man or ghost or relic is as good as another, and miraculous powers are not confined by geography or creed.

The demand for relics is certainly not diminishing. The Sacred Shroud may be seen at other places than Turin. The desirability of such multiplication is obvious—it saves the pilgrims so much trouble. The Neapolitan would be very foolish to journey as far as Turin while he has quite as genuine and potent a talisman at his door; just as a native of England has no need to go abroad to find a Savior whilst ready-made Redeemers are so cheap at home.

It is difficult to treat such a subject with any approach to seriousness; but there is a moral in it after all. The follies of the crowd will always be exploited by the cunning few, whether they be evinced in gross superstitions or in lesser ones; whether in prostrations before gods and relics or before kings and flags. We have reason to know that an outbreak of militarism may be worse even than a disaster like that of Martinique. And now, in the trail of that stupendous folly come busy preparations for the crowning of a king. The multitude may acclaim, but a few will think. It will be recognized by some that the cult of monarchy is strictly analogous with the worship of the gods—that both are alike productive of a spirit of hypocrisy in social life. The criticism that is so necessary in all other matters is here "blasphemy" and "treason."

Kommst du in des Konigs Haus,
Geh blind hinein und stumm heraus!

The devotee and the courtier must be blind and dumb, where the demerits of their idols are concerned. The peculiarity of the Freethinker is not that he sees the truth, but that he has sufficient honesty and courage to proclaim it. His eyes penetrate to the bottom of the well through the surface-slime of convention and the black mud of human stupidity. Holding the keys of all the temples, he knows the stuff that gods are made of; and he realizes that social injustice finds its basis and its justification in a universal lie. Upon the power of the priest rest the despotism of monarchy and the curse of militarism; and from these proceed the elements of social discord—the ignorance and misery and crime that afflict humanity.

But ignorance and misery and crime look there for enlightenment and happiness and virtue—there (the pity of it!) in the very fountains of their misfortunes!

A SCENE OF BEAUTY.

In the Far-away State of Washington.

As soon as my eyes saw, not the glory of the Lord, but of God as shown to me on the banks of the Sultan River, my heart went out to my dear Progressive Thinker friends, and especially to those of Chicago and similarly crowded cities, and I longed for some power to drop just a small portion of its beauty into their midst. But how feeble is the hand of man by either word or canvas painting to picture what is one of Nature's master strokes.

I am sitting on a rock fashioned by the wash of waters of many ages into a luxurious arm chair and upholstered with a cushion of more exquisite texture than ever woven by the hand of man. At my feet the cool, deep, clear pool lies silent and still, while just beyond the sound of many waters is borne to my ear where they rush in tempestuous joy from rock to rock, tossing with gleeful abandon their white crested tops into the air and singing their song—such a song as was ne'er heard from cloistered walls. The tall rocks towering on every side take up the musical cadence and echo it back in such soft silvery notes as are only heard in just such scenes. I wish I were a musician, an artist, a writer with a pen dipped in the magic power of divine inspiration; all, all are needed to tell of the music, the beauty of the Sultan waters. As I look upward my eye rests upon solid rock towering high into the air, all their coldness and barrenness covered by moss clinging closely to their hoary sides; and the graceful maiden hair ferns droop their heads in dainty dignity from their mossy beds. Pine and fir forever send forth their aroma and fragrance, breathing a message of "There is no death." The high bluffs are crowned by tall, straight kings of the forest, where once in awhile through their dense cool foliage a stray sunbeam shows his smiling face, whispering of fields and roads which stretch beyond, of villages, and teeming cities in embryo, with their whir and rush of dusty, hurrying life; but here the waters sing, the trees whisper, the ferns rustle, and even the mosses, I am sure, speak as they closely entwine their tendrils lovingly around the old hoary rocks. I wish, dear Editor, I could just drop one spray of this fern down through your dusty window—no slight upon your housekeeping, though, but it must be dusty in Chicago, you know—and if you could gaze upon its fairy beauty all dripping with spray you would feel anew as I do, that heaven and its beauties are not all in another land.

But to let you know that I am still upon the planet earth and not off on one of my journeys into space I will state that I am the guest of the superintendent of the DeSoto Mines, Snohomish county, Washington, and I did not forget in the midst of all this beauty to enjoy the more practical, but very novel and interesting experience of panning gold, although the operation of the mines is not carried on in that primitive mode; machinery of the most approved style being put in upon quite an extensive plan. Panning is used solely as a means of prospecting, but the results of my labors were not enough to give me the miners' fever, and I resigned all my right and title in the Habecker and DeSoto gold fields, save what I could carry away in a tiny vial, and returned to my first love, the Sultan waters. Mr. Carter informs me that the electro-chemical process is going to be used for separating the gold, and next month they expect to have their clean up, and great sand banks washed by immense hydraulics are expected to turn to a golden gleam. Roads are being opened up by this company through dense forests, and as in the midst of a labyrinth of majestic trees, clinging vines, velvety moss and great logs laid low and covered by time with exquisite beauty, you hear a sharp, shrill cry and are told it is the "donkey," you picture a sturdy little animal, all ears and mouth, plodding his way up a steep and narrow path, his little back loaded with miners' supplies, when suddenly your eyes are greeted by a horrid, big black thing, something like a scow that plows the waters, and its great ugly mouth sends forth a shrill cry as with a roar and rush a stump is thrown high into the air, and what was trackless forest is now a soft, loamy driveway. And thus man with ruthless hand destroys Nature's great artistic productions; but this is civilization, and we point with pride to its march.

I find Spiritualism in embryo here, although in response to Mr. Carter's earnest invitation, being an enthusiastic follower of our cult and feeling that he could not have me up here without attempting to sow some seed, we drove six miles into the town of Sultan and held a very pleasant meeting in their little hall; and while the members were not many, mine host informs me that the attendance was larger than the one evening when he attended their church, so that was encouraging.

I feel reluctant to close without telling you of Dr. DeSoto, the vice-president of this company, and his grand humanitarian work, but I fear my letter has grown too long already, and perhaps I may devote a separate communication to that subject some day, for I want you to hear the true story of "Dora, the little heathen Japanese harlot—a savior," quoting from Dr. DeSoto, and he a Christian, as the world would say—God give us a few more such Christ-ians.

I have received so many letters from friends from all parts of the United States, and even Scotland, since the publication of my spirit journeys, that I feel that I am personally writing to each one, and want them to know all that I know that is sweet in life here or hereafter; but I must close.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

History of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION to the Year 200,

BY CHARLES V. WAITE, A. M.

Fifth Edition—Revised, with Much Additional Matter in Appendix

A standard and reliable history of the earlier period of the church, giving facts that are not found in the so-called histories written by churchmen. This latest edition has been carefully and thoroughly revised, and it is a reliable magazine of facts, such as the honest inquirer wants. It opens up to the investigator and student a wide field of historical research in matters of fact wholly ignored by the regular church historians, and throws a bright glare of light on points heretofore carefully shrouded in darkness.

A large octavo volume of 556 pages, strongly bound in cloth. Price $2.25. For sale at The Progressive Thinker office.

"THE UNKNOWN"

—BY—

CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

"The Unknown" created a marked sensation in France when first published and can scarcely fail to arouse the greatest interest in this country. It is an eminent scientist's study of the phenomena of the spirit world. In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Price $2.00.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as to Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo, Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, the continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

THE LANGUAGE OF THE STARS

A Primary Course of Lessons in Celestial Dynamics.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIGHT OF EGYPT."

This important primary work is the first practical exposition of the Astro-Magnetic forces of Nature—in their relation to man—that has yet been issued by the American press. It contains fourteen special lessons, embracing each department of human life, in such plain, simple language that a child can understand the elementary principles laid down. And in addition to these lessons is an Appendix, containing a full explanation of all technical and scientific terms in general use upon the subject, thus forming a brief, yet practical Astro Dictionary. This work is illustrated with special plates.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,

(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. CALIFORNIA.

Concluding Notes on Sycamore Grove Camp.

The camp closed Sept. 17, the interest having been sustained until the last. On the last Sunday (Sept. 14), both auditorium and street car service were inadequate to accommodate those who desired to hear Moses Hull. It was said that a great many were left on the street corners in the city, unable to secure standing room on the electric cars which pass Sycamore Grove, although they ran every few minutes; and the auditorium did not accommodate more than half of the people who succeeded in reaching the grounds.

Mr. Hull was secured to give three lectures in Los Angeles, after the close of the camp; one at Simpson's Auditorium (the largest in the city), on Thursday evening, Sept. 18, at which a special invitation was extended to the clergymen of the city to be present; and two on Sunday, Sept. 21, at Elks' Hall, after which he will take the train for Whitewater, Wisconsin, to be at the opening of the Morris Pratt Institute on Sept. 3d.

Mr. Hull aroused considerable interest in the Institute, and, as a result, there will be several pupils from Southern California in attendance during the opening year. On Friday evening, Sept. 19, Mr. Hull is to be tendered a reception at the residence of Mrs. Maude L. Von Freitag; and rumor has it that Mrs. Freitag herself is to be one of the aforesaid Southern California pupils.

While speaking of Mr. Hull I must not forget to mention the fact that Mrs. Captain Green, formerly Mrs. Suydam, of Chicago, gave one of her fire tests after one of Mr. Hull's lectures, and was announced to give another after the special lecture at Simpson's Auditorium, on Thursday, Sept. 18. Moses Hull and Mrs. Green's fire test, taken together, would certainly be a pretty strong dose for the Los Angeles clergy.

I promised in my last communication that I would mention some of the less noted workers in my next letter. Prof. W. C. Bowman, of Los Angeles, should by no means be considered in that category, but his name was inadvertently omitted in my former communications, hastily written as they were. Prof. Bowman had the misfortune to get his arm broken in a fall from a street car, a short time before camp opened, but made his appearance with the arm in a sling, and gave several of the earnest, fervid addresses for which he is noted.

Mrs. L. A. Mabee, formerly state organizer for Kansas, was with us until a telegram summoned her to the East. She is a sincere, earnest worker, and has had a very interesting and instructive experience.

Mrs. Mary E. Weeks-Wright, the grand, motherly soul, and pioneer worker, who, as Mrs. Lillie, herself declared, was one of the first to encourage her when, as Rose Shepard, she was tremblingly coming forward as a platform worker, and who has given the first test or message to many an inquiring soul, was camped on the grounds during the entire session, and her genial face beamed with kindness upon all.

Mrs. Mary P. Morrill, of San Diego, another genial, kindly soul, lecturer and medium, was with us until nearly the close.

G. D. Parsons, an old Spiritualist, but a young speaker, a close reasoner and thinker as well as a channel for inspiration from high sources, occupied the rostrum several times, to the edification of his hearers.

Mrs. Mae E. R. Hunt is a young but very promising worker, lecturer and platform medium, and a general favorite.

Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek, speaker and test medium, also gives promise of good work in the future.

Mrs. Julia Knox, the newly-elected vice-president of the Association, gave several inspirational discourses, and is a humanitarian and earnest soul.

J. L. Dryden, one of the sunshine-makers of the camp, in spite of age, misfortune and the withered arm he carries as the result of service in the Civil War, was with us during the whole session, ever ready to do his part, whether on the rostrum or otherwise.

Dr. K. D. Wise, of Los Angeles, gave one Sunday lecture, and took part in several conferences.

Mrs. Mary Burton Powers, of Pasadena, gave one inspirational discourse.

Mrs. E. W. Marchant, of San Bernardino, gave three lectures, and presided at most of the morning conferences.

Mr. Sanford favored us with several original poems.

Mrs. Smith, of Oakland, accompanied Mrs. R. Cowell to the camp, and was one of the working mediums on the grounds.

Mrs. Edith Nickless-Cobb, on account of pressure of work in the city, canceled her engagements at camp.

Edward Wyllie, spirit photographer, did not arrive in camp from San Francisco until the second week, but was thereafter kept busy until the close.

Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Arnold did not camp upon the grounds, but quite a number went to their very pleasant rooms in the city to attend their popular seances. They say they have more church people than any other class as their patrons.

Mrs. Mott-Knight-Conley visited the camp and gave a slate-writing seance.

Mrs. Alice Foster, a beautiful unfolding inspirational speaker and singer; Mrs. D. A. Kimball, a timid but really good psychic; Mrs. Horder, of whom mention was made in my notes of Harmony Grove Camp, near Escondido; Mrs. A. A. Jenkinson; Mrs. Haslip, and perhaps others whom I cannot now recall, all helped to make the meetings a success.

Nor must we forget the other faithful workers, in the kitchen, dining room, and on the grounds, whose help was just as necessary as any, so dependent are we upon co-operative efforts, from the least to the greatest.

One face was missed, especially by the old workers, that of J. D. Griffith, the former secretary. A tedious, and, it was feared, hopeless illness prevented his attendance, and near the opening of the camp he ventured to start back to his old home in Utica, N. Y., to die, as it was thought. Many kindly thoughts were sent after him, and when word reached camp that he was standing the trip well, hope began to dawn that possibly he may be spared to meet with us at some future time.

The newly elected officers are: Mrs. Essie Ashby, president; Mrs. Julia Knox, vice-president; Mrs. Helen C. Gardiner, treasurer; Mr. Vose, corresponding secretary; and Mr. Black, financial secretary. A fund is being raised to build a Spiritualist temple in Los Angeles, and the question is also being discussed of the Southern California Association trying to own their own camp grounds.

Criticisms from Georgia.

What is the matter with the mediums? It looks to many of us as if they are trying to convert the railroads, and they can't do it, for corporations have no souls.

It seems to me a large portion of their time is spent in riding on the railroads and the most of the money they receive, is paid out to the same. No good business houses send their drummers out over the States as our mediums go, and it would soon ruin them if they did so.

The mediums claim they are trying to do good for the Cause of Spiritualism; if this is a fact, I ask, is it necessary to ride so far and pay out so much to do it?

If they can not do any good at home where they are acquainted and their character known, why do they not take in, or stop at, each town on the line they are going, which would only cost a few cents fare, and the news of their good work would go before them. Even the missionaries of the N. S. A.—God bless them!—I think they are good men and women, but some way they do a good deal of riding, and many thousands are left out in the cold without anyone to instruct them, even how to form a circle.

If the people knew how to develop their own mediums, it would not then be necessary to call in missionaries, for they could get along. I find that the mediums are running around to that extent that if any one becomes interested enough to go 50 or 100 miles to see some one who, they think, is honest, from reading or hearing of their work, there is no assurance of finding them at home. They are very likely to be one or two thousand miles away, no matter what state they live in.

Why must the missionaries be at every camp where there is plenty of talent without them?

I am pleased to read of the work of Will J. Erwood at LaCrosse, my home in boyhood. If he goes out of La Crosse I hope he will not think it necessary to go clear to Milwaukee before he can say or do anything.

Mrs. Loe F. Prior, of Atlanta, is the only name I see mentioned in The Progressive Thinker or Light of Truth from Georgia, and she is every where all summer except in Georgia, and has an engagement for November and December in Toledo, Ohio. How is this? Will some one explain? To my mind it is no wonder we need a home for worn-out mediums. I know of no business that would stand this kind of a racket or expense. Of course I do not personally know one of the mediums. They may all be rich and out on pleasure bent, but if not, and they would not go so far between stops, more that are hungry might learn the truth.

MINNESOTA.

State Association of Spiritualists.

Enclosed please find copy of resolution adopted at our late convention. The past year has been one of the most successful in our history. Our missionaries have done a grand work. We closed the year free from debt. Last year's officers were re-elected with the exception of one or two trustees: President, J. S. Maxwell; vice-president, C. D. Pruden; secretary, Mary K. Calmus; treasurer, D. E. Griffith; trustees, J. P. Whitwell, E. Skoag, P. J. Sampson, J. R. Foster and Mrs. Agnes W. Savage.

Report of Committee on Resolutions.

Whereas, Modern Spiritualism affirms a continuity of life, provable by positive evidence that it is in accord with all past revelations and now manifest in phenomena of the spirit per se, and in harmony with natural law, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Spiritualism is the philosophy, science and religion of life, revealed by the spirits of previous incarnate humans,

Resolved, That spirit communication is a saving power from the despair, gloom and sorrow caused by so-called death, in that it proves our loved live, and death is but a change.

Resolved, That spirit communication is sought by the Spiritualists for the mental, moral and spiritual uplifting of humanity, and we deplore the base use of mediumship for gross and worldly desires.

Resolved, That we urge the exercise of mediumship in the home, the seance room and the public hall, as a sacred soul-service, for the spiritualization of associate members and communicants.

Resolved, That while spirits of all classes can communicate, we can hold intercourse with the pure and cultured spirits, and hence the law of "like attracts like" should be understood by all.

Resolved, That we approve of temperance in all things, and abhor sensualities. We believe that by education in the laws of life and by a proper birthright all people will be finally developed into such harmony with nature that no plan of regeneration will be necessary. We heartily endorse every reform movement for the physical and mental purity of humanity.

Resolved, That we shall herald and uphold magnetic, mental and spiritual healing as being worthy of legal protection, and will oppose all medical legislation restricting these divine gifts to humanity from a just and free exercise.

Resolved, That we hope for an adjustment of capital and labor that will destroy friction and injustice to either party thereto.

Resolved, That Industrialism should so supersede militarism that wars shall never more occur. We shall urge the disarmament of nations and thus create the age of peace.

Resolved, That we are opposed to capital punishment, knowing that the liberated spirits of the criminal class are unjust to society, being at liberty to obsess weak individuals.

Resolved, That compulsory vaccination is not only unwise and unconstitutional, but dangerous to health, causing eczema, erysipelas, cancer, tumors, syphilis and often death.

Resolved, That we urge not only local societies for inquiry into psychic science and the investigation of spirit phenomena, but to also establish and assist children's lyceums and young people's societies.

Resolved, That this State Association shall exercise great caution in granting ordination, and in no case give such without being assured of the applicant's worthiness after due investigation, and such person being recommended by a local auxiliary, and in no case to a non-resident of the state.

Resolved, That this State Association of Minnesota does hereby invite the National Association of Spiritualists to meet in convention in Minneapolis in October, 1903, and we hereby pledge a satisfactory hall or church, and other help free of charge to said N. S. A.

HUDSON'S THEORY ARRAIGNED.

To the Editor: Mr. Hudson's theory of the occult power that is producing such wonderful physical and mental manifestations, is creating quite a sensation in the minds of the public, and some of the Spiritualists have begun to think that perhaps he has solved the great question of how these manifestations are produced because he has discovered that we have a subjective as well as an objective mind or spirit, and that the subjective mind often does things that the objective or conscious mind knows nothing about, therefore these manifestations are produced by the subjective mind. That seems to me to be very poor logic, but it is his explanation.

The fact is, no one, either by his subjective or objective mind, can tell how these things are done; but we do know the fact and we know that whatever it is that produces it, says it is the work of spirits. Now if it is the subjective mind why does it insist that it is spirit? Why try to deceive us by misrepresenting itself? Now, Mr. Hudson, will you please explain how our subjective minds produce all of the different phases of mediumship? How does it rap, ring bells, tie and untie knots, open and shut doors, unlock handcuffs, play upon musical instruments, talk audibly, write independently, lift weights without contact, materialize and dematerialize, take spirit pictures, and a hundred other things which the spirits do? Now you and every one knows that no mortal can do these things or explain how they are done by any known law of science, but our spirit friends have learned how, since they have passed over, which shows they have not been idle on the other side. I have no doubt but we have not only the subjective and objective, but we have many more faculties that are being unfolded. We have the voluntary and involuntary action of the muscles and nerves and many other functions of the body. We have learned of late years that instead of having but five senses, as we used to be taught, we have more than 50. Who has been our instructor in these things? Is it our subconscious mind, or is it what it purports to be, the work of our spirit friends? I shall be inclined to think it is just what it says it is unless Mr. Hudson or some one else can give a better solution than he has given. I am glad he has taken hold of the subject, and has expressed his views, because it will cause others to investigate, and in that way do Spiritualism a great good, because it will bring out the facts.

WHY BE SICK?

Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Famous Physician and Scientist Has Perfected a System of Treatment that Gives Hope to Every Sufferer.

Read His Valuable Book, "A Message of Hope"—It will Explain to You this Wonderful Treatment and Tell You How You Can be Healed.

Why will you continue to suffer when there is a treatment at hand that will cure you? Dr. Peebles and his associates, all physicians of wide experience and reputation, have perfected a system of treatment that promises health and strength to all.

J. M. Peebles, A. M., M. D., Ph. D.

Many of their cures seem almost like miracles, for hundreds of those restored had traveled far and wide, trying this doctor and that, without getting any relief and were about to give up in despair when they began the treatment of Dr. Peebles.

They are able to do such wonderful cures because they work in harmony with nature, and employ her mighty healing forces in connection with mild, scientifically prepared medicinal remedies. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the depleted system, enriches the blood, improves digestion and assimilation, gives strength and tone to weakened nerves and muscles, and permanently repairs wasted tissues and organs, causing thousands of the sick to rejoice at being healed.

Why don't you sit down, at once, and write the doctors a plain, truthful letter as to your condition as you see it? If you will do this, they will carefully examine your case and send you a full diagnosis of your condition, and tell you truthfully whether or not they can cure you. This will cost you nothing, and if they find they can cure you, they will make their charges so small that anyone can afford the treatment.

If you are sick, write them at once for their full diagnosis and professional advice which will be sent without charge, together with their wonderful book, "A Message of Hope," which will explain fully this grand system of treatment and give you information that will brighten the remainder of your life. SURE GOITRE CURE

A Famous Michigan Specialist Discovers a Positive Cure For Goitre at Last. Use It At Home.

Why will you suffer with this dangerous and disfiguring disease when there is a treatment at hand that is positively guaranteed to cure it? We have cured thousands of cases after all else had failed and can cure you. Miss Lizzie Evans of St. Louis, in writing to the Doctor, says: "When I began taking your Goitre cure all hope was gone. I had tried everything I could hear of and was constantly growing worse. My neck was a horrible sight and caused me much distress. Wonderful to say I am now in perfect health and have been since taking your treatment nearly two years ago." Do not experiment longer with "Free Cures" and worthless nostrums but write at once to Dr. W. T. Bobo., 25 Minty Block, Battle Creek, Mich., for full particulars of this great and tried remedy. It will cure you and brighten the remainder of your life. If you have a friend with this malady do them a lasting kindness by sending us their name and address. Write today

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.

It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful number. Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

LIGHT OF EGYPT.

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1. The Language of the Stars, paper, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

REINCARNATION.

A Leading Work On That Subject.

This is a newly edited and revised production of Mr. Walker's great work by News E. Wood, A. M., M. D. It is brought down to date by the addition of new matter. It has the following fourteen chapters: "Reincarnation Defined and Explained," "Evidences of Reincarnation," "Astral Pictures of Successive Incarnations," "Objections to Reincarnation," "Reincarnation Among the Ancients," "Reincarnation in the Bible," "Reincarnation in Early Christendom," "Reincarnation in the East To-day," "Esoteric Oriental Reincarnation," "Transmigration through Animals," "Death, Heaven and Hell," "Karma, the Companion Truth of Reincarnation," "Western Writers on Reincarnation," "Mr. Walker's Conclusions." As the book stands, it is the most complete, logical, clear and convincing work on the subject extant. Price, postpaid, in handsome leatherette, 50 cents. For COMPREHENSIVE REFLECTIONS.

Facts for Thoughtful Consideration—Faults for Correction—Illinois Versus Massachusetts.

Talk after work is valuable, but talk without work is valueless. Wheelhorses quickly show where the collar chafes and the breeching galls. Active workers know the need for right solutions of the problems submitted by The Progressive Thinker.

1. Unfair laws impede the N. S. A.'s efficiency by creating dissensions among its friends. All cause for friction between its local and state auxiliaries should be quickly removed. If this is not done our National body will either fall to pieces, or else continue existence only as a sectional organization.

At its last convention in Washington fifty-one of the eighty-five duly accredited delegates were from east of Ohio. Its present statutes are responsible for some of the existing injustice. At the meeting just specified eight states and the District of Columbia, having no state associations, cast thirty-four votes as follows: New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Indiana, Missouri; the last named holding a state charter but having no living state association. Rhode Island, Michigan, Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and Texas, everyone with a state association, were only allowed nine votes, and while they were casting that number six others, Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Ohio and California registered thirty-eight, six of which were on N. S. A. charters to their state bodies, while thirty-two were on charters held by their local societies from the same source. The N. S. A. allows one vote for every charter it grants. Thus a state whose local societies hold aloof from its own association and charter from Washington has an unfair voting strength on all occasions. Either there should be nothing but local auxiliaries to the N. S. A. in every organized state, or not one of them in any. Only delegates from state associations should have seats in the national convention. Every local society chartered by the N. S. A. should be transferred to the auxiliary state association as soon as the latter assumes jurisdiction of its territory, and lose its independent voting privilege at Washington. Whenever the N. S. A. shall have chartered three or more local societies at separate points in unorganized territory, let them be merged into a state body.

I know of no unanswerable objection to an amendment limiting all voting rights in N. S. A. conventions to delegates based upon the membership of auxiliary bodies for which the per capita tax is paid. Injustice and inharmony grow out of allowing a vote to every charter, in addition to that resting on membership.

I believe if compelled to choose between the N. S. A. or state associations, that the West will stand for the latter. The survival of the N. S. A. may depend upon the attitude of the local societies holding its charters in the several states and the majority of them are in the East. We must be inspired by a spirit of mutual concession if we would save both and strengthen all.

The N. S. A. may not have risen to its proper sphere of influence because of omissions in its laws. Men and women of all walks in life, including Spiritualists themselves, are eager to know where they can find nothing but genuine demonstrations of spirit power. We have no recognized sponsor for the integrity of the mortal instruments through which our manifestations come. Our mediums when wrongfully accused have no authorized body before which they can establish their possession of genuine powers. Let the N. S. A. provide a certificate of recognition to be issued to mediums who are members of its auxiliaries, have requisite mental and moral qualifications and demonstrate ability to do genuine work in any phase.

Let such certificates run a definite period but terminate sooner if the holder loses membership, or is found guilty of fraudulent work.

Genuine mediums would find profitable prestige in a visible token of endorsement by our National body. We would escape liability for all not thus acknowledged. We owe fair dealing to the medium, but none the less to the public and to the spirit world. Commercial jackals who fatten upon the weakness of the unfortunate and the agonies of human heart-breaks have made our name a by-word and our cause a reproach.

Tireless vigilance is the price of maintaining standards of honesty.

Trance, clairvoyance, clairaudience, inspiration, healing, rappings, tippings, automatic writing, psychometry, impersonation, and infrequent etherealization are well established, but can all be simulated. Materialization of flesh and blood, if not doubtful, occurs only rarely and can not be produced at the will of mortals.

That phase, together with spirit pictures on photograph and canvas, slate-writing, answering of sealed questions, reading of ballots, production of flowers and trumpet work, is so interblended with deception as to becloud the truth of spirit return.

We need to quit ourselves like an earnest, honest people by winnowing the truth from the chaff, as our contribution towards humanity's advancement. Will the N. S. A. lead us? Shall Spiritualism stand for something higher than merely bread and butter for a few?

2. The value of state associations has been recognized by the N. S. A. from its inception through its laws and executive acts. Certain of its present officers oppose them solely because they do not pay as great a total of per capita tax at Washington as do the local societies chartered therefrom. I might agree that a person can not reach heaven except by way of Chicago, but do not understand why money spent by a state association for meetings and missionaries in its own territory does not promote Spiritualism as much as if the entire sum were sent to Treasurer Mayer and the home work allowed to remain undone. State associations can not thrive on empty treasuries. An Illinois society of one hundred members chartered by the N. S. A. sends the latter annually twenty-five dollars and three delegates. If subordinate to its own state association it sends the latter ten delegates and twenty-five dollars of which sum two dollars and fifty cents go to the N. S. A., and twenty-two dollars and fifty cents remain for the state work.

All state associations should have a common basis for membership. Differences upon this point cause inequalities in the burden of supporting the N. S. A. financially, as well as in the voting strength at its annual conventions. The Washington board should pass upon the laws of every organization applying to it for a charter, in so far as they affect representation in the supreme body. We have a tangled medley right here to be straightened out.

Ten local members, or fraction of six, elect a delegate to the state association of Illinois. Fifty, or fraction of twenty-six, are required in Wisconsin, but she allows a vote to individual members and one for every subordinate charter issued. Minnesota follows substantially the Badger state plan. Massachusett's state association is wholly composed of individuals who pay it one dollar each, and her local societies are chartered from Washington. She has forty-five votes at the N. S. A., provided there are two hundred members of her state body and twenty local societies each having fifty members. Twelve hundred members of local societies in Illinois send one hundred and twenty delegates to their state convention for which they are allowed just three votes at the N. S. A., or forty-two less than the same membership on the Massachusetts plan.

Twelve hundred Bay State Spiritualists have the same voting strength in our National body that twenty-two thousand in Illinois would have; a ratio of one to eighteen and one-third in favor of the East. Let us abandon the go-as-you please plan for our state associations. Uniformity must be had upon all essential points.

3. I favor both individual and delegate members of state associations. Many of the first class will join that body, who hold aloof from, or are unable to affiliate with, local societies. The majority of the latter die so young as to cause wonder what they were begun for. They are an uncertain quantity upon which to wholly found state bodies.

Each individual member of the Minnesota State Association has one vote while the delegate from a local society casts one vote for the charter and as many more as his society has members. Why not allow one vote for each individual member and one for every four members on which a local society pays twenty-five cents a piece?

4. Hold every state association responsible for carrying on the work in its own borders. The N. S. A. should be free to devote its energies to the unorganized states and territories. Lighten its responsibilities and lessen the necessity of its clamor for funds that should oft times go to the local work.

5. At last accounts the N. S. A. had auxiliaries in twenty-five states and District of Columbia—Pennsylvania has had Brothers Locke and Stevens on its board for successive terms and a third member, Brother Kates, is now domiciled in her borders. The two royal brethren first named are understood to have discouraged a Keystone state association and are therefore antagonistic to a settled policy of the N. S. A. Certainly they have not stood for fair dealing with the state associations of the West that I can now recall. The one is constant to a local work in Philadelphia and the other in Pittsburg.

6. Yes; print them early enough for digestion before delegates start for the annual convention. Eliminate such transient hardships as a frosted nose, or feathers crosswise in some spare bed, and all transparent bids for official position.

7. No sir! that demand rests upon the idea that the disgrace lies in the telling and not in the toleration of such conditions. It has been said there was never a good cause that suffered by publicity, nor a bad one that did not thrive by privacy. The currents of all human experience are not yet reversed in trend. Honesty is still the best policy and the only one that will insure enduring success. Tricksters who are paralyzing the progress of Spiritualism by consuming its very vitals are the ones solely benefited by silence about their nefarious practices. While shouting against trusts in the industrial world, they are bitterly opposed to turning the light of publicity upon their own secret methods. They would like by underhand means to silence individuals and muzzle, or wreck, our newspapers they cannot dominate.

Months ago a prominent wonder-monger said he was "doing all he could against The Progressive Thinker and would kill it." More recently another of them, several hundred miles from Chicago, said of The Progressive Thinker: "I am going to see that paper crushed." The last time I met the late Willis Edwards he, too, was denouncing The Progressive Thinker. At the first meeting I ever attended on the Clinton, Iowa, camp-grounds, some years ago, a former Chicago medium whom I knew well, was leading a movement to secure the adoption of a resolution calling upon Spiritualist papers not to publish any more exposes, for the sake of the cause, which meant for the benefit of the gangsters. Every bird of the same feather there present stood with him. An evening or two later he said to me of some trickery I had just witnessed in the name of spirit intelligences: "The people demand it and have to have it."

That lofty utterance is the conscience cordial of all who have reduced our science and religion to the level of vaudeville entertainment.

Whenever you find a professed Spiritualist uttering abuse of, or threats against The Progressive Thinker, Banner of Light, the N. S. A. or President Barrett, you have either found one of the gang, or its parrot. Spurn the thought that our papers must become fraud-hiders. Rather let our editors make answer as did the court chaplain when King Charles complained of his plain speaking: "Your majesty, as you mend, I'll mend."

Fraud, like murder, will eventually be found out. There would remain the religious and secular press to reckon with could our own be silenced. Final exposure, the Nemesis of outraged confidences, is as sure as death.

A struggle is on for liberty of judgment and freedom of speech within the ranks of Spiritualism.

An Open Court

For the Expression of Views on Questions of Vital Importance to All Loyal Spiritualists.

Dear Sir and Brother:—

The aim in life is to approximate perfection as nearly as possible. Hence new methods are adopted, different regulations brought into requisition, civil war follows civil war, old laws are radically changed, and one person is chosen to succeed another in office with the ardent hope that some great improvement may be brought about. Imperfection in all conditions of life; perfection nowhere! Hence the constant desire for change on the part of the people.

The National Spiritualist Association is no exception to the general rule—it has not arrived at that stage of efficiency where it satisfies the people, hence the necessity for tinkering at it, once a year at least, in the hopes that some decided improvement can be seen and felt.

The great obstacle in the way of the National Association being a decided success, or accomplishing what is desired in behalf of our glorious cause, is manifested in the many influential differentiations which confront one on all sides. The Christian Spiritualist, the Christ-Loving Spiritualist, the Bible Spiritualist, the Atheistic Spiritualist, the God-Worshiping Spiritualist, the Spiritualist with a Creed, the Spiritualist with no Creed, the Independent Spiritualist, the Reincarnation Spiritualist, the Spiritualist who thinks Reincarnation is of Pagan origin, and a humbug, the Spiritualist who believes there are animals in spirit life, the Spiritualist who believes that all animals are mortal, the Spiritualist who believes in demoniac possession, and the Spiritualist who does not, the Spiritualist who believes he is controlled by God, and the Spiritualist who has become convinced of the truth of the phenomena, and then goes about his business, the Spiritualist who believes that fraud in mediumship should be exposed, and the Spiritualist who believes that fraud in mediumship should not be mentioned by the Spiritualistic press, etc., etc.

In fact, Spiritualism presents an immense field of miscellaneous conflicting thought—the differentiations being more than we have space to mention.

Such being the case divergent action on the part of Spiritualists is manifested everywhere, and there seems to be only one place of uniform harmonious accord or agreement, and that is in relation to the source of the phenomena. There is no unanimous converging work on behalf of the National Association. The various differentiations are in conflict, hence harmonious effort in one direction is almost impossible.

However true the above may be, the National Association is capable of doing an excellent work in certain directions, and its efficiency will be increased just in proportion as imperfect methods are acknowledged, and eliminated therefrom.

It is unwise for the various differentiations in Spiritualism to throw stones at each other; each one should be allowed to work in its own way, constantly seeking new light, new unfoldment, the main object being the betterment of humanity.

With the above preliminary remarks, we ask you to consider in a critical manner the following important questions intimately connected with the evolution of the National Association and Spiritualism generally.

1. What changes in its organic law will make the N. S. A. more efficient?

2. (a) Are State Associations essential? (b) If so, should they not be organized on a uniform plan?

3. (a) Should there be individual members of State Associations? (b) If so, should they have full voting privileges?

4. Should not the responsibility for all missionary work in its own territory rest upon each State Association?

5. Is any state entitled to more than one representative on the Board of Trustees of the N. S. A., which has auxiliaries in nearly every state of the Union?

6. Would not much time be saved for practical work at the annual convention if the reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and missionaries were printed in the Spiritualist press prior to the October meeting?

7. Should the publishers of Spiritualist papers refuse to print any or all exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism, when satisfied of their informants' reliability; or, in other words, should Spiritualism be an exception to the general rule adopted by all honest investigators after truth—"Expose fraud and trickery wherever found?"

The Question Number 7 very deeply concerns the Spiritualists scattered throughout the United States, judging from the numerous letters we have received during the past few years, and we think it advisable to invite your careful consideration of the same. It is appended to the list of questions solely on the suggestion of many prominent Spiritualists whose exposure of trickery on the part of fake mediums has been refused publication by the Spiritualistic press, and they feel that they have been deeply wronged. They take the position that to adulterate spirit phenomena is even worse than the poisonous adulteration of tea, sugar, coffee, milk, etc.

J. R. FRANCIS,
40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

In response to the above Circular Letter, many representative Spiritualists have kindly expressed their views, and they appear in this issue of The Progressive Thinker. They will be read with deep interest.

FRAUD THE FRUIT OF IGNORANCE.

Some Reflections from a Leading Mind in South Carolina.

To the Editor:—Concerning your Open Court questions, the seventh touches me most actively.

Pure-food laws have had the good effect of eliminating the impure. Punishment consequent upon adulteration of food is synonymous with an expose of the fraud, and puts a veto on the trickery. No honest individual has found fault with the method.

As our law can be but a moral one, an expose of Spiritualistic frauds will be synonymous with punishment. But who is to guarantee for the honesty of the exposer? To some minds all spiritual phenomena are fraudulent; to others everything that passes current for phenomena is genuine.

Self-deception needs as much exposing as being deceived. But that every known trickster should be exposed, goes without saying; and he who condones fraud is a participant—unless extreme pity or charity moves him to silence. Still he is derelict to duty if he does not make some endeavors to stop it.

Lukewarmness to the cause by many excellent and sensitive people is undoubtedly due to the barnacles which have fastened themselves to Spiritualism—in the past, if not in the present—and it were time that every interested adherent appoint him or herself a committee of one to closely observe every stranger coming unheralded with great promises of mediumship.

Introductory letters are easily enough obtained, and if there be any suspicion of forgery, a two-cent stamp can soon rectify matters. But credulity, mental indolence, and penuriousness are a bane to our ranks. To save a dollar a year for a spiritual paper many lose tenfold its value on fake mediums—some a hundredfold.

Not alone would they keep posted as to the genuine mediums, but reading would develop their mentality, quicken their intuitive perception, and open their eyes to human nature. A fraud may be detected by the influence he carries with him, and to those who are mentally or spiritually awake, it is as palpable as a change from heat to cold.

Let every Spiritualist subscribe to at least one paper, and there will be no need of exposes.

VIEWS OF A PROMINENT OHICAN.

Hon James B. Townsend, Proprietor of the Light of Truth, Gives Expression to His Views.

To the Readers of The Progressive Thinker:—The circular from Brother Francis, entitled "An Open Court," finds the writer lacking in time to elaborate and amplify many of its suggestions. However, as it is always best to answer when roll is called, I shall add a few words to show that I am "present."

Publishing the Light of Truth puts me on the basis of a colleague, hence should I fail to keep to the text of the circular, Bro. Francis, out of courtesy to the craft, will hardly be rude enough to rule me out of order.

Brother Francis was surely born a newspaper man. Of all the publishers of spiritual journals, he still shows the keenest scent for news. Upon reading the circular, it shows that he has lost none of his newspaper proclivities. The questions and answers will enable The Progressive Thinker to sustain its reputation for being the newsiest spiritual journal published to-day.

If you read the questions a second time, you readily see that they constitute what might be termed the burning questions among Spiritualists. As to the N. S. A., that organiation is here to stay, one of its chief functions being to furnish a place where Spiritualists can talk over the business of Spiritualism. The main question (Number 7) is answered by the success of The Progressive Thinker. No one individual has spent so much time and money in gathering data as to fraud and fake mediums as has Brother Francis. The large circulation of the paper shows that Spiritualists generally vote in the affirmative on Question Number 7.

Notwithstanding all of this, were I at Brother Francis' home with himself and family, talking in full candor as I often have, he would, in his frankness be sure to confess that outside of their surface interest, these questions are mere froth, compared to the great question which Spiritualists must turn to and solve; that is, making spirit return fit man's present needs. In fact I would not be surprised any day to receive a call from him which would assemble the publishers, editors and workers to organize a quasi-political movement, the central thought of which would be to state the cardinal features of Spiritualism in such form as to make them attractive to all thinking people, whether in the church or out of it, through the disclosure that the principal purpose is to organize so as to dominate Socialism and eliminate its worst feature, to wit, materialism, and to substitute in the place of Materialism, a wholesome religious fervor by calling into the Court of Public Opinion, not alone Spiritualists, but witnesses from every church and cult who offer evidence to prove that man here on earth has within his mortal body a spiritual body, now enslaved by environment.

This issue being attractively presented and in so far as this movement is concerned, reserving to the N. S. A. the field of the religion of Spiritualism and its controverted points, must lead all heretofore discordant elements to rally around the central thought of spirit return, and when thus formed, like a well-trained army, move in advance of Socialists into strategic points of public opinion, and from there dictate and dominate Socialism, which current events show to be rapidly approaching.

Therefore, I say to Brother Francis and to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, "May the angels speed the time when the questions raised by the 'Open Court' are relegated to the annual Conventions, and the balance of the year devoted toward considering the greater subject, that is, the adapting of the grand truth of spirit return to man's present needs."

JAMES B. TOWNSEND.

MICHIGAN STATE PRESIDENT

Entertains the Opinion That Fraud Should Be Exposed.

In my opinion the organic law of the N. S. A. should be so changed as to make it purely a delegate body; delegates to be elected by the state associations, and further I think the officers should not hold office continuously to exceed three years.

State associations are necessary to successfully carry on the work, and they should be on a uniform basis.

I do not believe that it is to the best interest of a delegate body, that a few by paying a certain amount of money can come in and manipulate the business of that body; if any one wishes to contribute for the upbuilding of the cause of Spiritualism, it should be gratefully received; but I do not think it just for anyone to buy the rights of delegates.

If the N. S. A. sends missionaries into a state they should work to build up the state association, and through the state society, the N. S. A., and be under the supervision of the state board, and all local societies should work under charters from the state association.

In my opinion no state should have more than one representative on the board of trustees of the N. S. A., and they should be so distributed as to do the most efficient work.

I think it would not only save time and expense but be more practical to have the reports made out and published in the spiritual press, and also have them in leaflet form, so as to distribute them to the delegates.

I do not countenance fraud or trickery in any form and any who without question can be shown to use deception wilfully, should have all the publicity possible, both through the spiritual papares and secular press; but I think we should be very careful of how we condemn the mediums for if our philosophy is true (and we believe it is) that spirits can and do control the individual, might it not be true, that the medium may be controlled by an unscrupulous spirit (and I believe there are such over there as well as here) and do and say things that they are not responsible for and that possibly may not be true. We quite frequently hear speakers talk about "stock tests" that are given by the message bearer, but will you kindly tell me what is the difference between a message that is given by a medium that they may know something about, and a lecture that has been carefully prepared and committed to memory and given to the public as purely inspirational? To me there is no difference. I say, down with fraud in all of its forms, and give it all the publicity possible, but let us be very careful in denouncing our mediums and know that they wilfully impose upon the people before we publish them.

has borne the suspicion and persecution which the whispered innuendo about this Chicago training school has engendered in the suspicious mind. If Hodge's method was generally employed and the press and societies insist that it should, the fraud question would soon be settled by being reduced to its lowest terms. All honor to Will C. Hodge.

SAR'GIS.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION.

Go Very Lightly on the Exposure of Mediums.

To the Editor: Your invitation to contribute to "An Open Court" has been received. The privilege you give to touch upon "any one or all of the seven questions" will be availed of in this case, as to one only.

As to six, all touching the N. S. A. and its working, the writer ought not to express opinions. Ever since it began to dogmatize as to "beliefs," it has had no sympathy—hence it would be impertinence to offer advice.

But the seventh question is, as you say, one that concerns all good Spiritualists—and you might have included others than good. But, really, this scribe has more than once given his views on the subject, yet a brief reference may not be out of place, as it is on your programme.

In the first place, the way the 7th question is put, is rather a plea on one side of it, and begs the question: "Shall Spiritualism be an exception to the general rule adopted by all honest investigators after truth—'expose fraud and trickery wherever found?'" That, excuse the frankness, is not the right way to put the question to an "honest" man who doubts the policy as it is often practiced.

No honest man wishes to cover up fraud, but always rejoices to see it stopped. But a great many "honest" people may be mistaken. Take for example the case of Mrs. Mendenhall in the very last Progressive Thinker—September 13. It is a sample or a great number of fraud exposure cases. Is the editor to decide between Mrs. Kinnard and Mrs. Mendenhall? Say they are both persons of good character. Indeed it may be said to be the rule in these cases. First, you have an informant of "reliability." You print his statement. Then another informant of equal "reliability," a witness to the same facts, gives a flat contradiction to the conclusions of the other. Both would "feel deeply wronged" if you denied them a hearing in The Progressive Thinker. And so both sides are aired—with what result? The enemies of Spiritualism, the yellow press, the juries that try cases in which Spiritualists seeks their rights in the courts and the uninformed in general are prejudiced and two "honest" people made enemies, with their friends, watching a chance to get into the newspapers again.

This is the simple unadorned fact. Ten thousand Spiritualists never heard of Mrs. Kinnard or Mrs. Mendenhall, and the editor does not decide between them. But ten thousand people are set to wagging their tongues about a thing that nobody can give a settled opinion about—grading the whole matter down to the plane of a gossipy scandal. And possibly the people who got up the flurry never read a Spiritualist newspaper, and never will—only this issue, that they borrow.

Rascality and dishonesty should be exposed always—but it should be done sensibly and effectively. No editor has a right to publish charges of dishonesty against anybody or anything on a hue and cry—spiritual, criminal, social or business. The man or woman who wants to use the columns of a newspaper to decry or denounce another, if admitted, should be required to put their signature to the charges and pay for their insertion marked "advertisement." Make this a rule and editors would be far less troubled with "fraud" correspondents. The civil law never condemns without a hearing of both parties, face to face.

It is the duty of the press to expose a fraud, a cheat or dishonesty—but the fact should be well established. Again these fraud exposers are often ignorant of the alphabet of phenomena—too often malice and envy are the inspiration. It has become proverbial that much of the newspaper accounts of both "fraud" and "wonderful manifestations," as well, comes from "two seance people."

After all, the real harm done by the publication of these things is the impression that the non-Spiritualist public get. The Spiritualist with common sense and any reasonable degree of experience, who cannot tell genuine phenomena from trick, ought to have a guardian—spirit or mortal—to keep them out of the fire or take them in out of the rain.

There are two kinds of people that visit seances: One regards mediumship as synonymous with fortune-telling. The other looks upon phenomena as miracles. And these, as wide as the poles of the truth, account for most of the fraud cry we have. Phenomena does not accord with their idea of what it is, and the medium is to blame. When a mind cannot grasp the spirit idea, as it is, it cannot be expected to understand phenomena where it sees it. When these things are not advertised the public mind or the crude Spiritualist mind will not be poisoned.

SAR'GIS.

P. S.—Though not in the seven questions it may not occur again so apropos, to thank Will C. Hodge for another great service to Spiritualism. He did more in a certain well remembered case to kill fake practices than years of exposure by resolutions. He simply spoke out names and knowledge. And that was the end of it. And now in The Progressive Thinker of Sept. 13, he pricks another humbug that has been a bugbear for under-the-breath fraud mongers for years. It is the Chicago concern that made a business of furnishing paraphernalia and instruction to do all that mediums do. It was a school where faks mediums were trained, and all that sort of thing. In all these years no one seems to have had the grit or sense or honest courage to test its pretensions. But in one brief hour Hodge has exploded it to the winds. Like hundreds of other people who make a living off "greys" with "green goods," these people when put to it, have goods to sell, but they "do not demonstrate." So that mysterious fraud college is exposed as a mere confidence game—that seeks to make a living from the cupidity of the ignorant and dishonest. Many a poor medium

AN IMPORTANT ASSERTION.

Inexplicable Problems Should Not Prevent Our United Work.

We have all gained some mental and spiritual growth, and as Spiritualists and Liberalists we can look back over the past and see that we have been held more or less in mental and spiritual bondage. But it is not so easy perhaps for us to see that we are still to some extent fettered by the conditions that subjected us to that bondage.

The growth we think we have now gained affords us much comfort, consolation and happiness, and well it may. But let us hope and believe that in the good future we shall yet progress so entirely beyond the errors and superstitions of the past and present, as to become well rounded out men and women; for it is a predominance of such men and women in our ranks that will cause the Spiritualistic movement to be a helpful power in this great world of humanity, even beyond what present external appearances indicate.

No movement can be grander and nobler than are the men and women that are interested in and conduct that movement. May we become better qualified to accept and teach the truth, and truth only, and so well direct and apply it as to make our Spiritualism a greater blessing to humanity than ever before.

There is no good reason for calling ourselves Christian Spiritualists. Christianity has done so much cruel, bloody work! If Spiritualists have not learned of the violence and intolerance which was the characteristic feature of Christianity for 1700 years, it is time they had. But many of us have learned it, hence we spurn the thought of calling ourselves Christian Spiritualists.

Jesus Christ, if there ever was such a person, was according to accounts, kind, loving, noble and good; but it is not necessary for Spiritualists to so parade his name before the world as to convey the idea, even indirectly, that we are worshipers of Jesus.

Yes; he loved his fellow-men; and so does Andrew Jackson Davis, and a great many noble souls still in the flesh, aswell as those grand workers who have joined the great majority. But not one of them would be pleased if we should go beyond the limits of good common sense in expressing our loving remembrance and due appreciation of them and their good work.

The discussions of the God question have been most able and interesting. No ordinary mind can handle the subject, pro or con, even passably well. To satisfactorily prove the existence of a God still remains an unaccomplished task. It was well said when some one remarked that the finite cannot explain the infinite.

But there are many people upon a plane of development where it seems to be a necessity of their very being to believe in and look upward to a God to bring them comfort and consideration in times of trial, tribulation and sorrow. And to cast unsympathetic reflections upon the beliefs of such people should never enter our hearts. They have not outgrown the old; have not gained that soul growth which would enable them to believe or realize that wise unseen intelligences, their loving spirit friends, are ever cognizant of their needs, and can and will, when conditions are favorable, do infinitely more for them than any God they believe in ever has done or can or will do.

There is no such thing as fraudulent mediumship. Whatever is fraud is simply fraud, and not mediumship. Whoever starts out to perpetrate fraud should not be countenanced. Then and there is the time and place to give the matter due attention.

There is no condition connected with any of the callings of human employment so sensitive as in mediumship. Mediums are usually so timid from their sensitive conditions that they do not know what to say or do when the subject is handled, as it has been sometimes, so as to seem like an indiscriminate slashing all along the line of mediumship; and which has been a matter of especial delight to the opposers of Spiritualism who would be glad to see Spiritualists in an eternal turmoil, and not another newly developed medium have the courage to come out before the public.

Are there opposing unseen intelligences working in this way against the Spiritualistic movement, or are we being tried as by fire to prove whether we are only worthy to be left to settle back into another dark-age period? Now is a time when we must be very careful what we do!

Let us hope and believe that the N. S. A. is here to stay and work for the best possible good of humanity. What matters it if we do not think alike upon those subjects, for which there is no conclusive evidence pro or con. There is enough to be done in the way of bettering the conditions of humanity, which we all desire to see accomplished; important work in which we can and should all harmoniously unite.

"Christian" Persecutors.

The stories of Jewish persecution in eastern Europe remind one that the persecutors this time are Christians. When the Armenian agitation was at its height the Moslem Turks were held to be very cruel people, but the Roumanians are neither Moslems nor pagans. The history of Jewish persecution the past 2,000 years isn't anything for Christians to be proud of.—Springfield Republican.

For Downright Enterprise and Fidelity to the Cause of Spiritualism, Does Not This OPEN COURT ISSUE TAKE THE LEAD? Take This Question Home to Your Soul.

ONE POINT

Of Universal Agreement Among Spiritualists.

Primary conditions and relations are in order with new thought agitators.

They do not hesitate to question both new and old theories, to sift and analize every statement of teacher, government, religion, science, profession, society and organization.

Spiritualism in my opinion has done more to break fetters, inspire and broaden the field of free and uplifting thought in the past fifty years, than any one other movement; it is one of our world's greatest and most important movements; it has assisted in bringing about the present crisis, and will aid in establishing a higher standard of ethical culture, an equality of opportunity for all the human race, equal rights and just laws, wisely executed, which will bring peace and rest to millions now anxious and distressed. "An Open Court" sounds well and affords an opportunity, just in time for the present crisis.

There are no signs of retrogression among clear-headed leaders and workers of to-day, although much anxiety and interest in all classes is in evidence.

In government we want and demand the strong fearless politician, not the partisan; the partisan is ignorant and to be feared, or watched.

A partisan Spiritualist should hasten to join an orthodox church, and take a rest. In religion and morals we much need an intelligent independent leader, one that has broken all the shackles, "let go," unloaded the old baggage of the ages, and is in sight and sound of the new and better order of life; he may be a Moses, a Jesus, a Paul, a Hugo, or a Thomas Paine. The writer would be more pleased to see some woman come to the front, who is qualified for a leader in the spiritual ranks, than he has language to express. Man or woman, the "Open Court" invites you.

The first query is important because it reaches the foundation of organization. In accord with various differentiations that make up the vast multitude of Spiritualists, I should advise the elimination of every sign, line and sentence in the organic law, that would prevent any one from joining.

An independent Spiritualist will not endorse form or dogma of any church if labeled spiritual; that point I presume will be considered at the next annual meeting in October, in Boston.

The "Open Court" recognizes one point of universal agreement among Spiritualists; as that is the one all-important point—continued life demonstrated—of all human expressions, what can add to that one truth that will increase its power to bless humanity? I do not believe anything can be added to the demonstration of continued life that will not dim its brightness, and weaken its power to do good. Continued life is an infinite expression; it signifies growth and finite perfection and can not be embellished; it is superior to all our mundane efforts. As organized Spiritualists we can do no better than recognize this, the highest and divinest expression.

Query No. 2. No! State Associations are unnecessary; we do not need more associations to divide and tax the people.

Query No. 3. Yes; to both questions.

Query No. 4. Yes! Any State, or organization foolish enough to go into the spiritual missionary business, should fork over the cash, but be assured those who engage in that line of business as a rule; judging from past missionary history, need a guardian and careful watching.

There are two points that should ever be considered by leaders and teachers of Spiritualism. First: If any community, large or small, are unfolded sufficient to want an instructor, they know enough to make their wants known. Second: They will be as much blessed in their efforts to pay for the instruction, as in the spiritual lessons received; we should not make cowards or beggars of them; isn't it a shame that spiritual organizations are classed with the Christian church beggars?

Fear and selfishness are foundation principles of all religious missionaries; it's a shame that Spiritualism has such an attachment.

Query No. 5. I am not sufficiently posted, so give no opinion.

Query No. 6. I should think the printing of reports before the October annual meeting would be a decided improvement—a time saver. Why not cut the reports down, so that one in ten would find time to read them?

Query No. 7. Publishers of Spiritual papers have opportunities of judging not possessed by their subscribers or contributors; they must judge, and should be free to express their honest convictions.

Of all isms, our ism should be the freest from all phases of deception, and I don't know but it is, am not prepared to take a stand upon that question; I am always ready to take a stand upon all questions and subjects sustained by proof, reason, and good sense.

We, that have tried to keep apace with the spiritual movement of a half century, are well aware of the wholesale fraud cry that has been a stalking horse for all this time; not a score of public mediums have escaped the charge of fraud. The world is full of truth, love, fraud and deception, and mediums are human and sensitive.

Spiritualism, public schools, discovery, invention and an intelligent application of science in the past fifty years, has modified the influence of all religious dogmas; the unreasonable ones have been discarded. "The four great orthodox superstitions that now impede progress are the fall, the atonement, miracles, and the deity of Jesus. The whole scientific world has accepted the doctrine of evolution."

Prof. C. W. Pearson of the Methodist Northwestern University, was dismissed last March because he was too honest to longer preach, or teach those four great orthodox superstitions. Notwithstanding these facts, and the great changes that have taken place because of the influence, the truth of the demonstration of continued life, the great majority of the clergy continue to hold fast to their myths and dogmas, for the position and support the deception affords them.

Fraud and deception have left slimy, disgusting tracks upon all the pages of past history; they are not children of Spiritualism, or of our National Government, but are fed and fostered by both.

If we could eliminate deception the millennium would dawn with the next sunrise, and the coal strike—fight—would be no more.

As an old-time Spiritualist I am opposed to deception in all the varied expressions of life; I favor strenuous measures to suppress fraud everywhere if necessary; I would remove the cause by going to the fountain; this course might be called radical and disturbing to some of our ambitious leaders.

I see no good reason why I should discriminate and condemn any more strenuously those who practice deception in Spiritualism, than in all other isms.

All the isms are in the fraud and deception business; political and business deception rules, and will ruin our America if a change does not come soon.

Spiritualism should stand fair and square for the truth, popular or unpopular. The truth of spirit communion is not a new truth; there are no new truths, but history furnishes no record of such a general recognition by all classes and nationalities as it does at this date. Spiritualists over and above all other reformers should learn to discriminate and accept such lessons and teachings as are reasonable and tend to broaden, strengthen and uplift their daily lives.

All public efforts of Spiritualists should be criticised and sifted, if worthy of acceptance they will stand all tests. Growth is the natural order of all life; growth in spiritual things, will prevent fraud and deception as certainly as in business and government.

The best prescription I can make for fraud and deception, for Spiritualists, is, read and support the spiritual press; home education is lasting and ranks high.

EDUCATE, EDUCATE, EDUCATE.

Fraud in Spiritualism the Same as Fraud in Business.

I do not conceive that fraud in Spiritualism is in any manner different from fraud in business, politics, morals, religion, social life, or any other relation of human life; and if fraud ought to be exposed and denounced in any of these, it ought to be accorded the same treatment when found in Spiritualism. It is not at all strange that the dishonest, the tricky, the avaricious and unscrupulous person should be found in Spiritualism, and particularly acting the role of a medium, since such persons are to be found in society everywhere, and the same cry of rottenness may be raised in business, in morals, in religion, in society—not excepting the Four Hundred of New York (and for proof of this see Editor Watterson)—as is so often raised against Spiritualism. But I do not believe that it ought to be so; I think Spiritualism should be way and above everything else, because of the noble and magnificent teachings it holds in relation to the necessity of a true moral life as the only door to progress and happiness in the spiritual world. But there will undoubtedly be fraud in Spiritualism so long as Spiritualists themselves permit it. What is needed to eliminate every vestige of the thing is a higher and better education. It is by far easier to deceive the ignorant than the learned, for two reasons—they do not possess the knowledge nor the trained and critical perception and judgment that the educated do.

I have three remedies for fraud in Spiritualism as I have in everything else, viz., Educate, Educate, Educate.

By education not only are the perceptive and reflective faculties of the mind sharpened and perfected, but the imagination is stimulated to higher ideals and the moral nature strengthened and burnished as in no other manner. To know the truth is to love it, especially if it is truth pertaining to nature and to man. There is no greater thing on earth, or in the heavens above or below, nor more divine, than love of truth; and one possessed of the divine passion will never violate or degrade it by a denial or perversion of the object of its love.

It was the love of truth that made Socrates so heroically drink the poison hemlock, and all the martyrs of the ages give themselves up as willing sacrifices upon its divine altar. Knowledge stimulates this love of truth and makes the possessor not only eager to possess more and more but inspires him to defend and exemplify the truth at all times and in all places.

But what practical method of dealing with the so-called fraudulent medium is to be suggested? First, detection, undoubted and clear; second, exposure in all lawful ways. Educate—that is, make yourself acquainted with all the ways and practices of the trickster, and then apply such conclusive tests as will detect deception if it be present. And in these days of most expert simulation of spirit phenomena, apply tests in every case, for no genuine medium can reasonably object, so long as the test is not a positive physical torture. Then, if after a time we do not succeed in driving the fraudulent medium out of business let us drop physical manifestations altogether and turn to the philosophical teachings in which Spiritualism is so rich and prolific and in that way starve the trickster out of business, and if in the process of extermination a few noble genuine souls suffer with the guilty, let us console ourselves with the reflection that sacrifice of some innocence is always necessary for the advance of truth. But in fact none of the genuine will suffer; they will be found out and provided for in some good Spiritualistic Home or will turn their faculties for the time being into other channels and live.

Educate! Educate!! Educate!!!

EXPOSURES NEVER HURT TRUTH.

The Views of a Prominent Thinker in Kansas.

"Should the publishers of Spiritualist papers refuse to print any or all exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism when satisfied of their informant's reliability?"

It is my opinion that a publisher of a Spiritualist paper cannot do the cause of Spiritualism more good than to expose trickery and fraud wherever found.

I have attended the seances of a materializing medium in Topeka in company with loyal Spiritualists and as good citizens as can be found anywhere. The medium was put under test conditions by a committee examining for paraphernalia. This medium told me it was all a fake and explained every step taken to conceal the paraphernalia and produce the phenomena. The party asked me not to give the name. I will also say this was not a traveling medium, and if it becomes necessary to give the name, I will gladly do so, as well as the names of those present during the seances.

I only speak of this to show with what ease fraud can be practiced when safeguards are thrown around it by admirers of the trickster. Exposure never did hurt truth. It never can hurt truth. Fraud is the only complainer.

Fraud is no more necessary to the welfare of Spiritualism than cancer is necessary to the development of the natural body.

I have no hesitancy in saying after conversing with many loyal Spiritualists that the consensus of opinion is that the one great evil Spiritualists are contending against is fraud. The opinion of loyal Spiritualists everywhere, who love truth, who care for honesty, who believe in the purity of the seance-room, is to unite in one common effort to drive fraud from the ranks of Spiritualists.

A CHANGE OF BASE.

From the Celestial to the Terrestrial.

To the Editor.—For expression of views on questions of vital importance, you ask what change will make the N. S. A. more efficient.

I answer: A change of base, from the metaphysical to the physical, from the celestial to the terrestrial. In a word, from the theologic to the socialistic, and thereby the N. S. A. will show what it can do as a power, in the way of social and political reform.

Spiritualism, up to date, has accomplished much. It has resurrected from the graves the supposed sleeping dead, to the great consternation of priestcraft. It has demolished certain popular delusions, stampeded churches, routed Satan and extinguished forever the old "everlasting" fires of hell. Spiritualism has done more. It has shown the religious world the better way, and made thereby countless millions happy.

Now, therefore, as there is but little more for Spiritualism to do in the theologic world, I would suggest an immediate change, namely— that we turn our guns, and flash-lights, from church-craft, to state-craft, and thereby reform some flagrant abuses existing there, that love and wisdom, justice and equity, may prevail.

I verily believe the time has come for the N. S. A., representing Spiritualism, to enter politics, to war against legal wrongs, to defend the natural rights of our American "wage-earners" and to take greater interest in the physical welfare of the masses.

And, oh, Mr. Editor, how the hearts of the masses would rejoice at the thought of the spirit world taking a hand in politics, as in religion, especial at this time of new conditions in the industrial world, advocating human rights and human justice, shorter hours and better pay for working people, or co-operative profit-sharing, also the referendum, and franchise for woman.

And now, as to your question on spiritual fraud: Should such be shielded by the Spiritual press, or exposed? I answer, I cannot understand why the Spiritual public, and the public in general, should not be informed of Spiritual imposture, whenever and wherever found. Spiritual journals owe to society in general, and to the Spiritual public in particular, to warn against imposture.

Banks, when deceived by forgery or fraud, send out their warnings, and the newspaper press, in the interest of the public, publish them. Governments, too, when informed of counterfeit money, put in circulation, send out their warnings, and the press publish them. One of the most important duties of the Spiritual press, I believe, is loyalty to its friends, to protect them against the insidious inroads of Spiritual vampires. But of course we have no way to compel them to expose Spiritual fraud, unless to boycott them, and this we could and should do, as a penalty for crime, in concealing a crime, against friends.

As publicity is the only way of combating these audacious rascals, Spiritualists, often humiliated and scandalized by their sham ghost performances, should resolve themselves into a committee of one, and persistently pursue, and expose them, whenever found, and turning them over to the officers of the law, for obtaining money under false pretenses, they would soon tire of their nefarious occupation.

If one of the greatest crimes against the human world, is to make and circulate, for pecuniary gain, counterfeit money, so one of the greatest crimes to perpetrate against the spirit world, would be to manufacture, for pecuniary gain, spurious spiritual manifestations, and the next to that greatest crime would be the act of the Spiritual journalist, as a protective agency, concealing it. Why any Spiritual journalist should do so, I am at a loss to know. Some, however, have hinted at "hush money," others at fear of incurring the hate of the sham ghost fakirs, or the displeasure of their army of gullible dupes, lest thereby, they imperil the circulation of his Spiritual journal. Be this as it may, of course, I do not know. But one thing I do know, I, myself, have made some few such exposures, and they were never suppressed. But then my reports were always made to The Progressive Thinker, and here, in justice to The Progressive Thinker, I will remark, that looking back to its first inception, thirteen years ago, and over its "babyhood," to the present time, The Progressive Thinker—great and generous, rich with information, and encircling the globe, is a name that should be placed in the historic rolls of Spiritual honor, and advancement; a name, too, that stands out like a mountain, on the horizon, for undaunted courage, and masterly independence, ever warning against Spiritual imposture, and ever devoted to the interests and advancement of the cause of Spiritualism.

The other questions propounded for your Symposium, I will leave for the consideration of wiser heads than mine.

LEAVE OUT ALL KINDS OF CREED.

Adulteration of Spiritualism Worse than the Adulteration of Food.

To the Editor:—Your letter entitled An Open Court at hand, and I will in a brief way give my opinion on the respective divisions of your call.

1. Eliminate from the organic code of belief of the N. S. A. its Infinite Intelligence clause.

2. Yes, State associations and any and all organizations that are organized on a liberal intelligent basis for the spread of the grand truths of Spiritualism through honest phenomena and liberal philosophy are essential and should be organized on a uniform basis, leaving out all and every kind of creed.

3. Let all true, honest Spiritualists be members of said association with the privilege of voting when present, and also the right to be heard in its discussions.

4. Let both State and National Associations join in the missionary work and do not confine it to state lines.

5. For the purpose of representative influence and for the safety of our cause there should be not less than two representatives from any duly organized state association on the board of trustees of the N. S. A.

6. All reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and missionaries should be printed in the Spiritual papers a sufficient time to get into the hands of all delegates, regular and lay, before the meeting of the association each year.

7. I believe in exposing fraud, deceit and trickery in all things and most especially in the most sacred of all things to mankind, the fact of existence and return to earth of our spirit friends that have gone on before; and I know no legal punishment that would be too severe for the fakir who would attempt to deceive or to falsely represent our arison friends.

Yes, publish all frauds when you are satisfied of the intention of the medium to perpetrate a fraud, but we must be careful to know all we can about the environments of the so-called medium at the time of the perpetration of the alleged fraud. Often the best of mediums are imposed upon by skeptical and dishonest investigators who cry fraud at the purest and best of mediums. By all means publish to the world the loudly-advertised fakir who under the head of the greatest living clairvoyant or the great astrologer, or the palmist and fortune-teller who pretends to tell you your past, present and future, restore lost lovers, reunite husband and wife, give you advice in love or business, and expose such. Put them in their true light of absolute and unblushing frauds, and wholly unworthy of any one's notice.

Yes; adulteration of spirit phenomena is as bad or worse than the adulteration of our food or drink, and ought to be exposed and surrounded by all the safeguards that are thrown around our food. This phenomena of honestly given through honest true mediums, is the key that unlocks the door to eternity to man, and is the most sacred thing of our lives.

DRIVE THE RASCALS OUT.

A Lucid Response in the Open Court.

To the Editor:—Your circular letter asking my consideration of seven important questions pertaining to the work and efficiency of the N. S. A., is before me, and I am almost ashamed to say I am not sufficiently acquainted with the practical operation of the present "organic law" of the important institution in question, to offer any valuable suggestion for its improvement, so I will discreetly leave the answer of your first query to more competent persons.

Your second question, and its correlative query, I answer in the affirmative. State Associations, in my humble opinion, are very important for practically carrying out the designs, and the local operations of the N. S. A., and, to render them harmonious co-operators, under the supervision of the National Association, with all other members of the same, it appears to me that "a uniform plan" of organization and of action is necessary. Equal rights, duties and privileges are best secured by a uniform regime.

If I rightly understand your third question, and its co-ordinate query, without very mature reflection, which may change my opinion, I also answer affirmatively. Politically I believe in the "Initiative and the Referendum." Religiously I would be no less, but even more democratic. Therefore I would have each regular member of every state association chartered by the N. S. A. a defacto voting member of both.

But if it be more expedient to constitute state associations of elected representatives of local societies, by "uniform plan," then only voting members of the N. S. A. should be delegates from state associations.

As to the fourth question, in regard to responsibility for missionary work within the domain of each state association, from want of close observation of such work where both state and National Associations have had conjoined, or co-operative supervision, I have no very decided opinion. The doctrine of "state's rights" ought to be complemented with that of state's responsibility. Work is usually best done by those personally most interested, and those most benefited, according to the principles of justice, should be most responsible for its management and support—so it seems to me prima facie.

Regarding your fifth question, as to any state being entitled to more than one member of the board of trustees of the N. S. A., I should think not. "Too many cooks spoil the broth" is a pertinent old saying. The less complicated societary machinery is, the better it works. A trusty few will do more and better work than "many men of many minds."

Your sixth question as to saving the valuable time of the annual convention by the prior publication of the reports of the officers of the N. S. A., needs few, if any comments. Its affirmative is self-evident. Guns already loaded are readiest for action, and are less liable to "go off half-cocked," when deliberately handled.

To your seventh, and last question, whether the spiritual press should "expose fraud and trickery wherever found," etc. I reply, most emphatically, Yes. The spiritual press that is too cowardly to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," about "tricky mediums," is itself a fraud! To allow, or conceal a crime or misdemeanor, so heinous as trifling with the most sacred feelings of the human heart by a counterfeit presentment of alleged spirit phenomena of any kind, does but render the refuser to expose little better than particeps criminis. If "a partaker is as bad as a thief," why is not a hider of fraud (thereby its encourager), as guilty as the perpetrator? This may seem rather strong language, but I desire it to be im-press-ive. The Spiritualistic press should be the enlightener and protector of the investigating public, as well as the guardian of our sacred cause, whose greatest enemies are the moral degenerates who give "blue-book" tests (?), or spurious phenomena of any sort claiming it to be of spirit origin. The exposure and denunciation of such conscienceless malefactors is the imperative duty of every honest, faithful Spiritualist who rightfully "takes the position that to adulterate spirit phenomena is even worse than the poisonous adulteration of tea, sugar, etc." Then how much more imperative is the obligation of the Spiritualistic press to warn the unwary, and protect the unsophisticated neophyte from "wolves in sheep's clothing." The private seance, and the public platform have been far too long polluted and disgraced by unprincipled perpetrators of fraud, and it is high time to expose and drive the rascals out! Let the Spiritualistic press first make sure of their guilt, then, if need be, melt its type into bombshells to hurl at every ghoul who infests our ranks, and preys upon the graves of the "dead" for means to rob the pockets of "the living!"

DEAN CLARKE.

THE OPEN COURT.

It Is Wisdom Condensed.

"It is unwise for the various differentiations in Spiritualism to throw stones at each other. Each one should be allowed to work in its own way, constantly seeking new light, new unfoldment; the main object being the betterment of humanity."

Nothing that has been written in the last decade contains more wisdom condensed into a few lines than is expressed in this quotation from the editor's Open Court letter of questions and hints to the army of Spiritual workers.

If all would heed, and act upon it, the multitudious differentiations referred to would be no obstacle to harmonious success in the workings of the N. S. A. and all other organized bodies seeking truth and the dissemination thereof to a needy world. It expresses in a condensed form the whole gospel of Modern Spiritualism. A broad, generous interpretation of human nature, and the spirit of universal fraternity and mutual helpfulness, involves all of Altruism, and the moral philosophy of life as inculcated by the best teachings from the spirit world. When these ideals are fully realized in individual lives, there will be no more bitter conflicts, ambitious strivings, personal jealousies and wasteful wars of opinion to neutralize the good works of angels and men. When all become as much interested in the rights of others as they are in their own, and as tenacious of the freedom of all to think in their own way, and to express their thoughts frankly and freely, as they are in maintaining and using such rights for themselves the suicidal and distracting waste of time, energy and money will cease, and we shall all rejoice in the good we can do for each other and the whole humanity.

To this wholesome conclusion let us all strive without regard to place, personal power and the baubles of office, and the empty name of honor and personal glory.

To your questions. I care not to meddle with the inside workings of societies in which I am not an active member; for I am not qualified to judge of many things pertaining to the technicalities of official affairs, the wisdom and uses of which may depend upon many items and facts with which I am not acquainted.

Taking your questions in their order I will briefly express my opinion, or pass by in silence.

No. 1. I do not know.

No. 2. I think they are, and should be encouraged, and supported. A uniform basis of organization would probably facilitate co-operation, tend to more general harmony of interest and a better acquaintance with each other, and the general work to be done by each and all.

No. 3. Why not? The "full voting privileges" may involve some considerations that need thorough study and familiarity with the whole work of the organization to fully justify an opinion.

No. 4. It would seem so from a superficial view.

No. 6. Quite likely, if they could be studied in advance by each voter.

No. 7. There is much to think of in answering this question. But in a general way, if the editor sees, or thinks he sees, a duty to perform, and believes that the publication of a reported exposure will protect the investigating public against unprincipled pretenders, it seems to me he should acquaint the public with the unwholesome facts. But it is of first importance to know that a fraud has been detected, and a bona-fide exposure of fraud has been made. My knowledge of mediumship and "exposures" has shown me that it is often a critical point to determine. The majority of skeptics and critics, like the credulous believers, are prone to jump to conclusions, and advertise suspicions, drawn from appearances, or prejudice, or both, as exposures, as if they were from beyond question.

In my judgment nothing should be published concerning any alleged exposure until it is a settled certainty. When it is so established that there can be no question about it, it seems to me the public, and especially the Spiritualists, should be informed in no uncertain way; and Spiritualists should be the first to detect and expose fraud in our ranks. But they should know what they are doing and never act in haste.

Let these questions be settled, as other scientific questions are settled, by exhaustive research, and the most crucial tests applied to all doubtful phenomena, and never parade anything as fraud that has not been demonstrated as such.

Spiritualism should be no exception in the matter of fraud. Spiritualists owe it to themselves and to the cause to carefully discriminate between truth and falsehood in mediumship as in all other things, and vigorously defend the true and reject the false.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

BRIEFLY ANSWERED.

He Considers the State Associations as Vitally Important.

To the Editor:—Your Open Court circular received and questions duly considered, so far as at present advised, and I answer as follows:

1. To this question I am not now ready to give a satisfactory answer.

2. Yes, I consider state associations important, vitally so. Indeed, it is my view now that they should have preceded the National Association. But, as the N. S. A. is now an accomplished fact, I should say, yes, by all means let the state organizations be made uniform by direction of the National Association.

3. Strictly considered, no, there should not. But if there are individual members, their voting privileges should be confined to local questions, such as pertain to local or auxiliary societies.

4. Yes, decidedly, state associations should have the control of all missionary work within the state.

5. It would seem unwise to give any state more than one member of the board of trustees of the N. S. A. while there are other auxiliary states not represented on that board.

6. I think the suggestion a good one. The publication of these reports beforehand would not only give the convention more time for other work, but it would enable the delegates to be better prepared for that work.

7. In answer to this vital question I would say: While the publishers of Spiritual papers, like all others, are responsible for, and should be final judges of what they will or will not publish in any particular case, I think that when the information in regard to fraud or trickery comes from reliable parties, and is such as to convince the publisher of its truth, he should not refuse to make it public. This, as a general proposition; but each case must be considered by itself, and be acted upon according to its own merits or demerits, and the publisher is properly and rightfully the final arbiter in that regard.

M. W. PACKARD.

Bloomington, Ill.

THERE ARE VITAL ISSUES

To Be Confronted by the N. S. A.

"An Open Court," as suggested by The Progressive Thinker, is a splendid method to obtain the opinion of many persons who will not attend the National Association convention, from which delegates may profit; but the critics should not go outside of the organization.

The business of the organization belongs to its auxiliaries and should be reformed or created by their delegates. They who are outside of the organization cannot safely dictate its legislation, because they do not understand its methods nor their effects.

Advice is always desirable from any source; but criticism in order to create prejudice is despicable. There has been too much of the latter launched against the N. S. A. The former can best be given on the convention floor, where the desired result is achieved. Hence, this firing in the rear and behind ambush should stop, and the reformer who is so able to achieve, come into the open and engage in a contest where strength and the right is sure to win.

But critics have said: "We cannot all be delegates." Perhaps not—but most of them can if they will join an auxiliary society or organize one. Their advice and personal effort will then be given jointly and not lose force because of wrong application.

The "Open Court" may pass decisions, but the "Workers' Court" will convene and legislate from experience, and their efforts will be applied.

If you want reform, work for it as well as shout for it! It is a good plan to vote and work for what you want, instead of always only bellowing about how you are abused. Go to Boston, October 20 to 24, and if not as a delegate, you can be where you can confer with the delegates—or could have open conferences for non-delegates between sessions.

Stop growling about what others do or fail to do, and do something yourself.

The N. S. A. is what the Spiritualists make it. If you are a Spiritualist, see that you are at least represented in the convention.

The many varieties of Spiritualists need not disturb our cause; for, its life is made more active by the variety of opinion. Spiritualism embraces all truth—and it welcomes every possible teacher and investigator.

We have no creed. Each Spiritualist may have a dozen fads if he please, and none will be heresy. If you have proven the fact of spirit communion and are a spiritual person, you can prefix your Spiritualism with any adjective you please and it will not be an obstacle in the way of the National Association's efforts. It is a business association, and its labors are executive. The will of the majority is yet the safest for control.

Manage the N. S. A. in a business manner and cease higgling about technicalities that belong to individuals. A great business corporation is not often, and need not be, paralyzed by differing opinions of its members upon all the various social and political questions.

Can we not associate for humanitarian purposes as Spiritualists and manage our corporate business without fads interfering? We can find harmony in our individuality. We can agree to disagree.

We have a great work to do in the world to destroy materialism and ignorance. In whatever way you help achieve human progress, you are helping Spiritualism and your adjective prefix is not a barrier to your usefulness nor need it militate against your affiliation with the N. S. A. All are welcome who will work together for human progress and be willing to make some sacrifice.

There is a "unanimous converging work" in the N. S. A., and that is to prove spirit life and communion. All other issues are subservient and that one binds us together in fraternal fellowship.

The great need of the world to-day is to prove the resurrection. That is the paramount privilege of the Spiritualist. All fads and opinions sink into insignificance beside this powerful and positive fact.

Changes in the organic law of the N. S. A. will be made as conditions demand. These cannot all be discerned at present; but they are retarded by inactive persons who fail to co-operate.

State associations are necessary and should be the units of the N. S. A., with all local auxiliaries their units—and this will be when all the states organize. An exact uniform plan of state organization is not absolutely necessary; yet they should be in harmony of intent. This applies also to the local societies. Exact similarity is not necessary for harmony or utility.

Individual members in state associations are necessary until they become strong in local auxiliaries. The voting power is regulated by granting the local society delegates a vote for each of its members and the personal member of the state association a single vote. That plan works well in several state associations and gives to their conventions a larger numerical power.

Missonary work should be done by each state association—and the N. S. A. should help each state.

Officers of the N. S. A. should be selected for their personal capacity irrespective of state residence.

Officers' messages and reports belong to the convention for information, auditing and legislative help. It is not sufficient to publish them in the Spiritualist press.

Fraud committed by mediums should be hit hard; but, a public howl in our papers for all critics and opponents to gain a weapon to excite prejudice amongst the incredulous, should be stopped. We need thorough organization so that we may inform each state association and they in return, each local society of wrong-doing by any speaker or medium in our cause—and also to in the same way commend right living and worthy capacity.

Protect good workers and see that they have support. Then fraud will pass away. There are a number of mediums who do not use paraphernalia, nor give padded platform messages. Indeed, no medium of capacity and reputation should be classed with fakirs who work outside of our organization. The organized cause will be our protection against fraud. Mediumship will be used by the societies for spiritual purposes and spirit communion and not for money-getting and a public sensuous display. Then the phenomena will be developed into a clearer and more positive form. Let us get away from giving "tests" and always "testing" the mediums. Let us use mediumship to secure spirit communion for the helpfulness it may bring to members of our organized societies and thus prepare the way for a better system of propaganda. We are always trying to convert the people and then as Spiritualists relegate them to the rear.

Let societies employ and use mediums and relieve them from crude patronage to secure a simple living. We have genuine mediums and they should be sustained. There is something wrong in an individual who sees only fraud in every one he meets.

And the badness of fraud-hunter is criminal when such a person asks a medium to give a padded test just to help get money for the association.

Such an act may have been to "test the medium," but is damnable just the same. Such an incident occurred at a late mass-meeting and was urged by a person of prominence who is strenuous against fraud. Must a medium always feel that their friends are liable to be enemies? Must the mediums always be treated as suspicious characters? Must their footsteps be dogged by human bloodhounds? Can they not sit in the audience instead of upon the platform, or talk to friends, without being suspicioned of "hunting for tests?" We no longer need tests; let us have messages! Stop wholesale denunciation of mediums and enter into a co-operative support of each one who promises zeal and integrity, and let their works prove their character and capacity. Only by organized co-operation can we conserve the best and protect the genuine.

GEORGE W. KATES.

CERTAINLY INCUMBENT

On Spiritualists to Expose Fraud in Our Ranks.

To the Editor:—In the brief space allotted me, I can make only a general statement concerning organization. It is a concentration of forces to be controlled by one person, and its details performed by others under his direction. Organization is essential to all associations in the execution of the purposes for which individuals associate. But its power, like a two-edged sword, may cut either way. The government of an organization is a reflex of the moral condition of its members—an outward expression of the indwelling spirit. The power is essential; the manner of its exercise is the main consideration.

To be efficient, organization should be local, with a general head in which the local organizations should be represented by delegates chosen from the local ones, something after the manner of the House of Representatives of the U. S. Congress. The manner of detail must be determined in accordance with the conditions that may arise, and will be directed by the delegates as they are wise or otherwise.

In regard to frauds and their exposure, in Spiritualism, the same principle holds as in all other concerns. It is especially incumbent on Spiritualists to expose fraud and trickery. The work of advancing the cause is in their hands to be controlled and directed by them, and to guard against fraud and imposture is a part of that work.

But it is no easy thing to do. The masses, encouraged and sustained by public sentiment, want it to appear as fraud. The scientists have set their stakes, and of course, they oppose any change. The church sees in the advance of Spiritualism, its own doom and of necessity, opposes it. The dwellers of the spirit world return, and without a single exception, declare the essential dogmas of the church to be false—no total depravity, no immaculate conception, no vicarious atonement, no endless hell, no deification of man. When we consider the incalculable interests involved in ecclesiastical institutions—the authority and power the clergy exercise and the wealth, dignity and honors they enjoy, we can scarcely comprehend the degree of effort that is put forth to crush what is felt to be their deadly enemy.

However, the most effectual antagonism to Spiritualism consists in "fads" under various names, as Theosophy, Christian Science, and the like. The strength of this antagonism is measured by the weakness, ignorance and superstition of the masses. This is the fertile field for the opposition to work in. The most notable of this mode of intended exposure is the work of T. J. Hudson—so transparent and inconsistent that anyone who looks, can see through it. But that makes no difference; it professes to expose Spiritualism; that is enough. The language of this writer is so plausible and his assumptions are so bold and positive, that many, like a drowning man catching at a straw, seize it with avidity. Attempts to expose physical manifestations are things of the past, as they are generally conceded to be genuine.

AN OPINION

That Spiritualists Have Been too Lax.

Each one of the questions submitted in the circular letter are of vital importance, but time is needed in carefully weighing for answering, and at present is an impossibility to me. But the one regarding to "exposing frauds" touches the Spiritualistic movement so closely, I cannot refrain from expressing an opinion. Some Spiritualists have been too lax, it seems, or rather too credulous in regard to manifestations, or what purports to be such. Truth cannot be crushed, only to rise again triumphant. Any man or woman guilty of using fraud in the holiest, most sacred expression of this religion, should be given their proper place before the people. That which might seem fraud to me might be a surety to another. One must needs try the spirits as well. But so long as Spiritualists fear investigation, so long as they shrink from having the fraud exposed, so long will charlatanism help many hungry ones from seeking to understand this spiritual truth. The greatest care should be used, but once convinced of fraud and dishonesty, we are untrue to self, to our religion and our spirit friends if we do not denounce the injustice done in the name of spirit powers. No one need fear the light if they are true. The exposures and denunciations of frauds (so-called) in daily papers are too often sensationalisms, and not to be heeded. But the Spiritual papers are, it seems to me, the guides and credentials of many who seek to know and be known by, and their endorsements should be of value. Also there should be (because of the justice shown) just as much confidence felt in said papers that the frauds should be given full justice also. There is an opportunity for petty spite there from enemies which would make the position of the editor no sincure. But the real spirit which should animate him would never admit a publication without evidence at hand which could be produced if needed to substantiate the things published. The time has come, it seems, when a weeding and weighing is needed and must come, that Spiritualists and Spiritualism shall stand before the world in its true light, and every state association has great opportunities and duties as well to assist and keep its own true media in its own state recognized and the fraud from its active working.

FREE AND FULL DISCUSSION.

Something About the Mission of the Spiritualist Press.

To answer the first question propounded by the "Open Court," one should be thoroughly conversant with the "organic law" of the N. S. A., and I must plead guilty before your Open Court of paying very little attention to the manipulation of the N. S. A. affairs. I have great confidence in the executive head and the board of directors.

I am sure Mr. Barrett has been tried and has never been found wanting. In fact as a rule the only ones who are anxious to have him removed are the fakes and those who do not believe in giving the reins of government into the hands of one person too long, simply because it gives opportunity to one to use the prestige of the office for personal ends; but to what extent any one can truthfully say that of the present incumbent I know not. He is an earnest and faithful worker for the interest of the N. S. A. and the whole cause, and there seems to be so little tangible objection to him that when election time comes around he is chosen to succeed himself.

To the second proposition, I am decidedly in favor of state associations and would have them uniform in all features of general interest, permit individual membership and allow them to vote only on matters of general interest.

Upon your fourth question there is much that should be put in agitation. Every local association should be auxiliary to a county association where it is possible to so organize, and all county associations should become members, through the delegate system, of the state association. But state associations must permit local societies to become members, and also individuals until county associations can be formed, and all state associations should be left to their own territory regarding the appointment and sending out of missionaries. It requires every dollar that can be raised to support any state association and pay the National Association membership fees. Each state should be entitled to a pro rata representation in the convention, but no state should be entitled to more than one representative on the board of trustees, and in states where there are no state associations the local societies represented in the convention from such state should be compelled to unite and select one from such union to represent the interests of their state on the board.

For various reasons the reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and missionaries should be published at least two weeks previous to the time for the annual convention, and a month would be better.

Now, to your seventh proposition there should attach more importance than to any other, for in my humble opinion therein lies the key to the situation.

The spiritual press should be an avenue through which to discuss all questions germane to Spiritualism, and if the exposition of fraud isn't germane to true Spiritualism I would like to know what is. It is certainly right to let the world know that we do not father everything that crawls up under the cloak of Spiritualism. It certainly is the duty of the spiritual press to furnish all the news pertaining to the cause it can be put in possession of.

In about ninety-nine cases in a hundred a thorough exposure of a fraudulent medium, or a so-called medium, is a stride in the right direction and the genuine medium cannot be exposed, because there is no fraud connected with the manifestation to expose. The hardship for the genuine medium is not in the exposure of fraud but in its free-handed practice of it and the tenacity with which many of the oldest Spiritualists cling to those who are exposed and proven to be the rankest humbugs. It is pitiable, it is humiliating, it is positively discouraging to note the readiness of many fairly intelligent Spiritualists to stand up for all that calls itself mediumship, and control, and spirit.

It is the duty of the press to assist in the protection of genuine mediums and it should be the duty of all Spiritualists to keep the editors posted upon the action of all suspicious manifestations coming under their observation. While it might subject the proprietors to prosecution, legal annoyance and great expense to publish everything that is sent them regarding the doings of those who are roaming about in the guise of mediums, they should publish all well authenticated testimony regarding exposures. This method ought to be adopted for the purpose of keeping the rank and file posted and preventing others from being "taken in and done up." I know this makes very poor reading for those who think the best way to get rid of the jugglers is to just let them alone.

What a world this would be if we had no frauds in any branch of business or social life, but because we have, should we not try to hunt them out and rid business and society of them?

One of the missions of the secular press is to keep society straightened up and in good smooth working order and that should be the mission in part of the spiritual press.

DR. T. WILKINS.

A WESTERNER'S VIEWS.

They Are Clearly and Cogently Expressed.

To the Editor:—Your questions touch mainly upon points unfamiliar to Western Spiritualists, but I will give my views as it appears to me.

First, the sending out of lecturers and mediums as missionaries is well; not to proselyte man from his creed, but to set man to thinking. It would also be well to scatter broadcast tracts, headed, "Food for Thoughts," of a style similar to the "Answers to Questions," of Brother Hudson Tuttle; short geological essays, historical religious progress, comparative literature of the last few centuries, etc., etc.; and thousands of live Spiritualists would gladly create a fund for same.

Second. It might suit an Eastern thickly settled state, but our Western cities are remote from each other, and Western men are fast outgrowing religious organizations.

Third. I would deem it but just for each representative to have voting privileges according to the number he represents, and that such number of members whom he represents be noted on his credentials.

Fourth. Yes, as each field may demand a separate code of procedure, while the N. S. A. officers may assist by council where needed.

Fifth. No, judging from precedents of other grand bodies.

Sixth. Yes, if condensed; otherwise it would be dry reading.

Seventh. Here is a point whereon I have voiced my ideas before. If I were an editor I would be the judge in all cases. Where exposures are made or complained of in a malicious or revengeful spirit, they ought never to be published, nor where parties have not wholly proven on divers occasions that one who pretends to be a medium is wholly devoid of such heavenly gifts. If a lying spirit deceives, it does not necessarily prove that the medium is not honest, as we have a few liars left here between the barren shores of Labrador and the sun-kissed San Diego.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

Expunge the First Three Articles of Its Creed.

To the Editor:—In response to your very important questions I beg leave to return the following answers.

Question 1. "What changes in its organic law will make the N. S. A. more efficient?" Expunge the first three articles of its creed. Adopt nothing but what all Spiritualists can endorse, except perhaps the very few who claim that God speaks through them. Thousands of earnest people cannot and never will work for the N. S. A. so long as it retains that creed. They can see nothing in it but a return to churchianity.

Question 2. State associations are essential and they should be organied on a uniform plan.

Question 3. There should not be individual membership in state associations (a) because it gives them undue representation in the N. S. A. (b) because it makes a false showing of the Spiritualist standing in that state. (c) because it throws the entire control of the public action of the Spiritualists into the hands of a clique. In one state, some years since, the attendance at the annual meeting was so small that the rate of representation from local societies was reduced from one for twenty members to ten; and every ordained or endorsed medium was made a member ex officio of the state organization. This makes the state board of directors, which ordains and endorses mediums, the controlling power of the state. The result is, that that very large state is controlled by one city and its immediate suburbs, which furnish the great majority of the members of the yearly meetings.

Question 4. Yes; where the state is organized.

Question 5. No.

Question 6. Yes.

To answer question seven requires much careful thought and perhaps more mildness of expression than some of us are accustomed to manifest. It is so revolting to all feelings of right and decency to make a pretense of being the spirit of some dear friend or relative, that language seems inadequate to express the detestation which should be meted out to the fraudulent imitator. And when this villainous practice is detected, it would seem that the least that the Spiritualist press could do would be to publish the facts furnished by responsible parties. But there are serious difficulties in the way. The fraud element, if not formally, is really an organized force. If you breathe one word against one of the Fraternity you are blacklisted through the whole country. Thousands of superficial spiritists will put down any attempt at exposure, as prompted by jealousy or some base motive, and will stop their paper. Again, when the paper has given its support to some unprincipled fraud it is very, very hard to come out and confess that its protege was an accomplished fraud. It is too much like "eating crow." Another difficulty is found in the fact that some frauds are genuine mediums. We know that moral character has nothing to do with mediumship. It depends upon the physiology, not the ethical character of the person. But such persons have no motive to fraud except the sordid passion for money by any means. They are the ones on whom we should sit down the hardest, as they are using genuine mediumship as a cloak for cheatery.

But the press ought to be on the watch for the welfare of the people, and when notified, by reliable persons, of the perpetration of fraud, it should publish the information at once. The only excuse which ought to have any influence, is the liability to a suit for libel. But this should only cause a more thorough investigation, such as could leave no doubts as to the facts in the case. And when ascertained nothing should prevent the exposure of fraud.

But this brings me to what I consider the only successful cure of most of the fraudulent practices. And it takes me back to the first question as to what the N. S. A. can do to promote its efficiency. As I view the matter, and many agree with me, the N. S. A. and all other Spiritualist organizations are doing the very work which makes fraud so possible and so profitable. The N. S. A., state associations, camp-meetings and local societies all place mediums upon the public platform. To such an extent has this become the practice that a meeting would hardly be considered a Spiritualist one without a test medium on the platform. In the early years of the movement, (when its progress was most rapid, its converts the most numerous and its unity and fellowship most conspicuous, there were no platform shows of mediumistic tests. That was all confined to the private circle. Departure from this method has produced a wide spread demoralization of the movement.

And to such an extent has this gone that remedy is exceedingly difficult if not impossible. Platform mediumship has become a distinct, money-making profession. In some of our large cities you cannot find a single large, well-organized society supporting an able lecturer. But you will find numerous private Sunday meetings run by platform mediums. Their interest in Spiritualism is measured by the number of dimes taken at the door. Various devices are resorted to in order to attract audiences. The gross absurdities entertained by some Spiritualists have their origin largely in these personal cliques called Spiritualist meetings. The failure of the N. S. A. to secure a more general and effective organization is mainly due to the wide-spread influence of these personal meetings. It has created a lack of all feeling of responsibility to labor for the upbuilding of the cause. The great effort is to keep up the private meeting and leave the larger movement to take care of itself, only so far as it can be made to aid the personal interests of the private meetings. Now, if the N. S. A. and the state societies will unitedly attempt to exclude test mediumship from the platform and return to the method of the early days, something effective will be done to stamp out fraud. Gradually we shall establish a Spiritualism of which no one will be ashamed, and instead of a narrow sect with a creed endorsing exploded superstitions, we shall have a broad, progressive universalism.

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Should the Spiritualist Papers Publish "Fraud Exposures?"

The first thought naturally answers yes to this question; and, too, there seems to be a demand that they should just as other newspapers do. But there is another side to the question, and that is, that often these so-called "exposures" are as crude and unworthy of publication as are many of the so-called "seance experiences," and the publisher of a Spiritualist paper should in the interests of truth be equally careful in "the exposure" and in "the test," if the world is benefited by the publication.

We all know the hostile attitude of society in general to the sublime truth of spirit return, for which Spiritualism stands; and knowing this, we are compelled to use discretion in respect to both the "medium" and the "fraud," as we read the reports made.

No person is more in earnest in the affirmation of his belief in regard to the truth of Spiritualistic phenomena than I am, but the fact remains that, to me, with thirty years' experience back of me, there is need to judge every seance, as separate from every other, and on its own merits, or demerits—and in our judgment of "Fraud," as in our judgment of "value" in the phenomena presented, we must not be too certain that we are infallible!

In case of "paraphernalia," that bears every mark of earthly origin, we may safely say that Fraud is there, and yet there have been instances when the paraphernalia was brought into the seance-room by those who came with the express purpose of "exposure;" consequently, I for one would say, let the editor publisher of a Spiritualist paper have the same liberty in this, as we are compelled to accord to the editors and publishers of other newspapers. In fact, they must have this liberty, and no one should be offended if they decline articles of this nature, as well as articles pertaining to other matters. Surely the publisher of a Spiritualist paper is as deeply interested in everything Spiritualistic as any of us. He has proven his position as a Spiritualist by putting his money into the work; and "money talks;" he is all the time investigating and his well-trained mind is therefore better judge, it seem to me, than is the hot haste of one who perhaps has only just begun investigation.

But now, on the other hand; how are we to rid ourselves of these parasites, fakes, frauds? True it is, that 'tis easier to tell of wrongs in a body politic, than it is to prescribe a remedy; but to my mind there appears but one remedy, and that is, that we prove the medium, as we prove other men, by the touch-stone of personal character; prove the man, the woman; and if these are right, then we may trust them as "mediums"! If a person has by ill conduct proven him or herself unworthy of confidence, then I think publishers are not only justified in exposure of such; but from their position, are called upon to do so, whenever circumstances are such, that they can; for are not these editors and publishers our "watchmen upon the walls," as well as our leaders in the new realms of spiritual truth?

Chicago, Ill. J. O. M. HEWITT.

VIEWS OF A NOTED WORKER.

Love the Spiritual Law of Gravitation.

For an expression of views upon the organization of the N. S. A. and auxiliary state associations, I feel that there are so many others so much more capable and possessed of finer executive ability than myself, that are prepared to give an opinion in regard to that part of the subject, that I resign in their favor. Opinions are of more weight when expressed by those who know, than by those who think, and as my knowledge upon the result of certain lines of thought is exceedingly limited, therefore if my thought were put into execution the result no doubt would not be as efficient as the present condition of affairs.

I will pass on to the seventh question regarding the insertion in the spiritual press of the exposure of trickery in mediumship. That is a very important question, and also a very delicate one. If we could divest humanity of personality we might be able to judge, and then, if we could, I suppose we would cease to be human. I believe the Nazarene's command, "Neither do I condemn thee—go and sin no more," need not necessarily be confined to the woman taken in adultery, but in all actions of our fellow man. Spiritualists, above all classes of people, realize and know that "As ye sow, so shall ye reap;" and if any mediums perpetrate fraud, in that case, as in all cases, inexorable law prints upon their lives here and now its just reward. I do feel, though, that a little notice with their names attached, stating that "Mr. and Mrs. 'So and So'" have not yet grown to the required standard of unfoldment and are not fitted for public teachers, would not be detrimental. A correction administered in a spirit of love and kindness is much more beneficial with grown-up children, as well as with our little ones. In publishing verbatim accounts of Spiritualists' exposures of mediums, if you or any other representative of our press could know that all personality of the writer was eliminated, then it might be beneficial; but mediums are only mortal, and though they may not descend to dishonesty, they make their mistakes and thereby innocently, many times, arouse the personality of some one, and the account portrays the human attributes of the writer.

What are you going to do with mediums who are "thirty years before the public," and who assist the spirits? Are you going to throw away all the wheat because there is some chaff amongst it? A pure and unadulterated impostor along Spiritualistic lines exposes himself every time he speaks or acts; and give him rope enough and he will soon hang himself. He is really not worthy of space in any of the columns of our valuable press. But our weak ones who are negative to all conditions—and no one but a Spiritualist can fully know what that means—need not our condemnation, but our moral support, teaching them from our deeper insight how to be negative to the good and positive to the undeveloped and still retain their God-given gifts of pure mediumship. I condemned once from what I considered my duty. I now know that a higher law had judged, and my petty stand only brought what I deserved, unhappiness to myself; for while our hearts are torn by unkind thoughts of our brother, inharmony reigns in our inner temple, and the sea of life is tossed and troubled. Weak or strong, perfect or imperfect, we are all one family, children of one great source, and the motive power that causes us to wheel through space in our eternal march of progression, is love, the spiritual law of gravitation, holding us all in our proper places.

COMPREHENSIVE VIEWS.

As Expressed by the Secretary of the National Spiritualist Association.

Having received a copy of your circular letter, with the request for an expression of opinion on seven questions of vital importance to all loyal Spiritualists, which it propounds; I will endeavor to briefly state my thoughts upon the same. In the preamble to the Constitution and By-Laws of the N. S. A., we read that the earnest Spiritualists who founded this organization, did so, "In order to form a more perfect and powerful working organization, establish intelligent co-operation, insure harmonious action and financial success, provide for the education and protection of mediums and speakers, promote the general welfare of the Cause, and secure the blessing of liberty and protection under the law, to ourselves and our posterity as a people." This, then, may be considered the "Organic law"—or at least a part of it—of the N. S. A., which the Thinker wishes to know if we should change.

It seems to me that this preamble contains within itself nothing that calls for radical change, but that on the contrary, it is broad and wise enough to call for the approval of all progressive Spiritualists. The question is, can the N. S. A. fulfill this law, and thus prove itself a blessing to the Cause and to humanity? That the N. S. A. has done very much in the special lines enumerated in its preamble—as in other practical ways not included in the same—the records of the work of this office, and of the workers generally in behalf of this association, will amply show. But the N. S. A. has been cramped and limited, largely—till recently—for lack of funds, and greatly by the cold opposition it has met with from thousands of Spiritualists who have not given it credit for its work and objects. If the N. S. A. can move on and accomplish for Spiritualism what it aims to do, its fundamental law will be found to be practical, and helpful to humanity.

"Are State Associations essential? If so, should they not be organized on a uniform plan?" As yet, I am not decided if State Associations are essential, though I am inclined to think they are, I know they are capable of doing great good; I also know there are many local societies in States where State Associations exist, that refuse to affiliate with the latter. Out of all the States in the Union, but seventeen have State organizations, and some of the latter have scarcely life enough to breathe. I am not opposed to State organizations, I feel they should be encouraged, and well founded, and when so, they should have charge of the missionary work in their territory. The section of the country, and other matters might need consideration, in deciding if all State Associations be of uniform character, and if all should have only delegate membership. I believe, where a State Association is composed of lay members only it should have the same representation as any other society made up of individual members.

In consideration of the fact that the N. S. A. has auxiliaries in nearly every State in the Union, it certainly would seem but just that not more than one member of the board should be elected from any one State; and yet we are confronted by the fact that three members dwell in the city of Washington. Headquarters being here, it is essential that the secretary reside here, the same may be said of the treasurer, and as the executive committee is composed of five members of the board, and that three of these are a majority, which often must decide upon important matters that will not brook delay—such for instance, as matters connected with court affairs on defending wills, three of which have been before us this year; also, attending to the care of our mediums as beneficiaries, and any number of matters that may come up for instant attention, it is necessary for the majority of the executive committee to be within easy reaching distance of headquarters, and these three members are the treasurer, secretary and one trustee.

As for the publication of the annual reports of the officers and missionaries, in the Spiritualist papers, in advance of conventions, I will state that the secretary has for the past three years sent her report to the Spiritual press in advance of conventions, and in one paper at least, it has annually appeared; other reports have also been printed before conventions. It is impossible for us to get the financial reports in the papers, as the fiscal year does not close till October, and we then have to make up our accounts, and balance the books for the year.

Question number 7 is of the greatest importance to all Spiritualists, and as an individual I do most certainly believe that all fraud and illegal practices on the part of mediums, or pretended mediums, should be exposed, and condemned in no uncertain terms. I know that sometimes a genuine medium may be in what seems to be a condition of fraud, and that great injustice might be done to one such by hasty condemnation, but in cases where there can be no doubt of the deception practiced, and the unscrupulous character of the trickster, I think the Spiritual press should expose the fraud and the practitioner of it, and make his—or her—name a thing for public print.

These, Mr. Editor, are my opinions in brief, on the questions you so pertinently ask, and in closing, allow me to say, that the N. S. A. has no cause to complain of the lack of courteous treatment of it, on the part of the editors and managers of the Spiritual papers, for it has received great and blessed help from each one, and its earnest thanks are tendered to yourself and all editors of the Spiritual press, for such timely aid.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

SHOW THEM UP!

Only the False and Fraudulent Fear Closest Scrutiny.

To the Editor:—Replying to your interrogatory circular, a copy of which is before me, I will say with reference to the first question: So long as the territory contiguous to the session is permitted to vote all members that may be present at any session, selfish ones in the interest of such territory will be subserved, thus engendering bickerings and hard feelings. As a remedy I would suggest, all local societies be chartered by and under control of the state associations, which should be uniform. State associations, composed of delegates from local societies, whose officers should be elected by such delegates. Local societies having one vote for each ten members or fractional part of ten over six. State associations electing delegates to constitute the National and empowering such delegates to cast the entire vote of the state when transacting business in National session. This would create a laudable ambition in each state to increase its vote by a thorough organization of the state into local societies.

There should not be individual members in either state or National association. If so permitted, many would join and thus shirk duty in their home or local society. If admitted at all, then only as honorary members with no voice in any legislation.

It should devolve upon the state organization to perform all missionary work within its borders. Where there is no state organization, such territory should be under the National jurisdiction until so organized. All state and national reports of officers should be sent to local societies. National officers' reports should be in the hands of its delegates a month before the October annual, so that all delegates might be acquainted with all work in hand, thus saving much time and expense.

With reference to Question No. 7, I would say Truth only asks a hearing. It is only the false that fears the closest scrutiny in Spiritualism as in everything else. I would say show them up, hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may. The time has come when honesty, morality, manhood as well as mediumship should be demanded by the public. I hope to see the day when something more than mere mediumship either true or protended, shall be a passport to respectable society.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

The Relation of the N. S. A. to Its Constituents.

To the Editor:—Your allotment to address the "Open Court," at hand. To me, there are but two essential questions needed as a basis on which to build a platform whereon every Spiritualist can unite. They are: "Is spirit return possible? Can the spirit world communicate intelligently with those in the earth life?" On these, as a cornerstone, rests all the development of growth in spiritual knowledge. Whatever other frills or robing is gathered about these points, are but the simple, ideal conception of inquiring minds, and should not be pushed forward for acceptation, simply because one active mind has dreamed the dream.

The rallying slogan of the primitive Christians was: "Christ and him crucified." Let ours as Spiritualists be: "The possibility of communion with those gone before." It is the point of union, and not of divergence, that all true Spiritualists seek. Time will set all the rest exactly right.

I believe that any change in the organic law of the N. S. A. that shall make it more compact, harmonious and instant for action will add to its efficiency.

Without state associations I do not believe that the N. S. A. can ever be more than a beautiful, ideal phantasy, representing nothing but itself. But becoming the representative really of the state association, it will stand as they do, for every unit composing the whole body of Spiritualists in each state. All the associations should follow the same general, uniform plan of fundamental law.

Provisions should be made for individual members of the state association. But I do not think they should have a vote greater than one-tenth of a whole vote.

The responsibility of all Spiritualistic work, propaganda or otherwise, should rest upon the state association within whose territory it is carried on. Not as to dogma, or creed; but that it is well done, by persons who are honest, earnest believers in the truth of what they do and teach.

It does not seem wise to require more than one delegate from each state of the Union, on the board of trustees; but this delegate should have the power to name a proxy, if by any reason incapacitated to serve out the term for which elected.

It might save time to publish the ad-interim reports of the officers before the meeting of the convention. But would it be parliamentary to report to any other body, or at any other place than the N. S. A. legally called and receiving the reports to an appropriate committee and acting upon their report.

I believe that fakes and frauds should be always exposed without fear or favor by the papers to whom we trustfully look for our information on Spiritualistic affairs. It will help weed out from our ranks those who are inclined to be tricky.

These are personal opinions. While I have reasons to back them, space will not allow me to elaborate.

IMPRESSIVE WORDS.

Let Integrity Build the House Where Life and Honor Love to Dwell.

Regarding the questions propounded in "An Open Court," a uniform plan for the state associations, and a uniform number of representatives from each S. S. A. to the senatorial body of the N. S. A., at Washington, commends itself to my view. As to query No. 6: The publication of the reports should precede the October meeting, thereby contributing toward the adequate preparation of the representatives.

As to query No. 7: It is the plain duty of the spiritual press to publish all obtainable facts and expose fraud whenever found. Right wrongs no man.

"Expose fraud and trickery wherever found," is a sound and honest principle. Let Integrity build the house where life and honor love to dwell. To condone trickery and deception in this matter is about as bad as to originate it. No noble cause can afford to do it. If the conscious receiver of stolen goods is as bad as the thief, and the utterer of counterfeit money as guilty as the maker, it is difficult to see how the condoner of lies and deceit in Spiritualism is to be excused for any share in perverting or suppressing known facts or in consciously misinterpreting them.

It might, at first, challenge belief that any one could be seriously interested in Spiritualism, either as religion, philosophy or science, who was so morally perverted as to wish to condone or excuse conscious rascality in the phenomena. Do they love the darkness because their deeds are evil? But just here we may recall that sophistry which is associated with the Jesuitical doctrine that "it is right to do evil that good may follow;" or, the (desired) end justifies the (iniquitous) means, etc. Some of these persons seem to think that a "lie, well stuck to, is as good as the truth." Indeed they have no idea of the sacredness and majesty of truth. They are inclined to echo Richard's sentiment, 'If not with heaven, why hand in hand with hell!"

May these unhappy ones learn to see better for their own souls' sake. May the source and power of Truth and Goodness give them the moral and spiritual strength always to do right, to tell truth and defend it to the death if need be; for what were continued existence worth if purchased at the price of all that makes life dear and honorable?

"As the body is purified by water, so is the soul purified by Truth."

THE OPEN COURT.

Spiritualism Should Always Stand for Integrity.

The Progressive Thinker is certainly entitled to great credit in inaugurating the system of symposiums which from time to time have graced its columns. Nothing, in my judgment, more clearly distinguishes the old method from the new, and sets forth so clearly the distinctive difference between the old theological and the spiritualistic methods.

The one, limited by credal boundaries, while in the other there is perfect freedom of thought and expression regardless of what any other person may think or say. Modern Spiritualism is the only religion, if religion it be, in which there is a fair field and no favor in the expression of honest opinion. In your Open Court you again call for this freedom of expression from your numerous correspondents, and, no doubt as heretofore there will be wide difference of opinion.

I am unable to say what changes in the organic law will make the U. S. A. more efficient, but am perfectly willing to leave this matter to the wisdom of the delegates assembled.

Regarding State Associations, it is my opinion they are not essential and for the reason that it is almost impossible at the present time to make them effective. The N. S. A. is already in the field and it should not only live, but thrive. It is a well known fact that the local societies everywhere are having all, and in many cases more, than they can do, to sustain their organizations, and when you add to this the burden of sustaining a State organization as well as National, it is altogether too much for the pocketbook of the average Spiritualist. Could we have effective and well sustained State organizations, the responsibility of missionary work in their respective territories would naturally devolve upon the State organization, but as the case now stands, if any effective missionary work is performed it must be continued by the N. S. A. Let local societies everywhere charter under the N. S. A. as was first proposed and done.

In my judgment it was a mistake to permit such chartering because of a State organization, especially as State organizations as a rule exist only in name. We should by all means sustain the N. S. A. and this could be easily done if all professed Spiritualists would give the small sum of twenty-five cents yearly for the purpose of maintaining an effective missionary force. True, we have many Spiritualists who are blessed with more than a competence of worldly possessions, and who can give much more than the sum mentioned, and many of these have responded nobly to the needs of the hour, while many more are waiting for a more convenient season or waiting to change worlds and leave their wealth to litigation.

We now have at least three places where wealthy Spiritualists, if so inclined, can put their money with the assurance that it will be used to further the best interests of Spiritualism and prove a lasting good to future generations.

The N. S. A., the Medium's Home and the Morris Pratt Institute are all worthy institutions and calculated to do a practical and very much needed work, and should be generously sustained.

It seems to me that no State should be entitled to more than one representative on the board of trustees, and that all annual reports might be printed in the Spiritual press prior to assembling in convention, thus having more time for the consideration of other important matters.

Question No. 7 as stated in "The Open Court" circular does in my opinion very deeply concern every Spiritualist in the United States. Spiritualism should not be an exception to the general rule adopted by all honest investigators after truth—expose fraud and trickery wherever found. The trickster and fakir when known to be such, should not only be exposed, but some method should be adopted by the Spiritualist press to inform honest people who these tricksters are. Under the law of libel it is somewhat risky to publish names, but the necessity for this remains if we would drive this element from the field. How would the suggestion offered by Harry J. Moore operate, if put in practice? "Keep a standing list of honest and reputable workers in all the Spiritualist papers, and shut the others out." Right here we will be met with the objection that theere is no medium, however worthy, who has not been considered a fraud by somebody, and while this is true, none know so well as Spiritualists that there are tricksters posing as Spiritualists and mediums and who are daily swindling the public. It would be well, however, to heed the advice of Davy Crockett: "Be sure you are right, and then go ahead." To accuse of fraudulent practice without absolute proof is very unjust, but where fraud and the grossest immorality are known to exist, not to expose is akin to criminality. In a late number of The Banner of Light, it was stated that "one adventuress and all around deceiver was forced to leave one of the great centres of spiritual instruction only a few days ago." Who was this person? What a pity we can not know and thus be guarded against her in other localities. Injustice to all honest mediums and all decent Spiritualists such persons should be known all over the United States.

Spiritualism and Spiritualists should stand for honesty, for integrity in mediumship and a decent morality, and if the Cause can not stand the expunging of the tricksters and dead-beats generally, then let it give place to Christian Science, Theosophy or the Salvation Army. This has been my position in the past, and I can see no reason for changing at the present time.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men. JOHN F. M.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

AN EASY MATTER

To Stand on the Outside and Comment.

To the Editor:—In reply to your appeal, "An Open Court," an expression regarding questions of vital importance, I will say:

It is quite easy for us to stand on the outside and comment, and the world is full of people who seem to draw the sustenance of their existence in this manner. Such persons can tell us all about managing the government as to political and economics, and even personal affairs, but when it comes to active work they fall short.

The N. S. A. is yet in its infancy, being a child of less than ten years, yet our cause has been greatly benefited by its birth.

It is quite essential and necessary that we as Spiritualists should have a center or head, not only for the betterment of conditions conducive to good work as a body, but that we may stand on a level with other organizations, thereby having our influence felt throughout the land.

Through the efforts of the N. S. A. we have been recognized in the courts of the land as a religious body, and will in time be able to claim what is left to us as bequests, etc., without the cry of insanity, etc., given as a means toward making such bequests invalid.

The N. S. A. has made it possible for us to call in our healers in many states, and I dare say it will continue to fight the medical trusts until perfect freedom along these lines is established.

Through its teachers and missionaries and printed matter we have been able to reach people who have otherwise been isolated.

Personally I have no comment to make in regard to the official board, and feel from its first inception those connected with the organization have done the best they knew.

You ask what organic changes will make the N. S. A. effective. My answer is every change that will supplant strength for weakness, and if a weak link is found in the chain, either through offices or by-laws, etc., change by forging a new link of better material.

In answer to the question whether state associations are essential, I answer in the affirmative; they are indeed necessary and should be organized on a uniform plan. It is my opinion there should be individual members of said associations, having full voting privilege, and the responsibility of all missionary work in its own territory rest upon the state association. I hardly feel that any state should be entitled to more than one representative on the board of trustees of the N. S. A, and there are auxiliaries in almost every state, and the spirit of partiality should be avoided as much as possible.

I agree with you in thinking much valuable time could be saved at our annual conventions if reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and missionaries were printed in the Spiritualist papers prior to the October meeting; but there are so many Spiritualists who do not take Spiritualist papers, who only go to conventions and camp-meetings once a year—who perhaps would feel they were not getting all if each and every item was not presented to their dissecting ability; to keep peace and harmony in the family I feel a good plan would be to have a vast number of these papers on hand, and when our good brothers and sisters get the full report complaint, present them with one (at the same time request they subscribe for a paper) and tell them "Go way back and sit down" and read and digest its full contents to their heart's content.

These reports are necessary and require much hard work on the part of the writers to get them ready and should be in the possession of those who appreciate and desire them.

Your question regarding trickery in mediumship would be a poser to some, especially those afflicted with the "suppressing spirit," yet it is a vital question and should be well considered. While I do not believe in listening to the gossip tongues, I fully believe in the necessity of demanding honest work in every instance. There are, however, persons who will call "fraud" to everything which does not exactly come up to their estimate, and great care should be taken that no innocent person be injured by these presumptuous ones.

When a publisher receives accounts of exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism, they should be satisfied of their informant's reliability, either by sworn statements or something quite as binding, as to the truthfulness of said statements, then, without exception or prejudice expose the fraud wherever found.

It has often been said (and is in a measure true) that the "greatest danger to our cause is within our own ranks."

We can certainly compel the world to respect us if we respect ourselves—and when we strive to eliminate all trickery from our ranks we are purging them of the worst enemy, thereby cleansing our own doorsteps, and until we can do this let us cease to throw stones at atheists, churches, theosophy and all other isms.

While I have no sympathy with the crank or fraud hunter, it is an appalling fact that our beautiful and soul-lifting cause is injured in many places by miscreants who pose as mediums, but when we stop to think that the world to-day is run almost entirely upon the competitive system, we are not surprised that the same spirit enters religious bodies. To my mind mediumship does not necessarily spiritualize and the man or woman who, as a salesman will adulterate tea, coffee, etc., or give short measure or delight in scandal will be apt to hold to the old tendencies on becoming a medium. We hear much said from our rostrums of like attracting like, such being the case the incentive for honesty must be from within if we want its display in our daily lives.

In conclusion I wish to state that the editor of The Progressive Thinker has been just and fearless in his denunciation of this most heinous crime, the adulteration of spirit phenomena for which he should have the support of every earnest and honest worker and follower in our ranks.

May he continue in his grand efforts. May we have more like him as well as like our worthy president of the N. S. A., that our cause may grow and flourish in all lands upon our earth.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1902.

Our Symposium and Our Cause.

We doubt not that all who are interested in the welfare of the cause of Spiritualism, and especially of the N. S. A., will read with interest the presentation of the views of the many thinking Spiritualists whose thoughts are presented in this issue of The Progressive Thinker.

While, as was to have been expected, there are divergences of opinions, yet on the whole there is substantial unanimity; and whatever divergences may exist, there remains underneath all a stalwart love for the cause, that augurs well for the future of Spiritualism. Discrepancies in minor matters do not abate love for the great grand cause which means so much to the world; so much for the liberation of humanity from mental thrall to dark and dreary theological systems of thought and belief, and the enlargement of man to higher and better ethics and religious ideas.

True Spiritualism signifies mental freedom, soul growth, spiritual enlargement, expansion in ethical ideals, the upliftment and betterment of man for the present life and for that which is to come.

In these things all true Spiritualists can agree, and while differing in opinions concerning many matters, they can walk harmoniously together onward toward the ideals of their spiritual aspirations, leaving each free to hold his or her own views.

Spiritualism is essentially a system of endless expansion in knowledge and spiritual growth. It cannot be compressed into the mold of any man's or association's formal creed. It is larger than our human thought, which partakes of our human limitations which will be outgrown in the vast future, in realms of yet larger limitations. Onward—onward forever—for the finite never can fill the infinite.

Spiritualism is illimitable—our conceptions of it can never reach and circumscribe its boundless fullness, in a concrete finite measurement.

Were Spiritualism limitable, it would not meet the demands of man's progressive spiritual nature—hence creeds can never satisfy, for they fix non-expansive limits to human thought.

But with real mental freedom—we can unite as Spiritualists all, in love and work for Our Cause—Spiritualism.

Spiritualism is not a system of theological religion; its import is not dogmatism about God; but rather does it relate to man and his present and future well-being. Its spirit is not—to coin a word—god-arian; but in the largest and intensest sense humanitarian—it pertains to Man in his essential nature and mutual relations.

Hence it is that, while allowing widest diversity of opinions, there is oneness of thought and purpose in the vital essence of our Cause, and its grand ultimate—the upbuilding of humanity ever toward higher and better ideals.

The Visiting Nurse.

At a recent banquet a Chicago physician responded as follows to a toast to "The Visiting Nurse":

"And who is my neighbor? And it came to pass that a mother went down from the second to the nineteenth ward and fell among microbes, and the microbes increased and multiplied, and behold they attacked the baby, and the child was stripped of its nutrition, and was left half dead. And a certain physician passed that way on the same side and wrote a prescription. And in like manner a benevolent Countess was good to the child, but behold, not good with it, and left money and soon passed to the other side and gave a vaudeville performance on the Lake Shore Drive for the benefit of the South Sea Islanders.

"But a certain Visiting Nurse as she journeyed came to where the child was, and behold, was not only good to the child but good with it, and she poured soap and water over the child and put it on a bed, and the bed was clean and warm and dry, and the child waxed and grew and the secondary nutrition did likewise, and there was no more retrograde metamorphosis of tissue, and as the Visiting Nurse departed the mother of the child opened her mouth and spake in broken English, 'Heaven bless you, Miss, a thousand times; if you not come, I have not my baby.'

"Child of all weather, of all seasons, of sunshine and storm; familiar friend of hardship and content—The Visiting Nurse."

Co-Operation says: "Our manner or doing a thing often counts for more than the thing itself. Some people have the gift of doing a gracious thing ungraciously. They seem to think it of small moment how they act, if they do the right thing. Their gifts are felt like a blow. Others refuse with a kindness that falls like a balm. The Italian who is asked for alms, unable to help, replies: 'Pardon me, I also am a poor devil.' That leaves no hurt, while the open hand of some others inflicts a sting. Do the right thing but do it rightly, courteously, sympathetically."

An Open Court.

There is but one way to correct the errors in the ranks of Spiritualism, and that is by agitation. The world, not understanding, may find fault with us. The secular press may ridicule us and place us in the lower scale of institutions of the earth, and that need not worry us; they do not understand. They can only see through eyes of prejudice and ignorance, and that always means intolerance; but we must give love for hatred, tolerance for intolerance, and strive to see our own faults and correct them.

The time is almost at hand for an upheaval in the soil that is nurturing tares. If we have a great truth beneath all this charlatanism, it must be brought out to be kissed by the morning sun and unfolded into a perfect truth.

We do not need to go out into the highways and byways, or on the housetops and cry aloud unto all the world that there are those in our ranks who are substituting mundane methods for obtaining manifestations, and who are base enough to call them spiritual manifestations; the world knows it now better than they know us and our truth; but we must make an effort, perhaps a quiet effort would be most effective.

Something must be done in this respect if we would perpetuate the name of Spiritualism. The principles are being instilled, unconsciously into almost every church in the land, and here and there a sensitive is being controlled by spirit power to perform wonders; this occurs in the church as often as anywhere else. All these things help Spiritualism as a principle, but as an institution it has but little effect for good.

We would cast no cloud of gloom over the bright aspirations of anyone, but we must present stubborn facts sometimes to make our beloved brothers and sisters look at the real situation without disguise. However, this is only telling of it, for the facts cannot yet be related in their appalling nature.

The work of progression means pushing on, but unless we go up into dry-dock occasionally and scour the barnacles off the bottom of the old ship, she will go to the bottom of the sea.

The cause that is so dear to our hearts is worth cleansing and remodeling once in awhile. Much of this depends upon thoroughly organizing throughout the country by states and all into a strong National. This does not mean to tear down the present National Association and organize anew, but with the present organization strengthened we can have the power to place an effective sanction upon all the genuine manifestations, and that of itself will also place a brand of condemnation upon the spurious.

The medium who has remained true to the genuine gift of the spirit will eventually be the only one sought for proof of spirit return, and no matter how meager, no matter what kind are his or her manifestations, to know they are genuine will suffice to endear them to the friends of truth.

It is natural for mankind to imitate something that is of value and in spiritual manifestations there is proof of a future state of existence; something that all peoples have ever sought to learn; something of untold satisfaction to every one; hence the value of it, and the incentive to imitate. Could it be given to the world FREE by Spiritualism, it would do away with the commercial side of the question and kill the incentive to imitate.

It has almost come to the point where the cleverest prestidigitarian gets all the work and becomes the most popular even when every manifestation is strictly of mundane origin.

True, even they are making Spiritualists, but the bottom must fall out of an institution built upon watered stock; the house built upon the sands is not safe.

Let us get down to bedrock for our foundation. We have it, but the sands of the sea have washed up around until it is almost obscured from view.

Let us review this question calmly and philosophically, it has become a theme for discussion among the various sects and general public and must be looked into.

The truth is more important than the institution it underlies and our highest aim should be to lift it up out of the mire and wash it free from pollution.

Let us get down to practical business without fear that the truth will lose by a thorough examination.

PLAIN WORDS.

They Are Shot Directly At the N. S. A.

Seriously, there is not much good of spending the money to go to the convention, unless the majority of the delegates go for the sake of visiting friends and to have a reunion. Mr. Mayer's proposition to raise $15,000 before the close of the convention, in order to secure the property for the N. S. A. will absorb the attention of all interested. The Morris Pratt Institute will be represented, by a financial agent, the general fund of the association will have to be looked after, so a great part of the time will be devoted to money getting. Then when the time is consumed that must be, in reading the reports of officers—president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, besides the work of the missionaries, which we have already had in nearly every issue of the Banner and The Progressive Thinker, unless someone makes a motion to dispense with the reading of them, which can be done by a two-thirds vote of the delegates, and which could all be avoided if reports were published in advance, and distributed to the delegates, and the time spent in electioneering, and other things is counted up, where is the time left after the evening sessions are counted out, to do the legitimate work of the objects of the N. S. A? Whom shall we elect? How much money can we get? are the main issues at each convention, instead of practical work in the interests of Spiritualism.

The delegates who spend their money to go to the convention from a distance, ought not to be made to feel that upon them falls the responsibility of raising all the money. The spiritual papers are asked to keep appealing for funds for the Waverly Home, the Reed City Mediums' Home, the N. S. A. Home, the Morris Pratt Institute, and dozens of other private and semi-private funds, until the officers of societies who are trying to pay living wages to their speakers and mediums are unable to secure it, because of the members of their societies being pledged to outside funds.

It seems to me that the condition of the local societies and the lycoums should be the first care of the N. S. A. When the societies are strong enough to pay speakers and mediums what they ought to have, they will be able to provide for the future instead of being obliged to go to homes. When the Progressive Lyceum is looked after, and the young people of Spiritualism provided for, they will form the rank and file to follow in the footsteps of the pioneers. These are the subjects that should occupy the attention of the delegates to the convention. We can perhaps point with pride to our acquired property in the future, but if we do not do missionary work among our own people, instead of letting them care for themselves, unless we make them feel the responsibility of supporting their own work at home, the N. S. A. can have no secure foundation. The N. S. A. is composed of chartered societies, and in order to make itself strong it should look after the links in the chain of societies which are its source. How to better our local societies? How to arouse interest in our lyceums? are the questions that will decide the future of Spiritualism. The N. S. A. should be a help, not a hindrance to local societies.

Delegates from a distance are apt to find themselves far out-numbered by the proxies, so that their votes are useless. Is there no way the proxy system can be regulated so that all will be satisfied, or can it not be abolished?

Delegates, see to it that some decided action is taken on the lyceum question and the needs of the local and state work.

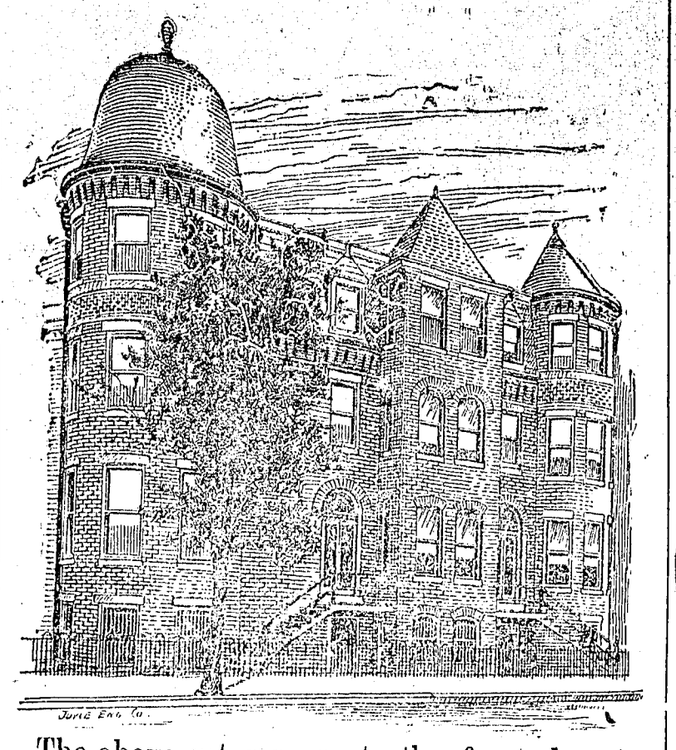
ITEMS OF INTEREST.

They are crowded out this week, to give place to our Symposium.

WILL APPEAR NEXT WEEK.

Several articles intended for the Symposium issue will appear next week.



A GREAT PAPER.

The Progressive Thinker leads in everything that pertains to Spiritualism and Occultism. Everyone will admit that.

A MEDIUMS' HOME

Another Generous Proposition to Spiritualists by Theodore J. Mayer.

Enlarged N. S. A. Headquarters and $15,000 for the Support and Improvement of the Present Mediums' Home.

The above cut represents the front elevation of the present N. S. A. Headquarters and that to be donated by our generous brother, all under one roof. In this proposition, like the former, he puts his grand and noble spirit against that of all Spiritualists. He offers $15,000 in property against the same amount in cash as a supporting fund for this badly needed institution.

Spiritualists, Will You Support the Home?

Confer with the N. S. A. through your representative at the convention, or directly with the Secretary, or with Brother Mayer himself.

The Fate of a Christian Scientist.

A can of nitro-glycerine was lying on the ground,
A full-blown Christian Scientist was promenading 'round;
"Look out!" a little boy cried loud, "there's something dang'rous there!"
He did not heed, he did not hear, but kept his "forceful" stare.

With lungs inflated, head erect, he said: "All things are mine.
I am a part of God! All Good traces my life's design.
Fearless am I! I dare to do whatever I desire,
For I am life! I choose, I make, suggest, command, aspire!

"I am Peace, Joy, Prosperity, Power, Wisdom, infinite;
I am a soul! I control matter with subtle might!
A man is what he thinks! I pulse with God's almighty heart!"
That nitro-glycerine went off, and—blew him all apart!

BROAD FREEDOM DESIRABLE.

The Views of a Profound Thinker in New Jersey.

To the Editor:—Your request "for the expression of views on Questions of Vital Importance" shall be duly considered. I hardly feel able to make proper replies to several of the enquiries, but so far as I have "views," you are perfectly welcome to them. As a general fact it is not well to tinker much with organic law. This practice tends to impair the stability of an organization. Still rules must be adapted to the needs and convenience of members, or there will be a general falling away of interest. If in your first question, you mean by "organic law" the paragraphs giving a statement of belief, such as the recognition of a Supreme Intelligence, etc., I see no occasion for change. Being somewhat of a Pagan myself, and having a strong liking for Pagans of the better sort, I have no desire to bar God out of the universe, and am not able to conceive how a universe can exist or subsist except there be a Being its beginning and sustaining.

State associations as such, are of great utility; but need not be of uniform plan. We all differ in many ways, and so long as one end is paramount, details of form and precedent can safely be left to those directly concerned. But fraternity and hearty co-operation are indispensable and must be insisted upon.

Individual membership means individual responsibility. What is everybody's business is nobody's business in particular. As to "voting privileges," experience must determine what is wisest.

In regard to "missionary work." Where state associations will exercise the responsibility, it is the better way. But feeble organizations can hardly be expected to do much except as helped.

Representation on the board of trustees should be determined, not by theories, but by effectiveness. We have the example of equal representation in the U. S. Senate, and of proportionate representation in the other House. Probably it would be well to let a few associations that do and help the most, have an additional trustee.

In regard to the reports, it would certainly save time to print the reports in the papers beforehand, yet it will often be necessary to read some of them in the meetings when required for discussion and business purposes. Generally, however, such reports are likely to be read to empty seats.

The seventh question is really most important of all. Whenever frauds are exposed in any organization, its adversaries catch the opportunity eagerly to denounce the whole thing, the innocent and upright as well as the culpable. I remember when I was secretary of the National Eclectic Medical Association, a member of that body was expelled on the charge of fraudulently selling a diploma of M. D. Immediately a homeopathic journal cited this alleged misconduct as a reason for rejecting all diplomas of eclectic colleges. Spiritualists have often suffered in the same way. As self-preservation is a law of nature, it is no wonder that many are unwilling to furnish weapons for their calumniators. If such are desirous to malign them, why not leave them the job of smelling out the wrong-doers themselves?

Nevertheless, that argument does not cover the whole ground. It is not the province of genuine Spiritualists to shape their action to disarm or conciliate those who are and who mean to continue their adversaries. Their call is to move forward in good work, leaving cavillers to riot in their choice garbage. But they can not afford to countenance or even be tolerant of anything dishonorable or fraudulent. They may give a broad liberty to divergent opinion, and even disregard the conventional ethics which restrict freedom without furthering a genuine morality; but wilful wrong-doing, injustice to individuals or to the public, should be always exposed and disapproved. If we hold pitch it will stick to our fingers; if we handle coals, they will begrime our hands. To avoid unnecessary debate, I will concede that two and two make five; but I will not accept or teach it as an article of belief. In politics we accept all who vote with us, but in administration it is the only safe rule to "turn the rascals out." Certainly in the National Spiritualist Association it behooves to be as wise as that. Let foxes abide in their own holes, not among our poultry. ALEXANDER WILDER.

Newark, N. J.

ADDITIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Amendment Offered by the Minnesota State Spiritualists' Association to Article 6, Section 1, of the N. S. A. Constitution.

Membership.—Change word "fifty" to words "one hundred;" then add "of a local society" after the words "major fraction thereof," after which add "an additional delegate for each twenty-five members or delegates, or major fraction thereof, of a state association."

The N. S. A. Secretary would, in connection with the above, respectfully call the attention of chartered societies to the fact that at the convention of 1901 the word "fifty" was inserted in the foregoing in place of the words "one hundred," which were expunged; hence the first portion of this amendment is to exactly reverse the vote of the convention of 1901.

FORM THE PACIFIC COAST.

Geo. F. Perkins Expresses His Views.

I suggest, first, that it is useless for the N. S. A. to issue charters to state organizations or minor societies unless such charters in themselves possess power sufficient to inspire each member to work faithfully for the success of organized effort and incidentally for the cause of Spiritualism as an educational movement.

State organizations are essential, just as local and district meetings and conventions are useful to create public sentiment in favor of Spiritualism or any other public movement.

These public gatherings stimulate old and new workers to continue their efforts to enlighten the public on questions pertaining to mental and spiritual development.

It might be well to borrow from the political conventions and clubs a little zeal and business enterprise.

Possibly we could lend them a little of our gush and scientific (?) dissertations, to our advantage at least. A trifle more common business sense might be employed with good effect at our camp-meetings and annual conventions.

A uniform law governing the working forces of all societies, each body recognizing the head of the organization, just as any fraternal order is governed, is desirable.

We may never agree upon theological and theosophical questions, and will always chase each other around a cambric needle, or get our atoms and molecules badly mixed, but there is no sensible reason why we cannot exercise business sense in the conduct of our organizations.

I cannot see the wisdom of having voting members outside of delegates from chartered societies.

Either do away with state and chartered societies altogether and follow the political parties in their methods, or dispense with individual voting membership.

If there is a state organization it should control the missionary work and its subordinate societies.

There is no necessity of elaborate reports from the N. S. A. president and secretary outside of that which should be published at least three weeks prior to the annual convention.

It goes without saying that Spiritualists are supposed to subscribe for at least one Spiritualist paper, wherein the intelligent Spiritualist may read all desirable news and proceedings of all organizations.

When the editor of a Spiritualist paper refuses to publish any expose, or criminal doings of a public worker, after due investigation, it would seem to be lending aid to the criminal inclinations of viciously determined persons.

I cannot see why the ordinary rules of honestly conducted business should not govern a Spiritualist and his methods just as much as a merchant, banker or manufacturer.

If the investigation and practice of spirit manifestations do not result in the uplifting, enlightening, and purifying of all concerned, then the whole combination should be abandoned and demolished.

I want no ism or movement that covers up devilry and vicious conduct.

All methods of conducting meetings and circles that savor of vaudeville, circus, and vulgar shows, must be tabooed. GEO. F. PERKINS.

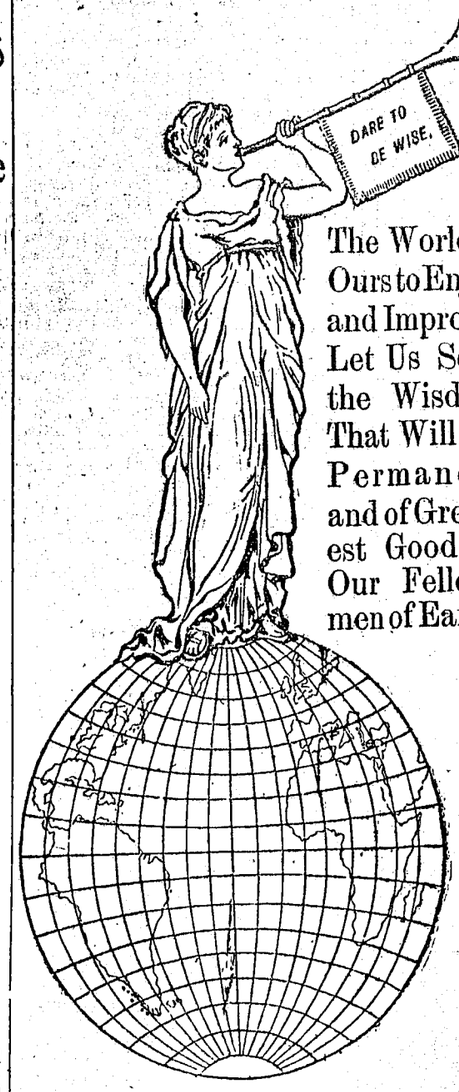
TENNESSEE IN THE OPEN COURT.

If the Church Exposed All Its Fraud, What a Time There Would Be in Gilead.

To the Editor:—Your circular letter with which you have recently honored me and others speaks of "loyal Spiritualists." Loyalty to what? Evidently loyalty to certain opinions. How shall it be determined what those opinions are? By consulting the history of Spiritualism—its press, its platform utterances and its books. Who shall eliminate from all this that which is the expression of the individual and classes, and fix on a definite statement of the sentiments held by all Spiritualists? Evidently the N. S. A., as representative or an exponent. It is therefore plain that the business of the N. S. A. at any meeting is not to give expression to the opinions of its individual members, but to formulate those things only in which all Spiritualists agree.

In this the N. S. A. should go very slow; being always sure they are right before going ahead. This declaration of the principles of Spiritualism could not therefore be a very extended affair, since only a few general principles are held by all Spiritualists in common. And to avoid unfavorable criticism after the declaration, perhaps necessitating a "repeal," no amendment to the existing document should be made until after a year's discussion in the Spiritualistic press, somewhat after the manner of the occasional circular letters sent out by the editor of The Progressive Thinker. Each meeting of the association confining itself to acting on the suggestions made by the preceding meeting and to propounding queries for that which is to follow. Thus would we have an authoritative statement from Spiritualists as to what up-to-date Spiritualism is.



Doubtless the central idea in Spiritualism is spirit return, or intercommunication between spirits out of the flesh, and those yet in it, and the consequent demonstration of the future life. The church claims that such intercommunications once occurred; Spiritualists, that it takes place now as well as in the days of the scriptural writers. Whenever the N. S. A. passes from that idea to others which it supposes are implied in it, it perhaps runs amuck somebody or announces a belief not held by some of those who believe in present spiritual intercourse between the two worlds.

We would say, expose trickery and fraud on all occasions. It is a "religious" duty; moreover it is good policy. If it is not done, Spiritualism will be charged up with it; if done it will be unloaded on the criminal parties. It is a very suspicious circumstance when a political party finds no corruption in its own ranks to expose. If the church exposed all its "frauds," what a time there would be in Gilead; yet the world would be the better of it. But be first sure of the fraud. Fraud in a medium is rather a difficult matter to decide and is often only a suspicion, an opinion at best. When a man tells an improbable story he is often told that a "little proof would come in mighty handy." If the "exposer" of mediumistic frauds always gave the circumstances on which his opinion is based, we ourselves could sit in judgment on the question. But there can be no doubt that it is commendable for a party, or a religion, to expose actual frauds, and that it is a very suspicious circumstance when they find none to expose. F. J. RIPLEY.

SIFT THE SPIRITUALISTS.

Law and Order, the Consensus of All.

Spiritualists are invited to consider and solve the following questions:

Q. 1. What changes in its organic law will make the N. S. A. more efficient?

A. Sift the Spiritualists and classify them according to their tenets; this will produce harmony if not growth and progress. But such conditions and organizations will not remain long in silence; for nature abhors sameness.

All nature is differentiated and graded from the lowest to the highest. She (nature) has classified matter, force and mind into the mineral, vegetable and animal kingdoms, and each class manifests many varieties. No priest can blot out the innate out-birth of nature. Heaven does not consist of homogeneous souls all looking, acting and thinking alike, but of Law and Order. The delegates sent to the N. S. A. are a heterogeneous set; hence let the Bible, Christ and Christian Spiritualists form a socity of their own, other kinds of Spiritualists can do the same, and so establish peace, law and order.

Q. 2. (a) Are state associations essential?

A. Yes, reciprocity should exist between all spiritual associations financially, socially and intellectually; but this should be left as a matter of choice —not of force—don't sail out beyond your ability to command means is essential.

(b) Should they not be organized on the same plan?

A. Every spiritual plan should be based on human and spiritual facts communicated to us by our loved ones gone before—no faith, no belief formulated into a creed should be tolerated; tell us what you know, the balance you can investigate at home or at some seance; you will find no Infinite Intelligence beyond Mother Nature and Father Space. Let self-evident truth be the bed-rock of your organizations, then there will be nothing left to wrangle over. However environment, development and the hereditary tangle of atoms composing each individual will produce a dense fog. A poor officer at the head will ruin any society.

Q. 3. (a) Should there be individual members of state associations?

A. No association can exist independent of individual members and (b) should have the privilege as delegates of voting on all questions.

Home circle delegates, in convention, should appoint state officers, and the officers of the N. S. A. should be chosen from the state delegates in convention. All officers are agents or servants of their constituents. Every association should retain one or more genuine mediums whose production should be published in spiritual papers, provided it is above baby talk or the soft sodder of fakes. Home circles should be the auxiliary members of state associations.

Q. 4. Should not the responsibility for all missionary work in its own territory rest upon each state association?

A. Yes, certainly. Missionary work is an old fad, and when sent abroad they are apt to be killed; besides it cost $2,000 or more to make one convert. Who should pay this expense? The people have been gulled by Christian missionaries until they have become disgusted, and it is one cause of stinginess among Spiritualists. Home circles, children's lyceums, homes for old mediums and disabled Spiritualists will do more good than all the run-round missionaries this side of Tophet. Drop the past, adopt the present and Home Circles, they eliminate fraud.

Q. 5. Is one state entitled to more than one representative on the board of trustees of the N. S. A. which has auxiliaries in nearly every state of the Union?

A. The N. S. A. auxiliaries should be abandoned and state associations substituted instead to supply delegates and revenue for the N. S. A. If all the states are organized one delegate is enough on the board. If few states are so organized the number will depend on the funds supplied by each association, this will stimulate pride, make ashamed of stinginess, which should stop the National Spiritualist Association from begging.

Q. 6. Would not much time be saved for practical work at the annual convention if the reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and missionaries were printed in the spiritual press prior to the October meeting?

A. Of course they should be so printed and read by each delegate, time is saved, and he is better prepared to know and do his duty—any man not taking a Spiritualist paper should not serve as a delegate. Act on business principles and stick to it—kick the devil into the moon and let him heat it up to fertility!

Q. 7. Should the publishers of spiritual papers refuse to print any or all well-authenticated exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism?

A. No. Every such paper should expose every fraud and fake; they are a scab and a menace to Spiritualism and to all genuine mediums. The editor who refuses to expose all well known fakes is not a true Spiritualist at heart; he may claim that all trickery will die out if you let it alone. It will not die out so long as curiosity and credulous Spiritualists attend such sham seances. The retort of the fake is that the devil has done a greater work and has got more followers than the Christian God. So we are doing a greater work than you Spiritualists who would rot were it not for us. Adam was made to cultivate the ground and we Spiritualists will make you hoe corn yet. It will be useless for you fakes to shave, to change your name and clothing as you pass from town to town or from city to city, for I am going to take a photograph of you as often as you change and give it to genuine mediums in every town and city who shall act as detectives and report every case to the spiritual papers which will cause every one to watch for trickery. If fakirs are not patronized how can they live? Spiritualists consider this all important question and learn wisdom.

FULL EXPRESSION.

A National Spiritualist Association Missionary's Opinion.

I believe State Associations are necessary to the success of organized Spiritualism, and that they should be thoroughly organized. That efficient officers should be elected to look after each department of the work, each officer having authority in his department, subject to the supervision of the State Board.

All State Associations should be organized on a uniform plan, so that each local society would have the same responsibility, pay the same per capita dues, etc., and be entitled to the same consideration and assistance. Each State Association should pay the same per capita dues to the National Association, and all business between National, State and Local societies should be done in uniform manner and in equity.

As to State Associations granting "Individual Memberships," I think it advisable for them to do so as long as we have so few societies. There are many Spiritualists living in isolated places where there are no societies for them to join.

The time has come when Spiritualists should stand up and be counted, and if they are members of a State Association we know where to find them. Those that are for us are not against us, and all such should gladly indentify themselves with us so the world would know who we are and how many we number. One holding an individual membership should not be given full voting power, equal to a delegate who may represent thirty or fifty members of a local society, as this would not be an equal representation.

As to the responsibility for all missionary work in its own territory resting upon each State Association, I will says I think each State Association should have charge of its own missionary work and should put great effort into it, doing all in its power to systematize it, for it requires persistent and systematic work to insure success. I also think the several State Associations through their delegates at the N. S. A. conventions should agree upon methods of work to be carried on by the N. S. A. in conjunction with the State Associations, and that when a State Association fails to do its missionary work properly the N. S. A. should have the power under certain rules and regulations to carry on the work as it sees fit, or thinks best, the N. S. A. to supervise and oversee the work of all the States and do the missionary work of the N. S. A. in all of the States as per arrangements made by the delegates of the States and of local societies in the N. S. A. conventions. The State Associations and local societies will have their say in these matters through their delegates to the N. S. A.

When a State Association has been granted exclusive jurisdiction and then does very little, or no work, I think the N. S. A. should have the power to annul the charter, if it thought best to do so, and then make provisions to carry on the work itself, never letting it stop.

What is needed is work, systematic work, energetic, unceasing, persistent, missionary work.

Let the N. S. A. which is the congress of the State and Local Associations, guide the work of the Nation. Let the State Associations conduct the work of the States, and the Local Associations conduct their own affairs, sending delegates to the State Associations, these delegates electing out of their number delegates who will constitute the National conventions and who make laws, rules, etc., to regulate and help the work throughout the land.

The N. S. A. is not something outside of the State and Local Societies. It belongs to them. It is composed of delegates from these societies, and associations and consequently belongs to them. Some people talk as though the N. S. A. was something outside of and foreign to the State and Local Societies. Some people ask what good can the N. S. A. do the State Associations? Members of local societies sometimes ask, what good can the State Associations do the Local Associations? And individual Spiritualists too often say, what good can the Local Society do me? This should be reversed. The question with the true Spiritualist should ever be, what can I do for the Local Society, for the State Association, the National Association, and the good cause of Spiritualism in general?

Spiritualism and organization have done and are doing so much for all mankind, that all who have felt its blessings should feel delighted with the opportunity to work unitedly with others to aid the good cause. In doing so, each one will aid himself or herself.

Let individual Spiritualists organize themselves into local societies, local societies into State Associations, and State Associations elect delegates to National Conventions to do the business of the Spiritualists of the Nation.

Local societies in states not yet organized should have representation in the National Conventions until State Associations are organized, and State Associations should be organized wherever twenty-five good local societies are established in a State. Twenty-five societies are none too many to start with. With united and harmonious effort success is assured. I think different localities should be represented on the N. S. A. Board, so far as is practical.

I believe it would be well to have the annual reports of the president, secretary, treasurer, and missionaries printed in the Spiritualist press prior to the October meeting.

To the question, "Should the publishers of the Spiritualist papers refuse to print any or all exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism, when satisfied of their informant's reliability?" I would think the publishers of the papers should do about as they saw fit; but if your question means what would I do if I was publishing a paper I will answer: I don't taink I would publish a reported expose unless I had the positive proof that it was a genuine expose. Good honest people are sometimes mistaken. Years ago I sat in a seance in which I was certain there was fraud practiced. I could hardly refrain from denouncing the medium as a vile fraud. I persuaded myself to go again so as to make assurance doubly sure. I went again and received one of the very best proofs of the genuineness of the physical phenomena I ever had; and this experience proved to me that what I saw the night before was genuine Spiritual phenomena. The fakes should be exposed, but not to wrong an honest medium, for they have enough to endure without making their work still harder for them.

A CLEAN SPIRITUALISM.

It Is Desirable From Every Point of View.

To the Editor:—The list of questions you offer for solution are, doubtless, all of them important and their proper consideration desirable, but it seems to me the seventh in the list is the all-important one and its proper solution reduced to practice, would go far toward the solving of the preceding six. Were it true that Spiritualism is only for the amusement of the idle and thoughtless, or is a cold-blooded scientific proof that death does not end all, then the attitude of the press toward frauds would not be worth considering. But if its mission was intended by its spirit projectors to be for the uplifting and purifying of the dwellers on the earth plane, then every clean-minded Spiritualist should demand that the mortal bearers of so vital a message to mortals should be clean vessels.

The thought is abhorrent that a lying cheat should for a moment be allowed to pose as the bearer of the divine message of light and life to hungry souls. A tree is known by its fruits. We do not go to a sewer for drinking water.

The fountain may be pure and clear as crystal, yet its passage through a filthy channel renders it offensive and to be avoided as a breeder of pestilence. So Spiritualism, the spirit world's best gift to men, has been so dishonored in the house of its false, though loudly professing friends, that multitudes of the brainiest and best men and women of the land avoid it as a pestilential thing. An evil host on both sides of the immortal line seem to have compassed it about for its overthrow and destruction. The fakir who would counterfeit any manifestation of this sacred gift and attempt to pass it off on the public as genuine, deserves a term in some penal institution in stead of receiving a public endorsement as a light-bearer.

Many honest church people have been aroused from their spiritual slumbers to the point of "seeing men as trees walking." In other words, they have lost faith in the truth of their creeds, and the honesty of their ministers. Those people are looking with hope to Spiritualism, but the fraud element bars them out. They have paid roundly to fake exponents of false theories of human life and its responsibilities, and refuse to again affiliate with an ism that indorses—by silence at least of press and rostrum— the fraud element that is riding it like a nightmare to its death. It is patent to all lovers of common decency that if this evil graft, that pollutes by its foul touch and blasts by its poisonous breath this beauteous, haeven-sent flower of hope for humanity, is not cut out root and branch, the day is not distant when Spiritualism's opportunity will have passed, and it may be written on its monument as it should be truthfully written on the tombstones of the churches: "Died of an over-gorge of false ambition, vanity and greed."

This scribe owes an infinite debt of gratitude to Spiritualism and its spirit founders, and doubtless there is a great host of arisen and unarisen spirits who would say, at any cost cast out the frauds; let only those of clean hands and hearts bear its all-inspiring messages to the hungry, thirsty multitudes who are strangers to the true bread and healing waters of life. Yours for clean Spiritualism. J. RIGDON.

STAND FOR TRUTH.

Constant Change Everywhere Is the Law of Progression.

Constant change is the law of progression, and while the N. S. A. was organized with the highest and holiest of purposes, the betterment and final happiness of the human race, still, as conditions change the demands upon it become different and therefore its law of action must be altered. Uniformity has not been observed, therefore, in some states we have both local and state associations chartered by the N. S. A., which is entirely wrong. It seems to us that State Associations are necessary to the best and most thorough progressive work. And then it follows in the same line that the local society is equally necessary but should reach the National only through the State. All should have the same basis of representation, thus assuring equal rights to all.

The matter of individual membership in State Associations is a somewhat bothersome question, but we believe that when the person is not represented through a local society, then he should have the right to vote in the State convention; especially should he if his locality has no regularly organized society; when it has, then they should come in that way and on the same plan. As soon as a State is organized, all the local societies should become a part of it. In unorganied states, where local societies are chartered, it should be with this understanding. When matters are so arranged, we will have equal representation or "equal suffrage," if you please in the N. S. A., and not until then.

The purpose of the N. S. A. missionary should be to carry the work into unorganized territory and also to nourish weak State Associations, giving them many times the very help they need to make them strong and capable of standing alone.

And again, the State Association should hold the same relation to local societies, assisting their weak localities and organizing new fields, and when the State is strong and can stand alone, then let it do so, and even the same with the local organization when it is strong and can help itself, and even reach out and help its neighbors, then it does not need to be fed especially by the parent, but can in turn through this parent association help to spread the light to those who are less favored.

The officiary of the N. S. A. should be chosen from different parts of the nation, so that all, east and west, north and south, might have a voice on this board of managers. If the officers are from the same locality, then it becomes a local affair and not a national. How can a board tell what is best for the great whole unless they are fair representatives of the various sections that compose that whole? When they are, and are imbued with the brotherly love that rises above self and says, "Whatever is best for the whole race, that is best for me," then we will stand for truth wherever it leads, and by publicly denouncing fraud and trickery and opposing those who would throw a cloak over the tricksters, we will finally purify our ranks and rid ourselves of fungus growth. I would also suggest that when tricksters are caught beyond a doubt, they be published. If the papers refuse to publish them and warn the people that a counterfeit is going about, then let officers and others write to each other the facts and spread the alarm in that way. Then on the other hand let us tell to the world the story of those who give the messages simply as they are given to them by our dear ones. When you get phenomena, either mental as physical, that is true and helpful let others know of it, don't be miserly of these blessings.

We are hopeful, we believe the N. S. A. is doing a good work and that it will continue so doing, changing from time to time as conditions demand.

Yours for more light and a broader conception of truth!

IS IT DESIRABLE

For the Great Mass of Spiritualists to Organize?

If it is dosirable for Spiritualists to organize, it is certainly also advisable that the organization shall reach the highest possible point of power and efficiency, so that Spiritualism in its organic expression may become a recognied power for righteousness in this world. By presenting to "our friends, the enemy," a thoroughly compact and effective organization we shall place ourselves and also the cause of co-operative endeavor in the most favorable position.

To over-organize, however, would be a mistake. To organize State associations where the material does not exist out of which effective societies can be formed with small effort would doubtless be a waste of energy, which could be better used in strengthening, perfecting, and enlarging the societies already in existence. Of course, a state association must depend for its life upon the local societies; where these are few and feeble it would be folly to form such an association, unless the circumstances were very peculiar, for it could live only at a "poor, dying rate." Organic strength is not to be found in the multiplication of such weaklings.

It seems to me one of the gravest problems in this organic movement at the present time is to concentrate power in the hands of a wise, spiritually-minded, practical board of control, with sufficient capacity to select the most fitting subordinates throughout the country to carry on an active, aggressive educational campaign in favor of organization and general missionary work, in such a way that the greatest and most lasting good may be accomplished with the least amount of friction, and with the expenditure of as little energy as possible by the directing power. Of course, while human nature remains dwarfed by the false teachings of the past, selfishness will creep in, but it should be eliminated as far as possible.

Keeping in mind the thought of effective organization, we should say that if the responsibility for missionary effort were to rest upon the state or local associations it should be a delegated and limited responsibility. Otherwise there is likely to be a conflict that will soon paralyze the organic motor nerves.

We think the time of the National Association should not be spent in listening to the reading of formal official reports if they can be brought to its attention in printed form before or at the date of the convention. There should certainly be time for calm and full discussion of all matters of importance, whether presented in the reports of the officers or brought before the convention by the individual delegates.

As to whether publishers of Spiritualist papers should print "any or all exposures done in the name of Spiritualism," I am inclined to reply in the affirmative, with this proviso. That such exposures be not sought after nor the fraud-hunting spirit encouraged. Surely there is no good reason why a Spiritualistic trickster should be permitted to travel from one end of the country to the other fooling the unwary and overcredulous Spiritualists, misleading and destroying the hopes of honest investigators and intensifying the prejudice of multitudes against Spiritualism without being unmasked by the Spiritualist papers. Let the light of publicity be thrown upon the nefarious work of such scoundrels. Spiritualists and the public could then be put on their guard against counterfeit manifestations. If Spiritualists will not do this work through their own papers, nor suffer it to be done, those who believe in genuine phenomena or none at all will be forced to aid the secular press in doing it, or they might as well cast in their lots with those who are opposed to all psychic phenomena. For honest mediums I have the most profound respect; for the counterfeiters, not a scintilla. Let them be impaled on the editor's keenest-pointed pen and held up to public execration.

SOME SUGGESTIONS

From a Leading Thinker in Missouri.

In answering Brother Francis' queries I am naturally influenced by a consideration of our own church machinery and organization. Our national convention assembles at Omaha in October, and is in many respects a model of energetic and systematic co-operation. I would say:

1. By all means encourage state associations. They might be upon similar though not necessarily uniform plans. Let each state association have the direction of missionary work within its own borders. A missionary of the N. S. A. should be free to go anywhere the board saw an opening for him.

2. As to memberships. Let each state, as a state, have one member and one only in the N. S. A. But in the state—(a) Let each society of five or more members have one delegate, or member, in the state association. (b) Let anyone become an annual member by paying $2.50 per year, or (c) a life member upon payment of $50 in five installments. (d) Let every editor and publisher of a strictly Spiritualist paper or magazine, having a bona fide circulation of 2,000 or more copies, be a member both of the N. S. A. and of his state association.

I would allow individuals also to become annual or life members upon payment of $5 for annual, or $100 for life membership. And any society should be allowed to have one or more annual or life members upon payment of the same sums respectively. This is to apply to membership in the N. S. A. And I would give all delegates or members full voting power.

3. I would not publish reports of president, treasurer, etc., until after convention.

4. Mercilessly expose every fraud. If Spiritualist papers condone or conceal fraud then secular and religious journals will have room to pronounce the whole thing a fraud.

From the bottom of my heart I wish you well. ELD. H. W. B. MYRICK.

NOBILITY.

Its Promotion Is Enhanced by the Open Court.

An open court promotes nobility. "The Open Court" circular evidently would assist healthy growth.

About changes in the N. S. A. organic law, I would not disturb the "Infinite Intelligence." The law as laid down leaves it undefined as to whether the supreme intelligence referred to is natural or unnatural. I think it was wise to so leave it. Some Spiritualists want it one way and some the other. As it now stands it accommodates all. For myself I assume it to mean the natural, and as such I think it beautifully true and truly beautiful. The universal intelligence of universal nature is infinite, as compared with man's finite. I think myself a loyal Spiritualist, and now I can still enjoy a charming theology and a refreshing religion. My Spiritualism is not a religion, but it has a religion. My understanding of Spiritualism is that it is an extended intercourse between man and man; that it is no more religious, of itself, than when one mortal talks with another mortal. For Spiritualism, to have no theology nor no religion, of any kind, would be to mantle sociability with barrenness. I will let others, better posted, illumine the many other parts of the N. S. A. "organic law."

Question No. 2. I am not yet fortunate enough to see a necessity for State Associations to be organized on a uniform plan. The climatic difference between the north and south, the east and west, and the Pacific slope, is sufficient of itself for each to wish a little of its own coloring. Uncle Sam is not so arbitrary over the individual states as to require their political constitutions to be on a uniform plan. He makes a very few reserves, and leaves each state the utmost freedom in everything else.

Question No. 4. Where State Associations show ability and disposition to do and manage the missionary work of their own territories I would certainly encourage them to have all of that honor. Where the ambition is lacking there should be no bars up against the admission of outsiders. This system would be open to the same missionaries working under different State auspices, wherever desirable.

Question No. 6. I would favor a resolution being passed by the N. S. A. that the reports of the president, secretary, treasurer, and missionaries should be furnished all of the Spiritualist papers at least one month before the annual convention.

Question No. 7. In the early days of Modern Spiritualism I was opposed to printing exposures. My reason was that the Spiritualists themselves were yet incompetent judges of the manifold medial laws. I find this incompetency not yet wholly removed. There is, however, great advance. I think the the knowledge of mediumship now sufficiently advanced to warrant printing every case where a sufficient number of good Spiritualists sign the condemnation papers. There may be other ways of being "satisfied of the informant's reliability." The "fraud" is in every instance a medium, and a good medium. He needs but the right education and understanding to make a valued instrument. Better two guilty escape, than one innocent suffer. I see the camp meetings are coming to test mediums before endorsing them. This is taking a wise step. "The honest like to be watched, the dishonest ought to be."

Madison, Wis. E. W. BALDWIN.

MENTAL FREEDOM URGED.

An Element of Discord and Weakness.

While not a member of the N. S. A. I recognize that it may be made a very useful instrument for good. But it can not answer this purpose by the promulgation of a creedal declaration of principles or "faith" which embodies things that are in no proper sense a part of Spiritualism. To set forth such mooted questions, as an exposition of Spiritualism, is to invite antagonism, and bring discord and weakness.

My neighbor has no right to force his views upon me and set them forth as my belief. If he has such right, I have an equal right to do the same by him. Harmony—with a vengeance!

There are points upon which all Spiritualists are united. Just these, and none other, should be embodied in any declaration purporting to represent Spiritualism. All other points should be left to each individual Spiritualist to hold such views as to him seems accordant with truth. To do otherwise, is to infringe upon his mental freedom and moral rights; and any organized body that does this, places itself in a false position to Spiritualism.

In justice to all, there should be no statement which even one real believer in the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism can not accept. Let us not put one Spiritualist in the attitude of believing something he does not believe—an attitude of enforced hypocrisy—or else compel him to stay outside our fold to maintain his mental freedom and moral integrity.

I think it would be a wise plan to publish the 'Reports" a few weeks in advance of the meeting; it would give time for full consideration and preparation on the part of delegates. And, let the reports be boiled down, so that the wayfaring man, however busy, may find ample time to read them. Have pity on poor, tired, overworked humanity.

The present system concerning delegates is evidently defective and works injustice in some cases. The Association can and should modify and amend therein.

In some respects it would seem that State Associations are more essential than a National. It is not needful that they be organized on a strictly literal uniform plan, but like the Constitutions of the States of our Union, there should be the fibre of general harmony running through the local divergences.

The matter of publishing exposures of fraud is in some respects a delicate one. Good mediums are sometimes cruelly wronged by such accusations, and injustice and injury of this kind should be carefully and conscientiously avoided. At the same time when all doubt of fraud is removed, it is justice both to the honest and true medium as HOLLIS—THIRTY-SEVEN well as to the trickster, that the trickster shall be publicly pilloried and branded for what he is. Such a course will be a protection to the genuine medium, through the punishment of the deceiver. It is proper, before publishing such cases, to be well assured of the facts, so that, as far as may be possible, only the guilty shall suffer. Spiritualists should be the ones to detect and expose fraud, rather than outsiders and enemies. JAS. C. UNDERHILL.

PERTINENT ANSWERS.

To a Series of Pertinent and Timely Questions.

Your circular letter has just reached me (Sept. 17) and caught me also without my type-writer as I intended to return to Tacoma in a few days. Your questions are very pertinent, and as there is so little time for work during the convention should be discussed in advance.

"1. What changes in its organic law, will make the N. S. A. more efficient?"

I have not the constitution with me where I am writing (Edmonds, Wash.), and can make no recommendations.

"2(a). Are State Associations Essential?"

I most certainly think they are. At least if we did not have State Associations we should have District Associations, subordinate to the N. S. A. While the N. S. A. may have a general superintendence of the work, the State being more in immediate contact with our membership should apply itself more to the details.

"2(b). If so, should they not be organized on a uniform plan?"

They certainly should not conflict with each other. There may be difference in methods necessitated by local peculiarities, which may easily be tolerated.

"3(a). Should there be individual members of State Associations?"

Here is a puzzling question; as will be seen in the consideration of the following question:

3(b). If so, should they have full voting privileges?"

1. It is very difficult to organize a State Association without personal membership, as there are few and in most States no local societies.

2. If we permit personal membership, a clique may get control of a society, by means of personal membership (which is really a purchased membership) and may carry any point they wish, thus thwarting even the purposes of the Association; may elect whom they please, without reference to fitness or ability, and in fact may result in the same kind of corruption which we discover in politics and people elected to office by a political machine.

"4. Should not the responsibility for all missionary work in its own territory, rest upon each State Association?"

Each State Association should have the direction of affairs within its limits. But if this is done there should be an apportionment from the National missionary fund for State work, as in most Western States Spiritualists have more brains than money.

Is any state entitled to more than one representative on the Board of Trustees of the N. S. A., which has auxiliaries in nearly every State in the Union?"

There should be no auxiliaries except through State Associations, and the Trustees should be selected in proportion to the numbers interested in their respectful localities.

Replying to No. 6, without quoting it, it is my opinion that those reports should be published several weeks previous to the annual convention. With those reports before us any of us would be able to advise our delegates by correspondence or the whole convention through the press.

The question No. 7, is a very important one. It is my opinion that every Jannes and Jambres in Spiritualism should be exposed publicly and repeatedly through our press; but I am not the one who shall try to ferret out these frauds. I had a little experience in that line once, which taught me that we had Spiritualists in the country who preferred to have Spiritualism advanced by means of fraud, in the absence of genuine mediumship, than to have it not advanced at all. I am honestly a Spiritualist, and I want to convince people by genuine phenomena or none. I am sure that a majority of our materilization mediums supplement with fraud, and a few of them have no genuine manifestations whatever, insomuch that I fear that this phase of mediumship has never did the cause enough good to compensate for the damage it has done. These are hard words and I should not have uttered them but for the question. We live in a day of adulterations. Every article of household use is more or less adulterated; our physicians very seldom do us any good and often a great deal of harm, our religion is adulterated mythraism. Since mediumship became a purchasable commodity, it has also partaken of the spirit of the age.

But can we eliminate fraud by exposure? Scarcely. For fraudulent mediums may have several aliases, and the credulous may be duped again and again almost in the same town. The only remedy as it appears to me is organization, so that when a medium comes into a place he may be required to produce his or her papers showing that he or she has been endorsed by some State organization or Spiritualists. Of course our State Boards should be composed of careful and competent men and women who would never issue ordination or other papers till after the most careful and patient investigation of their mediumship. Indeed, I would make it very difficult to obtain such papers, and I should also reserve the right in State Boards to revoke these certificates, and publish such revocations whenever they had sufficient reasons for doing so.

Speaking of the differentations of faith or belief among Spiritualists, I am unable to see why we should draw any lines. Nearly all beliefs are mere speculations, or rather hypothesis. Why should I object to associating with a man on account of his acceptance of a God or no God, or of the existence or non-existence of the man Jesus, or of the Bible as an evidence that there was once a class of people who believed as I do concerning intercourse with the world of spirits, etc. Let us unite upon what we know, and discuss these differences as to matters of speculation.

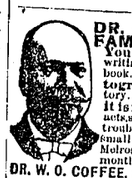
DEAFNESS CURED

By No Method Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninty-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention, is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly due to catarrh. We are receiving hundreds of letters like the following:



Deafness Cured.

Sp'gfield, Mass., Mar. 30,'02.

Gentlemen:—Received the Actina all right, and would say it has done wonders for me. I have been deaf about five years so that I could not hear the ticking of a clock, neither could I engage in conversation, as it was very difficult to make me understand even with a speaking tube. After treating with several doctors and receiving no help or encouragement from them, I expected never to hear again and tried to make the best of it. A friend called my attention to Actina, saying that it had cured her. Not having much faith in it I did not use it according to directions at first, but after having it about 6 months noticed an improvement, and in five or six weeks after was able to hear public speaking and converse with anyone without any trouble. Quite a number of the afflicted called on me and are greatly encouraged by my experience. —F. W. HARWOOD, 188 Walnut St.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

TRUTH, AND HER CRUCIFIED.

The Motto of the New Spiritual Dispensation.

To the Editor:—In reply to your questions submitted for critical consideration, I beg to offer the following expressions:

I first group questions one and two, making an affirmative of the second, that "state associations are essential," and as far as possible, "organized on a uniform plan," for the existence of a National organization. Immediately after the initial effort at organization as a national movement I claimed and still more firmly contend that the province and powers of the N. S. A., to form a truly national organization, were purely tentative, and its legitimate, efficient survival must await organized state representation which the initial movement might inspire.

Organized government is nil whether it be of sociologic, civic, scientific, educational or religious character, without active, elementary contributory parts. This is a truism and simply needs to be stated.

Organization by resolution on paper is but organization on probation. Now comes the question, "what changes in its organic law will make the N. S. A. more efficient?"

When a member of the New York State Spiritualist Association board I formulated plans for submission to the N. S. A. convention, as a state expression, suggesting changes in the organic law of the N. S. A. I ceased the quest out of respect to the sensitiveness of some nurses of the national infant, and also concluded that under the controlling regime it would be of little use to persist.

Some of those suggestions were: 1st, That where state organizations existed or thereafter formed the chartering of state societies should be exclusively by and under the jurisdiction of the respective state associations, and the transfer or cancellation of all charters previously granted by the N. S. A. in those states, and through state provisions find expression in the National body.

Second. That the state delegate representation in the N. S. A. convention be composed of a majority of each state board, first including its officers and also a determinate number of delegates elected at large, as the state organization might provide.

Third. That no professional public working medium be eligible as an executive member of either state or National boards.

Fourth. That all missionary work be under the control of each state association within its territory.

These are changes I would now present in reply to your first question.

Recognizing as legitimate the many differentiations mentioned in the circular, and having been convinced that Spiritualism must of necessity be, in a sense, denominational; time and place should determine the character of missionary work. A live, active, discerning state board should best know the needs of its districts.

In the matter of professional mediums doing public work being ineligible to membership in executive boards, it is far from my desire or purpose to deprecate in the least, the sincerity, capabilities and value of mediumship; in fact true mediumship is a necessity in spiritual endeavor.

When the subject is forced to the front as a managerial proposition, there is sufficient data of experience of the past twenty years to affirm the wisdom of such a provision in all organized Spiritualist bodies. It is pleasing to note the good results coming from a partial observance of this suggested provision of late years, in the N. S. A. Possibly surprisingly good results are awaiting its strict observance all along the line of organized effort.

In the matter of changes in delegate representation and exclusive state jurisdiction within its territory, I refer to New York and other states where the more prosperous societies were first chartered with the N. S. A., and still pressed for special allegiance to that body, to the decided weakening of state association efforts. The divided allegiance has effected and can effect little other than injury to the cause. It is palpably illogical and made more so when a class of persons persist in autocratic and disfranchising methods of procedure when autonomy and evolutionary processes are in great part the bases of the spiritual hypothesis.

The pleas that the N. S. A. can not undo its past action in the issuing of charters, or "that I would not miss attending the annual national feast, and personal gratification, for anything," are puerile in the extreme, when a great and glorious cause is begging for nurture at the hands of the masses.

It should be up to the states what the N. S. A. shall be and do.

The foregoing assumes that which must be plain to every thoughtful mind, viz., the larger exists by virtue of its parts.

I fail to see any adequate results coming from the N. S. A. as a distinct, lone body.

True, in a sense the name gives a superficial tone and character to the cause, but experience has proven that where contentions have arisen, battles to be fought, legislation or other projects to be opposed, the N. S. A. had no standing as compared with an able state representation.

What the N. S. A. failed to do in protecting its mediums within the narrow limits of its headquarters, the N. Y. S. S. A. did for its mediums within the broad territory of the state with its seven million people. One who is disposed to resent stricture in this article will first please consult past records.

Mr. Editor, there already has been too much printer's ink, gray brain matter and donations to railroad corporations, wasted in the attempt to build, bolster and give life to a national organization with insufficient and improperly delegated powers. The legitimate fruitage ever must be cliques, unworthy strifes with a view to undue personal accentuation.

Let there be developed a legitimate national body with supervisory powers and legislative functions made so by convocated consensed opinion of properly organized and authorized delegations.

Now, briefly as to question seven. It is better that the vermin of a household be exterminated by the mistress thereof, and she ought to prefer no publicity. There may be mitigating circumstances that publicity would work injustice both to the mistress and the vermin.

O! the almost criminal duplicity of many Spiritualists who appreciate only phenomena. Contrivances, machines, etc., adapted to the gathering of odic forces of individuals are too often hailed as the means of expression for those in the spirit.

Such devices for making a dishonest living are numerous at all times throughout the country. Like the mistress of the house with vermin, the real breeders of trickery object to publicity. It disturbs the enjoyment of their interpretation of pure Spiritualism.

The matter of exposure and publicity should rest with authorized committees of state associations to sustain, and if need be, defend in court true, honest mediums and institute criminal proceedings against pretenders or dishonest ones.

Call this if you please a "censorship" committee of which a true, honest medium should have no fear. Let the Spiritualist press look to the committee of a state for announcement of wrongdoing, in this respect keeping in mind that it is "our friend the enemy" that is gnawing at the vitals of the cause.

A re-reading of the "Open Court" circular brings many thoughts to mind, but space will not permit further expression, only, to say, let us have organized effort in the cause inclusive from small associate societies to the N. S. A., and in view of the differentiations, each of which is anchored to the general spiritual hypothesis, let each seek one focal point of expression which in the case under consideration should be the N. S. A.

For centuries the motto of the Christian church has been "Christ and Him Crucified." I take the privilege of paraphrasing and feminizing that motto into one that comprises all Christs, all Saviors, all life and cosmic law and which may well be the motto of the new spiritual dispensation; the new religion; the new philosophy for apprehension and worship—"Truth and Her Crucified."

AN ASSUMPTION.

That the N. S. A. Has Done a Grand Work for Spiritualism.

In regard to the differences of opinion existing among Spiritualists concerning God, Christ, the Bible, church, and many other things we wish to say this: First, we think the National Association, in view of the fact of the conglomeration of ideas expressed by the many, has done and is doing a grand work, as at least the outsiders realize that we have an organization that has placed Spiritualism in a position to command the respect of all concerned. Personally, we believe in accepting truth from all sources. The Bible being a history, it contains many beautiful gems of thought, and certainly if it proves anything it should convince all honest-minded people, that spirit return and spirit communion have occurred in the past as at the present time. If believing in a Supreme Intelligence is a creed, then by all means let us have a creed, and let each one of us who claim to be spiritual-minded worship God in spirit and in truth. Some of the most potent forces in nature are unseen, and yet we know they exist. So with love and other things we cannot define, and as regards Christ or the Nazarene, if he had the gifts of discerning spirits, prophecy, healing the sick, and other gifts too numerous to mention, why should we discard him and declare we do not believe he ever existed? Certainly he had the divine spark within him, as all have, and while we do not worship him as a God we can look upon him as an elder brother who taught the higher Spiritualism, and be profited thereby.

As regards question No. 7, whether publishers shall publish all accounts of trickery and fraud, we think that will have to be left to the discretion of the publisher. Personally we have no use for the trickster, and believe all fraudulent demonstrations should be exposed, but the question arises, how can we always tell? We know that many demonstrations require darkness, and it is a difficult task to always be able to separate the results of the medium's guides and the tricks of the fakir, and we have come to the conclusion that when earnest Spiritualists are convinced of the truths of Spiritualism and cease to demand a test of spirit return every day in the week, but will allow their own spirit to gather from the great storehouse of knowledge, and allow their own intuition and inspiration to assist them in climbing the spiritual Alps, they will have less reason to complain of fraudulent demonstrations, but will become so imbued with the spirit of love and light that decarnate souls will assist them, and together we shall through the law of love and evolution go on and on unto perfect life.

Detroit, Mich. NELLIE S. BAADE.

THE AGE OF REASON.

As Exemplified in the Open Court.

As to the changes, if any, to make the N. S. A. more efficient, the present management are probably the best judges of that matter; i. e., they ought to be.

I think state associations, organized by individuals, who feel interest enough in truth to warrant them in proclaiming it, should be organized on a uniform plan, and each contributing member should be allowed full voting privileges.

To question four, I would say: The responsibility for all missionary work should rest upon each state association, where there is one. Organization is vitally important!

The board of trustees of the N. S. A. should be a small number of five or seven members, and should not be scattered too much, in order to be efficient.

It would be a good idea if the reports of the officers were made and printed, at least fifteen days prior to the meetings of the N. S. A. each year.

Spiritualist papers should publish exposures of all trickery, when satisfied of their informant's reliability. To refrain from exposing trickery and fraud, would be to pattern after the churches, who hold their church trials behind closed doors, making them regular "star-chamber" trials. The secular newspapers rarely expose the derelictions of the clergy. They more frequently furnish the paint and whitewash, to make "their sins, though they be of scarlet, to be as white as wool."

I have no fault to find with the N. S. A. It has probably done the best that could be done with the ways and means available. The importance of this great movement (though hardly realized), it is destined to have great influence in molding the future social condition of this country. The Spiritualist press is doing good work in spreading the glorious gospel of Spiritualism and should be encouraged; for verily is "the laborer worthy of his hire."

In conclusion, I have only to exhort the rising generation of Spiritualists to stand firm. Study the constitution and laws of your country, under which all institutions of men (and there are no other) are entitled to a fair and decent consideration. "The Age of Reason" commenced with the birth of the United States, and to us and our posterity is committed the great responsibility of preserving and perpetuating a free government in the Occident.

INVESTIGATORS.

Some of Them Are More Dishonest than Mediums.

The conflicting opinions in reference to Spiritualism are not Spiritualism at all, but rather the way people look at the subject.

It is no wonder that such should be the case, after over fifty years of open discussion and freedom of expression, without a single definite head to define the real meaning of Spiritualism.

Until within the last few years, our speakers were more directly under the control of spirits and taught Spiritualism. For the past few years there has been almost everything taught from the Spiritualist rostrum, until there seems to be no settled ideas about the matter, hence, confusion, contention, discord and added deception on the part of so many who claim to be Spiritualists has disgusted and disheartened many good people and driven them into other isms, as well as into the liberal churches; in the meantime these church-people have to a certain extent become the real exponents of Modern Spiritualism upon a higher plane.

Their advantages of having fine church buildings, excellent music, etc., offer an inducement to the masses to unite with them. These facts no one can deny. Hence we are in a state of chaos, and it is no wonder that an able editor of one of the best papers printed should appeal to his friends for advice on some of the most important questions of this age.

There is but one way of judging of the future, and that is by the past. If we reason from this standpoint it is evident that in a few years more it will be hard to find an old-fashioned Spiritualist. We often hear it remarked already, "Oh, he is an old-fashioned Spiritualist."

If one is a close observer he will call to mind the fact that the early investigators of modern spirit manifestations, also the early writers of the same, have given to the world what is termed Modern Spiritualism unadulterated. All other terms are but modifications, and have come into existence by reason of previous teaching and ignorant interpretations of life here and hereafter.

Now, then, what can be done to bring out of this chaotic mass of ideas that which will stand the test, and finally be accepted by the majority? One thing is certain, that the Spiritualists so-called, cannot control and monopolize Spiritualism. One class of people have no more claim upon the inhabitants of the spirit world than another, no more so than one race of people had the right to monopolize the American continent when discovered by Columbus. The sooner the Spiritualists recognize this fact and govern themselves accordingly, the better for themselves and the cause they represent.

If these statements are true—and I challenge any one to refute them, then the Spiritualists cannot hope for any higher possession than to become factors in the work of spiritualizing the human race.

I am sure this can be better accomplished by organization.

1. Spiritualism is a system or doctrine as opposed to materialism, hence, it has but one opponent.

2. The ideas supported by the very best authority is that intelligent, individualized, conscious spiritual beings can, and do communicate with mortal men.

But what chiefly interests Spiritualists, is the assurance of life and progress after death, and the moral and religious teachings which they obtain through automatic writing and trance speaking. Here is the foundation of Modern Spiritualism, and the sooner the Spiritualists come together and agree upon a declaration of principles, based upon these facts, and devise a correct system of organic work, the better.

Yes, we need a superior head or National Association. We also need state societies, but the most important of all should be relegated to the local associations, for with well organized local work, a state association could be made of much use by furnishing proper representatives and support to a National association. The state association should be supported by the local. In a well-arranged organic work a division of territory with some definite purpose which would result in bringing unity and co-operation among the Spiritualists.

In reference to fraud and trickery among mediums. I will say that with fifty years' experience with nearly every phase of mediumship I have found more meanness and dishonesty among investigators than I have among mediums.

As a general rule, mediums are honest, but the influence that is brought to bearupon an honest medium in an unguarded moment is more than any human soul can withstand.

It is a wonder that our mediums have stood the pressure as well as they have. They have been misrepresented and every conceivable invention has been made and used to test them, the investigators have even lied and tried time and again to deceive their spirit friends, and then expect honest manifestations. I believe the people will be held responsible for the use they have made of mediumship. Wrong or fraud should be checked wherever found, be it in mediumship or any other calling.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

What Changes In Its Organic Law Will Make the N. S. A. More Efficient?

Answer: The president of the N. S. A. shall not hold position outside of his office.

State associations are not essential nor desirable, because they are instrumental in detracting the forces of local societies which ought to concentrate around one common center—the N. S. A. This body will not fulfill its mission until it comes in closer touch with its chartered societies and works in harmony with them for a well-defined purpose and end. It should be the main object of the N. S. A. officials and missionaries to devise some plan that would call out the working forces of all chartered societies and clinch them for systematic, common work. The N. S. A. must take better care of its children if it wishes them to thrive. Some can barely walk, and they need the sustaining hand of a watchful mother, and none of them have reached maturity: Arouse new interest! Let every Spiritualist who is a member of a local society be made to feel that he is a spoke in the great wheel of human progress, guided by the firm hand of the N. S. A.

Is any state entitled to more than one representative on the board of trustees of the N. S. A., which has auxillaries in nearly every state of the Union?

Answer: In the name of justice and fair play—no.

Would not much time be saved for practical work at the annual convention if the reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and missionaries were printed in the Spiritualistic press prior to the October meeting?

Answer: A splendid suggestion that deserves unanimous recognition.

The publishers of Spiritualistic papers should consider it their solemn duty to expose in public print all fraudulent mediums of whatever type or standing, let the chips fall where they may—the public wants to know the truth—the whole truth.

AN ACT OF FOLLY.

To Embody Our Views in a Creed for Spiritualists.

With eighteen large bodies of differing Spiritualists enumerated and I don't know how many more not in the list, it would seem to any one an act of folly to embody our views in a declaration of principles. A statement should be put before the world of that which makes Spiritualism on which all are agreed; and it would be wise to counsel all who can so content themselves, to remain where they are in the church or out of it, at least till they desire the change. To be a socialist it is not necessary for one to break church connections or antagonize it; nor is it needful for the Spiritualist. It is necessary to stand firmly for a new truth, and any cause is made strong by support from people of differing views. The trouble to be feared is that of their airing their past views as part and parcel of Spiritualism. This at the present time is more or less the case, which would not be, had toleration instead of iconoclasm been our method.

Troubles and difficulties have been created through the fact that our people, swayed by like ambitions that move the evangelist, Dowie and others, are determined to sweep the earth with the new gospel by a dispensation of some kind of force, or by a forced process. The little acorn makes no fuss, quietly submitting to natural conditions, it evolves the oak that shelters a multitude. Our acorn of truth with the same tense conditions would build a grand temple to which would come all lovers of the good, the beautiful and the true.

We were mistaken in supposing it our mission to at once build a substitute for the hoary-headed errors about us, which has resulted in the work of the iconoclast, with the antagonism of existing religious organizations and anti-reform legislation.

The N. S. A. is engaged in this work of construction and has unfortunately begun at the top, building down instead of up. Our pattern should be nature, where it is different; first the raindrop, then follows the brook, river and ocean. But the N. S. A. is here and here to stay; so we must do the best we can as things are. State associations exist on the theory that they are the result of lesser organizations called societies. The N. S. A. is not evolved from these societies, and difficulties present themselves. It seems that the first work should be to harmonize the state organizations with the National body, if in any way possible. It may be best to evade nature's order and have the societies do all through the N. S. A. as their representative; but the query comes, is this practicable?

You have asked four questions respecting state associations; before these can be answered it seems quite necessary that their status in regard to the N. S. A. should be permanently settled.

It is very desirable that reports should be given out by the spiritual press prior to the annual meeting.

About the subject of fraud, I am individually of the opinion that if the spiritual press has one office that is undisputably its own, it is the prompt publication of all known fraud, with names, places, dates and details; but that the subject as a subject should have no place in its columns; having the same effect on Spiritualism as articles on the subject of the crimes of preachers would in the Christian press have on Christianity.

INFINITE INTELLIGENCE.

Let There Be a Broad Platform Presented to the World.

While I cannot say much that would make the N. S. A. much more efficient, I would make the following suggestions: The N. S. A. declares the belief in Infinite Intelligence. Although this idea may be true, there are many Spiritualists who are unable to accept it, and, consequently, are barred out of the N. S. A. It has set up a god, inferior to man in character, for man possesses other traits besides intelligence. J. Pierpont Morgan is our king, and he is intelligent. But we want something besides his great intelligence, if we are to have coal this winter. But before the N. S. A. adds any attributes to its god, I would suggest that the Infinite Intelligence be stricken out of the declaration of principles altogether.

The N. S. A. should have a platform broad enough to take in all Spiritualists, whether they believe in infinite intelligence or not. I would leave that question to private opinion.

I believe individual members should have full voting privileges.

If nine-tenths of the population of Ohio are Spiritualists, and only one-tenth of Indiana are Spiritualists, I think that the stronger state should not stand back, and let the weaker state struggle all alone. I believe that the strong should help the weak, regardless of man-made boundary lines. Hence, if we wish to see the cause grow, we all must unite and reach out and help the weak, wherever and whenever we can.

I think much time might be saved for practical work at the October convention if the reports of the president, secretary and treasurer and missionaries were printed in the Spiritualist press a week or two before the convention. In my opinion, it would be a grand idea. Franklin said, "To save time is to lengthen life."

I firmly believe that all fake mediums should be exposed, and shown up in the Spiritualist press; for if we shield these fakirs, they will continue in it.

Suppose the Government should shield the counterfeiters. How long would it be before the country would be flooded with spurious coin? Not many months. The government would not tolerate such an idea for a moment. The sooner fake mediums are shown up and forced out of business the better. You may make many enemies, but remember, the true Spiritualists of the United States will stand by you, and the church and law will, too, in exposing all fake mediums.

I would also suggest a change in the presidency. I would like to see Dr. Warne elected.

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Try to Reform Mediums Who Practice Fraud.

It is with pleasure that I respond to your kind invitation to give my views upon some or all of the questions you have submitted. In my opinion said questions are of the most vital importance to Spiritualism generally, and to the state associations and the National in particular, and should receive the most careful consideration of all sincere Spiritualists.

I am heartily in sympathy with the primary purposes of organization in our ranks—the individual, or local society, the state association, and the National. The local societies to be organized into state associations, and the state associations into the National. Individual membership belongs exclusively to the primary or local societies. Members of said societies are represented in their respective state associations through the duly elected delegates from their respective local society, and state associations are (or should be) represented in the National through the duly elected delegates from the respective state associations. Thus the N. S. A. should be dealing with the representatives, or delegates, of state associations only, and the state associations with the local societies through their respective delegates.

The power to vote, either in a state association or in the National can be given only to such as represent, as delegate, either a local society to the state association, or a state association to the National. Individual membership in either the state association or the N. S. A. is irregular and unsystematic, and should be abolished. Each state association should have the right of at least two delegates to the National.

As I am limited in space, will omit other points that suggest themselves in connection with the above, and pass on to the question concerning fraud and trickery in Spiritualism—whether or not to expose it in the Spiritualist papers when satisfied of their informant's reliability.

While I would not shield fraud and trickery anywhere, and especially in Spiritualism and mediumship, yet would it not be advisable to at least give the guilty party an opportunity to reform before exposing him or her to the adverse criticism of a cold and unsympathetic public, especially in cases where it is known that said party is really a medium and can receive the genuine spirit manifestations when conditions are favorable? I would suggest that a committee of competent persons be chosen in each state association whose duty it shall be to hear and investigate such complaints, and, if found guilty, to kindly avail themselves of all possible means to reform such parties—to help them throw off such influences and dedicate their powers to that which is true and right, and that a higher and nobler purpose might inspire them and lead them on. If this does not avail, it might be right and just that they should then be exposed in our papers.

But, Mr. Editor, I believe that at least the majority of those found guilty of such crime against the cause, if kindly and wisely appealed to, would turn from their ways of darkness, and, who knows, some of them might even become shining lights in the great field of Spiritualism through their mediumship.

The tricksters, however, who are only simulating our genuine manifestations of spirit presence, should be exposed forthwith. They are wolves in sheep's clothing, and do not in any way belong to us, unless it is by way of Adam.

Thus, by properly functioning the responsibility of the existing difficulties and putting the right persons to work along that line, this great shadow might be lifted.

HOME CIRCLES.

A Most Important Radiating Center for Promoting Spiritualism.

The reason there is so little general inspiration in the N. S. A. is because it patterns after the old methods of cult propaganda, which does not belong to the new regime that the wise and good in spirit life are seeking to inaugurate. At best this organization can never be anything but a bridge between the old and the new, an effort on the part of many honest persons which will result in teaching the world what can't be done.

The time has come in the order of evolution when the worlds of spirit and matter are to meet, hence the efforts on both sides of life. This knowledge is attainable by humanity in general, and can never be monopolized by any society or cult; it is like the sunlight illuminating everything and causing everything to grow in its own way. Hence the intense individualism manifested by those who have received this light. The natural methods of projecting this knowledge are radiators from center. First and most important are Home Circles conducted in a way to draw only the best influences. Then the camp centers, where the multitudes congregate for a few weeks each season—with the innumerable spirit forces that come to teach and give proofs of their presence and power. These truths are thus made known to thousands who in turn inspire and teach others. Our literature is also an important factor in disseminating these truths, and organization is not needed to tell the truth. System and business organization is needed to care for multitudes of people when they are assembled together. It is far more important for the advancement of Spiritualism, that we learn that there are invisible foes, spirits, who are seeking to hide the light, and dull the spiritual senses of mediumistic persons, and keep this knowledge from earth's children; that by many subtle, cunning schemes and various devices the influence of teachers is destroyed, manifestations through mediumship vitiated, and disintegrating forces brought into the center of education.

Why do they do this? Because knowledge of spirit return disturbs old-time organizations, and the leaders lose their power over the masses and individual power is the sweetest morsel to be attained by human ambition. This desire is carried forward into the next sphere of life, and on, and on, until through the natural process of development a brighter goal and nobler purpose is discovered.

Knowledge of these facts is needed, and when it becomes general, the cure is at hand. When any evil becomes well-ventilated its force is weakened.

The writer is not interested in the methods of the N. S. A., but does not oppose anyone who feels disposed to work in that way, but she is deeply interested in making the possibilities of spirit return known the wide world over, and is a student of methods to accomplish this result. After much earnest thought and experience has reached the conclusion that much of the fraudulent mediumship and many other troubles that confront the Spiritualist movement at this time is due to those causes it investigations are made along these lines heretofore mentioned, and ways and means sought to enter into harmonious relations with these opposing forces, the time will soon come when there will be no need of seeking a medium to communicate with the (so-called) dead.

I find by inquiry that many Spiritualists and mediums are aware of the facts which have here been stated, but are keeping silent for various reasons. It is time to speak—and efforts in this direction are doubtless of far greater importance than organizations of cults or formulations of creeds for the purpose of presenting a formidable appearance before the world—at least so thinketh your humble correspondent.

A DIVINE INFLUX.

How to the Line, Let the Chips Fall Where They May.

To the Editor:—Your letter containing questions of vital importance to all loyal Spiritualists, has been seriously studied. They have been treated upon in various ways by able thinkers and writers, but how to harmonize all conflicting ideas and pursuits and bring about a union of forces and efforts, is yet a puzzle. For a number of years I have given much thought to these differentiations. They have, indeed, all sprung from one root—Spiritualism, or communication between the mortals and immortals. All these separate efforts should be husbanded for the one purpose for which Spiritualism was launched upon earth by the immortals.

We know that it is a divine influx poured out upon all flesh; that it does pervade all organizations to transform them, therefore, all these new forms and isms and their adherents should come together and reason upon all points of difference. Then, every part could soon be adjusted where it belongs in progression's plan, and a unification become possible. Instead, however, there is aversion and rivalry.

True, all have a right to their views, but it is also true that none have all the truth, hence they should be willing to reason and exchange thought in a kindly way; thus by honest efforts the contained purpose of Spiritualism, viz., the upliftment of humanity to higher planes of thought and conduct and its resultant happiness could be accomplished. By study, observation and experience it has been learned and proved that all spirits from the lowest to the most spiritually advanced, find corresponding conditions in mortals, which admit of establishing vibratory currents; thus they push their ideas and aims forth through these avenues of mortal brains—these expressed thoughts then are their marks of degree and this manifested bulk of wisdom and folly is in Progress Causes Commotion In Every Department of Life.

To the Editor:—Your circular, "An Open Court" and invitation to write some thoughts and suggestions regarding the present movement of our Spiritual Cause, is duly at hand and in response will reply briefly to your polite request.

Every progressive movement has been ushered in by a commotion disturbing the quiet conservative mind, and as a natural result has been bitterly antagonized and opposed. The soul grows and expands in the silence of its meditations and receives its greatest impulses for good in the dreams of the imagination; but the periodical hours of waking and commotion seem imperatively necessary to arouse it to action and to awaken a corresponding response of good in the world.

The seed of the oak lies for a time in the bosom of the earth before it awakes and sends forth its spire to the rays of the sun and lifts its plumed branches to the breezes a mighty tree of progress. The grub or worm of the caterpillar is strangely metamorphosed into the gaudily-hued butterfly; so with this human development from the mortal to the spiritual and divine.

Every commotion spiritual or physical has a deeper significance than the outward impressions would indicate, and leads the reflective mind through interminable changes to a wider horizon and a higher view of God's laws and being. The closer the human mind adheres to the silent workings of the soul does mankind reach the higher altitudes where the eye catches visions of infinitude.

Modern Spiritualism as a distinctive movement, has reached its zenith and as such is on the decline. The phenomena of Spiritualism, the basis of all religions, Christian or otherwise, have become an acknowledged fact in the research of science, and as much so as the law of gravitation.

Every shadow has its substance. Every ideal—ideas—the things seen and unseen are in accord with nature and in perpetual flux. Modern Spiritualism and the general phenomena which made it a distinctive movement in the commencement are of daily occurrence now all over the inhabitable world, and the spirit of Spiritualism speaks from every intelligent Christian pulpit, is voiced in the senate chamber and legislative halls, and echoes from the humblest hamlet and cottage. It is the thread of gold running through all literature and the solvent uniting religious sects and peoples.

The present seeming stagnation in Spiritualism is not real, as its principles and truths light every darkened recess, and have taken a deeper hold on mankind in every department of life and thought. The sectarian trend of thought among the so-called Spiritualists in the past, to confine all subjects discussed on its rostrum to the question of spirit return, forgetting the vital question of human needs, how man should be housed, fed and clothed, has fortunately somewhat subsided among the more intellectual thinkers, and the craze for spirit tests has been checked, to give place to other important subjects of human welfare here as well as hereafter.

The Progressive Thinker as a Spiritual paper is signally free from sectarian bias and has for its object truth and the betterment of mankind in all departments of society, secular and religious.

Its columns have been opened from week to week to the discussion of all important subjects, and for the purpose of eliminating error from truth, and has carefully and conscientiously denounced fraud when discovered, whether it was practiced in mediumship or among the clergy or leading popular religionists of the church.

To The Progressive Thinker more than any other spiritual periodical do we owe the heartfelt thanks of every earnest Spiritualist for the straightforward course pursued in the treatment of subjects, and especially in the denouncing of fraudulent mediums when discovered by competent investigators and reported for the press for warning to the public.

The Government of the United States.

In answer to the first question, I will say the National Spiritualist Association should express no opinion upon the God question; as from the very nature of the subject it is impossible for any person, however learned or profound their knowledge may be, to know anything about. It seems to me the height of assumption for any person or persons to express a belief upon so important a subject of which they must forever remain in ignorance. Many good Spiritualists withhold support from the National Spiritualists Association because of its expressed belief in "infinite intelligence." In what respect this belief differs from the belief in the orthodox personal God of the Christians and Jews, I am unable to discover.

State associations are essential and should be organized upon a uniform plan.

A state association should be a representative body; and should only represent the several local societies in the state, entitled to representation and voice in proportion to the number of their respective individual members. There should be no individual membership in state associations.

The responisbility of all missionary work should rest upon the state associations only. If this was done the work would be more uniform, comprehensive, thorough and successful.

Every state should have an equal number of representatives upon the board of trustees of the National Spiritualists Association, irrespective of the number of individual Spiritualists it may contain; the same principle that each sovereign state has an equal representation in the United States senate regardless of the number of its inhabitants. I think we Spiritualists cannot go far wrong in making our organization a great success if we copy as closely as possible the form and principles underlying the government of the United States, the peerless product of such illustrious minds as Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, Benjamin Franklin and others, whose comprehensive grasp of the truth has never been surpassed by any man, even in our own enlightened and progressive age.

There is no doubt that the convention would have much more time to devote to other important matters and subjects at its annual meetings, if the reports of its officers were printed in the spiritual press prior to its annual meetings. As the several reports are only perfunctory anyway, and as their publication prior to the meeting of the convention would give the members of the convention ample time to study the contents and recommendations of the several reports, it is strange that a practical deliberative body as the convention of the National Spiritual Association should be, has not adopted this reform long ago.

In answer to the seventh and last question and the most important, as the very life and usefulness of the Spiritual movement depend upon its correct appreciation by all Spiritualists. I emphatically say stamp out, by all practicable means, all and every form of fraud, trickery and deception practiced in the sacred name of Spiritualism. If there is any crime more detestable and vile than any other of which a person may be guilty it is the crime of deceiving and holding in contempt and derision the holiest and most sacred emotions and affections of which the human spirit or soul is capable. Any person or persons guilty of such degrading conduct, should be, and must be exposed by publishing their names, and the methods of their nefarious schemes in the whole spiritual press. I most radically differ from those Spiritualists who are opposed to the exposure and punishment of these vile tricksters and vampires in human form, for fear such exposure will hurt the cause and truths of Spiritualism. This idea is as absurd and idiotic as it would be for the government of the United States to refuse to hunt down and punish the counterfeiters of its genuine and lawful money, for fear such exposure would depreciate the value of its genuine currency.

PHILIP LAMNECK.

Port Washington, Ohio.

such wise brought before the mortal courts, to be considered as to its value or worthlessness and to use that which is good and to reject the useless as conscience may dictate and reason decide.

The many different expressions through mediums, and the differentiations of their followers should be assigned similarly to a well conducted graded school course, then good work could be done by the state and National Associations. They will be crippled until such rules are adopted, for it is a part of the divine purpose contained in Spiritualism.

The N. S. A. has bravely struggled through many obstacles and is doing a good work, but something is amiss with regard to the state and National organizations. It is my humble opinion that each organized state should establish its own circuit of speakers and missionaries; that state membership should be composed of societies also individual members if desired; that they should have voting privileges the same as in the N. S. A. and last but not least, all state organizations and members should be loyal adherents of the National organization and give it their support and enjoy its privileges and blessings. Relieved from some of the work it is now doing, the N. S. A. could branch out and enlarge its usefulness manifoldly as demands arise for its services. It being the nucleus of collective Spiritualism, its chief effort should be to draw the people of all kinds and classes, to itself, the creed-bound and creedless. This is an arduous task and can be accomplished only by the extending of sympathy and dispassionate thought to other cults and systems of thought and religion. In this, it seems to me, the N. S. A. should do its chief work, beside all other good work it can do to broaden and deepen its channel wherein to flow and to claim the right of way as a progressive world movement.

To the seventh question I would say, It is the publisher's duty to give to their readers the truth so far as it can be obtained. "Hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may." However, we all know how difficult it often is to sift truth and falsehood apart, which makes duty in this department a critical task.

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Do We Need a National Organization?

I am somewhat doubtful whether I am qualified to testify in your "Open Court." I hardly know where I stand with the N. S. A., but if there must be a National Spiritualists Association, it should be the outcome from state associations, not the author or founder of them; and state associations, to be of any real value, to have any foundation, should be composed of delegates or members from village, town or county clubs or societies properly vouched for. In one word, patterned after our National Government: First, town, then county, then state, culminating in a union of states, with a national head. Have we such a National Spiritualists Association? I think I have made a clear and plain answer to your second and third questions.

Every state should be responsible for its own internal management and missionary effort. I may say more concerning missionary work later on.

Question five: It might make a large board of trustees to place one member on it from every state represented, but it would seem to me to be the most equitable and just way. One vote from each state only, excepting perhaps the state that may furnish the president of the association, when during his official term of office he should have the right to cast a determining ballot on a tie vote, as president of the board of trustees.

Question six: There can be but one answer to this question. Yes. It is simply a plain, honest and business-like proceeding, and gives all concerned a chance to read, digest and assimilate before the business of the convention begins

Question seven: My answer to this query would be, publish all well-authenticated and reliable testimony for or against anyone or all phases of the phenomena, whether mental or physical, whoever may chance to be the instrument or medium. But great care should be exercised in making public such charges and statement, that the exact and whole truth should be told without prejudice or malice and in all candor, bearing ever in mind to judge as we would be judged. I think to be a bank robber, a betrayer of trusts, or a sneak-thief is honorable in comparison with a person who will knowingly and willingly lend himself to cheat and fraud, or deceptions of any name or nature under the claim of mediumship for spirit communication or manifestation and more especially so, when taking compensation for their supposed service. On the other hand, I do feel and believe honest and conscientious mediums are justly entitled to a reasonable remuneration for their time and service. Communion between the living and the so-called dead is of too sacred a nature to be trifled with and made a farce for commercial traffic and deceit, and to that end no censure is too great to bestow on it, and its abettors. To obviate, and overcome this deplorable difficulty, I would suggest the home circle, or shrine, the individual family, where there would be no temptation or occasion to simulate or make pretense. In the quiet of the home seance, where peace and harmony prevailed, there would come at the twilight hour, the dear departed, bringing their messages of love and recognition and in many and various ways giving signs and tokens of their presence. But I have an abiding faith, that in the fullness of time all of these things will be sloughed off; all will be clarified and made sweet and pure as is the water in a mountain stream. We shall be freed from all unsavory and uncouth intrusions, all commercialism and deception.

I have tried in part to answer your several questions as matters now stand with the present organizations.

But do we really need a National Association? To my mind, all that is included in the spiritual phenomena is but one phase in nature's expression of life, or manifestation of spirit. As is astronomy, as is geology, as is the whole vegetable kingdom. The whole animal kingdom, the ocean tides and currents, including the air, and last but not least, the great electrical forces contained in earth or air. As we know them from observation, and by study of their particular manifestations, their phenomena, we learn of spirit and its expression.

Now do we really need a National Association for the study, the promotion and to propagate any one, or all of the several phenomena mentioned? But some one will make answer that Spiritualism is different, "that it has a moral and religious side." My answer is, All phenomena found in this world of ours has one common source, one fountain head, is Infinite spirit, made manifest to our senses. If one be sacred, if one has religion or morals in it— as generally understood—then do they all. The occult in nature needs no National body to defend or promote its interest. There can be, and there are in all live and alert villages and towns, classes formed for the study and acquaintance of some one or more of the occult manifestations as now recognized on our planet, and in some places there may be found county and possibly state associations, for convenience and a more concentrated effort. In my early study of spirit phenomena, fifty and more years ago—being grounded in the usual methods and customs of society, I believe in, and worked for organization and association. I was an officer in the first state association formed in Massachusetts, was associated with the old and earnest workers in our state until the first association became extinct. I know something of the vexations and trials that beset the officers because of the effort to propagate the belief in Spiritualism through the aid of missionaries. I remember the spirit of envy, of jealousy, of inharmony and discord that came into it because every one could not be employed and find support out an impoverished treasury. I learned that the first, and most essential thing was to find real, earnest seekers after the knowledge found in the spirit phenomena. Such a person would not, could not, wait to have somebody bring them the tidings; they would go out half way, yes, the whole way to find and know of it. And I also found, and every passing year all the more confirms me, that to one who has no desire to know or learn whether death ends all, to one who has not lost a near and dear friend, it was of but little use to offer them the evidence or the consolation which the believer has in spirit communion. Often have I been told, "When I feel the need for it, I will then seek for it." I understand fully the legal side of the question. I deplore its existence; I am sorry for the wilful blindness found in our so-called courts of justice. Let one by will, leave a bequest of property to one of our State or National institutions, for the study of astronomy, botany or mineralogy, or even the finding of the supposed North Pole, such a will, or bequest would be allowed, would be prorated and defended. The lesson taught by the persecution in Salem, years ago, and for which since the city set apart a day for especial observance and prayer to God because of their ignorance and superstition in the persecutions of the so-called witches will be learned and the scale will fall from the eyes of our judiciary some time, and their children will blush for shame because of the fathers' narrow and unjust decisions. Nevertheless, Spiritualism is fast finding a hold on the people.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

Freedom for Each to Express His Own Individuality.

To the Editor:—In your request for for my views on "certain questions of vital importance to all loyal Spiritualists,"you incidentally make an admirable classification of the various beliefs held by those who accept the facts of spirit return and human immortality. I notice that in the discussions which from time to time agitate your columns, the effort of the writer always seems to be to prove some one right and everybody else wrong on these points wherein differences of belief exist.

As a matter of fact the delegates to the N. S. A. have but one belief common to all alike, consequently officers are chosen of whom a majority at any one time hold views which contradict the beliefs of many other Spiritualists, equally sincere. It follows, as a matter of course, that unless all expressions of belief—save in spirit return and human immortality—are avoided, there will be fierce antagonisms.

The prohibitionist who was told he must accept either protection or free trade, as certain delegates might determine, would become indignant, and would righteously kick, except the majority happened to vote his way. And these various beliefs, which you, Mr. Editor, have epitomized, have for the most part, no more to do with a man's belief in spirit return than protection and free trade have to do with a man's belief in teetotalism.

Unless this is understood and acted upon, the N. S. A. will become the mouthpiece of believers in certain "isms," which they persist in tacking on to Modern Spiritualism. Naturally the disbeliever in such "isms" will seek a more congenial brotherhood, possibly just as narrow-minded, but with his own pet limitation given due prominence. Thus the N. S. A. will cease to grow, but spirit return will remain as much a fact as before and will be, indeed is already, adopted by officers of both theological and scientific associations whose members scorn to be called Spiritualists. It is only by avoiding every expression that savors of a creedal belief that the N. S. A. will give no cause for angry contentions.

Yet it must be remembered that every member, and every worker has his own individual beliefs that cannot and should not be suppressed. The thinker will not object to listening to views fromwhich, in some respects he differs, provided he is not expected to endorse them. The lecturer and writer must have freedom to express his own individuality, with which freedom neither society, editor, nor N. S. A. should attempt to interfere. For instance, although I do not believe in reincarnation, I should welcome a talented presentation of its claims, and hold myself open to conversion. But I should resent the incorporation of that belief into any statement professing to define Modern Spiritualism. And similarly with each of the various beliefs you have epitomised. I may or may not accept them, but I cannot permit them to stand as any part of my avowed belief in spirit return. The inspired or uninspired intelligence—whether mortal or immortal —may worship and pray without any objectionfrom me, save when he proclaims it as an essential phase of Modern Spiritualism.

You have formulated seven questions on which you ask my opinion. The first six demand a special study that I have never given them. They may be called "business details," perhaps essential to success. They will naturally be discussed and determined by the delegates present in the light of experience, and the wishes of those they represent. But your last question, as to the publication by editors of exposures of fraudulent phenomena and trickery, is of sad import to every believer. It cannot be answered by "yes" or "no."

Some publications of fraud in our daily press become warnings for the innocent "hayseed" who tempts the perils of the city. But on the other hand, many a report of crime is itself a pollution that vaccinates the reader with a licentious pus that leaves him morally weaker than before. The wise editor will let each case be determined by its special demerits. There are cases where there is genuine fraud from and by the invisible, but where the mortal instrument is nevertheless a dangerous channel for such influences. In other cases, spirit return is itself simulated. In the former case there are often interesting phenomena by spirits attracted by the sitters, but in the latter it is merely a thief and his victim. The editor must determine the merits of each case. If he is instructing his readers, from time to time, as to what may be called the "dark side of spirit return," his readers will be more or less cultivating the home circle whose blessings usually carry its own protection. But we must recognize that knowledge is the only real protector of ignorance, and that absolute silence by the press as to cases of alleged fraud does not turn an editor into a guardian angel of innocence.

It is the mixture of the genuine and the fraudulent that is the essence of very many public seances. Particular exposures of direct fraud may sometimes be of value, but for the most part, at the usual materializing seance, nothing but a sight of the shears will save the lamb from losing his wool. He usually likes the tickling sensation as the shearer clips, and counts his dollar as well spent when he has been artistically shorn.

A moderate amount of publication seems necessary, but most of us when a skunk is captured, prefer to remain at a distance. But, Mr. Editor, be sure he is a skunk before you kill him in print. You cannot always know him by his smell, for sometimes the "smell" is made by the "exposers," who are rarely students of psychical phenomena.

So I venture, as my answer to your seventh question, to advise a moderate amount of publication, but with the foxy caution of a wise editor and a liberal use of his blue pencil.

CHANGES SUGGESTED.

Trickery Should Be Exposed Wherever It Is Found.

Quite a number of changes might be made at the coming convention in October; the N. S. A. has done a great deal in the past, we have greater hopes for it in the future.

We ought to have a more uniform system of organization, either have all states organize or have no state organization at all; some seem to think a more profitable way would be to have all local societies and the National. We never can hope to succeed until we have law and order. I believe it should be one or the other, without the locals can be sustained the state cannot, and without the state the National cannot exist.

I do not object to individual members of state associations, for many of our Spiritualists would be barred from joining any association if not permitted to join the state, but I think it a dangerous plan to allow full voting power, as one could spend a few dollars and run the entire convention.

I would suggest that we have somewhat of a change in our "missionary work," as we have many complaints from local societies claiming that all missionaries should work for the benefit of local societies in building them up, instead as it has been heretofore, working for the state and National. It would be better to take care of what local societies we have at the present time, than to constantly be organizing new ones and then leave them without speakers or mediums for another year, or to die a natural death. It is detrimental to our state organization, also to the National, to have this kind of work; it should not be for the greatest number of societies to be organized by the missionary, but it should be for the number that are self-supporting, and not merely to have them organized just to pay revenue once a year and charter fee. If the locals wish to hold a meeting, they have found that the expense to obtain a missionary is as great as it is to obtain any other talent outside of the missionary field. To be sure each missionary feels they must make their salary, and they are working for the N. S. A. and state; too often the little local society is lost sight of. The local may work for weeks to prepare for a meeting in hopes that they are going to be strengthened by the missionary, only to find themselves without finance or gain of membership, when the missionary requires the collection and all expenses paid and many times travel over two or three states to reach the locality, is it any wonder we do not succeed in building up our local societies? I believe that missionaries should be put in the field with the understanding they should work for the local societies, the locals to understand it should be their duty to defray a certain amount of expense, which should be small to what it is now, and whatever the deficiency would be at the end of each month in paying the missionaries fair recompense for their labor, the N. S. A. or state to pay the remaining sum. Each missionary should at first form a circuit that would give each four local societies a medium or lecturer once a month and their time during the week to solicit membership for said societies, or go to surrounding towns during week evenings, and the interest I am sure would be awakened. I believe one missionary in a place is sufficient, and in this way the money that is raised for missionary work at the N. S. A. and the state would be well spent, and the people then could see what benefit the missionary work had been to local societies. They would cease asking what good the missionaries have done our local societies. The N. S. A. has furnished four missionaries and paid them, but the four only give us two meetings on a Sunday where we could have four different societies supplied at the same expense.

I believe it would give better satisfaction if there were but one member represented from each state on the board of trustees of the N. S. A. I think it would save time if the reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and missionaries were printed in the spiritual press before the October meeting.

I most sincerely believe that the spiritual press should publish all exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism, when satisfied of their informants reliability. Spiritualists should not be an exception to the general rule adopted by all honest investigators.

Expose trickery wherever found. We have suffered long enough, trying to keep silent; we can see the great growth of the imitator, while our good mediums who have been able to obtain but very little from the spirit world whom they are dependent upon, so many of our Spiritualists have required so much that all those who understand the laws and principles of mediumship know it is utterly impossible to obtain certain results at all times. A medium never can say what they can do, they may merely mention what they have done, what we need most is to protect our young mediums and for each Spiritualist, when a strange person comes to the city and claims to have such great gifts, we ask them to go under certain conditions that will not harm the individual or be detrimental to the spirit; we have found it to be a great safeguard in our society. What our people need most is to inform themselves on magic; Herrmann is mystifying, Miss Fay wonderful, to some, but to those that are acquainted and understand how the hand raises on the glass and answers by tapping, where the handkerchief walks and also answers questions, when we understand these simple tricks and many more complicated, we shall appreciate more fully what we receive from the spirit world. While Herrmann and Miss Fay do not claim it to be spirit power, others insist that it is from the spirit world. They allow each to think as they please.

My experience has been we should demand from the spirit world that which is truthful, that which they can prove beyond a doubt to be a fact; we should not ask those that have gone before to return to us to merely amuse and give us entertainment, but we will gladly receive their assistance in helping us to live better spiritual lives while here, understanding that we are as much spirits to-day as we ever will be, and the possibilities for our growth just as great. Then let us endeavor to raise our standard higher so to receive the instructions by the natural laws of life here and now. In this way we will retain our thinking scientific minds in our spiritual ranks; if not they will do as they have in the past—hold themselves aloof from the spiritual ranks.

I believe in our coming convention there should be some system for ordaining our speakers, instead of having each individual when called upon to ordain another, have methods of their own. I believe it to be a sacred obligation, and those obligations should not be trifling. I speak of this as I have witnessed a number ordained and no two were alike, and as I understand it is not necessary to have any services at all, I think this is a question of vital importance as to require a certain amount of services and qualifications of the applicant.

A TENDER VIEW.

Mediums Acting Under Spirit Control.

"There you sit—a man that has had his head broke from infancy up'ards and has got a new opinion into it at every seam as has been opened. Now, what do you make of this?"—Capt. Cuttle to Capt. Bunsby.

To the Editor:—Your estimate upon the ability of correspondents to give opinions seems about parallel to that which the junior of "Gills and Cuttle" placed upon the capacity of the renowned skipper of the "Lively Clara;" perhaps for the same reason. There is a great difference, however, in the requirements. You fire seven questions at us while Dickenss hero was satisfied with one.

Modesty perhaps, or it may be the want of a shattered head disqualifies me for giving opinions upon either of your first six interrogations. They relate solely to organizations about which I have little interest and no expert knowledge. National, state and municipal societies are doubtless beneficial to many. They serve to promote sociability, relaxation from care, and the cultivation of friendships. They also furnish amusement, instruction in oratory, and are especially gratifying to those who delight in exhibitions of hot atmospheric disturbances by the mouth.

The idea, however, that such organizations are necessary or essential aids to Spiritualism is erroneous. Spiritualism is a fact, a discovery, and cannot be aided. Of what value would an association to aid the multiplication table prove? Neither do I understand that any form of propagandism is required to spread the knowledge that disincarnate men have been interviewed. When Columbus discovered America the news became universal through ordinary channels without the intervention of any society whatever.

Notwithstanding these opinions, I entertain only friendly sentiments for Spiritualist organizations. I feel as an auctioneer in Boston did when selling calico. "Ladies and gentlemen," said he, "if this calico suits you, it is just what you want."

Your seventh question is substantially this, "Shall mediums' fraudulent practices when plying their vocation be published to the world?" I answer, yes, most emphatically. But in judging what constitutes such practices great caution should be observed. An experience of more that fifty years has given me knowledge that mediums are frequently detected in cheats for which they are no more responsible or blameworthy than the detectives.

Space cannot be allowed for relating the facts by which this knowledge was obtained, but I will give one, as a sample. In 1855, at Waukegan, Ill., I sat by a dining-room table, at Judge Ira Porter's house, for spirit manifestations. There were present five or six mediums. Among the phenomena were table tippings. We gave questions and the table tipped charmingly in response. At length one of the mediums seized a slate and with wonderful rapidity made a sketch of the table and its guests. At the bottom of this sketch she wrote, "Take care Charlotte." Now Charlotte was seated next to myself. I knew her well, and a more truthful, honest girl was never seen. The sketch, however, showed her foot under the bottom of a table leg. I looked down and to my astonishment found Charlotte's foot placed as indicated—and although in a deep trance, she was tipping the table.

By a stranger, this would have been pronounced a fraud of the grossest character. To me it became a matter for study. I followed the investigation by various ways and means and finally became convinced that there was a better explanation than fraud in many such cases.

The solution is this. The medium is passively under the mesmeric control of the spirit. The spirit's desires become hers, and she unconsciously applies herself to the task upon which the spirit is engaged. I feel absolutely certain that this view is correct.

And now inasmuch as mediumship and sensitiveness are almost synonymous terms, and realizing that a criticism which would scarcely provoke an explotive from a man of iron nerves, will drive a medium to frenzy, I deem it just to treat that subject with charity and tenderness. And when I take down my violin to play the old familiar air called "Medium's Frauds" so commonly squeaked and shrieked from press and pulpit, I discreetly adjust the "mute" upon the bridge. And if the tune be executed on a piano I try to give judicious employment to the soft pedal.

A VERY STRONG ASSERTION.

Truth and Falsehood Do Not Blend.

Shall fraud and trickery as practiced by so-called mediums and investigators of Spiritualism whenever and wherever found, be exposed by publication provided the information concerning such fraud and trickery is reliable?

Yes, emphatically yes. The great truths of Spiritualism are too important to wear the filthy, loathsome garb of deception and falsehood. They are too sacred and involve too much that is dear and valuable to every human being, to have its name enshrouded and blemished with a lie. Because lies never enhance the value of an article, but cause the would-be purchaser to rather depreciate it and turn from it.

If the truths of Spiritualism are worth anything they are worth everything. Because they are rays of light from the highest heavens and shed upon man a halo that inspires him with hope, the best thought, the clearest ideas of a future existence, and the purest motives that ever filled his darkened, bewildered mind. They touch the finest feelings of his emotional nature and arouse his lethargy to a life of thrifty progression.

The truths of Spiritualism proclaim a continuity of life after death. They declare that our departed ones can and do come back to us and manifest and demonstrate their presence. They proclaim a progressive life of immortality after death. Such truths can never be represented by frauds or falsehood. They have not the least connection or affiliation with a lie, but are entirely separate and distinct from falsehood as light is from darkness. The two do not mix. They do not blend together. Colors may run together and one tint or shade the other, but not so with truth and falsehood. Spiritualism may be compared to the sunbeams of heaven and falsehood to the thickest blackness of darkness of night, and the sunbeams of heaven flash upon and penetrate the darkness and dispel it. Then why tolerate falsehood or a barefaced lie, perpetrated by a fraud who would associate falsehood with truth?

The demoralized Fraud is not allied to Spiritualism any more than a lie is to truth, and is in no way worthy the name of a Spiritualist. The fraud is not a medium for Spiritualism, because he does not stand between the truths of Spiritualism and the people, but is the exponent of falsehood and stands between falsehood and the people.

And when a medium of Spiritualism practices fraud, he or she, whoever they may be, then and there denounces Spiritualism and proclaims it a lie. Let him bear the shame and contempt of a liar and wear its stamp on his forehead until he repents in sackcloth and ashes, and abandons his fraudulent practices forever.

He has declared himself a non-Spiritualist and tried to brand it with a lie: The divine teacher said he that is not for me is against me. The fraud medium is a Judas; seeking the pieces of silver which is his highest motive. He sells his birthright for a mess of pottage. He makes his father's house a house of merchandise. He sells the doves which are the emblems of peace that heaven has bequeathed to every true Spiritualist to quiet his restless spirit. The fraud betrays the Master with a kiss, if truth represents the Master. He forfeits his spiritual gifts, if he ever had any. He becomes the fit associate of Ananias and Sapphira, and is no longer associated with those in spirit as their representative of the truth, and if any longer used as a medium, he or she a fraud must be used by those in spirit life who do not stand for truth but are given to falsehood, deceived and deceiving.

Spiritualism stands for truth and righteousness, and a fraud can never represent it, and should be denounced and exposed everywhere in the strongest manner.

PURPOSE! PURPOSE!

That Should Be Selected Instead of Infinite Intelligence.

To the Editor:—Your communication entitled "An Open Court" is at hand and contents noted. The first and seventh questions being the most important from my standpoint, I will write as briefly as possible concerning them. Before I do this, however, I wish to state that there should be no alarm felt as a result of the difference of opinion concerning whether we should be Christian Spiritualists or any other kind of Spiritualists. This is all as it should be in order that we, as Spiritualists, should have what I am pleased to term a magnificent diversity of individuality.

Now as to the first question, instead of having "We believe in Infinite Intelligence," I would have it read, "We believe in Purpose." You see belief after all is based on evidence. I have heard many people say that a fool could believe, but it took a very brave person to say that he knew. Well, suffice it to say that it is pretty nearly the opposite. Let me say that knowledge is based on experience, observation and reason. I have never experienced or observed myself living in the next life, therefore from these two standpoints I do not know. But I have received communications purporting to come from the next expression of life. I now apply deductive and inductive reasoning and as a result I believe and I may as well add, so far as human knowledge is concerned, I know. But you see this conclusion has been arrived at as a result of a reasoning process outside of experience and observation. Now the reason why I want Purpose inserted in the N. S. A. declaration of principles, instead of Infinite Intelligence, is because it does not imply good or evil but both. There is no way to demonstrate Infinite Intelligence, therefore I do not believe in it.

I would also have instead of the Golden Rule another rule with more gold and common sense in it. It is: "Good for good, and justice for evil." If we had a rule like this people would begin to think that we meant what we said.

The law of self-preservation is the first law of nature, and it is not likely that we will meet over seventy-five millions of people in America that won't take a yard when you offer them an inch. Let us use a little judgment about these matters and we will yet be a distinct and an independent and yet interdependent scientific religious movement. We have the possibilities, and I might add the probabilities of becoming a world power. The world will move in space whether we live in it or not. We are only after all but little grains of sand on the sea-shore.

Now concerning question No. 7, I wish to say that I have always been against publishing reports of exposures, for the following reasons:

1. Why publish an exposure without first giving the medium of mediums an opportunity to defend themselves. The mediums may be able, if given an opportunity, to satisfy the publishers that their informants are not quite as reliable as they at first thought they were. I do not say but that in the majority of cases the informants may be perfectly sincere and honest when they desire an article in which some medium is supposed to have been exposed, but honesty and sincerity is no evidence of accuracy. A person may be really honest and yet be wrong. Why not give the mediums the privilege of cross-examining the witnesses?

2. After a medium has been proven to be a fraud, why not just mention in the Spiritualist papers that such and such a medium is not endorsed by the Spiritualists at large? I am most emphatically opposed to permitting outsiders to come into our midst and tell us what to do. Let them run their own organization and hunt out the frauds among the clergy of all denominations, and especially their own, before they come and attempt to purify Spiritualism. I am of the opinion that we surely know more about our own business than people that do not belong to our ranks. How about the idea of appointing perfect men and women to weed out the frauds from our ranks? I tell you, friends, that there is not a little jealousy existing in human beings, but quite enough to go all around without probably missing any of the mediums. So you see we might account for some of the supposed exposures from this standpoint.

In conclusion I wish to say that it is my prayer that we will all get together soon and see to it that justice will prevail and that innocence will be a shield of protection. I know that the purpose of life is to make the world better as a result of our having lived in it and wishing that this article will help bring truth uppermost, I remain as ever, a worker in the great cause of emancipation from the narrow injustice of the past to where the light of liberty may bathe the shores of our minds and where the sun of freedom may reflect its rays upon our souls!

HOW A HYPNOTIST MADE A FORTUNE.

The Secret Methods by Which Dr. La Motte Sage, the Greatest Hypnotic Scientist of the Age Created a Tremendous Sensation.

He Firmly Believes Hypnotism a Public Benefit. Has Donated $10,000 Toward the Free Distribution of a Handsomely Illustrated Book Containing His Views and Suggestions on How to Acquire This Mysterious Power and Use it in Business, in Society and in the Home.

While the Special Edition Lasts a Copy of this Remarkable Book Will Be Sent Free to Any Interested Person.

Dr. X. La Motte Sage made a fortune out of Hypnotism. He probably knows more about the subject than any living man. His methods are radically different from any ever before presented. By his new system he hypnotizes people instantaneously. He tells you how to exert tremendous silent influence without making a single gesture or saying a single word. He gives the only real, practical methods for the development of the power of Personal Magnetism that have ever been published. During all the time that Dr. Sage was before the public he made his business to note carefully the effect of hypnotism upon the human mind. He became convinced that this mighty mysterious power could be utilized to the advantage of ambitious men and women who wished to better their condition in life. To demonstrate the correctness of his ideas when he retired from public life he founded a college where Hypnotism, Personal Magnetism, Magnetic Healing, etc., might be taught along the definite lines he had laid down. The result is that the college has grown to be the largest of its kind in the world. Thousands of successful students in all parts of the globe are living witnesses to the wonderful power and the great practical benefits to be derived from Dr. Sage's methods. The Doctor has recently written a book entitled "The Philosophy of Personal Influence," in which he tells in plain, simple language just how to acquire hypnotic power and the various uses to which it may be put. Among the many interesting things upon which the book treats are: How to develop magnetic power and influence people without their knowledge; how to cure bad habits and obstinate caronic diseases, when medicine and everything else in this line fails; how to implant a command in a subject's mind that he will carry out in every detail a month or a year hence, whether the hypnotist is present or not; how to hypnotize people at a distance; its value in business; marvelous scientific tests how to prevent people from influencing you; hypnotic power more fascinating than beauty; the use of hypnotism in the development of the mental faculties; controlling children; removing domestic troubles, etc.

The college which Dr. Sage has founded proposes to give away $10,000 worth of the above books absolutely free so long as the special edition lasts. Any person who is in earnest can get a copy merely by writing for it. This book is handsomely illustrated by the finest half-tone engravings. It tells you how the marvelous power of hypnotism has been used to cast a secret mystic spell over people without their knowledge and how they have been for months, and in some cases even years, obeying the royal will of another. It gives you the secret of the development of what Senator Chauncey M. Depew calls the money-making microbe. Don't think because you lack a fine education and are working for a small salary that you cannot better your condition; do not think because you are now successful in life that you cannot be more successful. Dr. Sage's book has been read and his methods are to-day being used by many of the richest men in the world. They know the value of personal influence, of hypnotic power. If you are interested write to-day to the New York Institute of Science, Dept. MK3, Rochester, New York, and a copy of Dr. Sage's book will be sent you by return mail absolutely free. This is a rare opportunity to learn the uses and possibilities of the most wonderful, marvelous and mysterious power known to man. The book is enthusiastically indorsed by the most prominent business men, ministers of the gospel, lawyers and doctors. It should be in every home; it should be read by every man and woman in this country who wants to better his condition in life, who wants to achieve greater financial success, win friends, gratify his ambitions and get out of life the pleasure and happiness which the Creator intended he should enjoy.

THE N. S. A.

Its Composition and Its Objects Set Forth.

It is, or should be, one of the leading principles prominent in the minds of all intellectual and enlightened people, to work for the betterment and advancement of the human race.

We see an approximation to this principle among the nations of the earth, in the various institutions that are provided and set apart expressly to the public, wherein to educate and improve the incoming generations. Hence, as the brain becomes expanded, the mind becomes enlarged, large thoughts fill the place of the old, new and more expensive ideas present themselves, old themes are discarded, new grounds are explored, new fields for action are brought to view, and must be occupied; hence old teachers must be discarded, new ones of up-to-date intellect and accomplishments sought out, that the advanced ground taken must be held and properly represented. Thus change following change is inevitable.

Hence the Spiritualists should have a "Declaration of Independence;" a code of simple facts, founded on the Hydesville raps, the intercommunication of departed beings with those of earth, and a general relation of all humanity, and of such a nature that all genuine Spiritualists could subscribe to it.

The long list mentioned in the "Open Court" are not true and genuine Spiritualists, but amalgamationists, with personal, formulated ideas; hangers-on, tinctured with old orthodoxy, and other "isms" and striving to profit by affixing to their theories the word "Spiritualism."

What is the N. S. A. and its composition?

What is its object?

It is, or was, composed of personal individuals, without authority, and organized from a personal representation.

Its object, no doubt was to propagate, and to disseminate the true principles of Spiritualism; and to this end they formulated a code of principles to suit the exigencies of the times as near as possible, but they need revising.

First, then, in the declaration of principles, as adopted at the Chicago convention, 1899, Article 1: Entirely eliminate it from the code of principles, as it is entirely indefinite, and without any signification. We might with the same propriety say, that we believe in infinite ignorance, as in infinite intelligence—as both comprise ignorant nonsense.

Second: Eliminate last clause of article No. 2, and insert the words, are of eternal existence.

Third: Eliminate article No. 3 entirely from the declaration of principles as it is without any significance at all.

State associations are the most essential part, being the most legitimate foundation of the N. S. A.

Most assuredly, the foundation should be precisely alike, and they should conform to the organization of the N. S. A. and their by-laws as near alike as the different locations will permit.

There should be no partiality or favoritism shown or bestowed on any one; but all, equally alike, should come up legitimately through local organizations; consequently there would be no voting privileges for any one.

Question 4. Most assuredly; but not to the exclusion of advice and assistance from the N. S. A. in weak localities.

Every state having a state organization, and represented in the N. S. A., should be entitled to one trustee, and one at large for those states having an excess of membership.

Much time might possibly be saved, but I think it would be a mistake to preclude the reports of the president, secretary, treasurer, etc., as those reports are a part of the business of the N. S. A., and the comments thereon are generally very interesting, and to debar the hearing of those reports from those present, would be to deprive the convention, of one-half the interest, and zeal required to sustain the institution.

Where actual fraud and trickery is practiced, by well-known spiritual mediums, in the name of Spiritualism, and is exposed beyond a doubt, by reliable people, it should be by all means published in all Spiritualist papers, that all may know who are frauds and who are not; but where low trickery is practiced in the name of Spiritualism it should be entirely ignored, and unnoticed, as it but publishes their avocations, and gives them notoriety before the public, in the name of Spiritualism, free of expense.

SUGGESTIVE THOUGHTS

As Expressed by an Aged, Venerable Worker.

Recognizing the vast importance of spiritual culture and growth, above material and temporal, worldly and selfish life of the present age, and noticing the natural inharmony in this great country between the friends in the East and West, North and South in relation to minor matters and the N. S. A., therefore I would suggest that we plant in our thought and minds the seeds of Uses to all the world—the tree of knowledge of the fruits of the Golden Rule, which always in every clime produces health and happiness, such as Jesus prayed for and the Christians enjoyed before the apostasy, and the worship of the Gold God of Selfishness vs. the Golden Rule.

I would suggest that as we now know beyond any question that life continues without end that we know of after the change called death, which is the new birth into a higher life of uses, by the Golden Rule; we are compelled to do as we would be done by, to get up higher; therefore, let us discontinue trivial discussions, a waste of words and time, and plant ourselves on the sure foundation of the Rock of Ages, the Fatherhood of God, the Brotherhood of Man, the Sisterhood of Woman—our duties to children and to all of God's creatures.

The city of Washington, D. C., is the center of the United States, and if not now, soon will be the center of the civilized world. Therefore it is the right place for the N. S. A. to be permanently established, as the United States Congress and the White House for national and international uses, pro bono publico. All its business should be done in Washington instead of changing from city to city. The annual meeting should be held Feb. 22 in memory of the Father of our nation. We now have members of Congress and in many departments of government and will soon have the whole thing if we continue in office the present able management. Why not? A. H. Love has been re-elected 37 times president of the Universal Peace Society, because he is competent and honest. Are not the the present officers of the N. S. A. competent and honest? What more do we want?

There should be a state society organized in every state to meet at its capital city every year during the session of its legislature. The object of these societies should be Uses; to be useful and educate orphans and begin with one as Geo. Muller did. Massachusetts has a suitable building, so has New Jersey. These state societies will naturally become educational centers for newspapers, books and libraries.

FREEDOM AND INDEPENDENCE.

Spiritualists Not Subservient to Bossism

In regard to amendments to the organic law of the N. S. A. and what changes might prove beneficial, I would first suggest a relief from arbitrary domination and a more liberal extension of the society's privileges. As an organization, at present it does not appeal to thousands of true and pronounced Spiritualists, or in any way enlist their interest. While many of them have no spirit of ill-feeling against it, their sympathy is not aroused in its favor, and they have small faith in its efficiency or in its success as a disseminator of spiritual knowledge. The reason for this is, in part at least that it has been run as a close corporation or patterned after close communion church societies. It has been too exacting and too exclusive with regard to its participants and shows an inclination to put up fences to inclose the elect. This disposition will never win in Spiritualism. Its followers require freedom and independence. No class of people are individually less subservient to bossism than they, and their temper will resent any attempt to unduly control their action. There are some who will accept the rein and make the personal concessions that it demands, but great numbers of genuine Spiritualists who are outside and have never chosen to cooperate with the organization are quite willing that it shall run its course until it is discovered that its methods must be revised and a new alignment made suggested by experience.

It would be more satisfactory if the term of the president were limited to one year and his re-election prohibited. This would give fresher action and greater variety of administration, prevent the formation of rings and selfish manipulation in the procedings.

It would be wise to not expend a single penny for publishing the reports of the association's officers. They are of only temporary interest and are of very little benefit in that way. The spiritual papers will publish them gratuitously as matter of news and in that way they will reach all the people that care to read them. They should be furnished in time to publish them simultaneously by all the papers at once, and there should be a fair understanding on this subject. They will be of more interest and do the association more good if published prior to the session than afterward.

Fraud associated with manifestations should be treated on an equality with fraud connected with any other business or belief. It should neither be made more nor less prominent. The very worst frauds at the present time attached to Spiritualism are the hypocrites and pious Pharisees that are seeking to overthrow its facts by misrepresentation and pure lying. If any preference be shown it should be given to them. Far more importance should be attached to emphasizing the truth and vividly presenting what has been proven and can be demonstrated.

"Error wounded writhes in pain and it is not necessary to attend her funeral or play the dead march at the obsequies of expiring falsehoods. Truth and the genuine will survive because of their innate vitality. On the public highway it is not necessary to give attention to every irate barking cur that thinks to stop the electric car in which you are riding. Lean back in serenity and have faith in essentials.

The spiritual papers are the best means for missionary work. Every generous Spiritualist should take one, not simply to read in his own family, but to use as a tract subsequently. Give it or send it to those that you believe it will benefit. Keep at this work faithfully and you will effect more good in the end than if you go to the N. S. A. every year. The first duty of all Spiritualists is to sustain the Spiritualistic press.

VERY GRAVE DOUBTS.

In Reference to the Success of the N. S. A.

To the Editor:—Your circular letter of September 2 came duly to hand, in which you ask my opinion on the various subjects contained therein.

First let me say that I think you have most clearly stated the difficulties that lie in the path of the successful organization in one compact body of all the professed Spiritualists of the United States and Canada. Although I have been more or less identified with the present National organization since its inception at Chicago in 1893, I have grave doubts of its ever accomplishing what its most zealous friends anticipate.

There seems to be but one question on which we all agree, i. e., that the so-called dead do and can communicate with the living under certain conditions which we do not fully understand. However, I agree with you that, notwithstanding the divergence of opinion of the leading Spiritualists of America on all subjects except as above indicated, there is still room for the present National organization to do great work.

First, you ask what changes in its organic law will make the N. S. A. more efficient. I would make the office of president a non-salaried one, and for the term of one year. I would make the membership of the National body consist of delegates from state associations only, and no delegates from local societies.

We must build from the bottom up, and not from the top down as we are now trying to do. Other changes for the better might be made, but I deem the above important.

To your second question I say yes. State associations are essential and should be of uniform characteristics.

I believe in individual members of state associations, and they should have full voting privileges.

The state association should have sole charge of the missionary work in its territory.

I think as a matter of policy that but one member of the board of trustees should come from any one state.

Sixth. I certainly think it should.

Seventh. One of the most vitally important questions to be discussed in the above lists, in the language of David Crockett, "Be sure you are right, then go ahead."

With the well-known fact that with scarcely an exception all public mediums, no matter what phase of mediumship they represent, have been exposed and denounced as fakes. That such injustice has been done in the past to persons that I might name, I am quite sure. We know so little of the laws governing mediumship that we should be very careful how we sit in judgment on what seems to be fraud. I am not now, neither have I ever been an apologist for fraud or trickery in any department of life, neither do I feel like condemning on the mere statements of others. I depreciate this indiscriminate cry of fraud, fraud. In my opinion there is far less of it than some people think.

Brethren, do not be alarmed; all the frauds in the universe will not stop the onward march of Spiritualism. Better let a dozen guilty ones escape than condemn an innocent one, is my motto. That we have frauds masquerading in our ranks as spiritual mediums, I have no doubt.

When all the world gets honest, we will have all honest mediums; until then we will have to put up with some things we don't like.

If I were publishing a spiritual paper and I became absolutely certain that a fraud was being perpetrated, I would expose it, otherwise I would keep silent.

SUCCINCT ANSWERS

To Several Very Important Questions.

To the Editor:—I beg to make a general answer to some of your questions, thereby saving a little space. You ask in substance:

1. What changes in the organic laws of the N. S. A. will make it more efficient?

2. Are state associations essential? If so, should they not be organized on a uniform plan?

3. Should there be individual members of the state associations? If so, should they have full voting privileges?

I think a uniform plan of state organization is necessary to the extent that essentials to representation from state organizations should be the same in each state.

To be systematic, where there are state organizations, a certain number of representatives to the National Association, with voting power, should come from the state associations. As there have been state organizations in some states for many years, I would favor the continuation of such organizations and the establishment of new ones in every state as soon as possible.

I would favor representation to the National Association from all organized societies of a stated membership, where the annual dues are paid amounting to a uniform sum, with voting power, until we are more firmly grounded as a National organization.

In addition to the foregoing, I favor representation with or without voting power, as shall be deemed most wise, upon the credentials of not less than twenty-five Spiritualists, not members of any representative organization, declaring themselves to be such, giving the name and address of each, all of whom must reside within the same county as the representative, who shall contribute an affiliating fee of ten dollars.

In addition to the foregoing requirement I would suggest, that each person who seeks to be so represented, as evidence of qualification, shall be an annual subscriber to one or more of the current weekly Spiritualist journals.

In answer to your fourth question I will say, I think as a rule, that state organizations should be responsible for all missionary work within their own territories, with power to the National Association in special cases to render assistance.

To your fifth question, as to whether any state should be entitled to more than one representative upon the board of trustees, I beg to answer that I would favor leaving that to the good sense of the convention, as some states are very sparsely populated, while others have a great population, presenting a larger number of desirable persons from whom to choose.

I think the reports of the president, secretary and treasurer of the National Association should first be presented to the convention in printed form. I do not think it wise to publish these reports in advance.

To your seventh and most important question, as to the propriety of publishers of Spiritualist papers refusing to print any and all exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism, when satisfied of their informant's responsibility, I beg to suggest in reply, that I favor the publication of every method, trick and device known to the editor by which fraud may be perpetrated in the name of Spiritualism or spiritism, and to keep all this information ever before the public; also, I favor the publication of the methods by which fraud may be detected. As to the propriety of publishing all alleged exposures, this is a matter which must rest in the discretion of the publisher, remembering that unless we attempt to keep a clean household, we shall lose the growing respect which the world entertains of us.

A. H. DAILEY.

THE LYCEUM.

Is Suggested as Worthy Special Attention.

Remembering that The Progressive Thinker is always an open court, I come with a few thoughts which of late have occupied my mind. The majority of Spiritualists are, I am convinced, conscious of a thorough organization, not of Spiritualism but of those who are living the peace and daily joy which the knowledge of Spiritualism affords; this organization to be clear of all ecclesiastical form or creed, or claim of such power.

To me this is to be accomplished by a National Association (such as we have) supported by chartered state associations which shall be composed of the local chartered societies in the several states. The N. S. A. having at one time granted charters to local societies, interferes with the uniformity which should exist and which must be carefully brought about. The successful work of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates in our state shows me that as soon as the several states are organized—and nearly all of them can be by carefully planned missionary work—such workers can go from state to state under the auspices of each state association, for surely the state should be responsible for the work done within her borders. The work of these missionary workers is a very sacred one. Many times they are to tell to seeking souls the first message of Spiritualism, and we cannot be too careful as to whom is placed in the field to teach and promulgate the principles of a great National association.

The ordinary differences of individual opinions among Spiritualists as to creed or no creed, the Christian-Bible Spiritualist or the atheistic and independent Spiritualist, must be lost sight of, and the beautiful thoughts of inherent justice, personal responsibility and love triumphant ever not only hate but death, be tenderly administered; with this, too, must be the proof of spirit return by actual demonstration, which in my mind is so sacred that it should be given to those who are seeking and will remove their sandals to enter the seance-room with the proper conditions to insure the sensitive favorable forces, rather then placing our mediums before an audience of scoffers and expect them to give accurate readings and messages. The time was when it seemed necessary to give phenomena promiscuously, but now there are hosts who are anxious to consecrate an hour and a place to seek communion with the so-called dead.

Here, too, is another proposition, the trickster. As long as the public's demands are catered to, so long there will be a host of "tramp mediums" who are determined by some power or another to satisfy; organization must protect the investigator from these who are unworthy of their patronage. The spiritual press can do much in this direction by publishing the unbecoming conduct of these mountebanks. There is nothing more void of spirituality than to pretend the return of the loved ones whom we think dead; and such spiritual lepers should be severely branded.

I do, Mr. Editor, and reader, think that much time may be saved by the reports of the officers and missionary workers of the N. S. A. being published in the spiritual press before the convention.

In conclusion, I must mention with emphasis the department of our cause which should receive special attention by the missionaries every where; the Lyceum, which is a school of liberal education, where the aged and youth may be taught such tolerance, love and brotherhood that superstition and bigotry will die, and hate, envy and selfishness will be replaced with co-operation and genuine human sympathy. When the children are raised to know mankind as a brotherhood, and the world as a place where "there is no high and no low save in spiritual attainment," which the lyceum teaches, then there will be less distinctions of thought among Spiritualists and we will not need to go forth to convince people that Spiritualism is a fact in nature, but will go to give the glad, sweet and tender message of the ever overshadowing hosts who with sacred love minister unseen to the denizens of earth. Organize the lyceum and teach the child to be true to self, to love Creative Energy as it is manifest in Nature everywhere, and especially in human lives, and not let his mind be filled with the stale mythology of a wrathful deity whose anger is appeased only by the shedding of blood. There are so many principles upon which we all agree that their beauty and comfort will so occupy us that the common brotherhood will not be disturbed by any minor point of difference.

WHY BE SICK?

Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Famous Physician and Scientist Has Perfected a System of Treatment that Gives Hope to Every Sufferer.

Read His Valuable Book, "A Message of Hope"—it will Explain to You this Wonderful Treatment and Tell You How You Can be Healed.

Why will you continue to suffer when there is a treatment at hand that will cure you? Dr. Peebles and his associates, all physicians of wide experience and reputation, have perfected a system of treatment that promises health and strength to all.

J. M. Peebles, A. M., M. D., Ph. D.

Many of their cures seem almost like miracles, for hundreds of those restored had traveled far and wide, trying this doctor and that, without getting any relief and were about to give up in despair when they began the treatment of Dr. Peebles.

They are able to do such wonderful cures because they work in harmony with nature, and employ her mighty healing forces in connection with mild, scientifically prepared medicinal remedies. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the depleted system, enriches the blood, improves digestion and assimilation, gives strength and tone to weakened nerves and muscles, and permanently repairs wasted tissues and organs, causing thousands of the sick to rejoice at being healed.

Why don't you sit down, at once, and write the doctors a plain, truthful letter as to your condition as you see it? If you will do this, they will carefully examine your case and send you a full diagnosis of your condition, and tell you truthfully whether or not they can cure you. This will cost you nothing, and if they find they can cure you, they will make their charges so small that anyone can afford the treatment.

If you are sick, write them at once for their full diagnosis and professional advice which will be sent without charge, together with their wonderful book, "A Message of Hope," which will explain fully this grand system of treatment and give you information that will brighten the remainder of your life. A SOLID ROCK FOUNDATION.

A Good Thing to Have Under Any Structure.

True to the character, object and spirit of the valuable paper you publish and are sending broadcast throughout this and other countries, you are again on deck with a series of questions with the view of promoting the progress of the cause in general, and that of the N. S. A. in particular. If one may judge by the title of your paper, its readers may be presumed to be "progressive thinkers," and, therefore, you should reap a rich harvest in replies.

I think it will not be denied that the N. S. A. is not as efficient as it might be, or as its friends would be glad to have it be. That it can in the present status of Spiritualism, or in the control of an entirely new corps of officers whoever they may be, be at once made more efficient than it now is, is a question which, individually, I do not feel competent to decide.

You have certainly struck the keynote of the causes which operate against the progress of Spiritualism as an organized movement in your reference to the dissimilar beliefs or the heterogeneous character of its adherents upon questions more or less related to the one supreme question—the possibility of communion with the so-called dead, and the certainty of a future existence. As long as this supreme question is settled in the minds of only a comparative few, known as Spiritualists; as long as the orthodox church simply believes but does not know that death does not end all; as long as there is an infidel, materialist or agnostic here or elsewhere who honestly and conscientiously ridicules the very idea of spirit return, so long will it be the principal duty of Spiritualists to furnish the proof of a life beyond. And that proof must be furnished unadulterated with fraud and humbug or we shall make no impression whatever upon those we are most anxious to convince of the truth of Spiritualism.

All other questions, then, should be made subordinate or secondary to the one important question until universally established and accepted, i. e., the question of the proof of a future existence.

Let us pay our attention to the development of that proof rather than to the questions which will naturally grow out of it when once it is generally established. It will then be time enough to discuss them. As long as we do have here and there undeniable proof from phenomena which are unquestionably true and bona fide, we have a solid rock foundation upon which to base our hope and expectation of yet greater and more universal developments in the domain of evidence divested of the least suspicion of fraud. There is no telling what the twentieth century has in store for the human race along the line of what is now termed the occult.

It would be very difficult, aye, impossible for any man now to conceive the very happy results to the human family which would spring from the absolute universal knowledge of a life beyond what we call death,—a knowledge as self-evident to the human mind as that day follows night. Who can measure the happiness that would result from such universal knowledge, not belief? What effect would it have on selfishness, trusts, syndicates, soulless corporations, monopolies, the golden rule, "live and let live," etc?

In answer to your first question, I have not at hand a copy of the organic law of the N. S. A., and therefore can not respond intelligently.

To your second, I believe that state associations are essential and that they should all work in the interest of and in harmony with the N. S. A. I also think there should be individual members of state associations and that they should have full voting powers. I am also of the opinion that if the N. S. A. has the undivided support of all state and subordinate societies, the burden of missionary work should be placed upon it. I should be in favor of more than one representative of a state society being on the board of trustees of the N. S. A., say two or three.

I would also be in favor of the reports of the president, secretary, treasurer and missionaries being printed in the Spiritualist press a week or two in advance of the annual meeting.

I am somewhat surprised at your seventh question, Brother Francis, "Should the publishers of Spiritualist papers refuse to print any or all exposures of trickery," etc? Have you any doubt about what my answer would be?

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

What Change Will Make the N. S. A. More Efficient?

Our spiritual organizations are for the purpose of gaining more knowledge pertaining to the phenomena and teachings of Spiritualism, the better protection of Spiritualists, their property, and the general betterment of humanity.

As Spiritualists we must not forget that harmony is the strength and support of all institutions.

Now the first question of the investigator or prospective member of such organization is, what constitutes a Spiritualist? What do they believe?

And the only answer that will fit in all cases, is: A Spiritualist is one who believes in the continuity of life, and communion with the so-called dead. This all Spiritualists can accept.

But to this add a belief in reincarnation, infinite intelligence, astrology or any other theoretical teaching, and there will be many who cannot accept it; yet no organization will object to a member holding some belief that all cannot accept, and as a thinking people we admit there could be no progression if all were of the same mind or belief on all things.

However, the continuity of life and spirit communion is not a theory, it is a demonstrated fact.

When an individual becomes liberal enough so he will investigate, he will meet with such demonstration, and he cannot help believing he knows, hence he is a Spiritualist.

Now since this belief or knowledge is what makes us Spiritualists, it seems to me that we should make this thought well stated, the center around which we could all come in harmony, and it does seem that we should be liberal enough, not to ask our brother to endorse something he does not believe, thereby making himself a hypocrite in order that he may join our society.

As a speaker and improvisator I have been urged to take ordination under the state and National organization, but positively refused because I cannot endorse the declaration of principles.

If I did believe that "the phenomena of nature physical and spiritual are the expression of infinite intelligence," I would be an infinite intelligentist, and not a Spiritualist. I would be on a par with Moses and the prophets, who, when holding communion with the spirits claimed to be talking with God.

With a belief in that statement, I should be compelled to admit that all communications were from the infinite, hence to me there would be no such thing as spirit communion, and no proof of the continuity of life.

Now to best further the efficiency of the N. S. A., I would repeal the present declaration of principles all except the fourth and fifth clauses, which I would make the central thought around which we could all gather in perfect harmony.

And further, if all Spiritualists wish to affirm that all phenomena are in perfect harmony with natural law, hence natural and not supernatural or miraculous phenomena, I could not object.

We might also affirm that, a correct understanding of the phenomena, philosophy, and the higher teachings of our spirit friends, and the living in harmony therewith constitute the true religion of Spiritualism.

But in the spirit of fairness, I say, for the sake of harmony, friendship and brotherly love, do not adopt any thought to which there is one dissenting vote coming from one who is a real believer in the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism.

In regard to other questions, I will not venture an answer, but leave them to such as have made them a study.

As to fraud, I detest it in any spot or place, yet we find it sown broadcast over the world, in every nation, not alone among our mediums, but among the leaders in every church, as well as among the higher representatives of states and nations.

No expose or punishment can blot it out. To me it seems higher education alone points to the way of relief.

The grandeur of truth and right, and the sacredness of spirit communion, when understood, should bring purer lives and higher motives.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

Fraud Should Never Be Condoned.

To the Editor:—Responding to your Open Court enquiries, various suggestions are presented to mind, not all of which can well be here conveyed, especially as to the changes desirable in the organic laws of the National Spiritualists Association, which the experiences of the past few years make apparent, except in answer to the succeeding questions, to which I would reply:

The N. S. A. should be composed of state associations only, all state organizations to be constructed on a uniform plan so far as their remoteness from each other and the central body may permit, their differences to be only on minor matters.

There should be no individual members of either state or National associations except honorary members who from efficient or long service, or both, might be admitted, in which case they should have no more voting power than is customary with other bodies, which as a rule do not permit voting of honorary members on matters of the business of the organization, or until they affiliate.

All missionary work should be planned and executed as nearly as possible by the states where state associations exist, to be reported and approved by the National, the latter sending missionaries only to barren fields where no state associations exist. The state should call upon the National for such assistance financially as is needed to carry on its work when approved.

Each state being equally entitled to representation, there should not be more than one representative on the board of trustees from each state, in accordance with the principles of true Americanism, of equity and justice. A policy otherwise tends to a monopoly of power, a perversion of equality, and dissatisfaction and discord.

Much time might be saved by the publication of the reports of the officers of the N. S. A. or in the distribution of leaflets prior to their presentation in convention.

The publishers of Spiritualist papers who are supposed to be the conveyors of all spiritual news-literature should not refuse by suppressing exposure of the truth, to publish or expose any practices of deceit, trickery, and fraud wherever and whenever found, or any practices which debase the dignity, honor and purity of Spiritualism. To be cognizant of a fraud within our household without rebuke or remonstrance is to condone it. It is unnecessary to give such the benefit of free advertising by undue display of condemnatory type, neither is it honorable for the spiritual press to publish paid advertisements of confirmed frauds for the sake of a fee. The indiscriminating advertising column has done more harm to the integrity and high moral standing of the spiritual press and societies, than anything the enemies of Spiritualism have done, or can say or do against it.

TO BE CRITICALLY TRIED.

Spiritualism Before an Open Court.

Of all vexed questions before the public mind, that of saddling any kind of yoke upon Spiritualism is the most perplexing.

If Spiritualism stands for anything, it stands for mental freedom, and thus far as our observation goes, it absolutely refuses to be yoked, or serve in shackles of any kind.

Organization except for business purposes, in a way shackles freedom of expression. To limit the utterances of a speaker, or to place a medium under certain restrictions, and you immediately put a hindrance upon their best work. Put a skylark in a cage and you lose your sweetest songs.

It is natural for any cult or sect to resolve itself into societies; first, local, then state, and then National, if need be; delegates from the local societies forming the state association, and delegates from each state association forming the National. This would simplify matters and make the transaction of business less complicated. And let each state association furnish its own missionaries.

The question of fraudulent mediumship is a difficult problem, much that is called fraud being due more to the cunning of the guides than to any desire to cheat on the part of the medium.

When proof positive has been given that anyone posing as a medium for spiritual manifestations has been proven a trickster, we hold it is the duty of any spiritual publication to expose them, and as far as possible warn the public against them. Our honest mediums will lose nothing, and Spiritualism will gain much when such impostors are known for what they are.

There is nothing that can take the place of honest mediumship—we hold it to have been the greatest gift of Spiritualism to the world. And those mediums who hold this gift untarnished are doing more for humanity, and the upbuilding of truth, than all the associations organized under a creed the world has ever known.

Millions in Peril

Millions of Americans Suffer from Heart Trouble and Don't Know It.

Statistics show that sixty-nine out of every one hundred have some form of heart trouble. Are you one of them? If so you should act at once. Sudden death from heart disease occurs with alarming frequency, and comes on when least expected. Almost every day we read of some important public official being stricken down without a moment's warning. Think of the countless thousands that die a similar death but because not known to the world at large no notice of their death is taken. Thousands doctor for their kidneys, stomach, lungs, nerves, or some other supposed disease when the whole trouble is with the heart. Is your heart right! Do you have palpitation, fluttering or skipping of the heart beat; shortness of breath after exertion, fainting spells or dizziness; choking sensations in the throat, cold hands and feet; dropsy, or swelling of the feet and ankles; pains around the heart, or through the shoulder blades; spots before the eyes; hungry, weak spells, or sudden starting in sleep? If you have any of the above symptoms your heart is affected, and you should waste no time in having it corrected. Write at once to Dr Peebles' Institute of Health, the renowned heart and nerve institute of Battle Creek, Mich., No. 10, Upton Block, for full particulars of their wonderful treatment for heart troubles. They have cured thousands that had been given up to die by the very best local doctors, and they can, no doubt, cure you. Write to-day, for another week may be too late.

MARK CHESTER,

OR

A Mill and a Million.

This is one of Carlyle Petersilea's most interesting works. It is purely a Psychical Romance such as the author is noted for producing. You need it in your library for the purpose of leading your romance-loving children out into the light of occultism. Price, cloth cover, 60 cts. For sale at this office.

JIM, or The Touch of An Angel Mother.

BY CARRIE E. S. TWING.

Her dedicatory lines are sufficient to show the spirit of the book as well as the author, it reads, "Because my own children are all under the tender care of the angels, and my heart is hungry for the love of the young, I most lovingly dedicate this book to the children of the world." This book is full of soul elevating and interesting thought. Price, cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

By S. Weil. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents. This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion, that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and facts.

BODY AND SOUL.

BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.

This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

Critical Suggestions.

Review of the Past and Present of the N. S. A.

To the Editor:—For several weeks your cordial invitation to contribute to your symposium, "The Open Court," in the shape of an article which you ask shall contain the writer's views on subjects of importance to all Spiritualists, has been upon my desk. Each day your bulletin "An Open Court," has been read, yet at the last moment I am tempted to put it one side, because of the lack of real interest there is in the building of the N. S. A.

When in 1893 the N. S. A. was organized, one of its objects as stated in its constitution was to prevent further waste of spiritual and financial energy by the consolidation and organization of Spiritualist societies of the United States into one central harmoniously working business association. Now, nine years after that period, you put forth the question: What changes in its organic law will make the N. S. A. more efficient?

From the experience which has come from a close study of the N. S. A. as well as its constitution and by-laws during that time, my answer would be to do away entirely with the present constitution and by-laws, and substitute one better adapted to the needs of the N. S. A. or else appoint a competent committee to go over it carefully, with a view to at least make it consistent with itself. There is scarcely a chartered society of the N. S. A. whose board of officers are familiar with its contents, and some of the members of the board of trustees of the N. S. A. evidently have never closely examined it. I would suggest that no one be elected to fill a position on the board, who has not passed an examination in the laws governing the N. S. A., and then affirmed his intention to carry out the instructions which have been voted by the delegates to the convention. The present constitution and by-laws is too complicated and should be amended, so as to allow the people to keep in touch with the workings of the N. S. A.

This state of affairs has been brought about, so far as the chartered societies are concerned, solely by the proxy system, which is more detrimental to the progress of the N. S. A. than any other thing connected with it. Why? Because the proxies who are appointed cannot come in touch with the societies they have represented save in few instances. No wonder we hear complaints from the societies of the west.

This is not, however, the fault of the board of trustees. All they can do is to carry out faithfully the instructions of the delegates to each annual convention. They are not responsible for the actions of the delegates. One only need look over the amendments to the constitution offered this year to see that the secretary of the N. S. A. calls our attention to the fact that the amendments are forgotten from one year to another.

State associations properly organized are a potent factor in connection with the N. S. A. provided they work harmoniously together, but there are so many kinds of state associations organized and chartered under the N. S. A. that it would take a "Philadelphia lawyer" to puzzle out their relations to one another. One state association has all individual members, another is composed of individual and delegate members, and still another of all delegate members. One is granted complete jurisdiction of the state, and thus prevents the chartering of local societies by the N. S. A., another state association does not want exclusive jurisdiction. Thus it is that the most important thing to do is to try to get some uniform plan of work.

At the present time in some state societies one delegate present at its annual convention is allowed to vote for every absent member of the society he represents, while in the N. S. A. does not allow a delegate to vote for more than one society in spite of the fact that every chartered society is entitled to vote on its charter according to the constitution, unless each chartered society is able to raise funds to send a direct delegate.

There should be some remedy for this state of affairs. Every society in good standing should be provided in advance with the important matters coming before the convention, and allowed to send sealed instructions which should be read to the convention, and acted on.

What is the real objection to having individual membership in the N. S. A. or in the state associations? The writer is thoroughly in harmony with the individual membership, but not of equal voting privileges. Our friend, Mr. Fronce, of Massachusetts, cannot vote at the annual convention unless he is a proxy, or a delegate, though he has contributed thousands of dollars. Our generous friend, Mr. Thompson, of Nebraska, charges the writer with making him a proxy for a Philadelphia society, so that he could be elected to the board of trustees.

If only one thousand persons would contribute $10 each year to the N. S. A. for membership we would soon be in a position to do our work properly and not be continually begging for money. In regard to voting privileges, individual members should not have the right to vote on any question which directly affects the interests of the chartered societies alone, but should be entitled to vote on all general questions.

Some of the opponents of individual membership, put forth as an argument, that societies should be represented in a National convention and not individuals. We answer: Our missionaries go around the country chartering societies wherever seven individuals will sign their names to an application. These societies are not put on probation, for any length of time, to see if they are to continue in active working order, but so long as any one, either an individual or any member of the seven, sends a donation to the N. S. A., however small, that so-called society is entitled to a vote in the annual convention of the N. S. A., either by delegate or proxy. I appeal in all earnestness to the Spiritualists of the United States, who are interested in the N. S. A. to show the difference between this and individual membership. The writer ventures to say that proxy voting is always individual voting, unless the proxy has a knowledge of the society represented.

There is something radically wrong here. Societies should not be chartered for the sake of increasing the number of chartered societies, and then allowed to hold proxy forever. It would be interesting to see a statement published of the number of chartered societies which are in active working order and of those which are not, together with the actual proxy representation at each convention.

How much better to allow active Spiritualists who are present at the convention to take out individual memberships, and take some part in the deliberations, than to carry so much dead wood and call it by the name of chartered societies.

Until the N. S. A. is run on business lines, and societies which cannot send delegates are allowed proper representation, there will always be friction.

You ask, Should not the responsibility of all missionary work, in its own territory rest upon each state association? Such a question is needless. What are state associations organized for if not to be made responsible for something?

Every state association that is granted exclusive jurisdiction, receives permission to do its work, in its own way, in its own territory without interference, and very much expense might be saved to the N. S. A., if instead of sending its missionaries to states where it has chartered state associations, it would put the responsibility on the state associations, and say as a parent says to a child: Do your best, use every effort, when you need our assistance you shall have it, meanwhile we will do our missionary work in places where there are no state associations. The writer has heard not one but many, make the statement that they could not afford to have missionary work done, under the auspices of the N. S. A. unless there was some change in the present method, as it left them in debt because of the distance the missionaries had to come. Officers of the state associations state that the N. S. A. missionaries deplete the treasuries of the societies in their states, and leave them without funds for their own work.

The above is no reflection on the N. S. A. missionaries. No one thinks they are getting too much for their labors, or that they have not faithfully performed their duties. They have earned every dollar they received. Not only that, but no money will repay them for the harships they have endured. The trouble is not with the missionaries, but with the method followed by the N. S. A. When a society in need of help, cannot secure the services of missionaries because of the expense attached to it, something is wrong and it should be remedied.

Missionary work could be conducted in the same way as a business man sends out his agents. I heartily echo the sentiments of W. H. Tull, in The Progressive Thinker of October 4, who says "that a large portion of their time (meaning the missionaries, mediums and speakers) is spent in riding over the railroads, and most of the money they receive is paid out for the same." Mr. Tull seems to think that there is no need of subjecting our missionaries to the constant railroad travel from post to pillar, when so much help is needed close at hand. The N. S. A. should make a strenuous effort to strengthen its already chartered societies instead of depleting their treasuries. If some of the money spent on railroads by our traveling missionaries was put into the hands of the officers of the state associations to use for missionary work under state auspices, much more would be accomplished. No business man would grant exclusive territory to an agent and then send other agents into the same territory to get all the money, or business there was in it. That is why there is friction between some of the state associations and the N. S. A.

Each state should be responsible for its own missionary work. You never hear of friction between the N. S. A. and the Massachusetts association. Why? Because the individual members supply the money to carry on the missionary work and the officers of the state association use all their efforts to strengthen the societies in their own state and so help the N. S. A. because every individual member of the state association is kept in touch with the N. S. A. Societies are encouraged in Massachusetts to join the N. S. A. directly. If the N. S. A. is to be a permanent success it must keep close to the people. At present most of the resources of the N. S. A. are coming directly from the very ones denied any representation on the floor of the convention.

You ask is any state entitled to more than one representative on the board of trustees in view of the fact that we have auxiliary societies in nearly every state in the Union. This is a difficult question to answer, yet it does seem as if some of the states are receiving all the honors. Pennsylvania has been represented eight of the nine years, and at present has three representatives on the board. Michigan has also had a full share of representation. Why would it not be a good plan to adopt Dr. Spinney's suggestion and change the trustees every year? This does not necessarily mean the officers, for it would be indeed a great loss if the present secretary and treasurer should by any chance be changed. It is not too much to say that much of the interest in the N. S. A. is due to the painstaking care of Mrs. Longley in her official work. The difference of system in the clerical work is marked, and she fills her position so as to command the appreciation of every one. As to Mr. Mayer, there is nothing to say except that there is but one Mr. Mayer, as there is but one President Barrett.

However, all the other trustees should be willing to give some of the other states a chance to show what they can do. There has never been a board of trustees who have worked harder than the present one, or accomplished more, so if it is a fact that three must reside in Washington, then those three, being the majority of the executive committee, can readily transact all the routine business of the year and by correspondence on important matters it would matter little from what states the other trustees were chosen. The feeling is in the air that more interest would be created if the trustees would decline once in a while to be re-elected, to let others be given the honor.

In regard to having reports printed before the convention in the Spiritualist press, the writer not only thinks it would save time, but that it is an actual necessity, if there is to be any actual co-operation with the societies chartered by the N. S. A.

How is it possible for a society which is unable to send a direct delegate, to send written sealed instructions to be handed to a proxy concerning how they wanted to be represented on matters coming before the convention, unless the reports are printed in advance? There is no reason why delegates should listen for hours to these reports read in the convention when they could be published in convenient form some weeks before the convention, or at least there could be issued a circular telling of the important matters that were to come before the convention. Such circular sent to each chartered society, would soon induce it to send proper instructions to a proxy, if not a delegate.

Another thing ought to be done, that is have the accounts audited in advance of the convention. This could easily be arranged for, as is done in other societies. Our best people are kept from the floor the greatest part of the time in committee rooms. Some provision ought to be made to change this. Everything that can be done in advance of a convention saves the time of the convention. Most of the delegates' tickets could be issued, and at least the financial accounts audited. When it comes to auditing the president's, serretary's, treasurer's and the missionaries' financial accounts, it means hard work for some one, and it is not fair to a delegate who comes to attend a convention, to make him work all the time. A little clerical work before the convention will do much to simplify the labor of the committees.

The most important questions to come before the N. S. A. convention, are, What are we going to do to strengthen our local societies, protect our mediums and healers? I am sincerely glad that the N. S. A. is going to eliminate some superfluous articles on ordination from its by-laws.

You ask "Should the Spiritualist press refuse to print any or all of the alleged exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism? We are inclined to think that this matter should be handled very discreetly, as what is published may act as a sword that cuts on either side.

The writer feels as keenly as anyone the outrage of trifling with the most sacred memories of the human soul, the ties that bind so strongly that even the change called death cannot sever. To us there is nothing more detestable than deception of this character.

However, we cannot see that it will be altogether a benefit to publish whatever may be claimed to be fraud, for the reason that individuals disagree upon the question. Experience is the great school of life, and all must learn life's lessons in that school, whether in the study of spirit phenomena, or any other subject. As this is a subject that cannot be settled by public discussion, we see no better way than to let the people investigate for themselves and take lessons in the school of experience. The saying, "To prove all things and hold fast to that which is good," is worthy of following, and seems to apply to this case or question. The decision of the human mind is the final decree, from which there is no appeal.

The writer is well known as a defender of mediums. The N. S. A. was organized to protect them, and has done a great work in that direction. This latest proposition of Mr. Mayer ought to arouse the Spiritualists to action. There is truth in what he says, that what we have to give, we should give while we can attend to it ourselves, so that we won't need a defense fund to maintain our wills.

Now, Mr. Editor, the questions have been answered and my views have been expressed. A free, frank expression of opinion can hurt no one. The N. S. A. is here to stay, and is doing a magnificent work. No one can doubt that when it was organized it was spirit born, and is spirit guided, and my best wishes are with it. These little differences are being adjusted every year, and the people are becoming more and more interested. May the coming convention prove one of the best we ever had and may its close find us all satisfied with the rule of the majority.

Every good act is charity; your smiling in your brother's face; your putting a wandered in the right road; your giving water to the thirsty is charity; exhortation to another to do right is charity. A man's true wealth hereafter is the good he has done in this world to his fellow-man. When he dies the people will ask "What property has he left behind him?". But the angels will ask, "What good deeds has he sent before him?"—Koran.

MOSES HULL'S OPINION.

Unprofitable Discussions Should Be Avoided.

To the Editor:—Although your letter did not reach me until after October 1, like Elihu, "I would also show mine opinion." Possibly the rebuke of Job to his "comforters" may fit my case, "O that ye should altogether hold your peace, and it should be your wisdom." The lateness of the time has caused you to escape a larger infliction.

There are many suggestions in your queries upon which I seldom write or speak. There are certain questions which Paul said only "gender strifes." Paul calls them "vain babbling;" or, a better reading would be "empty declamation."

In a few general thoughts, I would say, the National Association of Spiritualists does not claim perfection for itself. While it is composed of inexperienced mortals it can never reach perfection. It began its work without a proper organization behind it. It now looks to me that it had to thus begin or never begin at all. In fact the organizations out of which a National Organization should grow, are still few in number and feeble. Perhaps the very best thing that could have been done under the circumstances has been done.

You speak of the "differentiations" among Spiritualists. They are all there; but when all are whittled down to a point, many of them amount to very little, in fact they are hardly worth mentioning. Those differences, for the most part, can have very little effect on our daily lives; and on some points it will be a great while before they are settled.

For instance, reincarnation has never been demonstrated to be either true or false. Perhaps it never can be definitely settled. If we would all spend our time in talking about what we know, and leave unprofitable questions to those who have nothing else to do but to engage in "endless disputations," our cause would ripen faster.

When we begin to discuss or to define God, we always make a mistake. To define is to corral. The one who can tell just what and where God is, can tell just what and where God is not. Such a person has set bounds to the Infinite. Such a person is greater than the Infinite. That makes him, as Solomon said, "higher than the highest."

An atheist is one who denies God's existence; that no one can logically do. The most any one can say, within the bounds of logic, is, that after a most searching inquiry, I have failed to find God. The Infinite may elude the finite. My voice is, to let such questions alone, and go to work to build up among men the things which we can understand, and which can and will make better men and women of us.

In answer to your question numbered seven, my voice is always most emphatically, to keep nothing from the public which should be said. If I was connected with a newspaper, I would keep no well-proven facts from the public. If we do not expose the frauds and rascals who are with us just for the sake of what they can get out of us, we will sooner or later be exposed ourselves, as we ought to be. I would expose frauds, not as an act of enmity, but to save the world from their nefarious work. We have no more right to know what they are doing and not expose them, than we have a right to know of their intention to burn a neighbor's house over his head and not expose such person.

The time has come when our religion should be a holy religion. It should present a clean front to the world. Its speakers as well as its mediums should be pure and honorable men and women. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

Justice to true and honest workers demands that pretenders and frauds should be relegated to the rear. If this is not done they will soon drive us to the rear.

It is our duty to know that the supposed fraud is a fraud, before he is exposed, but when that fact is learned beyond dispute, he deserves no quarters. These frauds are closely banded together, and they threaten to visit dire calamities upon their exposers. Those who expose should be fearless. I would exclaim in almost the very language of Peter, "We ought to obey God rather than men."

While we know that Spiritualism is true, we know also that there are hundreds of mountebanks doing business in its sacred name. If exposing these men and women will stop this mischief, if it will call a halt on wicked charlatanry, by all means, and in the name of truth let it be done.

No good medium will suffer because of warnings against fakes and frauds. These rascals are barnacles on the good ship of Spiritualism; by all means let us clean them off.

MOSES HULL.

THE FAULT-FINDER.

It is easy to see, in our selfish view,
The faults of those we know,
As we sail on a sea, placid and free,
While the winds gently blow.

But at the first gale, and winds that blow,
That threaten our bark and crew,
Do we stand dismayed, and seek, for aid
Of those whose faults we knew.

It is easy to sail when our sky is clear,
And no stormy clouds may lower;
When the day goes down, and the shadows frown,
To the despot Fear we cower.

It is easy to tell what course to pursue,
To those who are humble and poor,
But we often miss love's sovereign bliss
To give of our plentiful store.

It is easy to prate of our superior power,
How in weakness others fell,
Our exalted place we only can trace
In the works our good deeds tell.

"ORIGIN OF LIFE."

A Final Word in Reply to the "Final Word."

In The Progressive Thinker, No 668, Elder Myrick fires his last shot at me, and winds up with a laugh; I suppose he thinks he laughs at my expense. But I must assure Brother Myrick that he is only laughing at his own incapacity to understand some very plain statements, and unanswered and unanswerable arguments.

The first laughable thing is, that he finds, in an article written some months since, that I am a materialist. Very good. I am. I am sure that matter exists. Always has existed. Always will exist. And I don't believe that spirit is something existing outside of matter, and sometime, in some way gets into matter. I don't believe that spirit ever did exist or ever can exist independent, or outside of some form of matter. There isn't the first scintilla of evidence of any manifestation of spirit only through matter. It is impossible to construct a sentence expressing so-called spiritual ideas except by the use of terms derived from material substance. The word spirit meant primarily "wind, air in motion; breath." And, when we speak of spirits, we do not think of an intangible nothing, but of a real though ethereal being, with what Paul calls a spiritual body.

But it is amusing to listen to a man crying out materialist, who worships a God who is seated upon "a throne high and lifted up," with a material body "sitting at his right hand," in a four-square city, its "streets paved with gold," its gates of pearl, with a river running through it, and trees on each side of it. A God who has "horns coming out of his head," who "rides upon horses," who carries a bow and arrows and a "glittering spear." A God who has a mouth, eyes, ears and nose, that smells with great gusto the fragrance of burning beef.

Think of it! A man scouting materialism, and preaching from a book whose heaven is to be peopled with the resurrected bodies of men and women, and its hell of fire and brimstone filled with the same material. There is no materialism so revolting and horrible as that of Christianity, of which Brother Myrick is a preacher.

But Brother Myrick thinks he has caught me contradicting myself. Not a bit of it. Life is as eternal as matter. But it is not outside of matter. It never got into matter, and it will never get out. There is no such thing as creation, as I have demonstrated. Hence, there is no such thing as a Beginning, or a First Cause. Causation is as eternal as life and matter. It never began, never could begin. Change in form begins and ends.

It will take Brother Myrick some time to get out of his little theological potato patch into the broad field of a natural Cosmos and a natural causation.

But the Elder's greatest fun is indulged in when he demolishes (?) my statement that effects transcend causes. I must remind him that before he makes such broad statements about scientists and physicists he had better read Comte's Positive Philosophy. He will understand causation better. He has not found out that the old theological notion of causation is rejected by every intelligent scientist, and by all intelligent thinkers, unless steeped in the old superstition of a creative god. He still stands on the same platform as Paley in his Natural Theology. He has a "Great First Cause," a master mechanic who created the world from nothing.

Now, outside of pure mechanical causation, what is termed cause denotes a transformation of matter and energy from one form and mode of motion to another, and the so-called cause becomes in part, at least, the effect. And, in the great whole of evolutionary development, the effect transcends the cause. This fact is so patent that no one but an ignorant Bible worshiper fails to see it. It is what our words evolution, progress and development mean, or else they have no meaning.

Go back some millions of years to the first forms of life on this planet. What do we find? The moneron. Little more in appearance, than a speck of sea slime. But it is alive. It eats, digests, feels, moves. It has functions, but no organs. But life has evolved, from this organless bit of protoplasmic life, up to man, and every step in that progressive evolution has been an upward one—has been a perfecting one. The effects have been transcending the causes in the evolution of organs and the exercise of functions impossible to primitive life forms. Neither Brother Myrick's God, nor any other God, could have made a man on this earth when the moneron was the first inhabitant.

And here Brother Myrick's laugh at my statement of physical causation comes in with a very bad grace, for without it neither God, nor any other being or energy could produce a man or a bird now. It is only by the working of the tremendous energies of electricity, attraction, repulsion, heat, etc., that matter has been so refined that a human nerve and brain could be produced. It took millions of years, if not ages, to prepare matter for such use. And, yet, with all this progress, all the gods, all the spirits, all the men in the universe, stand, to-day, conditioned, limited by matter. Its properties are indestructible, its laws are irrepealable. All the gods in the universe cannot compel only so many parts of oxygen and hydrogen to unite and form water. And so of all other chemical changes. If Brother Myrick's brain or mine should be deprived of a very small quantity of phosphorus we would become idiots instead of reasoning men, even if we did not die at once. It is pitiable to see apparently sensible men so bloated with ignorant vanity as to boast of the control of matter by thought, when that very thought is dependent upon the combination and collocation of matter. And all that thought or thinking can do, is to suggest the arrangement of matter in a proper relation to the operation of certain forms of energy. You may think music into a bugle to all eternity; but, if you don't put matter into it by blowing, no music will ever come out of it. Put matter and thought in harmonious co-operation and all is right.

As a final demonstration, I present this pregnant fact that no mind, no spirit has ever made a manifestation, in any form, independent of matter. Motion in matter is impossible except by a disturbance of the equilibrium of its inherent energy.

The spirit of the fathers challenges the boldest repudiation of Bibliolatry. I cannot reconcile an ethical Jesus and an honest manhood with what is now known of the canonical history of both the Old and New Testaments.—Rev. W. T. Hutchins.

D. W. HULL OUT WEST.

At Tacoma, Wash., He Talks of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism.

Spiritualism, according to the arguments presented by Rev. D. W. Hull, pastor of the First Spiritualistic church, in an address at Tacoma, Wash., was an integral part of the ancient worship of God, spiritual materialism, largely the manifestation generally referred to in Holy Writ as miracles, and the prophets of biblical history, mediums even as are the mediums of to-day. Jesus was a clairvoyant, a mind-reader, he states, and the word Christ means medium, or one anointed from the spirit world. Spirit writing is as old as the ten commandments, for the record of the Bible, he reads, that Jehovah, a spirit, after the first tablets of stone, with the commandments engraved thereon, had been dropped and broken, directed other tablets to be brought that He might again write them upon the stone.

The address was given under the title of "Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern," and was listened to with great interest by a large gathering in Foresters' hall, corner of Pacific avenue and South Eleventh street. In presenting his arguments for the existence of the belief in Spiritualism, and the preaching and practicing of its tenets, the speaker quoted largely from the Bible, expounding the same in the light of a knowledge of Greek and Hebrew. Death as presented by the speaker was merely a passing over from the material to the spiritual world. Mr. Hull said:

"We can do many things in the spirit; its power is shown in healing the sick by the laying on of hands; in the sending forth of a thought to affect the thoughts of others. Spiritualists do not believe we are going to heaven, or to hell, either. When asked once at a revival if I didn't want to go to heaven, I said I had lived in heaven for thirty years, and thought that when I died I would wake up in heaven still. We have a heaven within our soul. Everyone carries his own heaven or hell within him.

"The study of the language shows that demons are spirits of human beings. Also an angel is a departed human spirit. Human spirits have been lifted up to become Gods. They have even found the very tombs of Osiris, and of Isis, gods of the ancient Egyptians. They were human, but their spirits have been lifted up and apotheosized.

Instance of Manifestation.

"The manifestations we read of in the book are the same kind as we have now. We read how Jacob wrestled with the angel of the Lord, and the angel touched his thigh and put it out of joint. That was an instance of materialization. The references to "A man of God" means to a medium, and this is the blessing when it is said of Moses that the man of God blessed the people. Moses was a medium. Saul, when searching for his father's asses, wanted to find a prophet—a man of God; that is, a medium—to tell him their whereabouts. So you see these prophets are men of God, and men of God are mediums.

"I don't know but what it was a materialization on the mount of transfiguration. I intend to prove in another address that it was a materialization; that it was not Christ's body, but his spirit, that appeared to the people.

"Anything that is worth anything is worth counterfeiting; and so they counterfeit materializations, but if one materialization in a thousand is what it professes to be, that is enough for me. It proves them true.

"You know that darkness is the agency of certain manifestations. The Bible says that the Lord dwells in thick darkness. So many of the manifestations related in the Bible took place in the night. The inner sanctuary of the ark of the covenant was kept in darkness and the high priest wore two stones at his breast and by the brightening of one or the other received his answer, "yes" or "no," from God.

"We do have many manifestations in the light, but the light rays create a disturbance in the atmosphere which interferes with many manifestations. The appearance of the hand-writing on the wall at Nebuchadnezzar's feast was in the candle light and was a spirit manifestation.

"There are many references to mediums and materializations in the Bible. Balaam was entranced with his eyes open; Peter was entranced. Mediums can give much for others, but get nothing for themselves. David was a medium, yet he kept two prophets or mediums to help him."

The address was replete with biblical references bearing on the subject, and in comparison many interesting incidents and instances of later day materialization were given.

A RED-LETTER DAY.

Opening of the Morris Pratt Institute, at Whitewater, Wis.

The 30th day of September, 1902, is destined throughout time to be to the liberty-loving, free-thinking men and women, one of the most auspicious days in the history of the progress of mankind. On that day in the city of Whitewater, Wis., the first college or school in the world founded for the purpose of educating men and women along strictly free and untrammeled lines of thought, threw open its doors to the world and admitted as students some of the brightest and ablest minds to be found among people of any denomination.

The day was threatening, rain had fallen all during the night and the morning was cold and cheerless, but it did not prevent a good attendance from abroad as well as from the city. The exercises were set for the afternoon, but with the early trains came many visitors, and they soon found in the cheery faces that met them at the institute, the warmth and sunshine that characterize Spiritualist gatherings. Mrs. Mattie Hull, with her genius and genial nature, assisted by Mrs. Weaver, the good wife of Prof. A. J. Weaver, superintendent of the school, and other ladies had prepared a good dinner for all guests, and at one o'clock the tables were seated with as happy a company as one could meet. At two o'clock the exercises of the afternoon commenced in the beautiful temple hall, where the following program was carried out.

Program.

Opening Ode, (Air America), written for the occasion by Mrs. Mattie E. Hull:

Our cause it is of thee,
Sweet cause of liberty,
Of thee we sing;
We come an earnest band,
United heart and hand,
Unto this temple grand
And tribute bring.

E'er may this temple be
Sacred to liberty
Of thought and word.
May its fair walls resound,
To truth's inspiring sound
And peace and love abound
In sweet accord.

O, Powers above, we pray,
For guidance on the way
By light divine;
Our efforts e'er shall be,
In bonds of unity
To bless humanity
Through coming time.

Invocation, by Prof. A. J. Weaver.

Addresses by Instructors—Rev. Moses Hull, Prof. A. J. Weaver, Mrs. Mattie E. Hull and Mrs. Alfarata Hull Jahnke.

Song, Miss Agnes Chaffee.

Addresses by the Secretary, Mrs. Clara Stewart, Morris Pratt, founder of the school, and others.

Announcement of school program.

Closing song.

Benediction.

Among those present from out of town were W. H. Bach, of Lily Dale, N. Y., and his mother, from Minneapolis; Wm. Smith and wife, from Janesville, one of the oldest settlers in the country, an able attorney and outspoken Spiritualist, and many prominent persons from Janesville; Mrs. C. H. Mullins, Mrs. Hildreth, from Chicago; Mrs. Billings, of Waukesha; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Bump, of Milwaukee, and many from surrounding towns, while from the city were clergymen, physicans, merchants, and leading men and ladies, all of whom extended hearty congratulations on the opening of the school.

A number of letters and telegrams were read, among which was one from the pioneer worker on the Spiritualist platform, Cora L. V. Richmond; Harrison D. Barrett, President of the National Spiritualist Association; Rev. Mr. Peck, of St. Louis, Mo.

A touching message came in the form of a letter from Mrs. Jahnke, who is to be the teacher in Oratory, and was expected to be present at the opening, but instead is lying upon a bed of severe illness, and preparing to again undergo a very serious operation in the hospital, which will take place on the 3d inst., and before this is read by the public, we hope and pray she will be on the road to recovery for many years of usefulness. Her letter was cheerful, encouraging the pupils and exhorting them to improve every opportunity for advancement, and telling them she would assist them in spirit as in the body, all she possibly could, and that if she did not survive the operation she would be happy with her children in that home "over there." No one knows Mrs. Jahnke but to love her, and all pray for a speedy recovery. Mrs. Johnson, her sister, a noble woman and most capable teacher, will take her place for the present.

In the evening Mr. and Mrs. Hull gave an informal reception and dedication of their new home in Whitewater; the evening was made enjoyable by the open hospitality of the hosts and many impromptu speeches from the guests.

All retired, wishing the Morris Pratt Institute success, and emphasizing their wishes with some nice donations. And that suggests the call to others who were not present. The Institute needs everything that people can use. Will not the farmers send us vegetables? Some one send a cow, and some others whatever you can spare towards supporting this college.

The glory of this school has reached from Maine to California, from Minnesota to Texas, and there are enrolled pupils from New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Texas, California, Wisconsin.

CLARA L. STEWART,
Secretary M. P. I. A.

The true man is he who does the truth and never holds a principle on which he is not prepared in any hour to act, and in any hour to risk the consequences of holding it.—F. W. Robertson.

THE N. S. ASSOCIATION.

Annual Report of the President, Harrison D. Barrett.

societies and advance the interests of Spiritualism.

I earnestly recommend that a special hour be set aside in the proceedings of this convention for the consideration of the needs of our local societies, and for the purpose of devising ways and means of strengthening them in all their work. I further recommend that a special effort be made by our missionaries to explain the real purpose of organization, to give instruction in parliamentary law, and to advise with regard to the conduct of business both on and off the platform.

Settled Speakers.

The splendid results that have accrued from the labors of settled speakers indicate that the future growth of our movement will largely depend upon work of that kind. Wherever speakers are engaged by the year the membership of the societies has largely increased and financial matters have been nicely adjusted. In addition to these helps the society acquires an influence in the social life of the community and receives the recognition that is its due from all classes of people. This is especially true of the First Church of Spiritualist of St. Louis, the Church of Spiritual Unity of the same city, the Church of the Soul, of Chicago, the Church of Spiritualists, of Galveston, Texas, the Boston Spiritual Temple and all other societies that have settled their speakers. I recommend that this convention urge upon the Spiritualists of America the adoption of this helpful and most wholesome reform.

Ordination.

The attention of every delegate and of all Spiritualists is most earnestly and considerately invited to this important subject. There is need of sharp, decisive action on the part of this convention in regard to this matter. The question of morality is intimately connected with it, while the sanctity of marriage is jeopardized by it. Many of our local societies are in fault for ordaining people indiscriminately without regard to fitness or moral character. Some ordained persons seem to feel that they have, by virtue of that fact, been filled with divine unction, and endowed with power to ordain everybody else. More than one person is making his own ordination a source of revenue to himself. In one instance a certain person ordained six others for the modest sum of ten dollars per head. If he knew that his ordination gave him no legal right to ordain others, he carefully concealed the fact from his victims.

If he and his six dupes were the only persons involved, it would not matter so much, but as it is, grave consequences may result therefrom.

One of the parties ordained by him may be asked to perform a marriage service. He does it, thereby placing two innocent human beings in a most humiliating position before the world. No such marriage as that is legal, and the party who performs such a ceremony is liable to a heavy fine or imprisonment or both, at the discretion of the court. Ordination can only be legally conferred by a duly incorporated body, organized and chartered as a religious society. The service of ordination may be conducted by any person selected by the society, after the ordination has been granted by vote and a record made of the same. The name of the person chosen to perform the ceremony and the vote authorizing such election should also be placed on record. After these precautions have been taken, full instructions should be given the candidate as to what he can and cannot do by virtue of his appointment to the office of ordained minister.

In several states Spiritualist ministers have no right to perform a marriage service even though they have been ordained a dozen times. It will require a legislative act to confer upon them that right. In some instances the marriage service has been performed without question by those who had absolutely no authority to do so. When discovered the contracting parties have quickly gone to the civil authorities and been legally united. In view of the shame such actions are bringing upon Spiritualism something should be done by this convention to remedy that evil. While I am opposed to setting aside any one man or body of men as especially sanctified and endowed with certain special privileges, I am most decidedly in favor of determining the legal status of every ordained minister and of making sure that he is qualified to do the work required. If the right to perform marriage ceremonies could be taken away from all clergymen the evil would be effectually cured. As it is, however, great care must be exercised lest scandal be brought upon our cause. It is the duty of this convention to act in this matter in a way that will acquaint the general public, as well as our own people, with the fact that we are respecters of law and order, and purpose abiding by the statutes of our respective states.

Ordination by no means confers any privileges upon the person ordained unless it has been authorized by a legally incorporated body qualified to bestow it. No laying on of hands, nor other ceremonial makes a man an angel, endowed with powers extraordinary, or inoculates him with the essence of sanctification. Let us do things decently and in order, by calling a halt to the illegal and immoral tendencies that now beset us through ordination. I recommend action, not wordy resolution—and trust that this intelligent body of delegates will speak out plainly in regard to this topic. I earnestly urge this matter upon your attention, and ask that it be calmly discussed, thoughtfully considered, and rationally settled.

Marriage.

Closely connected with the subject of ordination is the question of marriage. In the majority of the Federal States Spiritualist ministers, who are ordained according to law, have the right to perform the ceremony of marriage. In some states ordination gives no authority whatever unless the party be also specially commissioned by the Governor. In other instances the Spiritualists are not recognized at all, and must seek relief through their state legislators if they desire to have their ministers enjoy the same rights and privileges as other clergymen do. I desire to call your attention to this matter for a twofold purpose—first that it may be determined when Spiritual ministers are legally authorized to unite people in marriage—second, to ask the convention to take some action with regard to the preparation of a suitable marriage service at this time, through some duly authorized committee. Such a service can with propriety be uniform in all the states and I trust one may be prepared accordingly. I recommend that a committee of five be selected by this convention and instructed to prepare a marriage service that can be used at the weddings of Spiritualists, such committee to report at our next annual convention. I further recommend that some action be taken by this body in the direction of securing the preparation and passage of bills, granting the right to solemnize marriages to our ministers in those states where such right does not now exist. This recommendation is not made because of your president's belief in ecclesiastical marriages, but merely to give the Spiritualists the same privileges as are now enjoyed by other denominations.

Music.

From several societies requests have been received with regard to the propriety of having a uniform system of song books for all local societies throughout the whole country. It would seem as if this matter might be compassed to the advantage of all who love good Spiritual music, and prove the means of saving a good many dollars in the purchase of books. I recommend that this matter be discussed at length and appropriate action taken.

Lyceums.

No question of gerater importance will come before this intelligent body of delegates than this one. Upon the establishment and conduct of Spiritualistic lyceums or Sunday-schools, the future of our cause largely depends. It is far better to train the minds of the young into liberal channels of thought than it is to try to convert people after they have arrived at mature age. It is not necessary that our movement should descend to sectarian levels to hold our children's interest in spiritual things. It is only necessary that we should make our thought attractive to them and so conduct our lyceums as to constitute them the stepping stones into the temple of wisdom. Andrew Jackson Davis never did a greater work for Spiritualism than he did when he gave the children a chance to learn something of the great truths through the lyceum. In England the lyceum movement is flourishing, in America it is languishing. At one time there were hundreds of them in operation in this country. To-day there are not more than thirty in active service. England, where the lyceum was introduced after it was established here, reports nearly or quite two hundred lyceums in full operation and doing good work.

Cannot something be done by this convention to give us the same splendid showing in America? To-day the children of Spiritualists are to be found in orthodox and Unitarian Sunday-schools where they are imbibing lessons that will have to be unlearned in after years. When we settle our speakers for one year or more, the lyceum question will speedily adjust itself, for through permanency on the part of the adult body will come permanency in the juvenile society. But it will take time to bring about permanent pastorates, therefore it is necessary for us to look out for the children now.

There are many in our ranks who can see with your president, the necessity of doing something in this direction, and, like him again, are at a loss to know just what that something is, or what the first step toward the desired end should be. The lyceum organization is now in the hands of the officers of the N. S. A., but by virtue of the fact that the N. S. A. has special work that requires the entire time and energy of its officers, it would seem as if some other method should be devised to meet the special needs of this important case.

Other denominations have their Sunday-school organizations, and succeed in keeping them up in a high degree of excellence. There is no reason why the Spiritualists cannot do the same, if they set to work as a united body to accomplish this worthy object. In some denominations, general superintendents of Sunday-school work are elected or appointed to whom is committed the task of organizing Sunday-schools, reawakening an interest in those that are languishing, and of devising attractive methods of instruction. I am inclined to consider this method a possible means of solving the lyceum problem among Spiritualists. I therefore recommend that this convention elect a General Lyceum Superintendent, who shall be paid a given salary, and shall act under the direction of the trustees of the N. S. A., as officers of the lyceum association, said superintendent to hold office until Sept. 30, 1903. I trust that the entire lyceum question will be thoroughly discussed by this convention and ways and means adopted to reawaken an interest in it in all parts of this country.

Our Young People.

What I have said of the lyceum will apply in large measure to our young people and their special organizations. Something should be done to keep our young people with us after they have grown to years of understanding. Our National Young People's Union has done a good work, but it needs encouragement. The N. S. A. should foster this branch of our work and extend to the faithful few who are struggling to keep this organization alive, not only the right hand of fellowship and words of approval, but positive encouragement in the way of active aid. What has been done by the young people in Philadelphia, Pa., and St. Paul, Minn., can be done in other cities if proper effort is made. I recommend considerate action upon this important subject.

Bogus Phenomena.

This unpleasant subject has forced itself once more to the front during the past year. I recommend that the subject be referred to a special committee consisting of the editors of the Philosophical Journal, the Sunflower, Banner of Light, The Progressive Thinker and Light of Truth, or their duly accredited representatives for full consideration, said committee to report at our next annual convention.

Clergy Rates.

No difficulty whatever has been experienced by the ministers of our denomination in obtaining recognition at the hands of the four great passenger associations of the west, when they have been legally entitled to the courtesy of clergy permits. The N. S. A. has been most considerately treated by the Central, Western, South-western and Trans-Continental associations, through their able and efficient agents, F. C. Donald, Eben E. McLeod, C. M. Pratt and James Charlton, and your president feels under special obligations to them for courtesies received at their hands. They have dealt with all of our people fairly and impartially, with no discrimination whatever against any one of our worthy workers. A vote of thanks from this convention under the seal of the N. S. A., and signatures of its president and secretary would be a graceful recognition of the courtesies extended to our people by the above named officials and their representatives.

But what is true of the passenger association of the west is not true of those of the east. Our settled speakers along the lines of the eastern railroads that grant clergy rates, are persistently refused the courtesies that are gladly extended to other denominations. Two flagrant cases of gross injustice in the way of discrimination against our clergymen, solely because they were Spiritualists, have been reported during the year. Your president was instructed by the trustees of the N. S. A. to take a test case before the Inter State Commerce Commission to see if a man's religious belief could legally deprive him of the privileges that were freely granted to others. I have endeavored to prepare such a case and have collected some evidence to support my claim of unjust discrimination, but no trial of the suit has yet been called, hence I can only report progress, and recommend that the incoming board be instructed to press the case at the earliest possible moment.

International Congress in St. Louis.

Our last annual convention voted to co-operate with the promoters of the movement to hold an International Congress of Spiritualists in St. Louis, Mo., during the World's Fair in 1903. In view of the fact that said fair has been postponed until 1904, I am only able to report progress in the matter. I am firmly convinced that such International Congress would be of great advantage to Spiritualism, and I recommend that this convention instruct the incoming board of trustees to co-operate heartily with our brethren in Missouri and elsewhere in the work of making it possible for this Congress to be held. It is understood that the N. S. A. is not the prime mover in the matter, nor the financial backer of the project. If it should be deemed advisable, when the Congress is assured, to expend some money to secure the proper representation of Spiritualism in America at that great gathering, I should be in favor of a liberal appropriation from the N. S. A. treasury for that purpose.

Our last annual convention unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Moved: That the incoming board be, and is hereby instructed to at once enter into correspondence with the best known and most advanced speakers and writers along the line of spiritual thought both of this and all foreign countries, and solicit written articles on all subjects pertaining to the principles of Spiritualism as follows:

What is Spiritualism—its aims and objects?

What Spiritualism is.

Religion, Morals, Science, Ethics and Philosophy.

Mediumship, what is it?

Clairvoyance, Clairaudience, the Trance, Speaking and Writing, Inspirational Speaking and Writing, Automatic Writing, Physical Mediumship, Materialization of Forms, Levitations of Bodies, and Raps and Tappings.

And that the answer received be edited by a board appointed by the president of the N. S. A., with the approval of the trustees, and when so edited to be published in pamphlet form, the same to be distributed to, and kept on sale by all societies chartered by the N. S. A., and be considered an authorized statement on all phenomena, philosophy and religion of Spiritualism known at the present time, the endorsement to be held until the proposed International Congress at St. Louis in 1903, shall have given its approval. I am only able to report progress under this resolution, owing to the postponement of the World's Fair until 1904. I recommend the re-adoption of the resolution, and suggest that instructions be given the incoming board to act according to its provisions.

Organizations.

This question is one which this convention should settle in one way or another for the benefit of all interested parties. The relation of our local societies to the state associations and the state associations to the N. S. A. are neither defined nor understood by our people. Not less than three forms of organizations are to be found among our state associations to-day. We have state associations composed of local societies; others composed both of local societies and individual members; others still that are composed only of individual members. The great victories won by the state associations in Maine and New York before the legislatures are ample evidences of the fact that state associations are needed in our organic work. Their uniformity in organization, however, is a necessity, and I respectfully urge action in this matter by you as delegates. We should not act against the interests of our people in any state, but in harmony with them. I submit this matter to the convention without recommendation, but ask for its full and careful consideration. No little feeling exists in many sections of the nation with regard to this matter, and our brethren everywhere are looking to this convention for an equitable settlement of this important question. If the N. S. A. is to hold its influence in all sections of this country alike, this subject must be given intelligent consideration, and settled to the prejudice of none. It will not do to refer this question to the incoming board with power to act; it should be settled on this floor and settled in the interests of our cause as a whole.

The Annual Convention.

I referred to this subject in my report of last year, but no action was taken on it by the convention. I am constrained to again call the attention of the delegates to this topic. The feeling exists among many of the strongest friends of the N. S. A. that the annual convention is held too soon after the opening of the lecture season among our local societies. It does not give them time to get into working order, and renders it next to impossible for many of our ablest workers to attend our national assemblies. This argument is worthy of consideration, and I submit the question to this honorable body with the hope that some action will be taken in regard to the matter.

Amendments.

Your attention will be called to several important amendments to the Constitution and By-Laws of this association. One of them is designed to abrogate the proxy system, yet at the same time give equitable representation to all of the auxiliaries of the N. S. A. Another is a proposition to increase the membership of the board of trustees from nine to eleven persons. If the N. S. A. is to keep in touch with all sections of the land, its official representatives ought not to be located at one point. On the other hand if the most willing workers are to be found in one and the same city, why should the association and the Spiritualists of the nation be deprived of their services because of geographical position? It is true that seven members of the board reside east of the Allegheny mountains, giving the great West and South but two representatives. If the membership of the board is enlarged, it will give other sections an opportunity to obtain official recognition and work injury to none. The N. S. A. is a growing institution and as such should keep in touch with all sections of the nation, that the needs of our cause may always be known at headquarters. I make no recommendations concerning the above-named amendments, or any others that have been offered. I hope by this reference to direct the attention of the delegates to the importance of thoughtful study of the points involved.

Reform Issues.

This convention is to define the attitude of the Spiritualists of America with respect to the great reform questions of the day. Coal famines are actualities in some sections even now, while food supplies are beyond the reach of many of the toilers of the land. There is plenty everywhere, but the granaries of God have been sealed by avaricious men, and suffering is the result. The temperance question, prison reform, capital punishment, the imperative mandate, compulsory vaccination, direct legislation, arbitrary Sunday laws, freedom of speech, freedom for the press, tyranny through government by injunction are all issues of vital importance to the Spiritualists of America, as well as to all other patriots. I recommend that this entire paragraph be referred to the committee on resolutions to put into suitable form the thought of this convention.

Finance

I now invite your atention to the subject of finance. The matter of revenue is always an important one and the best method of securing an income sufficient to meet the needs of the N. S. A. has always been difficult to determine. It is absolutely certain that the chartered auxiliaries of the N. S. A. in their present condition cannot be asked to supply the national body with its needed revenue. Individual donations, collections at camp-meetings and other public gatherings have augmented the income of the N. S. A. to a great extent, but the amounts thus raised always vary and are very uncertain. It behooves your honorable body to devise ways by which a permanent yearly income can be secured. Bequests by will are always welcome, but they are not reliable, for a prejudiced court may see fit to break them. Besides this it is never wise or proper to wait for our friends to take leave of earth that we may enjoy their substance.

From year to year I have recommended various methods for raising revenues. Some of them have been tried and found successful, others impracticable. I believe an endowment fund of generous proportions is the only sure means of providing a permanent income. Our large-hearted treasurer, Theodore J. Mayer, set the pace in this direction three years ago, when he offered to give in fee-simple the present headquarters of the N. S. A. to the Spiritualists of America provided they would raise an equal sum in money for the treasury of the N. S. A. This they did, and now Mr. Mayer again steps forward with almost an exact duplicate of his offer of three years ago. He asks the Spiritualists as a body to give only as much as he gives alone. Surely this is a step in the direction of an endowment fun of generous proportions. If each delegate will but make himself a committee of one to canvass his home community, there is no doubt as to the outcome. This offer of our noble-hearted treasurer should be met, and met at once. It should inspire our multi-millionaire Spiritualists to be as generous according to their means as he is with his.

The appointment of special solicitors under commission from the N. S. A., with bonds, if necessary, to canvass the country in such sections as have no Spiritualist societies would, I believe, result in a largely increased income. This would especially be true if a generous commission were to be allowed on all moneys received. It would induce the solicitors to devote their whole time to their work, and this would call the attention of scores of people to the needs and value of the N. S. A. who might not otherwise know anything about it. I trust this matter will be considered by this convention and recommend that the committee on finance be requested to determine its practicability. I further recommend that each delegate present and all others interested in the progress of the N. S. A., be requested to present to the committee on finance such measures as they deem will add to the revenue of this national body.

Mass-meetings.

In former years, it was the policy of the N. S. A., under instructions from each annual convention, to hold mass-meetings in large cities and towns for a two-fold purpose. First, to awaken an interest in Spiritualism; second, to add to the income of the N. S. A. Last year this work was, I think, wisely abandoned. This year I have received requests for the resumption of this line of work. I can only recommend, however, that all mass-meetings held, if any are to be held, be under the joint auspices of the state association and the N. S. A. Experience has proved to my satisfaction that even though the N. S. A. does gain a little money through these mass conventions, the energy of its workers is largely wasted, and results ultimately in an injury to our cause. I believe the energy and money thus involved could better be used in the work of building up strong local societies. I present this matter to the convention and trust that the action taken will be wholly in the interest of the cause.

Camp-meetings.

These great summer assemblies have with almost a single exception become staunch allies of the N. S. A. Some of them appointed a N. S. A. day on their official programs and held special services in its behalf, despite the fact no officer or representative of the national body was present. The vast majority of the camps made special provisions for the N. S. A., and the people present on those occasions were most generous in their donations. Onset, Mass., still leads the van with the generous offering of $133 in cash. Etna, Maine, comes second with an offering of nearly $80 in money. Cassadaga, N. Y., is third on the list with over $60 in money, and first in the full value of all its donations. One Cassadaga friend, will, on Feb. 1, 1903, present the N. S. A. with a warrantee deed of a valuable lot of land in a rural city in the state of New York, with all the buildings thereon. Clinton, Iowa, ranks fourth in its money offerings, coming to the front with its voluntary contributions to the amount of over $42. The figures from other camps are not at hand, but they have been especially generous and deserve full credit at the hands of this convention. I recommend that the thanks of this body be sent under the N. S. A. seal to the officers of all camps at which N. S. A. days were granted, for their generosity, also to all speakers and mediums whose labors helped to make those days such signal successes. I further recommend that the incoming secretary be instructed to open correspondence at once with all camps for the purpose of obtaining a N. S. A. day on their program for 1903.

Fraternal Delegates.

Fraternal delegates were appointed to the annual conventions of the American Secular Union and Free Thought Federation, the American Woman Suffrage Association, and one of the branches of the W. C. T. U. in the state of Illinois. Reverends Moses Hull and A. J. Weaver represented us at the first named gathering and were warmly welcomed. They were given prominent places on the program of the convention and their addresses were cordially received. Mrs. Mary T. Longley and Mrs. Sara A. Haslett were to have represented us at the Suffrage Convention, but for some unaccountable reason they were not received, nor given any recognition. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt's letter in a recent issue of the Banner of Light throws some light on the matter. In that letter she invites the N. S. A. to send fraternal delegates to the convention of the Suffragists, and gives the assurance that they will be received. Miss Laura G. Fixen was our accredited fraternal delegate to the convention of the Illinois W. C. T. U. I have received no report from her, but have every reason to believe that she was cordially received and courteously treated. I submit the matter of selecting fraternal delegates to reform organizations and religious societies of a National character without recommendation.

Necrology.

Since the adjournment of our last annual convention a number of the loyal friends of the N. S. A. have been called to the higher life. Among the most active of these may be named Capt. E. W. Gould, the well-known nonogenarian, whose vigorous pen wrought much good for the cause of organization; Mrs. Rachel Wolcott, one of the earnest advocates of the N. S. A. ever since its foundation; Mrs. Susan L. Porter, always a generous donor to its treasury, and John R. Snow, whose work as a delegate always was for the right as he saw it, and whose devotion to the N. S. A. and to Spiritualism no one ever questioned. I pause to lay my tribute of love upon the altars of their memories, and to ask this convention to direct the committee on resolutions to prepare a fitting memorial in their honor and in memory of all others who have gone from us during the past twelve months.

The Spiritualist Press.

The N. S. A. is under many obligations to all of the Spiritualist papers for courtesies received during the past year. The Philosophical Journal, Sunflower, Light of Truth, The Progressive Thinker and Banner of Light have opened their columns freely to communications from the officers of the N. S. A., and have earnestly pleaded for organization and harmony in their editorial columns. Our press has been one of the main factors in the work of establishing the N. S. A. as a permanent institution among our people. I recommend that due recognition be extended to Editors Newman, Bach, Francis and Hull, and to the manager of the Banner of Light Publishing Company, Mr. Frederick G. Tuttle, for the many favors received at their hands.

Theodore J. Mayer.

I will be pardoned for introducing the name of this devoted friend of the N. S. A. and advocate of progressive Spiritualism, under a special heading. He has been the embodiment of generosity to the N. S. A. in former years and has now made the Spiritualists of America a proposition that should make his name to them, one and all, a living example of loyalty to the truths of the religion of Spiritualism. For his many benefactions he asks nothing for himself, but always desires that the cause shall be benefited by the donations he inspires others to give. This is the kind of Spiritualism that tells—unselfish giving for the good of others and for the advancement of the cause of Truth. The friends of the N. S. A., especially the delegates to this convention, can best show their appreciation of what he has done for Spiritualism by undertaking his example to the extent of their ability and by inducing others to do likewise.

The Board of Trustees.

The board of trustees have worked in the utmost harmony throughout the year, and each and every member has sought with singleness of heart to advance the interests of the N. S. A. Every duty laid upon its members as a body has been conscientiously discharged and the aim has been to execute the will of the convention that elected them to the greatest possible extent. Your president is under obligations to all of the members of the board for personal favors received, and takes this means to publicly acknowledge the same. Vice-president Locke filled the position of acting president for one month, during which time your president was incapacitated from attending to the duties of the office, with the same zeal and ability that has ever characterized him as a worker for Spiritualism. He attended to all other duties with conscientious fidelity and sought at all times the best good of the N. S. A. He has my sincere thanks for the many favors received at his hands.

Work in the Home Office.

The work at headquarters has been performed in a most painstaking manner, with the same degree of thoroughness that has always been apparent in the labors of our secretary. All correspondence has been promptly attended to, and everything possible has been done by our faithful officials to bring the Spiritualists of America into harmony with the N. S. A. Her books and accounts are in the best of order, and the auditing committee of this convention will find the work greatly simplified by the perfect system maintained at our home office. Personally your president desires to pay tribute to the zeal and devotion, to the fidelity and courage of our hard-working secretary. I am under obligations to her for assistance rendered during the year, and for the many kind wishes, timely favors and encouraging words she has extended to me throughout the year just closed. A faithful friend and a trustworthy public servant can be said with truth of our secretary, Mrs. Mary T. Longley.

The President's Work.

Your president, with the exception of one month has been at his post of duty as the executive officer of the N. S. A. The filing of the certificate of annual election, preparing a statement of the standing of Spiritualism for the yearly almanacs and the making out of official papers, were all promptly attended to at the close of the convention. For four and two-thirds months your president served the N. S. A. as missionary at large, but was obliged to resign his post because of ill health in his home for the greater portion of the year. Since October I, of this year, I have been actively at work for the N. S. A. at various conventions and as the speaker for local societies. The returns from the labor of this month are not included in my financial statements thus far made but will add nearly one hundred dollars to the sum total of my receipts. From October 1, 1901, to September 30, 1902, I have received from all sources including donations, collections, fees for lectures, railroad expenses about $1,390. This sum will be augmented by what I have received during the present month when my final settlement is made with the N. S. A. Wherever I have gone I have been received with the utmost kindness by the Spiritualists, by the secular press, and by all classes with whom it has been my privilege to mingle. My correspondence has been voluminous, but I have endeavored to attend to it faithfully and as properly as circumstances would admit. I have visited eleven camps in the interest of the N. S. A. and all receipts for my work have been turned over to our secretary and her receipt has been given me therefor. I have done my best to serve the N. S. A. loyally, and must leave the results of my labors to be determined by time, and to be announced by those who are cognizant of my efforts to promote the welfare of Spiritualism.

Conclusion.

The close of the ninth year of its existence finds the N. S. A. stronger in the affections of the masses than ever before. It has added somewhat to its membership during the year, has made itself felt in Spiritualistic circles in helpful ways, and has shown all friends of freedom that it has become a permanency in the work of giving religious liberty to humanity. It deserves the loyal undivided support of every progressive, honest Spiritualist, and I bespeak for it the united aid of an earnest, honest, grateful people throughout all of the coming years.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President N. S. A.

ANCIENT CHURCH HISTORY

Church Councils and Contradictory Chronology.

The celebrated council of Nicaea in the year 325 is an ecclesiastical fiction, and so are all the church councils until that of Trent (Italian, Trento; German, Trient), a city of Austria in the Tyrol, more than 300 miles north of Rome. In that mountain town, now containing a few thousand inhabitants, it is said that the celebrated council was held, beginning in 1545 and ending in 1563. What evidence have we that it was anything more than a secret conclave whose object was to provide for the discipline of a nascent church? One of its decrees was in regard to the Latin Vulgate New Testament, declaring that "this same old and Vulgate edition, which, by the long use of so many ages, has been approved in the church itself, is to be held for authentic, in public lections, debates, preachings, and expositions. None may dare on any pretext to reject it."

And yet the book, so many ages in existence, could not be found! Not until 1573-4 did the Antwerp edition appear as a temporary "substitute" for the Tridentine edition, and in 1585 Pope Sixtus V. expressed his indignation that the decree was still unsatisfied. Accordingly the first authorized edition of the Vulgate was published in 1590. But alas! it had to be condemned, and in 1592 the Sixtine edition was superseded by that of Pope Clement, which itself in turn had to be vised!

So not until one hundred years after the discovery of America did Christendom have an authorized New Testament, and it was in Latin, to be read only by priests.

When Luther, an Augustinian monk, was surprised to find a Latin Bible, many years before the alleged council of Trent, it could not have been an authorized edition. Anyway, his translation caused disturbance, and it became necessary for the Catholic hierarchy to put forth an authorized edition which "none may dare on any pretext to reject."

Pseudo-Jerome, the reputed author of the Vulgate, wrote the lives of "Illustrious Men," and in regard to Paul he said that "after the passion of our Lord in the year xxv.— that is, in the second of Nero, at the time when Festus, procurator of Judaea, succeeded Felix, he was sent bound to Rome," etc. It has been suggested that Jerome did not mean Anno Domini 25, but the twenty-fifth year from the crucifixion. Let us test this interpretation.

Eusebius, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria all concur in dating the crucifixion A. D. 29, and these are earlier authorities than Jerome. Now, beginning with A. D. 29 as the year one, the twenty-fifth year thereafter would be A. D. 53. How, then, can Jerome's "year xxv" be made to coincide with "the second of Nero," whose reign began in October A. D. 54?

And now I cite a further passage from Jerome involving false chronology. Speaking again of Paul he says: "And he therefore, in the fourteenth year of Nero, on the same day with Peter, was beheaded for Christ's sake, and was buried in the Ostian way, after the passion of the Lord xxxviii."

Here undoubtedly the writer dates from the time of the passion. And this passage, I believe, is the sole authority for such a reckoning, which I find was adopted by the council of Trent. My English translation of the Vulgate New Testament was printed at Rheims in 1582, contains chronological tables of Peter and Paul, with parallel dates from the "Nativity" and the "Ascension."

Now again, beginning with A. D. 29 as the year of the ascension, the thirty-eighth year thereafter would be A. D. 66, which was the twelfth year of Nero until October and after that the thirteenth.

But what else do we find in the two tables? They begin thus:

Tiberius	Nat. Dom.	Ascen.
18	34	1

This is the only authority I have been able to find which dates the crucifixion A. D. 34, and it claims to be infallible, though it has to repudiate Eusebius, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria, who concur in fixing that event in the year 29.

Below, in the same table of Paul is this:

Neronis	Nat. Dom.	Ascen.
2	58	25

This "Ascen. 25" appears to support the interpretation that Jerome meant to say "the year xxv from the ascension." Opposite these dates is the following note concerning Paul:

"At Rome he remaineth in free prison two years. Act. 28, and then he is delivered, 2. Tim. 4."

But the interpretation of Jerome's "year xxv" by the English College of Jesuits at Rheims, "cum permissu superiorium," is irreconcilable with his "second of Nero," and the year 34 as the date of the ascension seems to have been selected to make things fit.

These tables not only contradict the earlier church authorities in regard to the year of the crucifixion, putting it five years later, but they contradict the accepted chronology of the reign of Nero, by beginning it two years later. The year 58 was the fourth and fifth of Nero, not the second.

The Tridentine or Rheimish chronology is all a contradictory muddle. It extends the reign of Nero to the year 70, in which, if history is to be trusted, Titus took Jerusalem. It makes the period of Paul's life after his arrival at Rome twelve years, and the term of Peter's bishopric in that city twenty-six years.

Catholic chronology is all a modern fabrication. Without a basis of dates how could the ecclesiastical fabric stand? The cloistered monks, who constituted the literary trust of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, fabricated old manuscripts in order to hoodwink mankind and make them believe that their hierarchy originated in the reign of Tiberius Caesar. Personal Magnetism.

How Prominent Men Develop This Power and Use it to Influence Others — Women, Too, Adepts in This Mysterious Art.

A Reporter Makes Astounding Discoveries—Secret Methods Which Charm and Fascinate the Human Mind.

High Priests of the Occult Reveal Jealously Guarded Secrets of Years—A Wonderful New Book by Prominent New York Man.

A wonderful new book entitled "The Secret of Power" has just been issued at an expense of over $5,000 by one of the leading colleges of the City of New York. This book is from the pen of the ablest specialists of modern times. The authors gave away the copyright on conditions that 10,000 copies should be distributed to the public free of charge. The Columbia Scientific Academy is now complying with this contract, and until the edition of 10,000 copies is exhausted you can get a copy of this book absolutely free. The book is profusely illustrated with the most expensive half-tone engravings. It is full of wonderful secrets and startling surprises, and thoroughly explains the real source of the power of personal influence. It fully and completely reveals the fundamental principles of success and influence in every walk of life. The hidden mysteries of personal magnetism, will power and scientific character reading are explained in an intensely interesting manner. Two secret methods of personal influence are described, which positively enable any intelligent person to exercise a marvelous influence and control over anyone whom he may wish. These methods are entirely new and have never before been made public. A reporter has tried them personally and can vouch for their wonderful power.

The book also describes absolutely certain methods by which you can read the character, secrets and lives of every one you meet. No one can deceive you. You can tell what vocation is best for you to follow. You can know the secret power by which minds of human beings are charmed and fascinated. The newest, latest and best system of physical and mental culture and magnetic healing is fully explained and illustrated by beautiful half-tone engravings. No such book has ever before been published. No such wonderful information has ever before been placed in the hands of the public. On account of the mighty power and influence placed in one's hands by this book, the legislature of the State of New York debated whether or not the state ought to permit its promiscuous circulation; but it was finally decided the good it would accomplish would greatly overcome the ill, and its distribution was not interfered with.

Not long ago John D. Rockefeller, the richest man in America, said, in talking to a Sunday school class, that he regarded his success in life largely to his ability to influence others. Lincoln, Lee, Napoleon and Alexander the Great, all won name and renown by their wonderful power of personal influence. Jay Gould piled up millions by this same power. J. P. Morgan organized the billion dollar steel trust and enriched himself by millions simply by his marvelous ability to influence others. There are to-day thousands of men with the brains and education of Mr. Morgan who are practically paupers. They have the ability to organize a trust, but they have not sufficient power of personal influence. Personal influence, will-power stamina—call it what you will—has from the creation of man been the subtle force that has brought wealth, fame and renown to those who were fortunate enough to possess it.

This strange, mysterious influence is inherent in every human being. By the late methods explained by the New York specialist in human culture any intelligent person can develop a wonderfully magnetic personality, and learn how to read the character, secrets and the lives of others in a few days' study at his own home. You can use this marvelous power without the knowledge of your most intimate friends and associates. You can use it to obtain lucrative employment, to secure an advance in salary, to win the friendship and influence of others to obtain a greater share of happiness from life. You can be respected, honored, and become a leader in your community.

If you are not fully satisfied with your present condition and circumstances; if you long for greater success or more money; if you are not able to influence others to the extent you desire, the reporter would advise you to write at once for free copy of this great work now being given away by the Columbia Scientific Academy.

Mrs. R. C. Young of 312 Indiana Street, Lawrence, Kan., recently sent for copy of this book. After carefully examining it and testing the methods of personal influence on her friends and associates, she makes the following statements in a letter to a friend: "The instructions given by the Columbia Scientific Academy have been worth to me more than all the previous reading of my life. I wish every woman in this country could read their grand book."

Fred Perkins, of South Haven, Mich., says: "I have been in great demand since I read the work of the Columbia Scientific Academy. People are amazed and mystified at the things I do. I believe I could make $25 per day reading character alone if I were to charge for my services. If anyone would have told I would receive so much wonderful information I would have thought him crazy."

Mrs. Effie Watson, of Martinsville, Ind., says: "Could I have had access to such information in past years I could have avoided many misfortunes. This work of the Columbia Scientific Academy shall be my guiding star the remaining days of my life."

If you will send your name and address to the Columbia Scientific Academy, Dept. 159 G, 1931 Broadway, New York City, this book will be sent you absolutely free, postage prepaid. On account of the great expense involved in preparing this book, the Columbia Scientific Academy requests that only people who are especially interested write for free copy—only those who desire to achieve greater success and better their condition in life.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

The Everlasting Gospel.

This volume consists of a series of lectures, messages and poems written and delivered in public through the mental organism of Mrs. Magdalena Kline, a trance, clairvoyant and inspirational medium. The book contains 488 large pages, and will be sent postpaid for $1.50. For sale at this office.

The Christ Question Settled.

Jesus, Man, Medium, Martyr. A symposium by W. E. Coleman, J. S. Loveland, Hudson Tuttle, Moses Hull, J. R. Buchanan, B. B. Hill, Rabbi I. M. Wise, Col. Ingersoll—and what the spirits say about it. By J. M. PEEBLES, M. D. Whether this book settles the question or not, it will be found eminently entertaining, and brings together a mass of evidence to establish the historical character of Jesus. A large volume. Price, cloth, $1.25.

AMONG THE CAMPS

Moses Hull Gives an Account of Travel and Work.

People, including those who conduct and those who attend camp-meetings, like to be written up, providing nothing but good is said of them; and there can be no use generally in saying anything else, except in cases where a warning to the world might save others from being victimized. Tongues and pens are often used too freely in criticising. The world too often criticises that of which it knows very little. A great musical composer once expressed the wish that some of his critics would write a piece of music.

Well, I do not write to criticise, but to give the readers of he Progressive Thinker a glance of the progress of the work in the region of my late travels.

I begin this writing on the Union Pacific train in which I am being hurled toward the Pacific coast, at the rate of forty to fifty miles an hour. I am on my way to put in ten days' work at the Sycamore Grove, Los Angeles, Cal., camp-meeting. I shall, perhaps finish it on my way back.

Our school at Lily Dale, last spring and summer, was in many senses of the word, a success. Many tears were shed when the time came to say our final good-byes; and several of the students promised to meet us at the Morris Pratt Institute, at Whitewater, in September.

Before our school closed I obtained one week's leave of absence, or, rather, I loaded my work upon others, and obeyed a call from James Van Dyke, and the little band of workers with whom he is associated, in Evansville, Ind., to go there and deliver a few lectures. I found Brother Van Dyke a business man—one who stands high as a business man, and the band who works with him in dead earnest in the cause.

There is another society in the city—one which I believe has a charter from the N. S. A., but its officers were not in harmony with those for whom I spoke enough to hear me, so I learned little of their status. The president of the other society called on me, and made dire threats of what would happen if the N. S. A. chartered the Van Dyke society. Notwithstanding all this, I believe that that society has its friends and they are worthy of recognition. The city is amply able to support two societies, and if I were at the head of the N. S. A., the other society would soon get a charter. There are many good people belonging to each of these bands of workers.

The weather was so immensely hot while I was in Evansville that it was absolutely impossible for the masses of the people to turn out. The mercury was not lower than 95 while I was there. The result was that I did not have over two hundred people at any one session of my meetings. I promised to make an effort to return under more favorable circumstances.

I returned to Lily Dale in time to assist in the closing exercises of the school, and to stay and work for the camp one week, the first week of the season. The great majority of the hearers claimed that my discourses were of such a nature that they must have more of them next year than they have had in any one year, up to the present. The world is large, and there are many camps all of which want upbuilding work.

I have just learned that there has been an entire change in the management at the Lily Dale Mecca of Spiritualism. I am glad, for however perfect the former management was, it had its enemies. With all deference to the former management, the present president and board of managers are as honest and capable managers as can be found anywhere. They are all of them, from the president down, well known and their names stand above reproach. Let us give them a fair trial.

Of Mrs. Pettingill I will say, that of all the people on earth I believe that she is the one to manage that camp. She has put many thousand dollars into it, and her whole interest is in Lily Dale.

H. W. Richardson, who is on the board of management, is at present president of the New York Association of Spiritualists. He has long occupied a position on the board of officers of the N. S. A., and is a thoroughly honorable, business man. The other officers, so far as my acquaintance goes, are worthy to be the associates of the two above-mentioned people. If I can benefit the camp more by my absence than by my presence, I shall gladly assist the camp in that way. If I am needed at Lily Dale, I shall try to be there and help to roll the ball along.

My next objective point after Lily Dale, was Chardon, Ohio. Chardon is a pleasant, rather old and dwarfed place—a county seat about thirty miles from Cleveland. Our meetings were held in the court house. While the rains and continually threatening aspect of the weather kept many away, it is was said that the very best citizens of Chardon, Middlefield, and surrounding towns, including judges, doctors and lawyers, were present, and deeply interested in the discourses. Those of the more intellectual type expressed themselves as ready to assist any society which would, from time to time, present such arguments as those to which they listened on these occasions; but as for the curiosity phase of Spiritualism they had had enough of it.

The world has reached the place where ignorant denunciations and misstatements of history and of facts, even when accompanied by phenomena, whether fraudulent or otherwise, cannot lead it into the higher phases of Spirituality. We want more reason, philosophy and education, and less of the money grabbing and show business; especially if we would reach that portion of the world which we can benefit, and that can be of any permanent value to us. Education, intelligence and moral stamina must take the place of ignorant platitudes and fakism.

While on this subject I will say we still have a few mossbacks who are determined that ignorance shall remain at the helm of the Spiritualist ship. I have a six-page letter from one who boasts that he has been a spiritualist under the tuition of the spirits "for more'n forty year." The letter denounces me as the worst enemy of Spiritualism. It contains about fourteen hundred words, one hundred and twenty-six of them by actual count are spelled wrong. As for what the author calls "gramer," O, shades of Lindley Murray and Kirkham! nothing worse was ever attempted to be put into the English language. I keep the letter, and challenge the world to find its like, unless in another written by the same party, thoroughly denouncing the Bible, which he spells "b-i-b-a-l." I rather enjoy denunciations when they come from such a source. Such denunciations never injure any cause except the one they advocate. Mr. Editor, please excuse this little interlude in my story.

From Chardon, I made my way to the Wonewoc, Wisconsin, camp-meeting, where I labored a week. This was the second year of camp on these beautiful grounds. Last year the state association held its camp there. While all liked the people of Wonewoc, also the grounds, the water, the hotels, and about everything connected with the camp, it was thought that on account of its location; its great distance from the majority of the people, it was not the place to hold the state camp-meeting.

The result was that the Wonewoc Society, with the aid of others not too far away, have organized "The Western Wisconsin Camp-meeting Association," with Will J. Erwood, of LaCrosse, as president. Their camp this year was a success, and there is no reason why it should not be in the future. This camp is well-officered and conducted by a good, intelligent and honest people. The grounds are all paid for, I believe; they are beautiful grounds, about as level as a billiard table, but about one hundred and fifty feet almost perpendicularly above the town. I never ascended or descended that mountain but that I thought of the old gentleman after whom I was named, going up on the mountain to talk with God. I had many good talks with and about the gods upon this mountain.

One old Spiritualist, against whom I have laid the matter up, once upon a time, when I was busy trying to keep my avoirdupois from bringing me down the mountain too fast for my health, had the audacity to ask me what I thought God piled up that pile of rocks for? After I had failed to answer his conundrum, he told me that he thought it was done for a "bluff." Well, I looked at him and discovered that he had too much muscle for me, and so I let the matter pass. The old gentleman is still at large. I say this as a warning to future mountain climbers.

Well, as I have said, the Wonewoc camp was a success. Mrs. Hull delivered, I think, twelve discourses, and held twelve sessions of the lyceum. Mrs. Jahnke taught one or two classes every day. Will J. Erwood, the president, was omnipresent. Mrs. McFarlin delivered some fine discourses. Mrs. Mosier gave as fine tests and messages as usual. Miss Wickstrum, a new and rising worker, gave one or two acceptable discourses. She is a young lady, —a Scandinavian, who has been in this country, I think, only five years. Much is hoped from her; especially among her Norwegian friends.

Mrs. Wheeler, of LaCrosse, gave fine readings and tests. Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, president of the state association, and secretary of the Morris Pratt Institute, could spend only a few days at this camp; but these days told in behalf of the state association, and the Morris Pratt Institute. Of course I got my work in as opportunity offered. The poor people were only doomed to listen to me in regular discourses about seven times. Besides this I presided much of the time, and was "quite numerous" in conferences and entertainments. Mrs. Hull and I agreed (D. V.) to be at this camp next year.

My next objective point was at the Wentworth Grove, Ohio, picnic. On Saturday and Sunday, August 2 and 3, this meeting was held. On Saturday we had only an ordinary meeting, of ordinarily intelligent people; but on Sunday the people assembled by the acre. It seemed that the most of them came to hear, too. Not only were the seats filled, but the horses were taken from the carriages, and the carriages drawn up as close as possible, and, from their seats in them the people listened as for dear life.

If I remember correctly this was the thirty-fourth annual gathering of these people. They now talk of making the meetings in the future hold several Sundays. Those who conduct this meeting own a temple, but as it is not located in this grove I did not see it.

On Sunday night after the meeting was over, I started for Buffalo, to meet Mrs. Hull, who was to reach the city by another route, and from there we were to start the next day for Lake Pleasant, Mass., to spend a week in the camp there.

We reached Lake Pleasant on time, and found everybody apparently glad to see us. We, one or the other of us, and sometimes both of us, spoke there every day for eight days. It was hard for us to break way from that camp. Mattie has many old friends there—friends who heard her first discourses—discourses delivered when she had just turned into her teens. Some of her school-girl friends who knew her as a "wee lass," before she had reached even her teens, were there to listen to her. As for myself, I met many of my old friends who listened to my discourses and debates two score of years since. I have been pleased at all the meetings I have attended, to note the interest taken in the Morris Pratt Institute. Lake Pleasant, as did other places, remembered the school substantially. Everyone had good words to say for it. All regard it as the greatest sign that Spiritualism is to move on in the twentieth century as it has never done before.

When we left Lake Pleasant about two hundred campers accompanied us to the train, and with songs, speeches and bouquets gave us such a send-off as seldom goes with one on a journey. It may be well to say here that we have been asked to return to every place we have been this year. Undoubtedly, one or both of us will visit some of them.

Our objective point, when we left Lake Pleasant, was the camp of the Wisconsin State Association of Spiritualists, at Waukesha, Wis. The camp had been at work under difficulties two weeks when we got there—I say under difficulties, and so it was; this was the first camp ever held on these grounds; there was not a building there; it rained almost constantly. Notwithstanding the rain, the only well on the grounds went dry. The management was doomed to haul water from the Waukesha Lithia Springs for drinking, cooking and bathing purposes. On many of the campers the water, which is so good at a distance, had something like the same effect that the manna had on the Hebrews; the result was that they longed for the "fleshpots of home." I think a few of them pulled up stakes and went home. Such made a grave mistake, for as soon as Moses got into camp the clouds gave way, the weather changed, and even the well began, without any smiting of rocks, to yield water. It is doubted whether campers ever enjoyed themselves more.

All seemed to fall in love with the grounds. Indeed a large sum was subscribed to pay for the grounds, in order to have the camp there permanently, or at least annually. When it was noticed that we wanted them the price immediately arose, proving that the owner of them wanted them more than we did, or that he thought we were more eager for them than we were. As it is, we have a lease on them for the next two years.

Every expense of this meeting was high. Waukesha is a public watering place, and many of its citizens thought we had come there to bleed. When we began to arrange to put on our own busses, and to report the telegraph and express companies, the hint was immediately taken. They learned that even Spiritualists had rights that they must respect.

The above remarks I hope will not be applied to all, for there are ladies and gentlemen of the first water in Waukesha. Our President, Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, was always around, and bull-dozers and robbers found that she was quite numerous, and a bad one to fool with. One thing I noticed, the more that she brought them to time, the more respect they had for her. At this camp Mrs. Stewart had entirely too much business on her hands; no man could have stood up under it. As president she had the burden of the camp on her hands. Even the Spiritualists of the state, not being used to camping, few of them brought bedding, some of them did not even bring towels. Those who thought they came prepared for camping had no idea that the nights would be so cold and hence did not bring bedding enough. Attempting to feed, house and make comfortable all these campers was something like Moses taking the children of Israel through the wilderness, or more like Brigham Young taking thousands of Mormons through the great American Sahara, and over the Rocky Mountains. But Mrs. Stewart had "number one" lieutenants in Will J. Erwood, Mr. and Mrs. McFarlin, and a few others.

Next to Mrs. Stewart, Will J. Erwood is a great worker. Mrs. Stewart gets nervous when she is worn out, but Brother Will is a man of nerve, or rather a man without nerves. On any occasion he could be found with that same bland smile which always accompanies him. Smoothness of temper and voice was never known to desert him.

Mrs. McFarlin, of Milwaukee, is not only a good and smooth speaker, but she is an elocutionist who attracts the people; and she is as persistent a worker—well she goes entirely beyond her strength, whether in making beds, caring for strangers, presiding over meetings, or preaching sermons.

Mrs. Gault, of Waukesha, is another good, intelligent and scholarly worker who deserves to be better known. Her reply to the Rev. Mr. Lean's attack on Spiritualism makes the reverend gentleman appear rather Lean. This reply is as full of thought and of statistics, as an egg is of meat. It should be read by everybody.

From Waukesha, I went home to Whitewater for one day, and then, as usual, ran away from home and left Mrs. Hull the work and worry of settling. On Tuesday, September 2, I started for the Sycamore Grove, Los Angeles, Cal., camp-meeting. I landed at Los Angeles on Saturday night at midnight, about fourteen hours late. After a few hours' rest in a cheap little hotel, I pulled out for the camp and soon found myself surrounded by hundreds of anxious friends and old acquaintances, and an audience crowding every nook and corner of the vast auditorium, in so much that it seemed impossible to get through to the rostrum. I went to California to work and it seems that the people knew it, for, inasmuch as I could not be in a dozen places at once I could not meet half the demands made upon me. I tried to do my duty at the camp even though I failed in every other duty. I generally spoke once, and sometimes twice each day. The pleadings to allow the people to get up mass-meetings, Socialistic Labor meetings, and other meetings, were absolutely irresistible. The physical impossibility of meeting the demands was the only stumbling block in the way.

The audiences were simply immense. many times the auditorium and the extra seats in front, and at the side of the auditorium were not sufficient to hold the anxious people. In California the harvest is truly ripe, and the efficient laborers are sadly few. Let us "pray the Lord of the harvest" to send more earnest and able workers into the field.

In proof of the fact that the people are waiting for the workers I will state that I allowed a few of my friends in the city to make three appointments for me. One was held in the Simpson Auditorium, which, I think is the largest audience chamber in Southern California. The receipts at the door were over one hundred and forty dollars; and no more than ten cents were taken from any one, and very many were admitted free.

At this meeting Mrs. Captain Green gave one of her inimitable fire-test seances. The audience was so large, and the conditions for the fire tests are so subtle, that I feared the seance would not be a success; but it was. In every sense of the word the success was all that could have been asked. There are several fire-test mediums in the world, but I know of none who can do as good and as convincing work as Mrs. Green. One must witness this test to realize what it is.

After this fire-test, although it was not advertised, Mrs. Maud von Freitag came forward on the platform and called upon her "Bible Guide," and then allowed any one in the audience to ask any question desired. The question being asked, her hands would be guided in opening the Bible and she would read the words upon which she would see a very small but brilliant light. The text would never fail to answer the question. It mattered not what the question was, nor to what it related the answer was always direct and plain. Occasionally there was a vein of sarcasm running through the answer which would excite a hearty laugh. Once some one arose in the rear of the audience of over fifteen hundred people, and drawled out the question, "Is Spiritualism true?" I had just finished a two hours' discourse. The answer came as quick as a flash, "Hear Moses and the prophets,"—that is the mediums. Mrs. Freitag has as many as six or eight different phases of mediumship, every one of which is most convincing. It had been reported to me, without ifs, ands, or provisos, that she was one of the most arrant frauds in the world, but in several public seances and in several private sittings I failed to find any evidence of fraud or deception of any kind. On the contrary, I got some of the most astounding tests of spirit presence and power I ever received in my life. As she is coming to our school in the near future, I hope to soon have the privilege of introducing her to audiences in the middle and Eastern states. In this way all can judge for themselves.

At the other two Los Angeles meetings, held in Elks Hall, Mrs. Cowles, of Oakland, followed with messages from the spirit world. Mrs. Cowles does not give so many names and dates as many of our Eastern mediums do, but aside from that her tests are very definite. When she gets after one with a test, like David Crockett's coons, they might as well "come down," for she will bring them down before she gets through. Mrs. C. is a good medium, and, in her own way she reaches a large class of people. Above all, although I have gone in her wake from San Diego to British Columbia, I have never heard an insinuation that she was anything other than honest and straightforward in all her work. Her appearance is under all circumstances, that of an honest woman.

There were several other speakers and mediums on the campgrounds but I could not, if I would, write them all up or down. In many instances even their names have gone from me.

For the success of this and preceding meetings held here, more is due to Mrs. Nettie Howell, formerly of St. Paul, Minn., than to any one else. She, failing to induce others to co-operate with her, got up several successful camps, single-handed and alone.

Finally she and others organized a camp association, which, under her management, made the camp eminently successful.

Now the association has elected new officers, all of whom are without experience in camp work. Many are so much afraid of the result that they are urging Mrs. Howell, and her assistants to inaugurate another camp. Whether that will be done remains to be seen. I have urged some kind of compromise by which all parties can unite. Nothing is so great an enemy to camp-meetings as too many camps.

Mrs. Hull and I have been solicited to attend both of these camps next year. I have answered, that, while we would gladly work for the success of either camp, we will not go if there are two camps going at the same time within a few miles of each other. I do not want to go so far to speak to half of the people while somebody else is addressing the other half within a short distance. We must not divide our own forces.

Mrs. Howell is and has been eminently successful in anything she undertakes. She is well known, and her word is as good as gold in any bank in Los Angeles for one thousand, or ten thousand dollars.

I had so little time to work for the Morris Pratt Institute, that I did not do as well as I had hoped to do. I however succeeded in obtaining a few students, and beside raised several dollars to help matters along. Everybody is in favor of the school; it is regarded as the best work as yet started among Spiritualists. I have many promises of help in the future. If the Spiritualists at large could go to Whitewater, and see the thousands of dollars worth of work which has been done on the building, and other improvements made, I know they would now send in the means to pay the bills.

This letter is entirely too long; I had neither the time nor patience to make it shorter, but within a week or two I will send in a shorter letter, giving you a synopsis of the opening of our school.

I will only say, in closing, that it is likely that either our secretary, Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, or I will very soon make a trip to the Pacific Coast, and test it from British Columbia to San Diego in behalf of our school. To that end we are ready to now receive calls en route, from places where there are prospects of doing something in behalf of our educational work. The school must go on and do its work; all this requires sacrifices on the part of those who believe in the truths which we are preparing young men and women to preach.

There, this article, half written on the road to California, has been finished on the way back. I bless the angels for all the favors I have received since I resolved to throw myself into this new work.

MOSES HULL.

PRATT INSTITUTE OPENED.

Formal Exercises Held in the Lecture Room on Tuesday.

Last Tuesday marked the opening of the Morris Pratt Institute. The opening exercises were held in the upper lecture room at 2:30 in the afternoon, and were attended by a number of Spiritualists from other towns and states, together with a large gathering of the people of Whitewater.

Rev. Moses Hull, president of the association, presided at the meeting, and announced as the first number a song written for the occasion by Mrs. Mattie E. Hull. After an invocation by Prof. A. J. Weaver, brief addresses were made by the various members of the faculty who were present.

Rev. Moses Hull was the first speaker. He outlined in brief the history of the movement which has culminated in the establishment of the school—the only one of its kind anywhere in the world. He told something of the vicissitudes of the work, and the impossibility of establishing such an institution had it not been for the liberality of Mr. Pratt in dedicating his property to the work. He also told something of the instructors who are to have charge of the work. He said also that regular Sunday services will be established, to begin next Sunday, afternoon and evening. He himself will lecture when he is here, though his work will take him away very often, and others of the faculty will conduct the Sunday service in his absence.

Prof. A. J. Weaver, who is to be in general charge of instruction, followed with a general outline of the work to be done. He said that the school will hold the same relation to the body of Spiritualists that the theological seminary holds to the denomination under which it is working; that the school will aim to fit workers for the public platform.

Mrs. Mattie E. Hull is to have charge of the classes in psychic phenomena—the line of work which is peculiar to this school alone. Mrs. Hull gave a brief talk regarding what her work will be. She says that she uses no text books, and does not know in advance what she will give her classes. But just before the class hour she seeks the quiet of her own room, and there thoughts from the spirit world come flooding upon her. These she writes down and takes to the class room.

The teacher of oratory, Mrs. Alfarata Hull Jahnke, cannot be here for some weeks at least on account of illness, and her place will be taken temporarily by her sister, Mrs. Florence Hull Johnson, of Boston. A congratulatory letter on the opening of the school was read from Mrs. Jahnke, also letters and telegrams from other leaders who were unable to be present.

Short addresses were then made by Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, Morris Pratt, and by several of the visitors.—The Register, Whitewater, Wis.

A Thing Worth Knowing.

No need of cutting off a woman's breast or a man's cheek or nose in a vain attempt to cure cancer. No use of applying burning plasters to the flesh and torturing those already weak from suffering. Soothing, balmy, aromatic Oils give safe, speedy and certain cure. The most horrible forms of cancer of the face, breast, womb, mouth and stomach; large tumors, ugly ulcers, fistula, catarrh; terrible skin diseases, etc., are all successfully treated by the application of various form of soothing oils. Send for a book mailed free, giving particulars and prices of Oils. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Kansas City, Mo. (Cut this out and send to some suffering one.)

MEDIUMSHIP.

Is It Demoralizing? Is the Question.

The position taken by Prof. Loveland regarding mediumship, in No. 665, page 1 of the Progressive Thinker, seems to me radically erroneous, misleading, and (shall I say it?) "demoralizing."

To close the door against mediumship, at this stage of the development of mortal man, would result in the most lamentable and absolute demoralization of the human race—a retrogression of humanity in the flesh, from its present status of somewhat developed spirituality, downward to the brutal savagery of the era of man's most primitive animalism.

An enlightened mediumship is indeed the hope of humanity.

Conscious and constant personal association with the celestial world will prove to be the uplifting agency of man's attainment of practical brotherhood and universal peace. To be in sympathetic touch (mediumistic rapport) with the higher life, is to have access to those harmonizing and healthfulizing forces in the presence of which disease cannot exist—or, being present, cannot remain.

Mediumship per se is not therefore abnormal to the human system, nor demoralizing in effects or tendencies. Quite the contrary is true; if mankind ever attains to a truly normal (or wholly human) status of existence, in which neither physician, monarch nor law-maker, soldier nor butcher, will be called for or possible, it will be after mediumship has become universal, and in its exercise the flood-gates of inspiration have been everywhere kept open a sufficient number of generations.

I said "nor law-maker;" a race or individual guided from within by the light of the heavenly spirit, needs no artificial restraint to keep it or him in the happy path of rectitude, wisdom and love. It is because the mass of mankind are yet in the darkness, doubt, discord, disease and doleful dogma, that belong to an undevelopment of the spiritual nature and the non-exercise of the faculties and powers pertaining to mediumship—it is because of this "abnormal" condition, of latent, repressed and unilluminated psychic or brain forces, that man benighted is constantly violating nature's laws of health, harmony, virtue, prosperity and happiness.

We must remember that the chief corner-stone of the temple of Spiritualism is Spirit Communion. From it has been derived the most beautiful, soul-cheering and heart-satisfying philosophy of life, death and immortality ever known to mortal man. To repudiate mediumship, or stigmatize it as a something abnormal and detrimental, is to take a position of hostility to the spiritual movement itself. The most characteristic and potent feature of the movement being omitted, there would be left us "the play of Hamlet with the part of Hamlet left out;" its core and centre, its animating principle, gone.

The amazing vitality, the irresistible vigor, which Modern Spiritualism has manifested, and which has planted in a brief half-century in every land and clime the new standard of a world's emancipation, and changed the religious and ethical thought of the world more profoundly than any other movement has ever done in five hundred or a thousand years (if at all)—has been due to the fact that unnumbered millions of enfranchised and advanced souls in the Summerland above, thoroughly organized for the purpose, have availed themselves of the "open door" to earth; have focalized, radiated and distributed, upon the mortal plane, the dynamic forces of the celestial realms; until to-day the nations listening, trembling, are thrilled with a consciousness of impending changes in the very constitution of society itself! A world-wide revolution is at hand.

Who shall challenge these celestial visitants, originators, promoters, directors if you please, of the revolution with the warning words, "Stand back! Your presence among us is 'abnormal;' your inspirations 'deleterious;' your thought-waves and baptism of immortal love are 'demoralizing;' your healing, vitalizing, psycho-magnetic impartations are 'violations of physiologic laws!' Away, we need you not! We want no 'guides' in this wilderness, this is a campaign without leaders, we are bushwhackers, we want you to know!"

It is very true that mediumship, like any other blessing or gift of nature, may be perverted or misapplied. (Its laws and requirements are very subtle and little understood by most mortals, especially by materialistic scientists. Spirit phenomena can not be measured with a material yardstick.)

Water will quench your thirst or drown you, fire warm or burn you, gravitation keep you from dropping off the earth into space or throw you to the bottom of a precipice; yet who refuses to drink when thirsty, to warm himself when cold, or to accept gravitation? Or who refuses to eat food at all because people eat too much? or who calls atmospheric air "demoralizing" and refuses to breathe it, because a cyclone is made of air and can blow him into the middle of next week?

I freely admit that a medium can be injured during the exercise of his medial powers, in consequence of discordant, unspiritual, diseased, blindly skeptical, or otherwise "abnormal" conditions in the surroundings. But this fact, far from being a valid reason against the development and use of mediumship, is on the contrary, an excellent argument against the continuance of that stupidity (shall it be called?) which, "having eyes sees not, having ears hears not, the sublime truth of angel presence and the unselfish ministrations of undying and unquenchable love from the Great Beyond.

I speak from a continuous mediumistic experience, covering almost a half-century of the most intimate association with enlightened immortals, when I declare myself to be, as to my physical well-being, more indebted to the beneficial effects derived from spirit communion, than to any mere material agency. Have led a very active and intense mediumistic life, but the spiritual forces have sustained me in it; and no headache in all that time, no sickness beyond colds or la grippe, no medicine stronger than mullein syrup or "pokeberry" juice, no rheumatism in twenty-two years—all attest the invalidity of the claim that "mediumistic manifestation is violation of physiologic laws, is physiologic unrighteousness!"

No! Mediumship is an inherent natural function of the human constitution. Like every other function, faculty or power, it should be trained, unfolded, and duly and properly exercised.

Thought-transference, impression, inspiration, conscious trance, unconscious trance (a rare state), each and all are strictly normal; that is they are manifestations of a natural law, the same law, links in the same chain. Each has its use. Its existence is its justification. If so used as to work harm, where lies the fault? In the law itself? No, in the blindness or wilfulness of its manipulators! What the remedy? Greater development, more mediumship—not less! Spiritual things must be spiritually discerned—they cannot be measured with a material yardstick, nor comprehended from a materialistic standpoint.

The article in question characterizes as "the most far-reaching and most dangerous of all forms of mediumistic demoralization that phase which talks of 'my controls,' 'my guides,' 'only an instrument,' etc.," and says, "these phases imply a renunciation of selfhood; a submission to a person or persons, or power we do not know!" To have a guide or a "familiar spirit," is declared to be "merely a superstition;" and "only a scientific education can save us from these blunders."

Is it a blunder, a superstition, a demoralization, to recognize and admit the fact that the spirit existence is a condition of life as superior to this as is this to the existence preceding "birth?" That which is laid off, cast aside, at so-called death, is of no more value to the arisen spirit than is its prenatal covering to the child who has entered this life. At birth we come into active use of powers previously latent, at death the same thing happens.

Is it superstition to recognize the fact that the spirit world is real, substantial, and its people socially organized—that its denizens have knowledge of earth's conditions, and that the advent of Modern Spiritualism was the result of concerted effort of reformers and philanthropists of spirit life—and that the originators of the spiritual movement, those who gave it birth, are also its rightful directors and "guides?" Why, then, attempt to do more than faithfully to co-operate with the higher powers in the prosecution of this noblest work of all the ages?

It is not true that the "person or power is not known."

In short, let no mortal think himself capable of conducting the spiritual movement. Let us not place the cart before the horse.

J. MADISON ALLEN.

GOOD WORK.

Preaching Spiritualism in the Lion's Den.

Last week found me in Shelbyville, Ind., where I was met by Brother W. Bone and his pretty daughter, and driven eight miles to their quiet home, where love, peace and harmony prevail a place of rest to the weary of city life. There nature blooms untouched; the birds sing in the mornings, while early evening delighted me with the twilight chant of the cricket. The setting sun lighted up the shining leaves upon the trees in the orchard, giving inspiration for the work before me.

We held the first meetings in the home, the people coming from far and near to hear the new gospel, the philosophy of immortal life.

Quite musical were the sounds of the horses' hoofs as they drove to the door with their human loads, there being no street cars there. The meetings were good in results.

Friday and Sunday we drove four miles to Norristown and held meetings in an old M. E. Union church, one of the hard type of orthodoxy. For the first time in its history liberal thought and Spiritualism was spoken within its old walls.

Sunday the church was full. The young came with their "best girl," and brought better influence for me. Bless them, these young faces with nature's God about their good souls. Deep interest was shown throughout it all.

I took my subject from the Bible, knowing that those present could understand better that which they held as their savior. "In my father's house are many mansions." I gave an explanation of the "S" in mansions. I felt sure that that little innocent "S" would do its work of destruction in making them doubt their old position as to one heaven and one hell, as preached by their church, with no hope of redemption for the "sinner in hell." This was just my time to put an explanation of the spiritual spheres, conditions and so forth. Would you believe it, readers, I actually noticed a look of relief upon the faces of a few—on whose heads the hairs were white with age, while on others the love for the brimstone was plainly and painfully visible. We gave away old numbers of The Progressive Thinker. Many were very much interested and expressed a desire to have me come back for lecture work. What do you think of that, the very first time they heard of our beautiful philosophy?

My answer is, Angels are at work and will not stop till Spiritualism has a good foothold there; may love give it speed.

I thought of Moses Hull—how he rode for miles in the early part of his work. Whatever good may have resulted from my labors there, I am sure, were with the combined efforts of those brave workers, Mr. W. Bone and his good wife, who stand with one or two alone to advocate our cause in the community, together with their good spirit band backing them in their efforts. May the angels ever watch carefully over these brave workers and family is my prayer.

I will answer calls to officiate at funerals, serve societies—and upon new fields; also speak on temperance and subjects of reform. Address me, 1915 Broadway, Indianapolis, Ind.

VIRGINIE BARRETT.

FROM INDIA TO THE PLANET MARS.

A MOST REMARKABLE WORK.

Fascinating, Interesting and Instructive.

By Th. Flournoy, Professor of Psychology in the University of Geneva. "This is an account of the experiments with the 'Geneva Medium,' Helene Smith. In her trances she lives the dual existence of an Indian princess and of an inhabitant of the planet Mars. Professor Flournoy and his fellow scientists have for more than five years experimented with these astounding physical phenomena."

This is a work of thrilling interest. It has excited great attention in this country and in Europe. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

OLD AND NEW PSYCHOLOGY

By W. J. Colville. Reports of twenty-four distinct lectures, recently delivered in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia and other prominent cities of the United States, have contributed the basis of this volume. Price, $1.00.

Out of the Depths Into the Light.

By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price, 25 cents.

THE TALMUD Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry, and legends. Also brief sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polano. 859 pp. Price, cloth, $1

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any flamboyant descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price, 15c.

Practical Methods to Insure Success.

A valuable little work, full of practical instruction in matters pertaining to physical, mental and spiritual health. Worth many times its cost. Price 10 cents.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

Grimes of Preachers.

An interesting book along its line and useful to Spiritualists attacked by the clergy and their followers. Price 25 cents; for sale at this office.

STANDING UP FOR JESUS,

Or what the Editor of the Freethinker's Magazine thinks of him. Price, 4 cents; twenty-five copies for 50 cents.

The Childish Faith of Missionaries.

A letter from a missionary in India appeared in a religious journal, and the reading of it, to a sensible person, was like taking a plunge into the all-believing credulity of the Dark Ages. The letter was written for the purpose of getting money to carry on the work. Yet, if the friends will not contribute, the writer says of God:

"He knows all about the growth of the work and as it increases so does the need. God cannot forsake his own, nor His work, but we need that abiding trust and rest and faith, that will not fail when hard places come."

How God protects his faithful servants in the pestilential climate of India, is revealed in this unadorned paragraph:

"We lost one of our youngest missionaries, Bro. Lenth, who died of fever, his wife died nine months earlier. Their two children will be sent home to her parents."

Lenth married a woman enthusiastic as himself for the conversion of the heathen, and in the honeymoon of their young lives left their pleasant western home for the field of labor in India. God did not care for them. If he had anything to do in the wretched affair, he robbed two helpless orphans of their parents and caused them to be sent to their grandparents, who surely had not ought to have this burden inflicted on them. A most pitiable conclusion to the first bright chapter.

The conversion of the Hindoo to the Christian faith is impossible as to convert the Christian to Buddhism or Brahminism. The writer under notice is jubilant over some converts who visit the missions for instruction about "Jesus." Of one it is particularly mentioned:

"He is entirely blind and lives ten miles from here. The cane at his side is his guide, he walks as well in the night as in daytime. He comes once a week and after he is taught about Jesus he gets some bread and onions, a little salt and a few peppers, this is what they get with bread."

What lovely gullibility of faith which is blind to the fact that this wily old fakir, comes for the "bread and onions," "a little salt and a few peppers," and endures the talk about "Jesus" as the price he has to pay.

Such is a specimen of the missionaries—the teachers—sent to the farthest coasts of the world to convert the heathen, and millions of dollars are yearly donated for such use, while at home the rankest heathenism prevails, and passes unrebuked by the bejeweled and perfumed expounders of the salvation by the blood of Jesus!

Why Is It?

As stated by the daily press a million and a half dollars is the amount of the bequest of Mrs. Mary J. Winthrop of New York, to Princeton Theological Seminary. When announcement of the bequest was first made it was estimated that it would not reach over $400,000, but the value of the estate is so much greater than was at first supposed that it is now certain that the institution will be beneficiary to the larger amount.

Mrs. Winthrop's bequest gave to the seminary the residue of the estate after the amounts willed to the heirs had been paid out, and the balance will be turned over to the institution very shortly.

Mrs. Winthrop was the daughter of Maltby Gelston, who was collecter of the port of New York in the early part of the last century. The Gelstons were stanch members of the First Presbyterian church in this city and so were the Winthrops. Mrs. Winthrop's husband died in 1896. Her home was at 35 West Twentieth street for many years. She died at the Garden City Hotel in August, at the age of 85.

A member of the seminary faculty said that the money would be largely used in developing the intellectual side of the institution, but part of it will probably be set aside to building a gymnasium. The library and dormitory system will be enlarged somewhat, but most of the money will go to increase the number of courses and instructors.

Princeton Theological Seminary is an institution for the education of aspirants to the ministry in the Presbyterian church. Orthodoxy of the Calvinistic type is inculcated and supposedly demonstrated along biblical lines, according to orthodox logic and orthodox interpretation of Bible texts.

In view of this magnificent gift toward the education of minds into the utterly horrible doctrinal teachings of Calvinistic orthodoxy, it is pertinent to inquire into the reasons why orthodoxy, with all its horrors, can command such munificent support, while the more mild, gentle, tender, humane faiths and teachings of the unorthodox—especially Spiritualism—languish for lack of support.

One might suppose that the larger, more humane, just and liberal-thought of Spiritualism, for instance, would appeal more strongly to man's humane and liberal sentiment, and induce free expressions of financial support.

If we look more deeply into the matter, we may be able to discover philosophical reasons why orthodoxy gains [illegible] while other and more liberal and kindly cults fail.

There are two co-operative causes for the apparent anomaly.

First, the nature of orthodox belief, with its hell of misery for the damned, to which all are destined who have not before death been "converted" and acquired a "saving faith in Christ."

The terrors of remediless woe appeal powerfully to a sincere sensitive nature, which is stirred to effort to save others from a burning hell. Fear and hope incite the saved believer to action—which fear and hope, springing from such belief, are not factors in inciting Spiritualists and Liberals to active effort. They have no such hell—no such salvation—to appeal to their emotions.

Further, it is evident that Spiritualists and Liberals, in the mass, while reaching the plane of development whereby they discard the teachings of orthodoxy, have not yet attained to that more exalted plane, where a generous altruistic spirit of love, within them inspires to deeds of unbounded humanitarian import. What they do for mankind must have its inception in a generous love for man—without reference to a fear of hell, or dread of a loss of man's "salvation."

It is evident then that the more humane genius of Spiritualism brings, with its rich, grand gain in its beautiful philosophy, a lack in the essential elements that appeal to the emotions of the sincere believers in orthodox theology.

Sometime, when man shall have grown larger in the sweet humanities of Spiritualism, he will yield its unselfish fruits in response to the pure and noble altruistic love that stirs within.

Important Point in History.

Henry M. Parkhurst, of Brooklyn, the first practical stenographer in this country using the system of Isaac Pitman, called by him phonography, now almost universally adopted, was the first to give women an occupation by the use of the type-writing machine. While official reporter for the Superior Court of New York City he bought four of the first hundred machines made, numbers 6, 8, 17 and 82, which were used by girls in making copies of testimony for him. Then he taught them shorthand so that they could read his notes. This led to the extensive use of the machine by women, many of whom by learning shorthand, were able to take down with rapidity words from dictation and then type-write them.

For many years W. H. Burr and H. M. Parkhurst worked together as stenographers, beginning in the United States Senate in December, 1848, and continuing until 1854. Thereafter they opened an office in Nassau street, New York, as shorthand reporters. Mr. Burr entered the field of stenographic reporting a few months after Mr. Parkhurst.

A Noble Worker Passed to Spirit Life.

We were pained to learn of the transition to spirit life, of Mrs. Emma N. Warne. The parting scene occurred at the home of her brother at Flushing, Mich. The death of her physical body was ascribed to congestion of the lungs with other complications which human skill could not overcome. She passed away calmly and fearlessly with her spirit illuminated with a light divine, realizing that she would soon be ushered into the presence of relatives and friends on the spirit side of life. Mrs. Warne was the devoted companion and wife of Dr. Geo. B. Warne, who is the President of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association. Their home life was an ideal one, where harmony and love exerted at all times their soul-elevating and spiritualizing influence, making as nearly as possible a heaven on earth. Mrs. Warne was a physician, being a graduate of the leading homeopathic college of Chicago, and she had an excellent practice, as she was constantly aided by her fine mediumship. Her lectures on the rostrum were always well received. She certainly will be missed by her numerous friends and co-workers in Chicago, and more especially by her devoted husband, who fully realizes the beauty and grandeur of the spiritual philosophy.

The Views of J. Young McFarland.

To the Editor:—You are making an admirable paper, and it grows better and better. You put some things into it which you do not yourself approve; some things which, according to my light, are foolish or bad; but this is incidental to your plan of conducting a paper. You mean to give everyone [so far as space will allow] a fair show, expecting that truth will be the winner. You are not an editorial Cerberus, sitting at the gate and ready to bite any one who comes your way unless he can show that he is your sort of a dog. The result is that we get a paper which has to be read through and through, else we might miss something uncommonly good; or, less frequently, some fellow that needs attending to. This feature of The Progressive Thinker makes it quite laborious for me. The ordinary church paper I can read in just a little bit. There won't be anything in it which does not square with the dogmas it represents, for the editor will not admit it; and so we can safely pass over all that relates to the faith, well assured that nothing will be heard except slightly varying noises with the old saw. We can go to sleep over the church paper, just as the brethren go to sleep in the amen corner of the church, well knowing that the preacher can be trusted.

The Progressive Thinker is a different proposition. The editor himself and his whole crew have to be watched. All the same, the paper gets better.

You want to know, among other things, whether Spiritualist papers should expose the trickery done in the name of Spiritualism. Yes, sir, with all your might.

O, for a whip in every honest hand,
To lash the rascals naked through the land.

If the N. S. A. can do anything to protect true mediums and suppress the false, that will be the very best work of all. We can't stop the frauds, but with a better organization we could mark our own, and send the others out into the wilderness. Some of our people don't think much of prayer, and of course, would despise a litany; but the N. S. A., at its coming session, might at least agree upon one prayer, the heart cry of every true Spiritualist, namely: From fools and false mediums, good Lord deliver us.

ASTOUNDING STATEMENTS BY AN EMINENT SCIENTIST

REMARKABLE DECLARATIONS, FROM THE BOOK COMPLETED JUST BEFORE THE DEATH THE POWERS AND DUTIES OF PARENTS IN THE POWERS AND DUTIES O FPARENTS IN INFLUENCING THEIR UNBORN CHILDREN—DR. SCHENK'S FINAL WORDS ON PRENATAL LIFE AND THE THEORY OF SEX.

Berlin, Sept. 27.

While Europe is waiting for the posthumous book of Prof. Samuel Leopold Schenk on "Prenatal Influences for Humanity's Sake," the Sunday World correspondent is enabled, by the courtesy of Dr. A. Kirchoff, who was an intimate friend and co-worker of the great scientist, to present a complete outline of the important work.

Probably no announcement from a scientific man in recent years made so great a sensation as that of Prof. Schenk that he had discovered the secret of sex; that he could in fact bring to bear certain influences which would make it possible for parents to exercise selection.

Dr. Schenk was the professor of embryology in the Royal and Imperial University of Vienna, and recognized as the foremost authority on that subject in Europe. No scientific man stood higher. He announced his discovery after more than a quarter of a century of constant experiment and study.

He and his wife desired that all of their children should be boys and six were born to them. The Archduke Frederic of Austria had seven daughters and he was most anxious to have a boy to keep an estate of $50,000,000 from passing to a distant branch of the family. The Archduchess placed herself under Dr. Schenk's care and a son was born to her in July, 1898.

This, coupled with other instances of the kind, made Dr. Schenk the most talked-about scientific man of the year.

Prof. Schenk was so bitterly criticised that he was compelled to resign from the university, but his prestige increased rather than diminished.

BY PROF. S. L. SCHENK.
(Reported by Dr. A. Kirchoff.)

My theory about determining the sex of an unborn child—if it can be called only a theory after my own experience of desiring only boys in my family and having six born to us—is really of lesser importance. It is but one phase of my study and experiments.

While the sex of a child is a matter of great moment to royal families and those having entailed estates, it is of comparatively small consequence, aside from the question of mere sentiment, to the world at large. But it is of vast importance to the human race that children shall be well born, in the sense that they shall be brought into the world under the best possible conditions.

My hope is to arouse in parents and in all men and women of marriageable age a deep sense of their responsibilities—the responsibilities they owe their offspring, themselves, society and future generations.

While it is true that the influence and responsibility of the mother is the more important because it never ceases, the father's influence upon the young life that is forming should not be underestimated. It is his duty to provide a happy environment for his wife, to guard her from excessive work and worry, to keep joy and content in her heart.

FOOD INFLUENCES CHARACTER.

I consider this so important that, in the event of the father being unable to properly care for his wife, to furnish her with reasonable comfort and pleasant surroundings, it is the duty of the state to interfere for its own welfare as well as for the sake of the child yet to be born.

It is no longer a matter of scientific dispute that, to a certain extent at least, food influences character. It is a recognized and acknowledged fact that the larvae of bees can be made to grow into either "workers" or "queens," according to the food that is given them. All bee larvae are fed on the same food for the first three days of existence. After that a different, more stimulating food is given those that will become "queens"—food which causes certain of their organs to become fully developed, while the same organs of those that are to become "workers" remain imperfect and rudimentary, thus making the line of their development along the lines which fit them to carry out their mission as toilers.

I believe that the broad principle applies to the human race, although other more important influences become active. I hold that the character, traits and general usefulness of the unborn child, as well as the sex its parents may wish it to have, may be determined by giving to the expectant mother certain wholesome, pleasant, elevating surroundings and by subjecting her to a certain diet and treatment.

But if the mother be not interested in the future of her child, if she oppose the development of it or is merely passive, all efforts to have the child well born are likely to fail. It is necessary that physical, intellectual and moral ideals be constantly before her.

It is almost a law that the expectant mother shall have moods of irritability when unusual or even abnormal things appeal to her, and it is of the first importance that she be treated with the utmost kindness and consideration. It is under these circumstances that the responsibility of the father is especially great. It is his solemn duty to bestow upon her the most patient love and attention. If the mother feels that evil is finding a place in her mind, that temper or envy or malice or selfishness is manifest, let her remember that her offspring may have the stigma of these things. The new life is extremely susceptible to impressions, good and evil, and the foundation of a child's character is formed before it comes into the world.

Kindness of heart is easily implanted in an unborn child. My own experience proves it. My associates are pleased to say pleasant things of me, and my wife is most tender-hearted and affectionate. Of course we have our faults, some of which our boys have inherited in a greater or less degree, but in kindliness they certainly excel their parents. They cannot pass a beggar or a poor-box without putting their hands in their pockets, or my pockets, to be more exact. If a mendicant calls while we are at table they scramble over each other to offer their plate to their poor brother.

Why? Because my wife was careful to cultivate self-abnegation and benevolence; because we gave to the limit of our resources. We were poor in those days, and to follow out our experiment, which indeed was near to her heart, the good mother of my children became almoner for several rich society ladies who rejoiced over the opportunity of being rid of bothersome detail. Those women do not know what their children missed.

SOCIAL FACULTIES IMPLANTED.

In the same way we implanted in our children before they were born certain social faculties which I think are essential to happiness. My wife went about and received, enjoying always the society of our friends and acquaintances, never losing her interest in them, up to the time she was compelled to remain in bed. It is a matter of common knowledge that the children of parents who are popular are generally capable of attracting and holding friends. A woman who is unsocial, who is inclined to shut herself up at certain times, is very likely to bear a child who turns out to be a self-satisfied recluse. If, however, the mother continues an intelligent interest in her home and kitchen, in her garden and her household pets, her child will be a home-lover, fond alike of men and animals, attracted by pretty things and having kindly thoughts for the whole world.

The mother who would delight in a loving child must love it before it sees the light. If she waits until it is born, until its own personality begins to attract her, she may have little control over its affections. The love she craves for should be implanted in the unborn child. That love will be always with the mother; it will endure and strew flowers over her grave many years after she is gone.

Thus, in a moral sense, a woman may make or mar her son or daughter before she brings the child into the world. If she be not eager to impart good traits she may bestow upon the little one selfishness, peevishness, disloyalty, dishonesty and passions that make the world sadder and life harder to bear.

The practical side is also to be considered, and it is only less important than the moral side. Health, capacity and perseverance and other qualities of such great importance, if one would succeed, must be transmitted.

But this is not all. The parents must be constantly on their guard. The robust, well-meaning mother may sow seeds of recklessness in her child if she does not cultivate economy and keep order in her affairs. There is many a spendthrift disgracing his family who has "an excellent mother," according to the general understanding. Yet that same mother may be responsible for her son's irresponsibility because she manifested a spirit of recklessness and carelessness before the child was born.

OTHER DUTIES OF THE FATHER.

In all these things the father plays a part. He should make it his business to forestall anger, morbidness, discontent, undue pride, fits of passion, extreme sensitiveness, bashfulness and self-consciousness on the mother's part. Some of these are intensified by the condition of maternity, and that is all the more reason to guard against them to avoid transmitting them to the child.

It is possible and practical to carry the prenatal influence, further to give the child an impetus that will be of great value in the development of certain talents, although this opens a realm not clearly investigated, because facts are difficult to obtain and more difficult to demonstrate. It is very common to hear it said of a child who performs cleverly at the piano: "She gets that from her mother, who is a fine player."

What is it that the child inherits from the mother? Is it merely the natural aptitude to learn piano playing, or is it to the ability to play acquired by the mother at the expense of years of practice and transmitted to the child? While the scientific world is at variance on this question the popular mind has already decided in favor of my theory of prenatal influence.

As with music, so it is with the other arts and professions. Parents wishing their child to be equiped with the desire of capacity for acquiring knowledge need but exercise their own powers in a given direction to predestine their unborn babe to a career as a mathematician, lawyer, poet, mechanic or inventor.

To sum up, I advocate the survival of the fittest qualities in parents, the arousing of the best thoughts, and loftiest ideals, and the suppression, the absolute suppression, of all evil tendencies. If it is possible to avoid having weak, imperfect children, it is a crime to have offspring marred for life by the neglect, ignorance or ill-will of parents. Therefore, I advocate that it is incumbent upon the State to take care of prospective mothers living in surroundings that menace the future of the unborn child.—New York World.

Work of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

After a summer tour of unusual length and extent, Mrs. and Mr. Richmond returned to their home in Rogers' Park, about September 10. Mrs. Richmond not only gave public lectures and class lessons at the usual eastern camps, but visited many personal friends, including former members of her congregation now residing in the eastern states. These visits were in the states of New York, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, and included much spiritual work. The annual meeting at Cuba, N. Y., the native home of Mrs. Richmond, is ever an occasion of joyful reunion and loving ministration. The meeting is held in a grove within sight of the very place where she stood when a little girl of twelve years and spoke to the astonished hearers.

Soon after her return to her Chicago congregation, she was called to St. Louis to assist in the dedicatory exercises of the new Spiritualist Temple there, a very pretty and complete little church. Those exercises covered a period of four days and were of a most interesting nature, many fine speakers and mediums being in attendance.

A class in the department of Psychology has already been formed and includes many bright minds in its membership.

The other departments are also to be taken up: Psychosophy—Soul Teaching; Psychomancy—Mediumship, Spiritual Gifts, etc; Psychopathy—Spiritual Healing. There was never more interest in all these subjects than at the present time, and Mrs. Richmond is in perfect health and fully ready for the work of her inspirers.

Bars Bible From Schools.

The Supreme Court of Nebraska has ruled out the reading of the Bible or the singing of common church hymns in the public schools. A Gage county citizen, an atheist, who had children in school, objected to Bible reading on the ground that it was intrusion upon the religious liberty of the Constitution, and asked for an injunction, which the highest tribunal in the state now decree shall issue. A syllabus says that such exercises are forbidden by the Constitution of the state. This is certainly a great victory and acts a precedent for the actions of many other states. The wave of freedom sometimes fans the fevered brow of high officials and cools the ancient fire.

Of Course It Will.

The preachers have agreed to pray to God for the termination of the coal miner's strike. If the event speedily comes, it will be in answer to their prayers. Of course.

Buffalo Joint Mass-Meeting.

A mass-meeting will be held in the church of the First Society of Buffalo, under the auspices of the New York State Spiritualist Association, the church co-operating and indications point to success in every way, as one and all are entering into the spirit of the work with a sincerity and determination which brooks no failure. The Buffalo society is one of the best and most successful and the State Association also means business in its undertakings.

The speakers for the occasion are, Mrs. Twing, first vice-president of the state; Prof. Lockwood; Mr. Richardson, president of the state association; Rev. Mr. Sayles, of East Aurora, and Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, second vice-president, who is at present serving the Buffalo society as speaker. Mr. Victor Wilde, of Toronto will serve as platform test medium. Mr. Wilde is a favorite in Buffalo. Mr. Bach, of The Sunflower, and Frank Walker, ex-president of the New York State Association, are expected to drop in during the meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all and we hope that Spiritualists from nearby towns will come and join in making this a grand meeting.

LOVE.

Art is fine, but Love is finer.
Can you paint a soul?
What if beauty is diviner
Fragment of the whole?

Song is sweet, but Love is sweeter;
Was there e'er a hymn
That for compass or for meter
Bowed the Seraphim?

Thought is great, but Love is greater.
Who can search out truth?
Love alone is revelator;
Love is Love in sooth.

CHARACTER OF SUB-MIND

Function of Human as well as Animal Subconsciousness Is Only to Support Life.

Sub means under, lower, inferior. The subconsciousness or submind is the consciousness which acts through the sub-brain, a layer of brain tissue varying in thickness from five-eighths to seven-eighths of an inch, which lies under the intellectual organs of the brain. Its function is to support life.

The subconscious mind presides over the action of the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, kidneys and other internal machinery in our bodies. Its action is as perfect in a brute as in a man. It is not conscious of its consciousness, nor of the higher consciousness of the intellectual and moral brain. But the intellect of man is capable of studying the action of his subconscious mind. When he becomes master of that branch of the science of man he will be able, through his intellect and will, to control the functions of his internal machinery.

That is the goal of mental science. When that goal has been reached, mental physiology and mental therapeutics will be perfected sciences, and the present systems of medicine will be catalogued with other superstitions that have had their origin in ignorance and fear.

If I have presented in the foregoing a scientific truth, I have demolished the theoretical hypothesis of Thomson J. Hudson, which is that the subconscious mind is superior to the objective, and that it is the subjective mind which is immortal. He says:

"The human mind is endowed with two classes of faculties, one of which, the objective, fades out and is lost in somatic death, while the other becomes only the stronger for the reason that its existence is not dependent upon physical function."

Were it not that Hudson's theory has had a wide reading and been accepted by many who might otherwise have accepted the truth of Spiritualism, I should not think it worthy of any notice.—T. A. Bland, M. D., in Chicago Record-Herald.

No one who has devoted careful study to the subject will fail to perceive that Dr. Bland's explanation of "subconscious" mind is far more philosophical and in accord with what is really known in the science of human faculties and functions, than Hudson's much vaunted theories as presented in the "Law of Psychic Phenomena."

Hudson's "law" is only a hypothesis at best, and as a "working" hypothesis it works no better than Dr. Bland's, which avoids all the glaring inconsistencies and irreconcilable self-contradictions and absurdities embodied in Hudson's writings.

Dr. Bland should elaborate his views at length, and publish in pamphlet or book form, for the benefit of all who are interested in this very important subject.

In the matter of Suggestive or Psycho-Therapeutics, the theory of Dr. Bland will equally as well as Hudson's theory, fulfill the requirements of a "working hypothesis," and without falling into the mental quagmire of two distinct minds, one of which, the "objective," is necessary to the sanity of the other, the "subjective mind," and yet, ceases to exist when the body dies, leaving the "subjective" mind to continue through the eons of eternity without the control of that "objective mind" that is necessary to its sanity.

The only apparent necessity for Hudson's exploitation of his so-called "law of psychic phenomena," is to afford him a "working hypothesis"—an apparently plausible scheme—whereby he could subvert Spiritualism by explaining its psychic phenomena, without reference to spirit power and influence. That seems to be the "raison d'etre" for his book, and for his voluminous writings through the press.

He pays no attention to critics of his writings—and therein shows a degree of wisdom, for he cannot answer them.

Hudson's theory is not necessary to the successful operation of inducing the hypnotic state, or the "suggestive condition" used in mental cure or psycho-therapeutics; the same results can be attained upon the theory stated by Dr. Bland, equally certain and equally effective, and avoiding all of Hudson's glaring self-contradictions and outrages against common sense.

SANITARIUM NOTES.

Lyman C. Howe Writes of Sunday Surgery, Etc.

Last Sunday, September 28, Dr. Spinney had five cases for surgical operations at the Sanitarium. So far as heard from all are doing well. If God was angry because his holy day was thus desecrated, why didn't he kill the patients?

We read that he "plagued the people" because they worshiped the calf that Aaron made." Why didn't he plague Aaron? If he has reformed since he was with Aaron, he may plague Dr. Spinney and let the patients get well and prosper. At the same time that these surgical operations were on, we had a spiritual meeting in the lower sitting-room and an exceptional treat made it a time to be remembered.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Keeler, of Ludington, Mich., made a visit to the sanitarium, and stayed over Sunday. They were an inspiration to us all; good, earnest Spiritualists that are not ashamed of the name, and carry its light in their faces, and are ever ready to testify. The sweetest part of all was their choice music. They sang as if the melody of heaven were in their voices. Their music was a whole meeting if there had been nothing more. I hope they will come again while I am here.

The first ten days of my stay here I could find no Spiritualist papers, which seemed very strange. But the Doctor informed me that he takes them all, but being away most of the time, he ordered them put away until he could look them over; as they were liable to get lost, before he could read them, if left loosely around the sanitarium.

Dr. Henry Slade occupies the room next to me, and I think is doing fairly well. He claims that his psychic powers are as good as they ever were, and he gives sittings frequently.

C. W. STEWART IN THE FIELD.

He Gives Items of Interest from Springfield, Mo.

The Spiritualists of this city are enjoying a feast at this time through the ministrations of Mr. and Mrs. Folsom, Frank T. Ripley, and Mrs. Alta Stephens. The meetings of Brother Ripley are well attended, and there is no public test medium who can give any better satisfaction than he.

The trumpet seances of the Folsoms leave nothing to be desired. All who attend them receive satisfactory proofs of the future life, and the beautiful messages audibly spoken by our loved ones, cheer the soul for its struggle in life's battle. Mrs. Folsom is equally at home on the rostrum as speaker or public test medium.

Mrs. Stephens only gives private readings to her friends, but she always brings cheer and strength to the sad, desolate heart.

If the commerce besotted world could only pause for a while and listen to the sweet admonitions of the departed, the weary souls that are now sinking beneath their load of sorrow might take on new life and turn their faces toward the light of a better day.

As to your humble servant, the experiences of thirty years of work, and the cares and bitter sorrows of life have burned away the errors and follies of youth, and he begins to feel the ripeness of the harvest time. He hears the angel voices telling him the reason for those experiences, and lovingly acknowledges the "Divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them as we will."

At the age of fifty-six, with renewed health and strength, he feels that "men may rise on stepping-stones of their dead selves to higher things," and angelic whispers give him courage to take up anew the work of the spirit world, with the riper judgment which comes from age and experience.

I am now ready to answer calls for inspirational lectures in any part of the vineyard, and shall be glad to hear from those who may desire my services for lectures, debates, or any kindred work. C. W. STEWART.

BOOK REVIEW.

The Law of the New Thought. By Wm. Walker Atkinson.

The New Life. By Leroy Berrier.

Whether one grasps and assimilates the whole of what is known as the new thought, or not, no one can read appreciatively the literature bearing this impress without spiritual quickening and uplift. The new thought harmonizes beautifully with the philosophy of Spiritualism, even when the new thought exponent does not recognize himself as distinctively a Spiritualist.

Deeply interesting and richly instructive lessons in physical, mental, moral, spiritual culture are conveyed in Mr. Berrier's little volume.

The same words apply to Mr. Atkinson's work; it is replete with thought tending to culture toward the highest expression of humanity in life and spirit.

Such books are of inestimable value; their authors are worthy of praise for their labor, and their books should have wide circulation.

Mr. Atkinson treats of Mind and Soul, it must be said, far more intelligently and wisely than Mr. T. J. Hudson had done in his "Law of Psychic Phenomena."

NATIONAL SPIRITUALISTS ASSOCIATION

Annual Report of the Sectetary, Mrs. Mary T. Longley.

To the Officers and Members of the N. S. A., the Editors of the Spiritual Press, and the Spiritualists of the United States and Canada:

Esteemed Co-Workers and Friends:—It gives me pleasure to once again submit my annual report to you, as secretary of the National Spiritualists Association, and to assure you that the work of the past year of this organization and its officers has been arduous, conscientious and for the most part highly successful for the cause of Spiritualism. In this connection, I am happy to say, that no one individually, or as a body of workers—has attempted anything for personal aggrandizement, but that all have labored faithfully for the good of humanity and for the cause we represent.

Since my last annual report, the N. S. A. has chartered twenty-eight societies, one of which was the National Lyceum, the remainder being local organizations, most of them were organized by our missionary, E. W. Sprague. Brother Sprague also organized several new societies in the state of Ohio, which he induced to join their state organization. At the present writing, applications for charter are in this office from State Association of Oregon, and from the Morris Pratt College, which are to be acted upon by the N. S. A. board at its meeting, prior to convention.

While on the subject of charters it may be in order to report that up to the present time, the N. S. A. has during its years of existence, issued three hundred and three charters. From statistics taken from our books, I find that of this number, ninety-three societies have either suspended their meetings or withdrawn from the National. Fifteen societies have joined their state associations, and eighty-three societies are in the best of standing with the N. S. A.—the latter, however, does not include the sixteen state associations all of which are in good standing with the N. S. A. The remainder of the 303 societies that have been chartered, not mentioned here, are in a doubtful state; we have not heard from them of late, but expect them to wheel into line very soon. Of the seventeen state associations that have been chartered by the N. S. A., but one, Indiana, has allowed its membership to elapse. The outlook for the future in regard to chartered societies seems promising, and in many localities where the former societies disbanded, new ones with zealous workers have been established, that show intention to keep up the work for Spiritualism.

At the last annual convention, the work for the year was largely relegated to the N. S. A. board, and the report of president and secretary will show that it has all been faithfully carried out to the best judgment and according to the wisdom of your honored officers. In this connection, we report that our capable and valued veteran, Lyman C. Howe, was appointed Historian at Large, for the purpose of collecting, arranging and compiling data and facts connected with the history of Spiritualism—its early workers and manifestations, etc—and the sum of two hundred dollars was appropriated to him from the N. S. A. treasury to begin and carry on the work.

As the public and our members well know, the important matter of establishing and opening a home for our indigent and worthy mediums, was brought to the attention of the board by our unfailing helper, Treasurer T. J. Mayer, and by the offer of Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Reed City, Mich., to care for the sick and destitute at an exceedingly low price, also to donate a piece of land to aid in the work; and to that end, the board created a Mediums' Home and Relief Fund, appropriating the sum of $500 to the same; two generous men added seven hundred and fifty dollars each, and a piece of property was purchased at Reed City, as the nucleus of a Mediums' Home. However as much more money was needed to make the home a surety of success, a call was made for contributions of fifteen hundred more. About five hundred was thus gained but not sufficient to warrant the board in going on with the work of opening a home. As it became apparent that many of our mediums were suffering for the necessities of life, the executive committee decided, with the sanction of the full board, to select a few of the most needy cases and pay twelve dollars per month towards the support of each. Two aged and helpless mediums in Massachusetts and two others in Michigan were thus chosen, who have received their monthly payment regularly and are still our beneficiaries. One of these was the renowned Dr. Henry Slade, but of late, he has become such a confirmed invalid, requiring constant attendance, he has been removed to the Reed City Sanitarium, and because of special nursing and watchfulness, his expense to the N. S. A. is increased. The other three mediums are refined and helpless ladies, one totally blind, one nearly so, and one more than seventy years of age. Any person who has helped towards the Mediums' Home, or any member of the Spiritual press, or of our chartered societies, who wishes the names of these ladies, can have them privately. In deference to the sensitiveness of these beneficiaries, we do not publish them.

In addition to these cases, that of our beloved and valued co-worker in the field of Spiritualism, must be mentioned, Mrs. Carrie Fuller Weatherford, who remained at her post of duty for humanity till the very last. Stricken with a mortal malady, and with two young daughters to support, she was obliged to give up the work and to seek for strength at other hands. Learning of her distress, the N. S. A. board voted to defray the expense of her care and nursing at the Reed City Sanitarium, where she remained a number of weeks; later, she preferred to go to her little home where she could pass to the heavenly life among those she tenderly loved. We were willing to have her do so. Dr. Spinney sent a special nurse home with her, but in a few days the spirit of our tried and trusted sister passed to the Beyond. Only her two little ones, with no means but their own efforts by which to pay funeral expense were left, and in consideration of the case, the grand work of Mrs. Weatherford, and that it was not charity, but a simple recognition of the life and labor of a faithful instrument of the spirit world, the board voted to discharge the funeral bills. This is the good work the N. S. A. is doing for humanity.

In the matter of will contests, the N. S. A. has been prominent. That of Wm. Case, of Lafayette, Ind., which was pending, a year ago, has been settled in favor of the defendants, and although the N. S. A. paid about a thousand dollars in its defense, Hon. Levi Mock, of Bluffton, Ind., serving as our attorney, it expects to realize more than enough from the will to cover all costs, and the triumph secured for Spiritualism is by no means to be despised. The case of Horace Butterfield, of Kansas, was lost to us, the N. S. A. had to pay a heavy bill, but the case had to be carried through, although it seemed unpromising from the first. The will case defended by the First Association of Philadelphia—that of Mr. McIlroy—called for aid from the N. S. A., which was freely granted to the sum of two hundred dollars, with the promise of more if needed. Other will cases are pending, in which the N. S. A. has received legacies, and we are trying to determine the rights of Spiritualists to leave their property to whom they choose. In all these matters the executive committee has labored with conscientious fidelity to the cause, and for the best interests of humanity.

New literature in the shape of Spiritual tracts by Geo. W. Kates and others of our spiritual workers have been published and freely distributed. The number of these, with leaflets before printed make up a fine assortment of spiritual literature for the reading of the investigator and student; we circulate them without cost to anyone, the N. S. A. even paying the postage; and printing and postage bills are large for this one branch of our work alone.

During the year, your secretary has written about twelve hundred letters in connection with the work of the N. S. A., many to individuals, as well as to our chartered societies; she has also sent quarterly circular letters to each chartered auxiliary. Frequent articles have also been sent to the various spiritual papers, all of which have been honored with publication, and we have here to extend again, our sincere thanks and appreciation to the editors of our spiritual press for their unfailing courtesy and generosity to the N. S. A. and its officers.

At the last convention, the secretary was requested to ask the chartered societies to not only fill out the blank report sent to them for annual statement, but also to write out a brief account of their doings, prospects, and possessions as societies, to be sent with delegates' report to the convention of 1902. This request was embodied in a circular letter mailed to each of our societies Aug. 1, but up to date, very few of them have heeded the request, as the usual reports alone are coming in. The Ways and Means Committee at last convention suggested that subscription cards, for collecting money, be at once issued and given to delegates and others to take to their homes and circulate, the same to be returned to secretary with collections, during the year. These cards were printed and numbered, many of them handed to delegates and others—many delegates refused, however, to take them. Up to date, but one card has been returned with money, that was filled by the exertions of Mr. M. A. J. Skjoldal, of Washington, D. C., in a few weeks, and netted forty-five dollars and fifteen cents. The secretary has written for the return of these cards still out, but with no pecuniary response.

Because of many duties and humanitarian projects in hand, the N. S. A. board concluded that it could not stand sponsor for the worthy college at Whitewater, Wis., known as the Morris Pratt College, but being in hearty sympathy with such movement for the education of our people, the board unanimously voted to create an educational fund, and to make an appropriation to the same. From this fund the N. S. A. has donated the sum of three hundred dollars to the Morris Pratt College, with its expressions of good will and fraternal fellowship in its good work.

Our missionaries have done a grand work for the cause, the past year, not only President Barrett and Mr. and Mrs. Sprague been retained in the field, and made a grand record of their labors, but Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates, were also engaged exclusively as missionaries for the N. S. A. for the year, and these worthy workers have accomplished heroic labors. Our missionaries will report the year's doings for themselves, and your secretary only mentions them because they are worthy of your commendation and regard.

The N. S. A. Library has received donations of books from a number of generous authors and friends, and it is in good condition, having between six and seven hundred of spiritual and liberal books that are freely loaned to those who come to our free reading room to read, or to take the books out on loan. This library is doing a grand, instructive work, and merits the aid and sympathy of all Spiritualists. It is in good condition and a credit to our cause. To all who have donated works to this association, most grateful thanks are rendered; and to Mrs. Carrie Twing, for the gift of twenty-five copies of her famous book, "'Lisbeth," to be sold in aid of the N. S. A., our soulful thanks are due.

Convention of 1901 appointed Mrs. Sara Haslett and your secretary as fraternal delegates to the annual convocation of the Woman's Suffrage League, held in Washington, D. C., in February. I do not know how my associate was received by that league, but as secretary I am sorry to report that I visited the meeting of the league, bearing my credentials, and was most coldly received, no mention whatever being made in the meeting of the presence of the fraternal delegate from the N. S. A. As secretary of the N. S. A. I also sent official fraternal greetings to the past president, and others to the present president of the Woman's Suffrage League, with absolutely no response or notice from the same. Your secretary feels that the N. S. A. and the cause of Spiritualism were affronted by this discourtesy on the part of the Woman's Association, and would most earnestly decline to be subjected to such affrontery again.

During the year many mediums in different states of the Union, have been subjected to arrest and unjust persecution for the practice of their mediumship. Mediums in California and the state of Washington have especially suffered in this connection, and the state associations of these two great states have been loyal and helpful to them in a great degree. A mediums' law has been passed in the District of Columbia; Congress has determined that our mediums must pay a license of twenty-five dollars a year to be allowed to practice their calling; as professions and business are taxed here, this act could not be prevented, but as the sum mentioned is merely a nominal one compared to that formerly exacted, we hear of no complaints against it from our mediums. But the difficulty comes in the fact that the power of deciding who shall be denied their applications is vested in police authority, and some of our mediums are denied the right to pay license or practice. We are attending to the matter, and if it cannot be adjusted and our mediums recognized a test case of the same will be made in the courts.

In Massachusetts, the medicos are constantly pressing their stringent rules and regulations; recently one of the best of our magnetic healers has been misused; a test case is to be made before the supreme court, and the Massachusetts State Spiritualist Association is at the front of the work, backed by the N. S. A., if it should transpire that the aid of the latter is required.

The National Spiritual Lyceum Association was turned over to the N. S. A. at the last convention, together with the small amount of funds in its possession. During the year we have been unable to do work in this direction. The N. S. A. board could not see the way clear to pay missionaries for lyceum work alone, nor could it find opportunity for advancing the much needed work of our schools, aside from its regular labors. Fourteen lyceums were chartered with the N. S. L. A. at the time it was accepted by the N. S. A. None have been added since. A donation of $25 from its auxiliary has been received from the St. Louis, Mo., lyceum. The regular dues of the chartered lyceums to the National Lyceum is $2 per annum; on recommendation of the former secretary of that body, Mrs. Mattie Hull, no dues have been asked of those lyceums this year. Your secretary has written each chartered lyceum requesting it to send a report to the next convention. This is as far as we have to report on the lyceum work, so much of apathy exists on this question, that your secretary recommends the disbanding of the National Lyceum at convention of 1902, unless at that time new impetus, new enthusiasm, and plenty of financial aid is given—not promised—to it.

As is its custom, the board of the N. S. A. granted fifty dollars to your secretary for clerk hire during the year; of that sum a little over ten dollars remains for the N. S. A.; the faithful and willing service of Miss Agnes Wink, in this office, has enabled the work to go on without a larger expenditure for outside aid, and without a greater tax on your secretary, who for a good part of the winter and through the spring was in a state of ill health bordering on invalidism. Owing to her physical condition, the board generously voted the secretary two months' vacation, but she is happy to report that less than one month of that time has been taken, and that the work and affairs of the office have been attended to up to date.

In conclusion, allow me to extend my most sincere thanks to President Barrett, for his unfailing courtesy and consideration, to Treasurer Mayer for his never-ceasing help and encouragement, fraught with many words and deeds of kindness, to all the members of the board for their sympathy and aid in all our work, and to Miss A. O. Wink and Mr. C. P. Longley for their practical aid in office matters that called for speedy attention; to all of these much credit is due for the present prosperous condition of headquarters and work, and to the editors of our papers, the loyal respect and gratitude of the N. S. A. The work of this organization is growing. Treasurer Mayer has now come forward with another splendid offer, intending to give—not sell—a spacious and handsome edifice to the N. S. A. if the Spiritualists will contribute towards a mediums' Home. We trust his offer will be met in a generous spirit, and be made a reality. With love and greetings to all. Respectfully submitted,

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

CHANGES REQUIRED

In the Organic Law and the Mode of Operation.

The queries in the "Open Court" which lies before me seem to my mind to be timely and of importance to every Spiritualist. I believe at no time in the history of Modern Spiritualism has there been as great necessity for the consideration of these points, as there is at the present time.

The whole future of Spiritualism depends on the manner in which we carry out these points, and the evolution of a more practical, and far reaching plan of promulgation. Truly, if Spiritualism is worthy of anything, it is a more thoroughly practical and spiritual presentation to the world.

To answer the queries before me, one should be more familiar with the movement at large than is the writer; but with all our experience one can only consider matters according to their own light, hence the ideas that follow.

I am satisfied that there are many changes required in the organic law of the N. S. A. before it will have reached the degree of proficiency we hope to see. It would seem to me that it should cover a wider scope than it does at present. This will necessitate some changes in its "modus operandi" I believe. It appears to me after a study of its constitutional laws that some of them are a trifle ambiguous, and impractical. Undoubtedly the coming convention will give much attention to the rectification of mistakes.

State associations are the sinew of the National association, and certainly, the latter will never reach its highest degree of effectiveness till every state has been thoroughly organized. That a uniform plan of organization for all state associations should be followed seems pre-eminently proper, and I trust that the October convention will see that one be adopted, if such has not already been done.

Individual members are allowable, up to a certain point, after which time the individual membership should be merged into the local auxiliaries. Under no consideration, and at no time should personal members have as great legislative powers in the conventions, as do chartered locals and their delegates and representatives.

As to the responsibility of missionary work. I believe that should devolve upon the state associations, as it would seem that they would be able to cope with the conditions in their respective states, to the best possible advantage.

Like all seats of government the National body has the right to send out its representatives and missionaries, but in any instance or at least wherever feasible, it should be in co-operation with the state work.

The representation from each state to the National conventions, should be regulated by the membership, in that state, but by no means do I consider any one state entitled to more than one trustee on the National Board. This may not be feasible at the present time, but I believe that in order to obtain the best possible results, such should be the rule.

To facilitate the work of conventions not only in the N. S. A. work, but in the state work, I believe the better plan would be to publish the reports prior to the convention.

Last, but by no means least, the publishers of our Spiritualist papers should not refuse to publish the exposures of trickery and charlatanism, whenever authentic information has been received.

Most assuredly the Spiritualists themselves should be the ones to cleanse and purge their own ranks, and not leave it for the outside world to do. Simulation of spiritual manifestations is the most contemptible of all phases of adulteration, and the sooner we take a stand before the world upon that point the better it will be for our cause. No need to become fanatical, but by all means be honest, and don't be afraid to speak your mind when you know you are in the right.

WILL J. ERWOOD.

LaCrosse, Wis.

The N. S. Association.

Annual Report of the President, Harrison D. Barrett, for the Year Ending October 24, 1902.

To the Spiritualists of America, and Officers and Delegates of the Convention, Greeting:

Again it is my duty and privilege to submit for your consideration my report as president of the N. S. A. for the twelve months past. In complying with the rules and regulations of the N. S. A. that require a detailed statement of the business affairs of the association, its general and special work, and its growth during the year, as well as a glance at the conditions of our cause as a whole, from your president, I am pleased to announce that the tide of popular favor has been moving steadily forward in the direction of co-operative effort among our people, and the N. S. A. itself has been enabled thereby to accomplish far more than it has done in any previous year of its history. I congratulate my brethren everywhere upon this sign of progress, and bespeak their hearty co-operation to make it even more apparent one year hence.

Spiritualism in General.

On the part of the general public there has been a decided increase of interest in matters spiritual during the past twelve months. This is evidenced by the call for psychic novels and items pertaining to the occult in the columns of the secular press. Clergymen and scholars have given the subject special attention at frequent intervals, and have led many people to investigate for themselves along original and independent lines. Our literature, too, has been in demand to a greater extent than in past years, the call for the works of Andrew Jackson Davis being very noticeable and encouraging. In addition to the above evidences must be noticed the frequent appeals to the officers of the N. S. A., and to our Spiritual press from persons in public and private life for definite information with regard to the truths of Spiritualism and proofs of the genuineness of its phenomena. The foregoing facts clearly prove that public sentiment is now largely trending in the direction of psychism, and it behooves the Spiritualists of America through their National Association to be prepared to meet the demand for information that is being made of them. It would be well to have two tracts especially prepared for free distribution, one setting forth the basic principles of Spiritualism, and the other scientific proof of the genuineness of our phenomena. I recommend action upon this suggestion on the part of the convention.

Signs of Progress.

Not the least among the signs of progress to be noted is the fact that many of our local societies have either erected or purchased places of worship during the past year. These edifices have been dedicated with appropriate ceremonies and the exercises have served to create a new interest in the subject of Spiritualism. Especially is this true of the cities of Galveston, Texas, and Springfield and St. Louis, Mo. Too much cannot be said in praise of the energy and enterprise of our brethren in all places where they have succeeded in securing and are maintaining homes of their own.

Spiritualism in the Secular Press.

Not long after the adjournment of our last annual convention, your president was asked to prepare a series of articles upon the history, growth, principles and achievments of Spiritualism during the past fifty-five years, to be published in the columns of the secular press, under the auspices of the bureau known as "Answers by Experts." Upon consultation with the trustees of the N. S. A. your president was advised to prepare the articles as requested. This I did and they were published in May and June of this year in a syndicate of twenty of the leading dailies in the United States appearing simultaneously in all of the papers in the largest cities of our nation. These articles were read by several millions of people and I have heard from them frequently through letters from people who were not Spiritualists, whose attention had been called to the subject for the first time through reading the articles in the daily press. These articles were paid for by the bureau that solicited them, and the money turned into the treasury of the N. S. A. As they were published under a copyright, it was impossible for your president to file copies of them with the secretary of the N. S. A. They will be found however, in the issues of the last two Wednesdays of May and the first two in June of the journals in question, among which may be mentioned the Chicago Record-Herald and the Philadelphia Bulletin. It was the existence of the N. S. A. that enabled Spiritualism to obtain a hearing in this great arena of thought, and is ample proof of the fact that due consideration will be given our tenets by our opponents when we meet them as an organized body and not as a heterogeneous mass. I have contributed occasional short articles to the columns of other secular papers and religious journals during the year, each time as the representative of the N. S. A., meeting as best I could the demand of the reading public for Spiritualistic thought.

Persecution.

The signs of progress and the evidences of meritorious recognition accorded us as a people above mentioned are pleasing and inspiring. I regret to say that the spirit of persecution is yet rife in some sections of our nation, and that several worthy persons have been persecuted in the name of the law during the past year. Prosecution has followed persecution and three of the most notable cases are now pending before the courts. Two of these, Mr. Geo. E. and Mrs. Maud Chesbro, in California, were persecuted and then prosecuted for exercising their powers as Spiritualistic mediums. They were dragged into court to answer to the charge of being mediums, and to be punished for the high crime of giving messages of comfort to the people of the earth from departed spirit friends. These worthy mediums consulted with the officers of the N. S. A., especially your president, who advised them to stand trial. This they did, but the decision was adverse to them in the lower court, and they were obliged to appeal to a higher judicial tribunal in order to obtain justice. Judge Smith, of Los Angeles, Cal., in his rescript ordering a new trial, presented a judicial paper to the world of unparalleled fairness and impartiality. It is worthy of note on the part of Spiritualists and this eminent judge is entitled to their hearty thanks.

The third trial of these eminent mediums resulted in a disagreement of the jury, and it is not now known when the case will again be called. They were sustained by some of the local societies in Southern California, also by the California State Spiritualist Association. The case was referred to the N. S. A., as above stated, but no financial aid has as yet been asked of the National body to assist in providing a suitable defense for these friends of our cause. Mediumship is the keystone of the arch in the great superstructure of Spiritualism and should be loyally defended wherever a true and worthy psychic becomes the victim of the public prosecutor. I hold this case to be an eminently worthy one, and I feel as if it should be taken, in case of necessity, to the Supreme Court of the United States for final adjudication. To this end I recommend vigorous action on the part of this convention.

Our last convention voted to instruct the trustees to take a test case to the Supreme Court of the Nation at the earliest possible moment to determine the rights of magnetic healers to practice in the several states of the Union. Several arrests have been reported to us, but in nearly every case, the accused parties have paid their fines or agreed to refrain from further practice in the state where the arrest occurred. In Illinois, two or three cases were referred to the State Association for investigation and nothing further heard from them. In Massachusetts, one arrest was made that seemed to violate every principle of right and justice. The accused, Alexander Proctor, of Springfield, stood trial, was found guilty by the lower court and heavily fined. He appealed the case and applied to the Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists for aid. It was promptly furnished, so far as means were in hand to do so, and further aid sought from the N. S. A. This has been promised by your board of trustees to a limited amount, reserving the right to contribute an additional sum in case of necessity. I recommend that this action of your trustees be approved by this convention, and ask that this case be made the subject of special discussion on the part of the delegates. I further recommend this case be carried to the highest court in the land ere we yield one jot or tittle of our rights as freemen to the enjoyment of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

It gives me pleasure to report that in the state of Nebraska, where one of our mediums was on trial for some alleged infraction of the law, the court held that the Spiritualistic mediums were teachers and ministers of religion, hence were not liable under the statute as alleged. This one victory is almost an oasis in the desert, yet it gives us the hope that similar victories are ahead for us if we as a people will work unitedly together to achieve them.

Wills.

Four will cases have been brought to the attention of the N. S. A. during the past year, in three of which our National body was directly interested. The first of the three was the will of our late brother William Erspenmueller, of Los Angeles, California, who bequeathed a small amount outright and a further sum under certain conditions. Those conditions have been settled in favor of the N. S. A., and our organization will receive both sums when the property is divided at the end of the year required by the law of California for probating estates. There was no contest over this will and the N. S. A. will receive its dues, less the inheritance tax, that must be paid to the state of California.

The second will was that of the late Horace Butterfield, of Lebanon, Kansas, who endeavored to beqeath certain properties to the N. S. A. His will was contested by his daughter, and despite the fact that the N. S. A. made a loyal fight for its rights in the case, the religious prejudice of the jury was too great to be overcome, hence justice was not done, and the Spiritualists lost their just cause. The N. S. A. made an earnest effort to secure a verdict in harmony with the law and evidence, but was defeated through bigotry and prejudice. The expense connected with the case cannot be considered wholly lost, as it has educated the Spiritualists on the question of will-making as nothing else could have done. The action of Mr. Butterfield's daughter is a strong argument in favor of parents teaching their children the tenets of Spiritualism from the cradle up to the years of maturity.

The third will is that of our late Brother William Case, of Lafayette, Indiana, who bequeathed a few thousand dollars to the N. S. A. This will was fiercely contested by distant relatives of our arisen brother. The cause of the N. S. A. was signally strengthened by two of Mr. Case's nearest relatives who refused to join in the contest, and stood by the N. S. A. in the defense of the will. It gives me pleasure to report that after a hard fight of more than thirty days, the will was sustained and the N. S. A. will ultimately receive its share of this estate. It was a costly suit, but the outlay on the part of the N. S. A was perfectly justifiable in view of the importance of the case, and our great victory establishes a precedent that can be quoted in future contests of the same kind. It will prove a good investment in the end, although the expense does seem large at the present time. I regret to report that the two relatives of Mr. Case who stood by the N. S. A. in the contest have been victimized by those who sought to destroy the will, and will lose nearly all they were to receive from the estate. The fault is not theirs, nor that of the N. S. A., yet in view of their financial needs I recommend that this matter be looked into by the N. S. A., to see if something cannot be done to save for our allies and friends the stipends they were to receive. One of these friends is a widow with a large family of children and cannot afford to lose her share. The N. S. A. stands for justice, and justice should be rendered those who stood for the right.

The fourth case is the will of the late Alexander McIlroy, of Philadelphia, Pa., who bequeathed quite a sum of money to our loyal auxiliary, the First Association of Spiritualists of that city. This will was contested, was sustained by the Probate Court, was then appealed and ordered to a jury trial, tried in March last, and declared invalid. Our auxiliary made a gallant fight for its rights and when its own means were exhausted, appealed to the N. S. A. for aid. The National Association responded promptly and sent two hundred dollars for the defense of the will. As this bequest involves about thirty thousand dollars, it is too important to be overthrown without a further effort to carry out the wishes of the testator on the part of the Spiritualists of the nation. The case has been appealed to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and will be heard by the full bench in the near future. I recommend that the incoming board of trustees be instructed to render our auxiliary in Philadelphia such financial aid as will enable it to defend its rights before the tribunal in question. I also recommend that they be instructed to take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, should justice be denied the Spiritualists in Pennsylvania.

Charitable Work.

At the close of our last annual convention the necessity of engaging in the work of caring for aged and indigent speakers and mediums was found to be imperative. Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Reed City, Mich., called the attention of the trustees of the N. S. A. to a house and lot adjoining his sanitarium at that place, saying it would make an excellent nucleus for a mediums' home, when taken in connection with his institution just mentioned. This property was purchased by the N. S. A. for a nominal sum and estimates were obtained from practical plumbers as to the probable cost of fitting the building for occupancy. The expense was found to be greater than the N. S. A. could meet at that time, whereupon two noble-hearted, philanthropic Spiritualists at once donated seven hundred and fifty dollars each toward a home fund, stipulating that the Spiritualistic body in the nation should raise the sum of fifteen hundred dollars to meet that which they had given. Appeals were published throughout the country, but the returns were very meager, and not at all encouraging to the projectors of the fund. Only five hundred dollars were sent in to meet the contributions of the gentlemen mentioned above. They determined to allow their donations to remain in the treasury of the N. S. A., in connection with the other offerings to be drawn upon monthly for the support of the needy ones among our workers. This has been done the greater part of the past year, and several worthy mediums have received aid from this source.

Too much cannot be said in praise of this work. It is an evidence of the willingness of the N. S. A. to broaden its sphere of usefulness whenever means are at hand to enable it to do so. Great credit is due the philanthropists who gave the bulk of the pension fund, and they should be held up as examples of practical Spiritualism in their good good works. This fund should be enlarged as rapidly as possible so that the income from it when invested will yield sufficient returns to care for the sick and needy. Four persons are now on the N. S. A. pension roll, and one other was promptly aided in her time of need, but she has now gone to the higher life. I ask that special consideration be given to this topic and recommend co-operative action on the part of the delegates.

In this connection I am constrained to state that the Michigan State Spiritualist Association has purchased a home for mediums in Lansing. It is said to be a very desirable building in many respects, and is held to be a most excellent place of refuge for worthy mediums when in need of a home. This purchase establishes two homes of the same character in Michigan. The state association felt that the N. S. A. home was not centrally located, hence decided to purchase at another point, rather than unite with the N. S. A. in making the one at Reed City ready for use. It is but just to state that the property in Reed City is well worth the sum paid for it, and that the N. S. A. will not lose on its investment whether it is ever used as a home or not. I leave this matter to the consideration of the convention without recommendation. I have placed the facts before you as delegates, and you can in your wisdom decide what action, if any, is to be taken. I cannot emphasize too strongly my hearty sympathy with the pension fund, my earnest appreciation of the generosity of its chief donors and my loyal support of the work that fund is doing.

Missionary Work.

The N. S. A. doubled its working force in the missionary field during the past year and good results have been obtained from the labors of those who have been sent out to carry the good news to the people of America. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague and Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates have been actively at work as missionaries throughout the year. They have rendered faithful service and the results of their labors will be made known to this convention through the written reports they will render later in its proceedings. Wherever these four devoted friends of organization have labored, they have exerted themselves to establish the principle of co-operation as a vital factor in the evolution of spiritual truth. They have served us well and are entitled to the grateful thanks of all Spiritualists for their excellent work. Your president also served as one of the missionaries of the N. S. A. for a period of four and two-thirds months. More than one-half of that time was spent at camp-meetings, while the balance was put in in the western states.

From personal experience and from information derived from interested parties it would seem as if a change in the methods of doing missionary work should be made. No one has cast any reflection upon the labors of the devoted missionaries who have served us so faithfully in the past, all speak in terms of praise of them and their work. The idea seems to be that there could be an economy of energy by limiting the labors of those employed as missionaries to a smaller extent of territory. This would save expense in railroad travel and would enable the missionaries to build up strong local societies through frequent visits. Another suggestion has been made to the effect that missionary work should be left to the state associations wherever they exist, and that the N. S. A. should make small appropriations to the states to aid in the work. Wherever state associations are wanting it is proposed to have the N. S. A. establish circuits and place competent persons in charge of them with instructions to establish live working societies.

One visit or two visits during the year from the president of the N. S. A. or its missionaries, does a local society very little good, especially so when it is struggling for an existence. In some instances the members of some societies seem to feel that the only interest that the N. S. A. has in its auxiliaries is in the size and frequency of the collections taken up in its behalf. One or even a half dozen visits accompanied by earnest appeals for money each time seems to create a feeling that the society is being deprived of its sinews of war. It is true that our Spiritualists are to be taught the act of giving Some of them have learned it in rich full measure and give beyond their means. Others who should learn it have not done so and do not seem inclined to make the effort. But the N. S. A. should make it apparent that its interest in its auxiliaries is not limited to financial offerings from them to it, and that it is not attempting to remove the thickest cream from the milk that is to feed both local and national societies alike.

I submit this matter without special recommendation in favor of any line of policy, urging that the special needs of all societies be considered, and trust that the convention will, in its wisdom, adopt such measures as will continue missionary work along the best possible lines, looking wholly to the surest and most permanent results.

The Pratt Institute.

During the past year the Morris Pratt Institute Association has been formed and duly incorporated under the laws of Wisconsin. This association has established a college known as the Morris Pratt Institute in Whitewater, Wis., and opened its doors to the public, September 30, 1902. This college is under the tuition of competent teachers, all of whom are Spiritualists. While this institution is not the property of the N. S. A., it is yet one of its auxiliaries and is entitled to special consideration at the hands of this convention. It is the first Spiritualistic college ever established on the face of the globe, and I believe it came at a most opportune time. The followers of Spiritualism are asking for an educated ministry and are clamoring for system in the presentation of our thought. They are also demanding a school free from the bias of sectarianism in which their children can receive a liberal education. They have long desired an institution under the protection of Spiritualists in which mediumship can be fostered, its laws taught, and its unfoldment guaranteed. In the Morris Pratt Institute is to be found that which they have so long desired. I recommend that earnest attention be given to the subject of education, and that the Morris Pratt Institute be assigned a special hour in one of the business meetings of this convention.

Local Societies.

This important topic naturally follows the consideration of the school and ministry questions. In my last annual report I discussed this question at length and feel to reiterate all that I said then. Our local societies need strengthening and quickening into new life. Very few of them are strong in membership or in finances. Those that are most active and doing the best work are the ones that have settled speakers. It takes very little effort to organize a society, but it costs much labor to keep it alive and at work after it is organized. Wherever societies change speakers every week or employ a different person for each one of the three services on Sunday, there is neither stability nor influence in them. Like mushrooms, they are the growth of a single night and as quickly disappear. I cannot speak too earnestly with regard to this question. This convention owes it to the cause of Spiritualism to do something to make our local societies strong, healthful, working bodies.

The majority of the local bodies need missionary work of a particular kind. They should have instruction in regard to organization. The officers are frequently at a loss to know what is required of them, while both officers and members know nothing of their relation to the state and National associations. In some instances a little instruction in parliamentary law, and the management of the platform would not be amiss. Business methods are frequently sadly wanting. Information can be given by a tactful missionary in regard to all of these points, with the result that the cause of Spiritualism would be given greater prestige thereby as well as the members of the societies instructed in the salient principles of organic work. In not a few societies the request of the secretary of the N. S. A. for reports of the work is given no attention whatever. These blanks are thrown into the stove or waste basket, with the remark that the N. S. A. has no right to ask any questions of that character. The request of our secretary is designed to elicit reliable information with regard to societary membership in America, and the state of the finances of all auxiliary bodies. Yet the uninstructed officers of the locals seem to feel that the N. S. A. is interfering where it has no right to do so, whereas its purpose is to aid the local

SORE EYES CURED.

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. This wonderful treatment takes the form of a Pocket Battery and is known as "Actina." It is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient. There is no risk of experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. This wonderful remedy also makes the use of spectacles unnecessary, as it not only removes the weakened and unnatural conditions of the eye, but gives it a clear vision.

Granulated Sore Eyes Cured.

Nashville, Tenn., Aug., 1901.

Gentlemen:—Having used your Actina for three months I am anxious to tell you of the results of that treatment. My eyes have improved very much since I used the Actina. The eyelids, were in a sad state, are no longer granulated or painful; the red inflammation in the eyes has entirely disappeared, and the agonizing pain that I used to suffer almost constantly has left almost entirely. Respectfully

Belmont College. MISS L. FLEURY.

Severe Inflammation of Eyes Cured,

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 5th, 1899.

Gentlemen:—Last winter I was troubled with inflammation of the eyes almost the whole winter, and used to go to the doctor every day sometimes for several weeks in succession, but since I have used Actina I have not had one spell of inflammation. I feel very grateful to you and wished I had heard of Actina a great deal sooner. Yours truly, AUGUST Y. FRY.

182 Oak Street.

Hundreds of other names can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial, post paid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Ass'n, Dept. T, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

You should sign your own name and address to the items you send in; otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

Emma M. Nutt Moore would be pleased to correspond with good speakers and mediums in reference to camp work for season of 193, at Island Lake, Mich. She would also like to hear from some good phenomenal medium. Must be genuine. Address her at 828 South Burdick street, Kalamazoo, Mich.

J. Mullen writes: "Mrs. Maggie Waite and Dr. C. E. Burgess have secured for every Sunday evening until further notice, Kimball hall, corner of Jackson Boulevard and Wabash avenue. Kimball hall is one of the largest and most beautiful halls in the city, easily accessible for one fare by both surface and elevated lines; a hall you won't be ashamed to invite your friends to. The music will be a feature at these meetings, as there is a beautiful pipe organ. The best of talent only will be upon the platform. We trust the Spiritualists of Chicago will show their appreciation of the efforts of these workers by their attendance each Sunday at 8 p. m."

Harlow Davis has been in London, England, since May, giving platform tests, with marked success: He will remain in Europe all winter and can be addressed at 11 New Cavendish street, Portland Place, London West.

Captain Geo. W. Walrond, trance lecturer, has returned to Denver, Colorado, from the Pacific Coast where he has located for two months suffering from extreme nervous prostration.. He will be glad to hear as usual from his numerous clients and friends. Mr. Walrond writes that he received considerable help from his spirit friends who were instrumental in pulling him through what was considered an almost fatal illness.

Maggie Waite, of Chicago, writes: "A very pleasant home wedding took place Saturday evening, October 4, when Mr. William Keyser, of Colfax, Iowa, and Mrs. Sarah DeWolf, of Chicago, were united in marriage by Mrs. Maggie Waite, at the bride's residence. The groom is well known in Spiritualistic circles for his loyalty and generosity to the cause. The bride is well known as a slate-writer in Chicago, where she has resided for thirty years, and in many states where, through her instrumentality, she has brought joy to humanity. The best wishes of their many friends will go out to them, wishing them happiness and a long life."

J. Beyer writes from Sterling, Kan.: "I accomplished my purpose by visiting Chicago, as I received the portrait of my grand-daughter, and two others besides, through the mediumship of the Bangs Sisters, under the same conditions that have been stated through your valuable paper. They are as true as life, and very beautiful, and my fond anticipations are truly verified, for they have been missionaries all the way from Chicago to Sterling. I wish to express my gratefulness in having been permitted for once in my life to visit the office of The Progressive Thinker, which has long been a desire in my breast, to get acquainted with those that have the good of the cause at heart, and having met them all but the head of the firm, I feel more interested in the welfare of the great and good advocate of the truth, The Progressive Thinker."

The new pastor of the People's Church of Chicago, Rev. John M. Driver, D. D., in his trial sermon, preached September 28, used remarks which convicts him of a belief in Spiritualism. We quote from the Chicago American's report of his sermon: "It was Dr. Thomas' philosophy that made him the famous minister he is. Dr. Driver's only reference to a philosophy, in his sermon of yesterday, was reiteration of his belief in a future existence. Spiritualists who might have been present would have been convinced that he was of their belief, for he said: 'If our physical eyes could see with a spiritual sight we should probably observe this room crowded with the myriad spirits of those beloved who have gone before.' 'The Transfiguration' was Dr. Driver's subject, and a large part of his sermon was devoted to a word picture of the scene as it is described in the New Testament. He went further than the scriptures, however, and, impersonating some of the disciples who were present at the transfiguration, he gave a dramatic presentation of the scene." That his doctrine was acceptable to the officials of the church, was proven by the fact that they at once gave him a call for a year.

Levi Wood, a prominent Freethinker of Carthage, N. Y., passed to spirit life a few days ago. He was held in high esteem by his neighbors and friends. Mr. Wood was a life-long resident of Carthage, and during his career has been known for his straightforward ways and honesty in business transactions. His word as was good as his bond. He has served the village of Carthage in official capacities for many years, his service in office showing forth the true man that he was, and bringing for him success at the polls. Dr. Wood spoke eloquently and feelingly in his eulogy of his father, and among other things said: "Many times my father asked me to say a few words over his coffin. Often he has requested me to see that his funeral was conducted without religious ceremony of any kind. It is the hardest task I have ever undertaken. Whenever a man departs from the usual order of established custom—especially if it be in his religious convictions—it seems to arouse in others a feeling that he was either dishonest with himself, or that he could not be quite a good man. Why this should be so is hard to explain when we remember that religion teaches its followers to love their enemies, and to have charity and forgiveness for all. To those who knew him best but little need be said. To those who did not know him as he was, it is a matter of indifference to him or us what they think. He who lies here, clothed with perfect peace of death, was a kind and loving husband, a good father, a generous neighbor, an honest man; and these words build a monument of glory above the humblest grave. The living oft become estranged, the dead are true. In the Eden of his hope there did not crawl and coil the serpent of eternal pain. Humanity was his good; the human race was his Supreme Being. In that Supreme Being he put his trust. He believed that we are indebted for what we enjoy to the labor, the self-denial, the heroism of the human race, and that as we have plucked the fruit of what others planted, we in thankfulness should plant for others yet to be. With him immortality was the eternal consequences of his own acts. He believed that every pure thought, every disinterested deed, hastens the harvest of universal good. He knew that night had come, and yet his soul was filled with light, for in that night the memory of the generous deeds shone out like stars. We have no fear. We are all children of the same mother, and the same fate awaits us all. We, too, have our religion and it is this: 'Help for the living. Hope for the dead.'"

Lucy S. Carroll writes from West Alexander, Pa.: "I have moved from the city of Wheeling to the little town on a high hill in Pennsylvania. I would like to see some good lecturer like E. W. Sprague, Mr. Kates, or G. W. Way open at the hall here—what a revelation it would be for the people. I am here for the present for the health of my only daughter. Flo, in spirit life, came to me this morning, all clothed in white, which made me feel very happy."

Correspondent writes: "Dr. Beverly has been elected superintendent of a S. S., at America Hall, 77 East Thirty-first street, which meets every Sunday at 3 p. m. He has an efficient corps of teachers. Miss Amanda Austin is an excellent pianist and plays under control. Everything will be full of life, and spirit power, as the Doctor has had a wide experience in this line of work. Parents should come and bring their children to this spiritual feast. Every one should become interested in the young and rally to the aid of this noble enterprise."

Rev. T. W. Woodrow holds a series of meetings at Opera House in Anadarko, O. T., beginning Friday evening, October 10. A good test medium could do well there working in connection with these meetings.

F. P. Wilmarth writes from Springfield, Mo.: "A reception party was given at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Huxley, 1021 West Scott street, Springfield, Mo., September 30, in honor of our visiting mediums, Frank T. Ripley, of Boston, Mass.; Mrs. Alta Stephens, of Albany, Mo., and C. M. and Josie K. Folsom, pastors of the Warner Spiritual Temple, of Springfield, Mo. Mr. Ripley is here filling very acceptably an engagement through September and October. Mrs. Alta Stephens is a fine medium, and also a missionary for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union for the state of Missouri. There were a good number present and an enjoyable evening was spent and many loving messages were received through the mediumship of Mr. Ripley, Sister Stephens and Sister Folsom. A very enjoyable dinner was partaken of by those present."

Mrs. C. H. Mullins of Chicago, writes: "I have just returned from Whitewater, Wis., where I went to attend the opening exercises of the Morris Pratt Institute. I rejoice that the Spiritualists have such an institution, with such noble workers at the head as Moses and Mattie Hull, Clara Stewart and others. The outlook is promising for its support, but, brother and sister Spiritualists throughout the whole United States (or world, I might say), let us not wait for others, but boldly put our shoulders to the wheel, each and every one of us, and send what we can, be it little or much, to help sustain and bear forward the work that the spirit world has so long been working for, through that most noble and generous man, Morris Pratt, and in time to come our children will indeed rise up and call us blessed."

John K. Visscher writes: "I have been a reader of The Progressive Thinker for over five years, and would not do without it if it cost five times as much. With the Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, which I now order, I shall have six of the premium books.

Mrs. J. Clegg Wright writes from Amelia, Ohio: "I consider The Progressive Thinker essential to anyone who desires to keep in touch with Spiritualism as a public movement. Its articles are readable, its notes newsy. No one should be without it who is a true Spiritualist."

Harry J. Moore may be addressed at either 773 W. Sixty-third place, Chicago, or Rochester, Ind., from first of November on during the winter.

V. Fell, M. D., now in his 83d year, writes from Washington, D. C.: "I am not much given to making a racket on one's birthday, but as I note my year for your excellent journal has nearly expired, I think I cannot signalize my 83d better than by a renewal. I take this occasion, too, to congratulate you, Bro. Francis, and the readers of The Progressive Thinker, on the fact that you are able to give your patrons each week such a feast of good things, and in an especial manner for the profound and up-to-date articles in the last (Sept. 27) from the pens of 'Sar'gis' and A. J. Weaver (I don't believe he wants the Rev. put to it); the first on Consciousness in Its Biological Aspect, and the second on The Principles of Evolution Explained and Applied"—just the subjects of all others we need to look into if we would lead the world in thought."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

D. A. Richardson writes from Hicksville, Ohio: "As I was reading The Progressive Thinker I saw the article headed, 'Heaven on Earth.' We have enjoyed such a heaven at our house the last week. Hattie Tiffany, of Alliance, Ohio, held five successful trumpet seances. The last one beat anything I ever heard of. There was such power that the spirits lifted Mr. Palmer off his chair, and two voices at a time were heard. Mrs. Tiffany is an honest medium."

Mrs. Alta L. Johnson, of Ashley, Ohio, writes: "Will you allow me to correct a mistake which I made in the report of Ashley camp. For general manager it should have been Wm. Randolph, Ashley, Ohio, instead of A. P. Oliver. We have received The Progressive Thinker and premium book, 'The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.' The book is just what we want. It is both sensible and practical, and to our idea is the best you have given yet. The Progressive Thinker is filled with such grand, good things, there is no place to stop until its pages are finished. Long may it come to us and many more as a harbinger of love and wisdom."

C. H. Mathews writes: "Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates, the noted Spiritualists, missionaries and mediums, held meetings in New Philadelphia, Ohio, on the 25th and 26th of September, 1902. The meetings were well attended and these talented and industrious workers were at their best, although they were tired out with constant travel and work. Mr. Kates is a fluent speaker and spoke with much fervor each evening. Mrs. Kates' lecture on Friday evening was an eloquent and comprehensive discourse, which would be highly instructive were it put in print. Mrs. Kates also gave some remarkable messages which were well received and recognized. The meeting on the second evening was the largest ever held in the Eagle Hall on a similar occasion. The N. S. A. made no mistake in putting these gifted workers into the missionary field. Such is the general verdict."

M. H. writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "Memorial services were held in honor of our late chief magistrate, William McKinley, by the Philadelphia Spiritual Society, on Sunday evening, September 14, 1902. A large portrait of Mr. McKinley, draped with the National colors, rested upon an easel on the platform and was admired by many. Hon Thos. M. Locke, president of the society, Mr. Wheeler and Mrs. Minnie Brown (medium of the evening) spoke befittingly of the good life-work of Mr. McKinley. It was suggested by Mrs. Brown that a letter be sent to Mrs. McKinley. Our meetings have been very well attended. Mrs. Brown has given satisfaction, and her work has been unique and to the point. The writer wishes for the cause generally, that a clearer understanding of its vital principles and a keener interest may manifest itself during the coming season."

G. R. Bicknell writes: "I have just received the premium book, 'The Religion of Man,' by Hudson Tuttle, and am very much pleased with its contents. Since writing you last the Spiritualists of Decatur, Ill., have enjoyed a brief visit by Charles E. Winans, materializing medium. The results produced at his circles are truly marvelous. He is now on his way to his home at Minneapolis. Mrs. Maggie Vestal, trumpet medium, has also returned to her home in Indiana. The regular Sunday night meetings, conducted by Mrs. India Hill, have been temporarily discontinued, but will be held later on. The meantime, our society will hold parlor meetings for lectures, singing, tests, etc., at the home of Mrs. Hill, inspirational speaker and psychometrist."

Will C. Hodge writes: "A good degree of interest is manifested in Spiritualism at the present time in San Diego, Cal. Our audiences are uniformly good and will compare favorably with any of the churches. My labor with both societies for the past month has been very pleasant, and I am to continue with the First Society for October, Mrs. Lilyl M. Thiebaud taking my place with the National Avenue Society for the same period. Good harmony prevails among the various workers, which results in continually increasing interest."

Dr. C. A. Beverly is a graduate of the University of Chicago, also of two of the best medical colleges in the city, but has given up the practice of medicine for magnetic healing and public lecturing upon spiritual topics. He is located at 3146 Wabash avenue.

J. O. Stephens writes: "Here is an excellent opportunity for a good medium. The First Spiritual Association of St. Joseph, Mo., would like to make arrangements with some good lecturer and test medium by the month, or for the season. Address me with references, at the Hotel Windsor, St. Joseph, Mo."

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley is filling an engagement for the Locke Society of Philadelphia, and can serve societies near during week nights, for month of October. Her address is Grant House, corner 8th and Spring Garden, Philadelphia, Pa.

G. W. Kates and wife held meetings in Rochester, N. Y., October 4 to 13. Will be at Utica, N. Y., 15 to 17. After the N. S. A. convention they have some open time for eastern places. Will also arrange for engagements after January 1. Address them at 600 Pennsylvania Avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

A. M. Thompson writes: "Accept my sincere thanks for the prompt delivery of the premium book, 'Religion of Man.' I am sure it will prove of great benefit as a study, and be a priceless treasure to me."

Mrs. Alice Baker, lecturer, psychometrist and message medium, writes: "I have the month of October. I would like to serve a society not very far from Cleveland during that month. Any society wishing my services for one or more Sundays during October, please write me at once. Terms reasonable. Address me at The Devonshire, Brouvelt street, Suite 5, Cleveland, Ohio."

Prof. Lockwood lectured at Hamburg, N. Y., Sunday, October 12, taking for his subject, "Some Interesting Phenomena in the Development of Cereal Grains and Flowers." His lecture was brimful of facts, easily discernible, constituting a stepping-stone to the evolution of various forms and types of life.

James Rice writes from California: "I consider it a pleasure to renew my subscription to your, to me, invaluable paper. In the last year many single articles have appeared, which are, in my opinion, worth the price of the paper for a whole year."

Mrs. Lole F. Prior is serving the Spiritual Society at the Temple in Columbus, Ohio, for October. She goes to Toledo, O., for November and December, then returns to Toronto, Ont., for January, 1903. She would be pleased to correspond with camp associations for next summer. Her permanent address is 516 E street S. E., Washington, D. C.

H. F. Coates writes: "Dr. Hewitt has returned to us at Kenwood Hall, and it seems his lectures are more inspiring than ever. I cannot help but say that it is a pity we have not more able speakers such as him, and trust that he may be allowed to remain upon this plane many years to give to the public his years of experience and knowledge. We still have Miss McAdoo and Tighe at our hall in the evening, and their music is certainly appreciated. Our attendance is above the average in numbers, and I feel prompted to say that Spiritualism is on the increase. We have many able workers who come to our conference meeting at 3 p. m., and I wish to extend an invitation to all to come and take a part in the debate on different subjects, which are discussed each Sunday afternoon."

H. E. Pomeroy writes: "In An Open Court you say, 'The great obstacle in the way of the National Association being a decided success is manifested in the many influential differentiations which confront one on all sides,' etc. You also say, 'However true the above may be, the National Association is capable of doing an excellent work in certain directions, and its efficiency will be increased just in proportion as imperfect methods are acknowledged and eliminated therefrom.' I believe you say truly, 'What changes will make it more efficient?' I will suggest straight Christian Spiritualism as a foundation, with priestcraft left out if the object is to spiritualize and elevated the race. Listen to the greatest medium and Spiritualist that ever trod the earth: 'God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth.' 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death to life. With this as creed all spiritual phenomena will be interesting and profitable, and will take character according."

Mrs. J. H. Lohmeyer writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "The 16th of October, Mrs. Scott Briggs will have reached her 75th birthday. She is now as spry as many who are years younger than she. Since 1870 she has devoted her time and energies to missionary work. For six years she held meetings every Wednesday night at 111 Larkins street, San Francisco; also Sunday meetings in large halls, working in Utica, N. Y., Chicago, and many other cities previous to coming to California sixteen years ago, using her money to support these meetings in benefiting the cause of Spiritualism. At the advanced age of 75 years she is ready to carry on the work, and enlighten those who may come within sound of her voice. Now the many friends of Mrs. Briggs as well as the patrons of this paper should respond generously to the call for aid and help the grand work along with any amount of money, no matter how large or small, to help her to still do much for Spiritualism. She is about to start meetings in Ventura and other towns along the coast, and I know she will do a grand good work among the people who have no knowledge of the benefits and truths of Spiritualism. Address Mrs. Scott Briggs, Ventura, Cal."

L. H. Freedman, M. D., the Australian Healer, now a resident of Chicago, writes: "My wife, mother and myself go to-morrow night to make our home at Los Angeles, Cal." Dr. Freedman has been a resident of this city for some time. He has the reputation of being an excellent healer, as well as a gentleman, and honest throughout. We commend him to the kind consideration of the friends in California.

Nellie S. Baade writes from Allegheny, Pa.: "The last Sunday evening of September the First Spiritual Philosophical Society of which I am still pastor, gave a reception at our parlors. Singing, remarks from some of the friends, a short address and spiritual communications from our guides, and with social converse the hours flew only too rapidly as we realized this would be our last meeting with them for an indefinite time, as a leave of absence has been granted us to visit other climes in search of health. We shall soon migrate to the Sunny South to minister to hungry souls who are seeking to know something of our beautiful philosophy. The last evening we spent in Detroit a musical was held in honor of the occasion at the beautiful residence of Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Parker, who had made it most attractive with lovely flowers. As we had just returned from a funeral where we had officiated in the afternoon, the guides made a companion of the two events which we hope will prove of benefit to all concerned, and with the knowledge of spiritual influences and the guardianship of dear angel guides, we came to Allegheny, Pa., where we are lecturing to good audiences which are constantly increasing. We have the most beautiful hall in the city, owned and occupied by the Odd Fellows. J. Clegg Wright is lecturing at Pittsburg, with his usual success."

Miss E. I. Russell writes from Newton Falls, Ohio: "The Mahoning Valley Association of Spiritualists held a meeting at the home of Wm. S. Russell, Sunday, September 28. Dr. D. M. King, H. T. M. D., of Mantua, Ohio, addressed the meeting. It was a very interesting discourse on 'Science, Life, Modern Spiritualism, Psychic and Phrenological Readings, and Descriptions of Spirits,' to a very appreciative audience of Spiritualists, skeptics and church members. Dr. King is a veteran Spiritualist and Phrenologist, having taken his first lessons in Phrenology from Fowler and Wells when they first installed their institution, some eighteen years since, and has always kept apace with all improvements to enlighten humanity. He is the founder of several Spiritual and Religious Camp Association at Maple Dell Park, Mantua, Ohio. He is a man of integrity and deserves the good wishes of all the people who aspire to a higher progression of life here and in the spiritual realms above."

Joy N. Blanchard writes from Delphos, Kansas: "The State Society of Spiritualists held a successful camp-meeting in August. Rainy weather interfered with us very much, yet we had a successful meeting. We wish to say to the Spiritualists generally that we need more people of our belief as residents. We have the oldest, and we believe the best Spiritualist society in Kansas. Our city is acknowledged to be the cleanest and most liberal in the West. Spiritualists and Liberals organized a Good Templars' lodge here twenty-five years ago. It has always been a success, and is now the banner lodge of this prohibition state. No saloons have over been allowed and our city officers are true men. We have fine graded schools. Spiritualists are respected and there can be few, if any, better towns in which to raise a family of children than Delphos. We are in the center of the great wheat belt of Kansas. Land is reasonably cheap and farming is a decided success. There is a fine opening for one or more merchants. Any person who wishes to correspond, and learn of the facts, can do so by inclosing stamp and addressing me."

Mrs. J. Lindsay, of Grand Rapids, Mich., is now located at the home of Mrs. Conklin, 51 Olga street, Chicago. She will answer calls to give inspirational lectures and soul-readings here, and will hold circles when desired.

Secretary pro tem writes: "Harry J. Moore, of Rochester, Ind., occupied the rostrum of the new Spiritualist Temple, Columbus, Ohio, during the month of September, with credit to himself and perfect satisfaction to his hearers. He is in every sense a student, teacher and orator, and endeared himself to all during his short stay. Brother Moore possesses every qualification (and the cause is fortunate in having him) as an expounder of the grand philosophy of Spiritualism. Mrs. Moore assisted her husband on two Sunday evenings, with pleasing recitations, and tests or messages equal to any ever given from our rostrum."

F. P. Wilmarth writes from Springfield, Mo.: "Mrs. Josie K. Folsom, pastor of the Warner Spiritual Temple, corner Roberson ave. and Calhoon street, Springfield, Mo., has been attending the dedication of the First Spiritualist Church, St. Louis, Mo., and she took very active part in the exercises and she reports one of the most harmonious meetings that she ever attended. Frank T. Ripley is holding meetings in the Warner Spiritual Temple here, with great success, and his lectures are instructive and interesting. Mr. Ripley was greatly assisted last Sunday, September 28, by C. W. Stewart, of Arkansas. We are always glad to have him in our midst. His interesting lectures always draw large audiences. Mr. Ripley will be with us through October. Mr. Ripley and our pastor will devote all of the evening service to tests and messages, with music by Miss Jessie Bell, and the choir. The children of the Folsom lyceum, under the management of the Revs. C. M. and Josie K. Folsom, are making great progress, and have been creating quite a little interest outside of the lyceum. Our little pastor is gaining great favor everywhere as she is an untiring worker in whatever she undertakes. She has made a complete success here and she has won the love and confidence of the people. Come to the meetings and receive glad tidings from your spirit friends. There are several mediums here who are developing under the guidance of Mr. and Mrs. Folsom, who will at no distant day come before the public in the interest of Modern Spiritualism."

A Crosby writes: "We must not forget to extend our vote of thanks to those eminent writers and scientists, Rev. Minot J. Savage, Hudson Tuttle, Cora L. V. Richmond, Lyman C. Howe and hundreds of others yet on this side of life, ever manfully battling for the liberation of mankind from the thralldom of ignorance and superstition. All the Morgans, Carnegies, Rockefellers, and other millionaires combined can never do the world one-half the harm that priestly hypocrisy has done and is doing to-day. The greatest power lies in keeping the world in ignorance. If we, combined with the denizens of the other side of life, can but keep the wheels of progress moving to educate the masses from the fear of death and hell-born ignorance, thereby lifting them to the true knowledge of a future life, we shall have done that which the combined efforts of all the priests and ministers this side of the bottomless pit can never undo. Only displace ignorance with knowledge (which Spiritualism will surely do), and we have robbed the craft of its strongest fort and the world can defy them. Go where you please in any country on the face of the earth, and where you find that ignorance predominates, there you will find the most abject slavery dominated by priestcraft."

J. A. Toren, Chicago, writes: "A very successful social was held at the residence of Mrs. Lucy Hodge, 703 W. 63rd street, Saturday evening, October 4. Believers and skeptics to the number of sixty-four gathered for the purpose of spending an enjoyable evening, and also to get some enlightenment on spirit communion. Dr. Beverly gave a short address, and as always, was listened to with marked attention, for the doctor generally has something good to say. Mrs. Isa Cleveland gave fourteen good messages, and her control, White Star, acquitted herself in a manner satisfactory to all. Mrs. Lucy Hodge delivered one of her characteristic talks, and her control, Barefoot, gave messages from the spirit world to the number of twenty-two. Those who attended this social say that Mrs. Hodge knows how to entertain, and all returned to their homes realizing that they had spent a delightful evening, the memory of which they will long entertain."

Z. F. Vallier writes from Camden on Ganley, W. Va.: "I have not seen in The Progressive Thinker any mention of our 'Mediums' Correspondence League.' It has been organized several months, with Dr. J. K. Newman, of Omaha, Neb., as president, and Mrs. Ida Lewis, of Bethel, Vt., as secretary. We number over a score of members. The object is to get all true, honest mediums in touch with each other, and banded together to assist in reaching the higher attainments, and for the advancement of truth as we mediums know it. Spiritualism is no more a religion than wheat is bread, but it is a grain from which bread is made. All religions are based on the scientific truths of Spiritualism. We count all as Spiritualists who accept those truths in their simplicity as proven, and if they wish to build a religious cult for themselves they may do so; or, in other words, each person can build his own religion if he thinks religion necessary; but we as a League try to assist each other to attain the highest perfection possible. We wish all honest mediums to join us. Come with us and we will do you good, and perhaps you may do us good."

L. F. Loovett writes from Muncie, Ind.: "I received all the premium books in good shape, and must say they are the finest lot of books I ever saw for the money. I do earnestly urge every Spiritualist who takes The Progressive Thinker, not to rest with the paper alone, but they should never stop till they have those books, every one of them. I have been a Spiritualist for twenty years, and am sorry to state that I have been neglectful in keeping myself posted with spiritual literature. I think the time has come when Spiritualists should broaden their views, and let the world know where they stand. So let me urge every Spiritualist to take one, if not all, of the Spiritualist papers, and help those along that have their shoulders to the wheel."

Mrs. R. W. Barr writes from Ellinwood, Kansas: "Dr. Barr and myself saw the advertisement in The Progressive Thinker about the South Boulder (Colo.) camp, and thought we would spend a few weeks there. After we got there we found only three or four tents. We were out time and money, and found nothing there. We warn all people to keep away from there."

Dr. J. C. Neal writes from Neoga, Ill.: "We would be glad to have you let the mediums know we are here, and waiting for some honest and true phenomenal medium to come this way. We are able to entertain and pay such as above mentioned. Unless we have some help we cannot progress. Dr. Dougherty and myself remain in the faith, while our fellow-president, C. E. Dugan, has fallen from grace."

G. F. Cooper writes from Fresno, Cal.: "We need some good organizer to unite the Spiritualists of Fresno. There is a large number of Spiritualists here (some say 500) and we had a good society some time ago. We need some one to lead us. There is material for a large society here."

Mr. and Mrs. Leavitt, of Warren, Ark., have been attending the Aber seances at Spring Hill, Kans. They received many excellent tests, and were well pleased with their visit.

Geo. P. Colby has been lecturing at Louisville, Ky., and Nashville, Tenn. He is now in Montgomery, Ala.

Mrs. Jennie Hagan-Brown lectures for the Ladies Club of Ohio, Ill., in the Town Hall, Tuesday evening, October 14. She will make engagements for lectures in Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska, on evenings or Sundays. Her lectures and poems are most excellent and will interest any audience. Address her for the present at 40 Loomis street, Chicago, Ill.

E. W. Baldwin writes: "The Symposium seem to me the most instructive of any yet. The 'dandy' seems to have made a 'presto! change!' and appeared as a Solomon. There was less vehemence and more thoughtfulness; and all under your professorship."

H. A. Budington, of Springfield, Mass., desires the address of Helen Campbell, the medium.

Jonas Goldsmith writes from Evansville, Ind.: "The Evansville, Ind., Society of Spiritualists desires to correspond with good workers with a view to engage them for a month or more at a time. None but those who can bring the best of references will be accepted. At present A. Scott Bledsoe, president of the Kansas State Association, is serving the society, and the people are aroused, and we desire to continue our work with good workers. Brother Bledsoe is a grand worker, and is doing much good for our cause. Being honest in his efforts and a Bible student, he commands the respect of his hearers at all times. Any good worker open for engagements can address me at No. 403 Oakley street."

Dr. W. T. Nichols and wife, Julia Steelman Nichols, left Chicago this week for an extended tour of two years, during which time they will visit the principal cities of the Northwest. Letters will reach them addressed to 1118 Seventh street South, Minneapolis, Minn.

Next Sunday Moses Hull will be in the city. He will land in Chicago about 10:15, and will lecture for any society who desires him to do so, in the afternoon or evening. Address him at once at Whitewater, Wis.

CONGRATULATIONS.

To the Editor:—I want to congratulate you on the success of your Symposium, "The Open Court." The fact that you did not receive my article in time to use it, gives me the liberty to say that the answers to the questions propounded by The Progressive Thinker, if carefully read by the delegates to the convention, ought to place them in position not only to vote for themselves, but for those who cannot for unavoidable reasons attend the convention. No delegate present at the convention should consider personal interests, and a careful reading of your Symposium will enable each delegate to come in contact with the divergent views of those who have no voting privilege, but are interested in the N. S. A. and its welfare. Somehow, the articles seem to be almost unanimously in favor of bringing the N. S. A. in closer touch with the people, and of doing practical work. All seem to realize the necessity of adopting some plan whereby the chartered societies should have direct communication with the N. S. A. instead of waiting for the reports to be read in convention when it is too late for the chartered societies to act upon or instruct their delegates intelligently. All seem in favor of distributing the favors so far as the board of trustees is concerned. Mrs. Longley is the only one that says that it is convenient to have three trustees in Washington, but she does not claim that it is absolutely necessary. As the N. S. A. pays the expenses of its trustees to all meetings, there are many states which could have a representative on the board, who could come at a short notice, in emergency cases, which are very few. I am glad you received so many good replies, and hope that every suggestion offered will receive consideration.

SPIRIT VOICES.

Oh, we long so to comfort you, mother,
Alone in your voiceless despair;
We long to help lift up the burdens,
And smooth out the furrows of care.

We grieve when you're lonely and grieving,
And sigh when you anxiously weep,
Often striving to sweep back the shadows,
And touch your sad soul into sleep.

When at twilight you look on our pictures,
All that's left of a once happy past,
When together we garnered the sunshine,
Dreamed its radiance was destined to last.

When we see the dim years stretch before you,
And sense all your sorrow and pain,
To speak to your heart just one moment
We would suffer death over again.

For those who should pity your sorrow,
But have shadowed your life with a blight,
There is room in that timeless to-morrow
For weak souls to grow into the light.

Do not think though no more you enfold us,
We have gone to some realm far away,
Though no more your sad eyes may be hold us
Till your soul flits its garment of clay.

O'er your pathway our spirits are watching,
All your hopes, unfulfilled, we can share;
Oft we stoop when your weary feet falter,
And breathe o'er your spirit a prayer.

Our hands will clasp yours some fair evening;
Each day is one less day to wait;
We will come when the shadows are falling,
And bear your freed soul through the gate.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the Formation of Circles and Cultivation of Mediumship

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose graves (stones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the several loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

NEW EDITION
THE LYCEUM GUIDE
BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

Do you want to organize a society for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM
furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM. It furnishes a system of evolution by internal growth; not the old cut-and-pincher Sunday-school. It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established. It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.

Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.

Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.

Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.

The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

VILE MEDICAL FADS

Thoughts on the Toxin and Antitoxin Craze.

Few are aware of the amazing extent to which the "antitoxins" are being introduced into medical practice. Those who have interested themselves as to the value of vaccination for smallpox, have come to a knowledge of the so-called "vaccine farms," where scores of "healthy" cows are injected with virus, and in their fevered blood the "points" are dipped ready to puncture the veins of the victims of compulsory vaccination laws. It was reported in the newspapers that one of these "healthy" cows from whose blood, hundreds and thousands of citizens of Boston had been vaccinated, died or was finally slaughtered for market, and was found to be in the last stages of tuberculosis. And the doctors express surprise at the spread of consumption! But the "vaccine" culture is not to be compared in magnitude with the "antitoxin" culture. There is a firm in a western city from whose special advertisement, issued to physicians, the following facts are taken, that has one of the many "laboratories" for manufacturing the new remedies which are claimed as specifics against the most dreaded and malignant diseases. Not wishing to advertise this firm, we briefly say that it is one of the largest wholesale manufacturing and dealing houses in the United States. From this catalogue we learn that the stables contain one hundred and fifty horses subject to the treatment by which the serum is obtained. These horses we are assured are selected for their healthfulness, and given extraordinary care. They are first treated to an injection of tuberculin, as a test for tuberculosis (consumption). After recovery from the fever, the animal has a dose of antitetanic serum" injected into its veins. This is a test for tetanus or lock-jaw. After recovery from the disease this produces, the main treatment for the production of the desired serum is begun by injecting virulent toxin, in small doses at first, and increasing until there is no reaction. Thousands of guinea pigs are kept to test the strength of the toxin, that the quantity may be known and not enough be given to kill outright. A raging fever is set up by this blood-poisoning, corrupting and disorganizing the blood.

After it has run its course and repeated injections are borne without return of the fever, the animal is said to be ripe for the gathering of the coveted serum. A canula is inserted into the jugular vein and as much blood taken as the animal can spare and remain alive. When he recovers more is taken repeatedly by his inhuman tormentors.

This blood is set away for the clot to separate. The liquid portion (serum) is then drawn off, and passed through a filter, and a preservative added. It is now drawn into glass bulbs and hermetrically sealed, and is ready to be sent out to the physicians who introduce it into their practice. Thus prepared it is claimed to be an absolute cure for diphtheria. Under varying manipulations there are remedies for tetanus, consumption, cancer, etc., the serum being sold as antidiphtheritic, antitoxins of tuberculosis streptococcic infection, etc.

How is the toxin with which the horses are poisoned obtained? Jars of beef soup are prepared as a culture basis, into which germs of the bacilli of putrefaction are planted. These jars are placed in a warm room or "incubator" and after three weeks the germs have multiplied, the soup emits a horrible stench, its surface is covered with a scum. The germs have thrived on the soup, and developed a virulent poison, "toxin," which is held in the solution. This product of rotting flesh, a poison comparable only to the virus of the viper, or that with which the savage tips his arrows, is now ready to be injected into the veins of the horse, to set up another putrefaction process.

All the practices connected with the production are inhuman, and such as fiends might be supposed to have concocted in Dante's Inferno. Over six thousand animals, dogs, cats, guinea pigs, cows and horses are kept in this one establishment for "experimentation." Some breed the "toxins," some are kept for testing its "healthful quality," to use the words of the advertisement. The sufferings of each one of these by the raging fevers set up by injection of toxins, no words can express. It is all, however, under the management of leading doctors, men at the head of their profession, and not a word of sympathy or pity is elicited.

There is another consideration even more appalling. The product "harvested" from one hundred and fifty horses (continually maintained at that number) is enormous. The glass bulbs contain an exceedingly small quantity, and the serum of a single horse must fill thousands. It is made to be sold. It is sold or its manufacture would not be continued. The salesmen are the doctors scattered all over the land. It is for their interest to sell it, for they make an extra charge, ranging from five to twenty-five dollars, according to their conscience.

Many of the ablest physicans have strongly expressed their opinion that the diphtheria antitoxin is not only a failure, but a dangerous agent. There is always the liability of heart-failure and collapse when it is administered. The danger from the agent exceeds that of the most malignant form of the disease.

Is it not a strange physiology or pathology that teaches that the most corrupting blood-poisons will restore health? For hundreds of years orthodox medicine has taught that the poison drugs that will kill a healthy man, will heal a sick man! This antitoxin fad is another form of the same doctrine. The "anti"-toxin is not at all "anti" as being less poisonous. It is so much more poisonous that it is supposed to neutralize the toxin already disorganizing the blood of the patient.

The physician meets in his practice a case of sore throat, which a hot compress would remove. He cries tragically "diphtheria," and at once rushes into his medicine case for the antitoxin, and injects it into the subject's veins. In a few hours the patient is relieved, if collapse from heart failure does not end the farce in a tragedy. Great is antitoxin! The doctor instead of a paltry fee for a visit, pockets five to twenty-five dollars, as his conscience may allow.

An instance directly under my notice: A physician of wide reputation was called by her son to the bedside of his widowed mother who was suffering from erysipelas. There is a special antitoxin for its cure, or supposed to be.

The doctor said curtly to the son, "There is one remedy, and one only, that will save your mother's life; it is antitoxin, but it will cost you seven dollars, and I will not give it until I am paid."

"Willingly will I pay you, but I have not the money by me."

"I must have it now."

"I have not the sum, and how can I get it away on the farm in the middle of the night?"

"Very well," said this "toxin doctor," as he began to put up his case ready to leave, "Let your mother die then, if you so will."

The son, half crazed with grief and fear pleaded with the doctor to stay, while he ran across the field to a neighbor's and procured the money. When he had placed it in the doctor's hands, that embodiment of selfishness and rascality, proceeded to inject the tube of antitoxin into the mother's blood. She became almost a lunatic, immediately, raving, and for two days had to be held and guarded. Almost miraculously she lived and recovered in spite of erysipelas, antitoxin and the doctor. He is one of the honored of the profession.

I give this instance not only as an illustration of how the antitoxins are sold, but of the character which is developed in physicians who are taught in the colleges where the inhuman barbarities of vivisection and inoculative experimentation are made subjects of laudation.

The celebrated Pasteur method of treatment of hydrophobia rests on precisely the same foundation. It neutralizes the poison of the bite by another toxin, a culture. Eminent physicians have expressed grave doubts as to its value, and it has not been proven to have saved a single person. It on the contrary is well known to have infected many with a new and horrible form of rabies. It is, however, a mine of wealth, widely advertised without cost, the fee is extortionately high, as it must be, for the local doctor who sends a patient who comes to him to dress a wound from the bite of cat or dog, to the Institute, gets a nice percentage!

The blood of a cow, or horse is made worth many times its weight in gold, to the manufacturer, and the doctors who use the preparation make a far greater profit. The ignorant or confiding patient suffers the agony, and pays the extortionate charges, or dies and his heirs pay it for him. And these are the men who have in most of the states established the most tyrannical of all the trusts, and are constantly seeking to make it more exclusive!

HUDSON TUTTLE.

IMPRESSIVE ADVICE.

To Strike, and to Strike Hard, is the Advice.

To the Editor:—Your questions are timely and I trust they will be thoroughly discussed. I will not attempt to answer the first one now; perhaps when all your correspondents are heard from the subject will be sufficiently illuminated to show what changes should be made.

I favor state associations for the reason that within a limited territory the authority seems nearer and more potent. This is true of other organizations, why not of ours? Then the National Association would be relieved of much labor and confusion. The auxiliaries should be subject to the state, and the state represented in the National body. If possible the states should be organized on a uniform plan.

Individual membership might render the organization unwieldy; I would therefore favor the delegate plan—one delegate (voting) for a certain number of members of an auxiliary society.

I think the responsibility for missionary work in a state should rest upon the state association although the National and state bodies might co-operate in the case of a weak state, if working in perfect harmony.

It is my opinion that one representative from each state on the board of trustees is sufficient; then each state, large or small, would be equally represented.

I certainly favor the publication of the reports of the National Association prior to the annual convention, because the delegates, having read them would be enlightened as to the condition of the association and thereby be the better prepared to expeditiously dispatch the necessary work.

The seventh is an important question and there should be no division among Spiritualists. The true man or woman cannot defend or silently submit to fraud and trickery in any of the relations of life. If Spiritualists make the proper effort to eliminate fakism from their ranks it is evidence to the ordinary investigator that they have the genuine; but if they are silent while the secular press, or outsiders expose the trickery there is a large class who will conclude that all manifestations are spurious. If the bills of a bank are counterfeited the business man critically scrutinizes every bill presented to him, taking only the genuine; but the masses, knowing there are counterfeits, and being unable to distinguish the true from the false, refuse to accept any of them. I think I understand the position of those who oppose the exposition of tricksters. They think as the trickster poses as a Spiritualist, an exposition would be damaging to the cause. This is a mistake; their premises are wrong. A society will grow and prosper under outside persecution and condemnation, but if there be fraud, deception, falsehood and hypocrisy within the organization it is doomed. The teachings of Spiritualism are pure; we are searchers after truth and we profess to demonstrate to the world the reasonable and philosophical truths we promulgate. Let us then purify our ranks that our light may cast no shadows. Let the Spiritualist papers—and all true Spiritualists—act in harmony in this important matter.

Eliminate all semblance of fraud by which the credulous are deceived and the honest investigator disgusted and discouraged. We have no room for fakes who live off the over-credulous. We have scores of genuine mediums by and through whom we can demonstrate to every reasonable, unprejudiced man and woman the glorious truths of immortality and spirit return. And there are other scores of honest, intelligent mediums not known to the general public, many of whom keep silent because of the cry of fraud. Adulterated food may destroy the body, but adulterated Spiritualism will blight the soul. Strike! Brother Francis, strike! and may the echo of your blows penetrate to the remotest parts of the earth.

THE PSYCHIC FACULTY.

Some Important Information in Regard to It.

"The soul has its roots in the soil of matter."—Hudson Tuttle.

Brain-students assert that 43 different faculties have been discovered, each having its own history of discovery, and its own distinct function. These brain-students write and speak of the faculty of "Spirituality" as being the psychic faculty, and have located the "Psychic centre" in the middle frontal convolution of the brain. They claim that this mental functionary, when it is strongly developed, causes a person to take interest in psychic science, occultism and in spirit philosophy. This is also true. All kinds of psychic phenomena cluster around this mental functionary. Through it, a person becomes interested in that noble and uplifting philosophy, Spiritualism. Through it, a person becomes interested in automatic writing, trance speaking, inspirational writing, etheric writing, etherealization, transfiguration, vision, trance travel in the spirit lands, levitation, table tipping, prophecy, telepathy, mind reading, wave thought, inspiration; psychic magnetism, spirit suggestion, spirit control, clairaudience, clairvoyance, psychometry, spirit photography, apparitions, mediumship, magnetism, hypnotism, hypermesia, illumination, hypnotic healing, electrology, psychography, Swedenborgian philosophy, free thought, spirit communion, spirit guidance, and all kinds of psychic phenomena.

This faculty is "the sixth sense," the mind-student and the door of inspiration. It deals with that force or principle called life, spirit, mind, soul. It causes man to study the expressions of life, the soul of man and the spirit of the universe. It is interested in the finer forces. It studies the soul (life) of matter. It throws man in contact with the living, acting and pulsating forces of the universe, and enables him to commune with beings that his material senses can not perceive. Through it, he feels that the universe is an ocean of living and pulsating beings, although he can not see them. Through it, he becomes, in a measure, able to control, use and apply the psychic force, the soul principle, and to commune with his spirit friends. This, however, he can not do before he shall have acquired a knowledge of the psychic laws, for each and every gift or talent must be trained and educated. The man who builds and operates a machine must understand the mechanical laws and the laws of motion, and must conform to these laws, else he will not be successful in his mechanical operations. So also with this faculty and with the psychic laws. These laws must be understood, and the person must conform to these laws before he will be successful.

When a person has this faculty deficient, he becomes a materialist, a skeptic, an atheist, an "exposer" of the medium, worldly minded, secular and spiritually blind. He feels that "all is matter," he studies "the philosophy of mud." He takes a corpse into the dissection room, and studies its tissues in the laboratory, thinking that he is studying man, the expressions of life and the laws of life; forgetting, however, that he is studying a corpse from which the life-principle has fled. When the psychic faculty is weakly developed the person becomes a matter student rather than a soul student. Then, he does not believe in psychic phenomena nor in the spirit principle of the universe. Then, he will say as the matter-studying Darwin said after he had finished Carlyle's "Sartor Resartus" (a work on religion and spiritual life), written by Carlyle himself. "It is," said Darwin, "all poetry and mist." The soul-studying Carlyle read Darwin's "Origin of Species," and after he had finished it, flung the book into a corner and exclaimed that, "This is the philosophy of mud." The man who has the psychic centre of the brain deficient in development will say to the spirit student and believer in psychic phenomena, "Trot out your ghosts and show them to me, and I will believe in spirits." It is useless to argue with such a man, unless we could argue brain into the middle frontal convolution. I have often had people ask me if I find anything in the formational development of the brain in favor of mediumship. Spiritualism, etc., to which I have always answered that the faculty of "Spirituality is the strongest proof in favor of the spiritual philosophy. Every faculty of the mind has a certain sphere of action in the departments of nature, and the very fact that the faculty exists and take interest in such phenomena proves that such phenomena exist. Or in other words, psychic phenomena exist and the faculty is adapted to the studies of the same.

Science and art, religion and law, music and literature, commerce and finance, etc., are but results of mental abilities and tendencies. Science may be faulty, art may be incomplete, religion may be defective, music may not be perfect yet, human laws may be imperfect, literature, commerce, finance, trade, work, thought and action be faulty, and there may be room for improvement in every department of nature, but religion is a reality, so is music, art, science and law, so is nature and life, so are psychic phenomena, and so is the faculty which studies the manifestations of the soul-principle. The brain itself is nothing else than the workshop of the soul. In itself, it is composed of gray matter, neuroglia, nerve fibres, etc., but within this brain is the soul-principle which causes the neurons to tremble of thought and feeling; and it is this internal soul-impulse that gives rise to intelligent mentation in some, or in all, of nature's departments. The brain is not the life of man, nor is the blood the life of man, for a corpse has brain, blood, vital organs, etc., and still it does not live, does not circulate the blood, does not talk, does not think.

The brain is simply the workshop of the soul, just as the stomach is the factory of nutrition. The blood is the reconstructive agent by means of which repair of function is possible. But the spirit-impulse, the soul-principle is the dynamo that runs it all, and when this soul-principle leaves, the mechanism of man stops. Every cell, fish, bird and animal has some kind of soul, although it may not have a human soul, and it is the function of this faculty to study this soul-impulse in all its varied manifestations. This psychic functionary is interested in life, mind and soul.

The whole universe is but an ocean of life, spirit or soul, and the psychic student is close in contact with this soul-principle of the universe. The matter student can study his corpse and analyze its tissue, but the soul-student deals with the expressions of finer forces; and this by reason of a developed condition of the psychic faculty. PSEUDO SCIENCE.

Illustrated by a Doctor's Explanation of a Psychic Occurrence.

The Medical Brief of October, 1902, with offices at St. Louis, New York and London, claiming the largest circulation of any medical journal in the world, contains the following article, which may be of some interest to the many readers of The Progressive Thinker:

"Tomato Poultice—Telepathy."

"I thought this might be of interest to others besides Dr. Barnum, so send to the Brief for publication.

"An old man, seventy-five years, being very stoop-shouldered where his suspenders crossed on his back produced a very ugly sore. I tried all kinds of ointments and salves, but, to no effect. One night I was in a 'circle' with a trumpet medium, and there spoke through the trumpet a spirit who called himself a doctor, and told me to use a tomato poultice, applying it hot and changing it often. I did so and the ulcer healed rapidly. Now, this is the question I would like the medical profession to answer: Did a spirit who once inhabited the body of a doctor, and who once lived upon earth, and who is now in the world beyond, give me the information?"

"Respectfully, Your Brother M. D.,
"Manilla, Ind. W. E. BARNUM."

"W. E. Barnum:—I am very glad to get your letter. I will try to answer your question.

"I think science has established the fact that every person has an unconscious and a conscious self, or a subjective and objective self. I believe, also, that it is as well established that there is such a thing as telepathy.

"Telepathing is confined to the subjective self, and the objective conditions have no influence upon it. The communications from one subjective self to another subjective self is unconsciously done and therefore mind or objects have no influence upon them. These communications are unconsciously registered in the second unconscious self.

"If there is harmony existing between the two, distance cuts no figure.

"I think this can be best illustrated by the wireless telegraphy. In order I may receive a communication through the air I must have an instrument keyed upon the same note as the sender's. For instance, if the sender has the instrument keyed upon C, I must have one upon the same key, in order to receive his communication. This is harmony between the sender and the receiver. It is the same between the unconscious self of the sender and the receiver. In both cases there is harmony between the sender and the receiver. * * In order to bring this unconscious knowledge to the consciousness of the individual through which it can be communicated, there must be a medium; this is the psychic. Do you not see this does away with the 'spirit' part entirely, and reduces it to the action of a scientific principle. Some one in your circle had received this knowledge unconsciously, and the psychic raised it up to your consciousness."

"Evanston, Ill. F. H. BREWER."

To those who are posted on the subject by intimate acquaintance with spirit phenomena, such as related by Dr. Barnum, the above pseudo-scientific explanation offered by Mr. Brewer is side-splitting funny. No ignorant illiterate skeptic concerning the rotundity of the earth, ever tried to set aside facts establishing it, by an explanation more preposterously absurd.

The subjective and objective self theory is nothing more than an hypothesis; the spirit return theory is a science to which millions of facts persistently bear testimony and reported by millions of witnesses. No phenomenon ever occurred saying "I am a subconscious self"—we do not need to indulge hypothetical guesses to explain these facts for they ever and always testify in their own behalf, saying, "I am a spirit." If there are spirits in the universe, why may not communications be received from them through a proper psychic? and that there are spirits the world is full of facts affirming. But some are so blinded by pseudo science that they would not believe "though one rose from the dead."

DR. PHELON'S LETTER.

Notes and News From the Pacific Coast.

One sees many things on the street cars of a large city, that are really straws showing how the deep currents move. A man who seemed intimately acquainted with hard work, boarded a car the other day. He had his wife and two small children with him. The mother held the younger, a babe, in her arms. The other, a boy of two or three years, was kept busy looking after a toy balloon. They were evidently homeward bound, for the baby was nervous and restless, undoubtedly feeling and sharing the mother's weariness. As soon as they were seated, the man said: "Give me the baby, mother." Without the faintest shadow of alarm on her face, the little mother handed the child to the strong arms of the father. It was easy to see that it was no new experience. With a nestling, restful motion or two the baby's body fitted itself to the curves of its new inclosure, and under the soft caressing of the toil-hardened hand which had not hardened the heart, it went off to sleep. The baby and the father, for the time being, were all to each other. The tired mother rested. Every once in a while, the father's hand would tap the boy's balloon and bring out a gurgle of laughter. We have seen hundreds of cases where the man stalks on ahead and the mother follows, with two toddlers clinging to her skirts. Gentle reader, did you ever see such? I can count on the fingers of one hand, every case I have met, like this loving father of a whole family. It is because of these few, however, that I believe in a Father-Mother God. The brute beasts have no use for their offspring at the beginning of things, brute men are like them. The spiritualized man recognizes that a part at least, of the burden of family care is his by right. He accepts accordingly. Is that easy to understand? Is it easy for you to do, oh mortal brother?

I believe the clientelle of The Progressive Thinker, on this coast, is increasing. I don't believe, I "have to" tell my reasons. Any family believing in spirit communion should have a full comprehension of the movement in all its phases of time and place, both local and at large, including the bird's-eye view of the whole world which it is the province of The Progressive Thinker to furnish in its broadside sheet, that full-spread table of all the edibles and vinands of spiritual literature at a price within the reach and pocket of the poorest man or woman. But I am rehearsing an of-told tale, by thus adding the testimony of the Pacific Coast.

The session of the last State Spiritualist Convention promises for the cause, throughout the state, an increasing activity and power not lately known amongst our workers. The state organizer has commenced his work at once, in an energetic fashion. He is following the old injunction: "Tarry at the center, first, and thence carry the power there gathered throughout the state." The attempts at persecution and muzzling of the truth, have only served to make believers stronger, and to increase the interest of those who are inclined to investigate along the line of the real. Without the support of a united, self-reliant body, no efficient action could have been taken. The one against many is always matched and overwhelmed, if the many, even spasmodically, act as one.

This lesson has been taught the world, over and over again, and enforced in all sort of ways. Still it has not been learned. Every little while, somebody starts out to go it alone. For awhile, the accumulation of strength out of the East, carries the current before him or her, and the struggle, fierce, exhausting continues. At last, the one must succumb to the many, on the physical plane and the hero perishes. The conquerors of the world's history, Alexander, Caesar, Napoleon, Mahomet, Tamerlane, overcame because they were able to handle organizations of numbers. It was Napoleon's army which won for him his wonderful success. Behind his army was the solid nation of France. When numbers cease to exist, not all the wonderful genius, nor his own spirit force could hold him unscathed against the constantly increasing mass of his enemies. Let us as Spiritualists, at least get close enough to each other, in all hours of distress and suffering to comprehend and help, as assistance is needed. If the Spiritualists of Illinois were all in touch, there would be no attempts made to wring unjust taxes from their mediums, to fill an impecunious treasury, wrecked by beer-guzzling politicians. How long will it take us to learn our lesson?

The Woodmen of America have seized upon some of our city streets and are to have a street fair or carnival for the benefit of the order. It is to commence on the 6th of October, continuing until the 18th. Think of that, ye people who dwell where the "sere and yellow leaf" already begins to show in your orchards and forests! Twelve delightful days, of the pleasantest season of our year, if one really can be pleasanter than another. We shall have a procession, may be, one than one. There is just enough Spanish about it all, to set the acclimated blood of our light-hearted population in a glow. It will be an event, and we dote on events.

The Hermetic Brotherhood resumes its open meetings on Thursday, the 2nd of October. We hope good will flow from them. The Brothers have kindly remembered the anniversary of the Senior Elder Brother of the Temple. In a quiet way they are constantly finding many opportunities of helpfulness both for their own membership and other needy ones. The removal of headquarters to this coast has produced marvelous results.

We notice that J. M. Peebles is soon to be in this country on his return from his last trip around the world. We are glad to know that he is well and happy and able to meet the constantly accruing demands crowding upon him from many sources. He seems indomitable to "the ills to which flesh is heir." Perhaps he is not heir to that sort of an estate. W. P. PHELON, M. D,

CALIFORNIA NOTES.

Great Progress Being Made in That State.

Three weeks have passed since the California State Spiritualists Convention adjourned, and the work set by it for the new board goes merrily and successfully forward.

Allen Franklin Brown, the new state organizer, has proven himself a most valuable acquisition, and has kept the board busy devising ways and means to render his work effective.

Already he has addressed twenty or more meetings in behalf of the State Association; has completed the organization of two societies, the Stockton Spiritualist Alliance and a lyceum affiliated with the Union Spiritualist Society of Oakland, nearly completed the organization of another society in what is known as "the Mission" of this city; and put new life into several of the old societies.

His work in Stockton was expecially fruitful. There in five days' work he brought together and organized a large and enthusiastic congregation of ladies and gentlemen interested in spiritual phenomena, spiritual philosophy, and spiritual altruism, the officers of the new society being, Mr. Fred Hardy, president; Mrs. Crawford, vice-president; Mr. Orlando F. Ryerson, secretary; Mr. Lewis Heathernox, treasurer, and Mrs. Josephine Bachelor, trustees.

Aside from the work above mentioned Mr. Brown has brought his persuasive power into play with several societies not affiliated with the state association to such effect that they will undoubtedly shortly elect and strengthen both themselves and the state association by joining with it.

It is not, however, alone by the work of the state organizer that progress has been and is being made. The Society of Spiritual Progression—a newly organized Spiritualist society in Los Angeles, with a membership of thirty to start with—has affiliated itself with the state association, chartering under it. This society has for officers and directors the following: B. K. Bowen, president; E. E. Campbell, vice-president; Ira Gifford, secretary W. T. Button, treasurer; Mary C. Vlasek, E. E. Colwin, Nellie Button, A. H. Bond and Jas. H. Hews.

The local societies are doing well. The Sunflower League, organized less than a year ago and of which Mrs. J. Shaw Gillespie is president, is rapidly growing in membership and usefulness. At the last meeting there were received nine applications for membership—all representative and progressive Spiritualists.

The Ladies' First Spiritual Union Aid Society is one of the truly altruistic and public-spirited bodies of the local spiritual movement, and is always doing for the cause and for the distressed out of proportion to its numbers and means. It is the bright particular star of Spiritualism in San Francisco.

A good word is always due the Mediums' Protective Association. It is always alert to the needs of mediums, and is ever ready to defend members who are unjustly attacked. Its membership roll contains the names of most of the best mediums of the city as well as of many persons whose only purpose in joining is to see that justice is done.

The local lyceum work is in good hands. In fact, for some years past we have had two lyceums—the Children's Progressive Lyceum, of which Mrs. Anna E. Wadsworth is conductor; and the Mission Lyceum, at the head of which is Mr. W. T. Jones, secretary of the state association.

The Children's Progressive is alone in active operation now, though Mr. Jones expects to resume work in his lyceum shortly. The former has recently received many acquisitions in the way of good workers, and at the instance of State Organizer Brown has just adopted a new calisthenic drill, founded on the United States army drill, and which is proving very popular, especially with the children.

The old and staid Spiritual society is that of the Progressive Spiritualists. This is the wealthiest society, having in its charge property known as the Sleeper Trust and valued at $30,000 to $40,000. It holds meetings every Sunday in Covenant Hall, Odd Fellows' Building, as pretty and comfortable a meeting-place as one could wish. It is presided over by Mr. F. T. Lilich, and has for its speaker, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, a graceful and entertaining speaker, whose work is as well known with you as here.

Besides these there are several societies with good memberships not affiliated with the state association, but which we trust soon will be—the I. F. T. Freethought Spiritual Society, the Seven Links and the Hermetic Brotherhood in which Dr. Phelon is a prime mover.

There are also many successful private meetings, test circles, etc., almost nightly in progress. Mr. and Mrs. Eberhardt are conducting such meetings in their pretty hall at 3250 Twenty-second street, where good-sized audiences are the rule.

On McAllister street there are two halls devoted exclusively to spiritual purposes—one conducted by Mrs. C. J. Meyer and the other by Mme. Young, and both are showing good results.

Mrs. Carrie Wermouth, a well-known and popular medium, who has done some of the most convincing work ever seen here, recently opened a series of Sunday evening meetings at Scottish Hall, which are attended by from 100 to 150 persons; and Mrs. Anne E. Gillespie, wife of the president of the state association, has engaged a large hall in Alcazar Building, where she will teach Spiritualism and spiritual philosophy during the next few months.

The above are only a few of the more notable societies and persons engaged in the spiritual work here, We have scores of mediums and speakers, each with a message for the converted and unconverted; each praying and working for the dawning of the day when Spiritualism shall be awarded, in the opinion of all right thinking men, the first place among religions and philosophies, and all believing that they can descry the signs which porfend the coming of that day. J. MUNSELL CHASE.

San Francisco, Cal.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

"Human Culture and Cure, Marriage, Sexual Development, and Social Upbuilding." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A most excellent and very valuable work, by the Dean of the College of Fine Forces, and Author of other important volumes on Health, Social Science, Religion, etc. Price, cloth, 75 cents. For sale at this office.

JOYS BEYOND THE THRESHOLD
A Sequel to The To-morrow of Death.
By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French. The To-morrow of death was written to develop the idea of the principle of the permanence of the human soul after death, and its reincarnation in a chain of new beings, whose successive links are unrolled to the bosom of ethereal space. "Beyond the Threshold" continues on the same lines, enlarging and expanding the idea by reasons and considerations drawn from science and philosophy, claiming that the certainty of a new birth beyond our earthly end is the best means of arming ourselves against all weakness in the presence of death, and that the help offered by science and philosophy to that end is far superior to that of any of the existing religions. From beginning to end it is interesting, entertaining, instructive and fascinating, and whether one accepts it all or not, much will have been learned and much pleasure enjoyed in its perusal. Price, $1.25.

THE GOSPEL OF NATURE
Is a most excellent work by Dr. M. L. Sherman, assisted by Prof. W. F. Lyon. Heretofore it has been sold for $2, but the price now has been reduced to $1. It is a book that will interest and instruct. It contains 280 pages, and is full of suggestive thoughts. Dr. Sherman was a medium of rare qualities, and his work is a reflection from the celestial spheres.

THE DESCENT OF MAN.
By Charles Darwin. Cloth, gilt top, 75 cents. On its appearance it aroused at once a storm of mingled wrath, wonder and admiration. In elegance of style, charm of manner and deep knowledge of natural history, it stands almost without a rival among scientific works.

The Science of Spirit Return.
By Charles Dawbarn. A scientific rehearsal that is truly interesting. Price, 10 cents.

Discovery of a Lost Trail
BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,
Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by the wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.
"Discovery of a Lost Trail"
is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

Cultivation of Personal Magnetism
A treatise on Human Culture. By Leroy Berrier, anthropologist and author. A very suggestive and instructive book. Price $1.00.

Paine's Theological Works.
Age of Reason, Examination of the Prophecies, etc. Illustrated edition. Post 8vo., 432 pages. Price, cloth, $1.00.

POEMS OF PROGRESS.
By Lizzie Doten. They are really valuable. Price, $1.00.

Man the Microcosm.
His Infinite and Divine Relations. Intuition—The Light Within. By Giles B. Stebbins. Price, 10 cents.

POEMS of the Life Beyond and Within. Voices from many lands and countries, saying, "Man, thou shalt never die." An excellent selection. Edited and compiled by Giles B. Stebbins. Cloth. $1.

COMMON SENSE By Thomas Paine. A Revolutionary pamphlet, addressed to the inhabitants of America in 1776, with explanatory notice by an English author. Paper, 15 cents.

Psychopathy, or Spirit Healing.
A series of lessons on the relations of the spirit to its own organism, and the interrelation of human beings with reference to health, disease and healing. By the spirit of Dr. Benjamin Rush, through the mediumship of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. A book that every healer, physician and Spiritualist should read. Price, $1.50.

OLD TESTAMENT STORIES
Comically Illustrated.
By Watson Heston. Price, boards, $1.00; cloth, $1.50. Heston is inimitable.

A. P. A. MANUAL A complete expose of the principles and objects of the American Protective Association. A book for all patriotic American citizens. Price, 15 cents, or two for 25 cents.

MAXHAM'S MELODIES,
Songs Sacred and Secular. By A. J. Maxham. Thirty-two pages of sweet songs and music. The author and compiler is well known as a Spiritual singer and composer. Price, 25c.

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.
Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

REINCARNATION.

A Lady Gives Her Reasons for Believing the Doctrine.

The subject of reincarnation is a very difficult subject to write about and very difficult to make oneself clearly understood. We may be able to give our views and still not be able to state them clearly enough for another person to understand them perfectly.

My idea is that it must certainly exist, proof of which is the law of evolution. Nothing that is made or done for a first time is as perfect as after it has been gone over a few times. The earth to-day is more perfect than one hundred years ago, and why not apply the same law to the soul. The soul must certainly have a beginning, and since we believe, and it has been proven, that the soul does not die, it is naturally nearer perfection when it leaves the body than when it entered it.

I believe, and in fact I have it from a very intelligent source, that of the spirit world, that the soul originates from God, that it is a part of himself, and that it lodges in the minerals in this sphere, from there it passes to the vegetable state and from that form passes to the animal phase, and in this state it here begins to understand and take an intelligent aspect. It begins to understand that there is something to accomplish. It begins to have the five senses. It begins to think for itself. It sees danger and avoids it. You may tell me that this is instinct, but I cannot agree with you there. It cannot be instinct that will tell a horse or a dog to go somewhere, when after having sat pensive for a while he gets up and goes somewhere without anyone telling him to do so. If this is instinct, then I say we all act by instinct as well as animals. You may claim this to be a Darwin theory, but I quite agree with him in his idea of transmigration of the the soul. I will go further and say that we start from God and pass through the mineral and vegetable states before entering the animal and I do not mean to say that we jump from one existence to the other, for you as well as I, know that there are animals that are more advanced than others, and we have to go through all the crude states before arriving at perfection.

This theory of saying, why is one man born rich while his brother is born poor, you no doubt will say as an old saw, but think of and look well into this, and you will clearly see the hand of the Almighty here and that if one man is rich while another is poor, it is because he was more intellectual. But why is he more intellectual? Does it not prove that one soul is more advanced than the other? and why should one soul be more advanced than the other if God has made them both? Why if we have only one life here on earth did he not make all men alike? Why did he give to one and take from the other. It would not be a just God to show partiality. For an instance, a family of five or six children, they are all bright and intelligent but one; now why is not this one as intelligent as the others who are born of the same father and mother? Does it not show you that this soul had to progress, had not lived as many lives as his brothers and that he is sent among those people to advance? Another example would be that of a large family where all the children are sound, and among them one is a cripple and born so. Why was he born a cripple any more than any of the others? Would it not be clearly explained if we would say: Well, perhaps in a previous life he made fun of a cripple, or he occasioned a person to become a cripple; than to say God wished it so. Why did he wish it so any more than in the others? It would annul the justice of God, and you, my dear readers, as well as I, know that God is all justice.

What a weak expression to say that the children shall be punished for the sins of their parents. Why should they? This has about as much sense as to say that I will commit a crime and my neighbor will be punished for it. That is very rational, is it not?

NO, my friends, if you will look into this subject and make a profound study of it as well as of human nature, I think that you will find yourself obliged to come to my way of explaining these things that have heretofore been unexplainable.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

Items in Regard to Spiritualism at Etna, Wash.

Our camp-meeting here at Etna opened up August 10, but unfortunately for us, Mr. Mills, president of the Washington State Spiritualists Association, who has the reputation of being one of the most eloquent and forcible speakers on the coast, if not in the United States, and who had been engaged by the management to speak for us, was unable to come on account of a severe attack of sickness. A Mrs. Sheldon, from Tacoma, came to our camp as a visitor, and offered to assist Mr. Hull on the rostrum, but she also became sick, and was unable to work until the closing of the meeting, but she was liberally paid by the management for what work she did perform.

Mr. Hull is a fluent speaker, and what he has to say possesses depth of thought and unanswerable logic, and is so clearly and tersely expressed, that he finds no trouble in holding the attention of his audiences to the end of his lectures, and leaves them anxious to hear him again.

The Spiritualist society of Etna has a membership of nearly sixty, and the children's lyceum about forty, so both have the largest membership of any society or lyceum in the state, if not on the coast.

Etna is situated in the foothills of the Cascade range of mountains, upon a high and level plateau. The Association's grove is upon the same plateau between the Lewis river on the north and Cedar creek on the south of it. This location commands a magnificent view of the Lewis river valley extending down to the Columbia river and the mountains on the west side of that grand river.

Mr. Henry B. Allen, who is known all over the United States as one of the most honest and best of physical mediums in the world, was so charmed with the beauty of this locality and the mildness of its climate that he concluded to make his permanent home here.

We consider that our camp-meeting was a grand success both financially and spiritually. Everyone who came here, left with the best of impressions and kindest of feelings towards the association and all stated that they were anxious to be with us again next year.

The ladies of the auxiliary society have done more than nobly. To their efforts for the greater part, is the financial success of the camp-meeting due. Ladies' Day was a red-letter day, and visitors from the cities stated that the ladies' entertainment could not be surpassed, even where the talent as found in great cities can be drawn upon.

Drummer Won Out.

A traveling salesman for a clock company which manufactures a time stamp of the type used to stamp letters and cards at hotels with the hour and minute of their arrival, called on Secretary Cortelyou in the White House and asked permission to place one of his machines in the White House executive offices, where the work of handling mail has been thoroughly organized.

In considerable detail he explained the advantages of his machine and displayed to Secretary Cortelyou several cards which had been used in several machines and which showed the various styles of type used in the stamp. Among the number was one which the drummer handed to Mr. Cortelyou with the remark: "This is from a stamp we made for John Alexander Dowie, the leader of the Zionists of Chicago." The legend on the card read:

"Prayed April 26, 1902. John Alexander Dowie."

Mr. Cortelyou regarded the card with amused interest and the drummer placed an order.—Boston Journal.

WHY BE SICK?

Dr. J. M. Peebles the Famous Physician and Scientist Has Perfected a System of Treatment that Gives Hope to Every Sufferer.

Read His Valuable Book, "A Message of Hope"—It will Explain to You this Wonderful Treatment and Tell You How You Can be Healed.

Why will you continue to suffer when there is a treatment at hand that will cure you? Dr. Peebles and his associates, all physicians of wide experience and reputation, have perfected a system of treatment that promises health and strength to all.

J. M. Peebles, A. M., M. D., Ph. D.

Many of their cures seem almost like miracles, for hundreds of those restored had traveled far and wide, trying this doctor and that, without getting any relief and were about to give up in despair when they began the treatment of Dr. Peebles.

They are able to do such wonderful cures because they work in harmony with nature, and employ her mighty healing forces in connection with mild, scientifically prepared medicinal remedies. In a perfectly natural manner it builds up the depleted system, enriches the blood, improves digestion and assimilation, gives strength and tone to weakened nerves and muscles, and permanently repairs wasted tissues and organs, causing thousands of the sick to rejoice at being healed.

Why don't you sit down, at once, and write the doctors a plain, truthful letter as to your condition as you see it? If you will do this, they will carefully examine your case and send you a full diagnosis of your condition, and tell you truthfully whether or not they can cure you. This will cost you nothing, and if they find they can cure you, they will make their charges so small that anyone can afford the treatment.

If you are sick, write them at once for their full diagnosis and professional advice which will be sent without charge, together with their wonderful book, "A Message of Hope," which will explain fully this grand system of treatment and give you information that will brighten the remainder of your life. PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of te nlines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, September 22, 1902, Miss Emma Challand, of 712 Garfield avenue, Topeka, Kans. Funeral services conducted by Mrs. Etta Seaman Bledsoe, pastor of the Spiritual Church of Topeka. Miss Challand was a life-long Spiritualist and had devoted her entire life to doing good for others. Her aged father and mother are made happy in the thought that there is no death. This good woman had done much for our glorious cause, in this city and her life of devotion to truth will never be forgotten. B.

Miss Blanche Swayer passed to the higher life, at the home of her parents, 508 N. Park street, Columbus, Ohio, aged 23 years and 7 months. Funeral services were conducted at the residence by the writer.

HARRY J. MOORE.

At Port Huron, Mich., September 23, Mrs. Anna Davis passed to spirit life at the age of 84 years. She was found sitting in her chair, by her son Fred upon his return home at 1 o'clock in the morning, having passed away peacefully just as she had wished to go. She had lived in Port Huron for seventy-six years, and was beloved by all who knew her. She embraced Spiritualism fifty years ago, and realized the comfort which it brought when her companion, Col. Davis, passed to the home beyond fifty-four years ago. True to his memory she had been. She leaves three children to mourn the loss of a loving and faithful mother, Mrs. S. W. Clark, and William and Fred Davis. Services were conducted by the writer.

MRS. MARIAN CARPENTER.

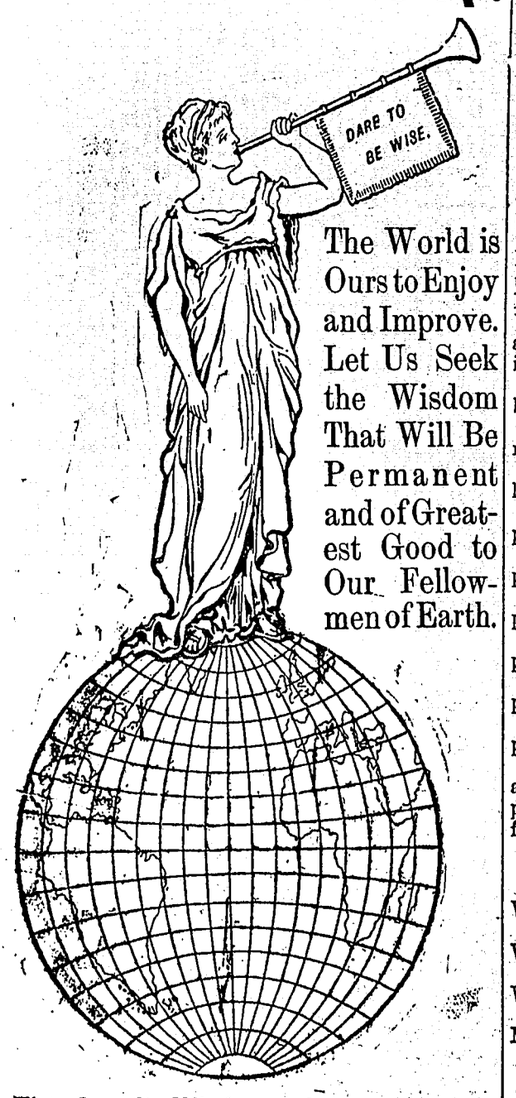
Passed to spirit life, at the home of Mrs. Eemeline Martin, Kimball, Minn., September 24, 1902, Mrs. Olive Burrows, aged 84 years. The deceased was the wife of the late Aaron Burrows, and was a firm believer in Spiritualism. Her seven children had preceded her to the spirit land. She leaves many friends to mourn her loss. MARY E. MARTIN.

Passed to the higher life, from his home, Quincy, Mich., Uriah B. Caldwell, in his 79th year. He leaves five children to mourn his loss, and a wife who for fifty-three years has been his loving companion. He has been a Spiritualist almost from its advent, and a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker from the first number. He was a man of sterling qualities, loved by all. The funeral, held at the Presbyterian church, was largely attended. Hudson Tuttle, by request of Mr. Caldwell, made years ago, gave the discourse. The burial was conducted by the Masonic fraternity, of which he was an honored member.

Passed to the higher life, from her late residence, Lamb, Mich., Mrs. Mary Ann Tompkins, aged 92 years. At one time she was a noted healer and trance medium. She leaves seven children to bless her memory. The world is better in consequence of her living in it. Services conducted in the Methodist church, Rev. Nellie S. Baade, of Detroit, officiating. X.

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. C. A. Johnson, wife of P. T. Johnson, of Battle Creek, Mich., at the age of 57 years. She was a staunch Spiritualist and welcomed the Angel of Life, realizing that to die is to live. How well she was respected was demonstrated by the profusion of flowers she loved, brought by neighbors and friends. The floral offerings were beautiful. The Doctor has the sympathy of all in his loneliness. The writer officiated with comforting words, giving assurance of the immortality of the soul.

MRS. AMANDA COFFMAN.



Gen. Francis J. Lippitt passed to spirit life, lately at his home, 1308 Nineteenth street N. W., Washington, D. C., aged 90 years. He was the oldest living alumnus of Brown University.

Gen. Lippitt was one of the fourteen founders of the first Episcopal church in California and was for many years a very active church worker. His uncle, the Rev. E. R. Lippitt, was formerly a professor in the Episcopal Seminary at Alexandria, Va., and when Gen. Lippitt was a child he lived for several years in Alexandria with his uncle. In his later years he was much interested in Spiritualism and collected a fine library of Spiritualistic works, which he is said to have willed to the leading societies of that faith in this country. He wrote a book called "Physical Proofs of Another Life."

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. Eliza Stewart, aged 65 years. She was an old pioneer in the cause of Spiritualism, a faithful and devoted worker and ever ready to lend a helping hand to the poor and needy. She leaves an only daughter and three adopted children who deeply mourn her loss. Services were held in her own home, 2625 State street, by her good friend, Rev. Sarah Thomas, who gave an interesting account of how her arisen Sister Stewart twenty-one years ago had brought her into the light of Spiritualism.

OUR PREMIUM OFFER.

READ AND REFLECT.

Remember, please, that we send many of our Premium Books by express. If you do not receive your order promptly by mail, inquire at the express office. If not there, notify us at once.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to purchase any of these Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands." Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills on exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have NINE Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any eight of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.50.

Lastly all of these NINE valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $2.75, a price never before equaled in this country or Europe. The following is the list:

NINE REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $2.75.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.
5.—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.
6—The Next World Interviewed.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printers' art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

Millions in Peril

Millions of Americans Suffer from Heart Trouble and Don't Know It.

Statistics show that sixty-nine out of every one hundred have some form of heart trouble. Are you one of them? If so you should act at once. Sudden death from heart disease occurs with alarming frequency, and comes on when least expected. Almost every day we read of some important public official being stricken down without a moment's warning. Think of the countless thousands that die a similar death but because not known to the world at large no notice of their death is taken. Thousands doctor for their kidneys, stomach, lungs, nerves, or some other supposed disease when the whole trouble is with the heart. Is your heart right? Do you have palpitation, fluttering or skipping of the heart beat; shortness of breath after exertion, fainting spells or dizziness; choking sensations in the throat, cold hands and feet; dropsy, or swelling of the feet and ankles; pains around the heart, or through the shoulder blades; spots before the eyes; hungry, weak spells, or sudden starting in sleep? If you have any of the above symptoms your heart is affected, and you should waste no time in having it corrected. Write at once to Dr Peebles' Institute of Health, the renowned heart and nerve institute of Battle Creek, Mich., No. 10, Upton Block, for full particulars of their wonderful treatment for heart troubles. They have cured thousands that had been given up to die by the very best local doctors, and they can, no doubt, cure you. Write to-day, for another week may be too late.

To Earnest, Honest Spiritualists:

I wish to correspond with some one who is able and willing to assist me in publishing and distributing a pamphlet giving in detail the methods used by bogus and dishonest mediums in deceiving and defrauding the public in the sacred name of Spiritualism. This work, which is now ready for the press, is the result of several years' investigation of the work of prominent mediums in all parts of the country, from Maine to California, by a life-long Spiritualist. Its contents will be a revelation to the average Spiritualist, and if it is the means of opening the eyes of those of our people who are blindly and credulously chasing after the sensational fakirs to the neglect and injury of the true and honest instruments of the angel world, then will the object of the author be accomplished. Only facts are stated in this work, and these can be verified by any intelligent person who will bring to the investigation of the matter the same earnest, common sense methods that they would use in any important business transaction. Please address for particulars, "Forrest," care of The Progressive Thinker, 40 Loomis street, Chicago, Ill. 675

BURYING ALIVE A FREQUENT PERIL.

By Prof. Alexander Wilder, M. D., of Newark, N. J.

When engaged in discourse with a brother physician, some time ago, I remarked that I had given attention to the subject of trance and suspended animation, and that I had apprehended the danger in such conditions of being buried alive.

"I believe that this often happens," my friend replied. This matter sometimes gains a notice in the public journals. The New York World gave a page to it several weeks ago. Occasionally, likewise a case occurs where such a fate was barely avoided or actually took place. A telegraphic dispatch of May 9th described a commotion at Salt Lake City, because the physician refused to sign a certificate of death, declaring that the person was only in a trance and not yet dead. So resolute were the members of the family for interment as to procure such a certificate from the Health Commissioner of the city.

Perhaps they were right, but it is a fearful subject to contemplate. We hear of other instances, comparatively recent, where terrible mistakes had been made. On the 23d of March last the undertaker at Mullica Hill, N. J., em employed in the removal of some bodies from the village cemetery, which it was intended to place in the Monument Cemetery at Philadelphia. One of these was the body of a boy of six years old that had been buried some twenty years ago. As the crumbling coffin was opened the skeleton was found drawn up in a manner that told a mute story of a horrible struggle. The arms were bent over the skull, one leg was drawn up and the other crossed it in a way to afford unmistakable evidence that the little sufferer had been hurried to the grave while yet alive.

Another case of similar horror occurred at Sandy Creek, near the city of Rochester, N. Y., early in January. Vett Case, a man thirty-five years old, was sick with scarlet fever and supposed to have died. He lay unconscious for several hours on the 4th, was pronounced dead by the physician, and buried two days later. On the 29th of March his father died, and when arrangements were made to dig the grave in the family plot it was found necessary to move the son's coffin several feet. Upon disinterring the casket the grave-diggers found the glass front of the coffin shattered to pieces, the bottom kicked out and the sides considerably sprung. The lid was then removed and the body of Vett Case was found resting on its face, with the arms bent at the sides, and in the clenched fists were handfuls of hair, showing that a terrible struggle had taken place.

Better fortune fell to the lot of Joseph N. Manning, of Mount Vernon, N. Y. He was a commercial traveler, and, coming home from a trip some months ago, he was taken ill, and the case was supposed to be typhoid fever. The "usual medical treatment" was accordingly given. This was on Saturday, and on Sunday he lost consciousness. On Monday respiration ceased, and it appeared that the end had come He lay in this condition twenty hours. Then came a gasp from the body, and a few minutes later respiration was apparent, though weak and irregular. The action of the heart was also perceived, but it was faint and fitful. Half an hour later he opened his eyes, and soon after asked for water. Convalescence ensued, and he explained that he was perfectly conscious during the trance. He knew what was going on, saw and heard the weeping of his relatives, and the physician discussing whether he was really dead. He could not move a muscle nor utter a sound, but his brain was active and he comprehended everything that went on around him.

Bishop Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, Chicago, tells a remarkable story of the same category, more marvelous in particulars, but more happy in its sequel. The wife of a young man, living on the North Side, had been seriously ill, and death was supposed to have taken place. Two or three days later she was buried in Rose Hill Cemetery. Fortunately, no embalmers had been employed. The interment took place in the afternoon. In the middle of the night the husband heard his name called distinctly several times. He was what is called a "materialist," and he deemed the hearing of the voice an hallucination. Going to sleep, he was again awakened by hearing his name called in a more insistent tone. At daybreak the voice came again, calling him by name and adding imploringly: "Save me! save me!" He sprang from the bed and hurried to another room where a cousin was sleeping who had passed the evening with him. "We must hurry to the cemetery," he exclaimed, "she is calling."

Procuring spades and a carriage, the two made their way to the place. In a fury of excitement they dug down to the coffin and wrenched off the lid. She was turning over, but fortunately was unconscious. They removed her from the coffin and conveyed her home. She never learned that she had been buried alive, and it is apparent that she was in a trance all the time that she was in the grave. She made a slow recovery.

All these examples are too well authenticated for any candid disputing, and there are more that may be given. I know a lady, a physician of our school, who was resuscitated from apparent death at her birth, and who, after growing up, was supposed several times to have died, but had the good fortune to be restored to consciousness before the undertaker began his work. Others have told me similar stories about themselves.

The late Washington Bishop, was subject to cataleptic conditions. He took the precaution to put his friends on the guard that they might protect him in such a case from being passed upon as dead. He was prostrated, however, in New York, when no friend was near. He fell into the hands of some over-zealous medical men and the sequel is well known.

A writer in The Nineteenth Century, twenty years ago, informed us that at the public mortuary of Paris about one in every three hundred persons, supposed to be dead, actually came to life again. At that rate, some hundreds must be buried alive in the larger cities of America, for very few of the precautions are taken that are required in several European countries.

In the second week in May of the present year a case occurred at Bellevue Hospital, in the city of New York, which is pertinent to the present subject. Ellen Meyer, a young woman of twenty-four, living at No. 573 Ninth Avenue, was taken from her home on Wednesday, the 16th, and carried to the hospital. She was insensible and continued so. Pins were thrust into her body, and other means taken to awaken her, without effect. Her mother told the physician that the daughter would go into these trances about every three months. She would lie in a deep sleep as if lifeless for three or four days, and, after coming to consciousness, would go about her duties as though nothing unusual had occurred. Her term of insensibility while at the hospital seems to have been prolonged, and I have not learned the outcome.

Henry Laurens, of South Carolina, for a time President of Congress during the American Revolution, had a daughter of remarkable talent and accomplishments. She was taken ill with smallpox, and was finally supposed to have died. Her body was duly shrouded and coffined, and the burial service was performed. Just at the critical point she recovered animation, was rescued, lived to womanhood and married. Afterwards, when Mr. Laurens himself had died, it was found to be the condition of every legacy in his will that his body should be burned. A pyre was built accordingly upon his plantation and his wishes carried out.

There is a general distrust among intelligent individuals in regard to the trustworthiness of the common medical certificates of death. I entertain the same feeling myself. I am unwilling to believe a person dead simply upon that authority, and I have a profound terror lest I shall yet be subjected to the same uncertain verdict.

The late Judge Charles J. Daniels, of Buffalo, N. Y., left a charge to his family not to dispose of his body till death had been found absolutely certain, because, he declared, he had no confidence in medical certificates.

Bishop Berkeley, the celebrated metaphysician, Daniel O'Connell, and Lord Bulwer Lytton, the statesman and author, entertained similar apprehensions of being buried alive. Wilkie Collins always left a letter on his dressing-table in which he enjoined that if he should be found dead in the morning, his body should be carefully examined by a physician. Hans Christian Andersen carried a letter in his pocket asking his friends in case of emergency to make sure of death before the burial. Harriet Martineau bequeathed ten pounds to her physician to make sure that her head was amputated. Miss Ada Cavendish, the actress, left a clause in her will directing that the jugular vein in her body should be severed. Edmund Yates bequeathed ten guineas for the same purpose. Lady Burton, the widow of Sir Richard Burton, was subjects to fits of trance, and feared that such an attack might be taken for death. She ordered that her heart be pierced with a needle, and her body be submitted to a post-mortem examination.

The fact is that medical certificates are often perfunctory, and given simply to meet the requirements of the law. As many are consigned to the mad house without judge or jury almost, so others are placed in the grave upon the word of a physician, who has not made a critical examination of the case. If the undertakers were to tell the facts that have come under their eye, the blood would run cold with horror.

Death which is actually instantaneous or sudden, seldom occurs, except in cases of violence. Life withdraws from the body gradually; death comes to its place in one part after another, creeping through the tissues, and sometimes defying all tests to prove that it is there. "Under Nature's laws," says Dr. A. B. Granville, "there is no such thing as sudden death." "There has been in every case a preparation, more or less antecedent to the occurrence, which must inevitably have led to it."

The fakirs of India have abundantly demonstrated by numerous examples that a condition of body can be produced voluntarily which may continue for a period of indefinite length, and all the time resemble death itself, except that there will be no disorganization of the tissues. For a sufficient reward these mountebanks will consent to enter this state of apparent death and be buried; and after a period of weeks they are disinterred and resuscitated. It may be conjectured that Orientals having a constitution and temperament of body very different from Westerns, are the only individuals capable of such a feat. But actual experiment has shown that Europeans are at least sometimes endowed with similar powers. In 1895 there was exhibited at the Westminster Royal Aquarium a man in the mesmeric trance, which lasted thirty days, during which he was absolutely unconscious. Another example was afforded some months later, when Alfred Wootton was placed in the mesmeric trance at the same establishment, his nose and ears stopped with wax, after the manner of the fakirs, and he secured in a stout casket, which was buried under seven or eight feet of earth. Arrangements were carefully made, however, for respiration, and to moisten his lips occasionally. At the end of six days he was exhumed in the presence of a large crowd of spectators. Many tests were applied to show the audience that the man was perfectly insensible. A large needle was thrust through the flesh on the back of his hand without any sign of there being any sensation. Electricity was also applied. As soon as he became conscious Wootton said that he could see nothing and asked for drink. Milk with a little brandy was given him and he was lifted out of his box. He soon became able to walk with help, but his limbs were stiff and he was very weak, as well as sensitive to the temperature. At first he felt chilly, but afterward complained of the oppressive heat. He soon recovered from his experiences.

These experiments were not severe as those with the Indian fakirs, but sufficiently so to illustrate the matter. "There seems to be hardly any limitation," Colonel Vollum remarks, "in regard to the time during which a body may be preserved and become reanimated again, provided it is well protected, although modern ignorance may smile at this statement."

The forty days' fast of Dr. Henry S. Tanner, at Clarendon Hall, New York, which has been imitated by several others, shows that the human body, under certain circumstances, can sustain long abstention from food. The suspending of respiration is the more difficult problem, but examples show that in trance conditions this may occur to a great degree. Many animals and insects become unconscious, and are even apparently dead during the cold months, but return to life and activity with warm weather. Some reverse this and become torpid in summer. It would seem that human beings may once have had a similar habit of hibernation, and that some traces of it are yet retained.

Among the forms and perhaps the causes of apparent death are hysteria, asphyxia, trance, electric shock, catalepsy. Whatever tends to produce abnormal conditions of the nervous system may bring about such a result, as well as that of unequivocal dissolution. A volume may be written upon this department of the subject without exhausting it. We have all witnessed hysteria producing convulsive manifestations, fictitious epilepsy, temporary palsy, and even insensibility. Persons have been hanged and afterward resuscitated. Lightning does not always kill. Even when the person seems to be dead he has recovered from the shock of cold water falling upon him. Persons prostrated by gases in the bottom of a well have sometimes been restored under copious effusions of cold water. It may be a question whether the mode of execution by electricity is what does the work of death, or whether it is the knife of the surgeons who supplement it by a post-mortem operation.

The undertaker who embalms the bodies of the dead is liable to a similar imputation. He certainly, like the surgeon, makes death sure. But who would willingly take such responsibility? Trance results from a variety of causes; some of them beyond scientific explanation. The term implies a person going beyond ordinary conditions, as though the real personality had left the body. We have mentioned Washington Bishop, who was subject to these peculiar experiences. His mother, also, had similar trances; in one of them she lay six days, seeing and hearing, but unable to speak or even move. She saw the arrangements for her funeral, and only the determined resistance of her brother kept away the embalmers. On the seventh day she came to herself, but she never recovered from the effects of the agony that she endured.

Catalepsy differs from trance in important particulars. It is occasioned by some obstruction in the organic mechanism of the body on account of its exhausted nervous power. It may be a form of hysteria, and it is commonly attended with loss of consciousness. The limbs remain in the same position as at the outset, and the muscles, in whole or in part, are rigid. In profound conditions sensibility is lost to touch, pain or electricity, and no reflex movement can be induced. Sometimes the fits are very short, lasting only a few moments, so that spectators do not notice them; at other times they last for days and days together. The rigor mortis is one feature of the attack.

Some of the medicines that are in frequent use are responsible for much of this liability to apparent death. The "witch herbs" of the middle ages—aconite, belladonna, veratrum, cannabis and digitalis—have became favorite drugs with physicians. They were formerly used to produce abnormal conditions, which the common people supposed were effects of a communication with supernatural powers, and it is by no means improbable that they now sometimes cause individuals to have curious fantasies, and even to fall into conditions resembling death.

This subject, I may remark, has engaged my attention for many years. I have been both astonished and even discouraged at the difficulty of arousing public attention to it. In 1870, when I was president of our State Medical Society, I took occasion, at the annual meeting in the Capitol of the state at Albany, to discuss this subject in my address. I was heard in silence. Some days afterward I prepared the draft of a statute requiring greater certainty of death before permitting the interment of a body. My friend, Mr. A. X. Parker, of St. Lawrence county, then a senator, introduced it for me in the senate of the state, but told me that it stood no chance with the judiciary committee. His prediction proved true; it slept the sleep of legislative death.

Those, however, who seem most ready to put public anxiety to sleep in this matter are medical men. Few months pass without some article in a newspaper to lull apprehension in regard to the danger of being buried alive. If alarm is raised some medical hypnotizer is ready to tell the public that there is no occasion for alarm; that medical science is so advanced, and knowledge of this matter so thorough, that such a thing is well-nigh impossible. Like the commander of His Majesty's ship, Pinafore, such men are ready on the instant to affirm that burying alive never happens; and when the "never" is questioned they attempt to soothe us by saying, "Hardly ever."

Physicians are often not philosophers, and it is by no means wonderful that sometimes they are not skillful in relation to the phenomena incident to the waning of life. The medical art is not so much the accumulated wisdom and experience of ages and centuries as the exploiting of the most recent notions. We do well to obtain our conclusions from a wider field and a higher inspiration. The matter now under discussion is of too much importance to everyone to be dismissed without absolute assurance. We do not wish our anxiety to be soothed, except we are sure that the causes of it are removed.

Among the peoples that we esteem to be less civilized than ourselves there certainly exists gross carelessness in respect to this subject. The Hindus, who burn their dead, are said to hurry the bodies to the funeral pyre speedily after they have taken a death-like appearance, making no investigation or attempt to resuscitate them. Some have regained consciousness, however, before it was too late. The Parsees often place a dog by the side of the individual, believing that the animal knows when the person is dead. Yet persons supposed to be dead have been placed on their "Towers of Silence," and come again to life. Vultures, it is said, will not attack the body of a living person. The Turks are remarkable for the precipitancy with which they hurry to dispose of their dead, and there can be little intelligent doubt of the frequent burying of persons while yet alive. It is affirmed of the Jews in the Old World that it is their custom to bury their dead in a few hours after dissolution, and that there are no pains taken to bring to life those who may only be apparently dead.

Christendom has likewise a history of horror. When an epidemic rages, its victims are often hurried to the grave as soon as death is supposed to have occurred. With such heedlessness is this done, such inexcusable carelessness, that a crime is likely to be committed, only less black in shade than willful murder itself. In ordinary times, when the epidemic influence is of a milder character and those who die suffer only with sporadic complaints, there is too much reason to believe that some are buried while yet living. The general staff medical officer in one of the German states declared, a hundred years ago, "that in his opinion one-third of mankind are buried alive." This is obviously an exaggeration, but the number is sufficiently large to justify the most serious alarm. The Rev. I. G. Ouseley, in 1895, estimated "that 2,700 persons, at least, in England and Wales, are yearly consigned to a living death, the most horrible imaginable." M. Thieurey, Doctor Regent of the Faculty of Paris, was of opinion that one-third or perhaps one-half of those who die in their beds are not actually dead when they are buried. M. Gaubert estimated the number of victims to apparent death in France at 8,000 a year. Dr. Josat, the Laureate of the "Institute," declared that a considerable number of people refused to visit France, because they feared that they might be overtaken by apparent death and precipitately buried alive.

I have often been told that the modern practice of embalming made death certain. I admit it; but those who are too poor to pay for this funeral luxury must yet take the chances in the old-fashioned way. There is no doubt, however, that the number annually put to death by the embalmers is sufficiently large to demand attention. An investigator of this subject in New York has openly declared his belief that a considerable number of human beings are annually killed in America by the embalming process.

There are some conspicuous examples on record. Mdle. Rachel, the celebrated actress, fell into a trance at Paris, on the 4th of January, 1858. She was reported as dead, and the embalmers began their work. She awoke while they were thus engaged, but the injuries which they inflicted were so severe that she died ten hours afterwards.

Cardinal Spinosa, having been declared by his physicians to be dead, they proceeded to open his chest for the purpose of embalming his body. As the lungs were laid open the heart began to beat and he returned to consciousness. He grasped the knife of the surgeon, then fell back and died.

Cardinal Somagalia, in 1837, was seized with a severe illness and fell into syncope, which lasted so long that all thought him dead. At once preparations were made to embalm his body before putrefaction began. As the operator penetrated his chest the heart was seen to beat. The unfortunate cardinal was able to push away the knife, but the lung had been mortally wounded.

We have all read the account of Jesus and the daughter of Jairus, the ruler of the Synagogue. She had lain at the point of death, and that event was actually announced. The preparations for her interment were already commenced. There were the minstrels chanting dirges and the hired mourners howling and making a noise. As Jesus entered and saw the maiden He made the declaration: "She is not dead, but sleeping." They all laughed him to scorn. He sent them out of the apartment and then addressed her in Aramaic: "Talitha Kumi,"—daughter, arise. At once she was aroused, and he delivered her in charge to her parents, with the direction to give her something to eat. Fortunate, indeed, would our cataleptics and exhausted fever patients be if intelligent persons were at hand to set aside the blind judgment of attendants and call them back thus to normal life.

The instruction given in medical institutions in relation to this matter has been almost culpably insufficient. In our own country the ordinary practitioner, when he follows the tradition and practice of leading members of his profession, considers himself exonerated from blame in such matters. He has not the time, the opportunity or the inclination to study abnormal phenomena like trance and catalepsy; and so sepulture of living persons is likely to go on without check under his sanction. Yet the habits and manners of the people of our time are such as to require anxious precaution and carefulness. The number actually buried alive, in the judgment of observers, including those whose business it is to conduct interments, is great enough to justify alarm. Especially is this the case at extraordinary periods of epidemic visitation. But under more usual conditions, those of habitual overtasking the brain and nervous system, overworking generally, habitual use of tobacco and other sedatives, excessive stimulation and excitement, sexual aberration, anaesthesia and other abnormalities, the occurring of sudden death, or rather of death which is only apparent, must consequently be frequent, and require every precaution against peril which can be devised. Before burial in such cases there should be detention in a mortuary till death was certain.

Common humanity pleads for this. Human life may appear to come to a stop in many cases, and no one can say that if time is allowed for this it will not go on again. This, even the most learned in medicine, cannot explain away or deny. "One cannot be too careful in deciding as to life or death," says Hufeland, "and I always advise a delay of the funeral as long as possible, so as to make all certain as to death. No wonder, when those who are buried alive and who undergo indescribable torture, condemn those who have been dearest to them in life. They will have to undergo slow suffocation in furious despair while scratching their flesh to pieces, biting their tongues and smashing their heads against the narrow houses that confine them, and calling to their best friends and cursing them as murderers. The dead should not be buried before the fourth day; we even have examples that prove that eight days or a fortnight is too soon, as there have been revivals as late as that. I say," he continues, "every one should respect those who only seem to be dead. They should be treated gently and kept in a warm bed for thirty-six hours."

Thus far Hufeland, and an array of the noblest men of the medical profession are equally as positive in asserting the same thing.

It would seem that this was a legitimate field for legislative action. In the period, however, that must ensue before this will be had, those who are awake to the subject should take the matter in hand. Volunteer co-operative effort to arouse public interest and to prevent hasty interments can bring the desired results about. A body should be crtically examined by an expert before its interment is permitted. Those who have charge of funerals should be required to ascertain, before dealing with the remains, that death has occurred beyond a doubt. The thought of suffocation in a coffin is more terrible than that of torture on the rack or burning at the stake. The fearful despair, however short the period, is too full of horror to contemplate with calmness. Carelessness in this matter cannot be innocent; even ignorance is a mockery, our tears little better than hypocrisy, when we neglect precautions against a fate so terrible—a fate to which every one of us is more or less liable.

DR. PHELON'S LETTER.

Notes and News From the Pacific Coast.

In glancing over the columns of one of the papers coming to my desk, I notice this couplet:

"We are traveling through this vale of tears
To reach a fairer world beyond."

Who makes the tears? Why should we be in a vale of tears? There must be something off about this statement. Is it not true, that there is about as much sunshine as clouds? As we average one year with another, is there not as much day as night? Is it anybody's fault but ours, that we blind our eyes, redden our noses, and set our mouths askew, with all the symbols of anxious grief? The Supreme Architect simply designed the little tear sac to keep the eyes washed and cleansed. Had he had a valley of tears in his scheme of life, he would have put a mansard roof and a reservoir on the top of everybody's head. Then we could have had tears at will, gallons, oceans of them. The capacity of the present tear-holder indicates that there was no intention to deluge the earth or any part of it, with bitter, salt brine. The couplet is born of cowardly thought, of fear, of worry.

Our path through life has all the vicissitudes of mountain and valley, and diversified scenery. As everything here is but a reflection of the Unseen and Unmanifested, this world must be the fairer of the two. Let us enjoy all life coming to us as the gift of the One, through the dear ones, who are only too glad to bring to us one and all, good things. If the world beyond is fairer than this, let us prepare to enjoy it, to its fullest, by drawing to ourselves all that is happiness in this world, letting the pessimistic thought of a "vale of tears" be relegated to the limbo of an erroneous ignorance from whence it came. Who has a happy heart worships as the Universal Spirit desires. Harmony and happiness are identical. If nothing else will restrain our lamentations, let us think how we would look in a fairer world beyond, if we are ushered into it with a habit of continuous snivelling; bandanna-stained eyes and a pain-distorted face. Suppose we all were so marked, then a part, at least, of the promised fairness would be discounted. Instead of seeking an uncertain beyond, we ought to increase the sum total of our joyousness here, for ourselves and everybody with whom we come in contact. Do not worry. Do not fear.

The Angel of the Fire has not neglected the Pacific Coast. He has lately been looking after his tithe of the forests of the Northern Section. The North winds bring to us a haziness, accompanied by a strong, resinous odor, which to the wise in wood cult, tells plainer than words, of the destruction of valuable property which it will take many many years to replace.

Mrs. Jane Stanford, whose wishes are an unwritten law to the Leland Stanford University, issued a set of instructions to a late meeting of the directory insisting, in unmistakable words, that neither politics, sectarianism, nor caste shall enter into the college activities of any of the directory or faculty of that institution. This action has been taken with the usual promptness and decision of this lady, who has done so much for this state and nation. As the administrator of her husband and son, she has left nothing undone to make the most efficient use of all opportunities.

From London comes the news that a new Messiah has broken loose. If we only knew from whom to order, it would be a nice thing to have a car-load shipped to this coast. The propaganda war cry of the "New Thought," of two thousand years ago was: "Believe and be baptized." The first part of the adjuration demanded a personal preparation that no human being could make for another, that everyone must obtain for themselves. When thus they had reached the manifestation of their own messiahship, the next step was to be baptized, thus declaring to the world that they believed themselves to be endowed with the peculiar properties of their "New Thought."

As there is no mystery in truth, however exploited, we may also say there can be no "New Thought," per se. As thought is the emanation of spirit, it must co-exist with spirit. If spirit is all, it must have been all at the beginning, as it is incapable of increment or decrease. Man may become paralyzed in all his faculties of memory and forget that he ever knew. Then when he awakes he re-perceives the thing he knew before and says: "Aha, behold, I see something new!" When it was old even to him, the reincarnated one. But he did not remember. So he persists in talking of the "New Thought" concerning which "Sol-Om-On" says: "There is nothing new under the sun." It would be amusing if it were not so serious a matter to hear the fadists talk of the "New Thought" and strain their mentality in separating the old from the new. To their new-born perception it seems absolutely necessary the lines of demarkation shall be clearly and sharply defined. To them, it would be a terrible calamity if a few atoms of "Old Thought" should happen to be dropped into a bin holding thousands of tons of "New Thought." It would be worse than for a surgeon to use an unsterilized scalpel in removing an incurable tumor.

We may well remember the eternal thought was, is, and ever will be the same unchangeable truth; the foundation of all law; the beginning of all life, knowledge and wisdom.

Everything cries out to us that we must renounce. Thou must go without, go without! That is the everlasting song which every hour, all our life through, hoarsely sings to us. Die and come to life; for so long as this is not accomplished, thou art but a troubled guest in a world of gloom.—Goethe.

As soon as we have discovered the needs for our joy or sorrow we are no longer its serfs, but its lords.—Lowell.

FIELD WORK OF N. S. A. MISSIONARIES.

Report of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, for the Year Ending October 1, 1902.

Mr. Chairman and Fellow-Delegates:—In making this report it may be necessary to trespass upon your valuable time, as it seems fitting that you should have a good understanding of the condition in which we find our movement in the territory that we have visited.

Our labors for the year have taken us into the following named states: West Virginia, Virginia, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Michigan.

We have been universally well treated by the public and the press with one or two unimportant exceptions.

The pulpit has generally accorded us the courtesy of letting us severely alone. Our cause has not been attacked by men in the pulpit as was the case in a few instances last year.

We have held meetings in Christian churches of the following denominations: Methodist, United Brethren, Universalist, Seventh Day Adventist, Quaker or Friends, and Close Communion Baptists. In each case an encouraging number of the regular congregation were present, and evidently enjoyed the meetings. This is encouraging.

We began this year's missionary work while at Wheeling, West Virginia, where we had organized a fine society of ninety members. We are glad to report that it has increased its membership to 110, and is now a very active society, having held regular meetings throughout the entire year.

We attended the N. S. A. convention at Washington the latter part of October, then visited Richmond, Va., where we held eleven meetings and chartered a fine society composed of fifty members.

On our way to Ohio we stopped at Jamestown, N. Y., and held three meetings for our home society, then went on to Erie, Pa., where we organized a new society with 42 charter members.

We had organized a society in Erie, in 1895. It prospered so well that a movement was started to build a church. Mr. Clark M. Cole, who was president of the society at that time told us that Mrs. Henderson agreed to give the Spiritualists a good lot valued at $2,500, upon which to build a church, and $1,000 with which to start the building fund; that Mr. Hayes subscribed $500 and said he would double it if necessary, and others subscribed different sums of money for the work, while still others were willing to subscribe. Mr. Cole prepared five subscription lists, but failing to get anyone to help him to circulate them, he became discouraged and gave it up, and the society went down, with $7,000 in sight to build a church.

Rev. Leon A. Harvey, a Unitarian minister, went there soon after and began holding meetings in halls. He finally started a movement to build a Unitarian church, and a number of the families of Spiritualists took hold and helped him, contributing freely to the fund, and the Unitarians now own a nice little church that the Spiritualists might have owned as well as not if there had only been a live state organization in the state of Pennsylvania, to which Mr. Cole could have turned for assistance at the opportune time.

We hope such object lessons as these may arouse all Spiritualists to the consciousness of the need of united action, and systematic work.

From Erie we went to Conneaut, O., and chartered a good, healthy society, composed of fifty members, with the Ohio State Spiritualist Association.

We held two well-attended meetings in Toledo, O., with Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran and her society, and then traveled on to Boswell, Ind., where we held four meetings, organized and chartered a small society with the N. S. A.

We then returned to Findlay, Ohio, stopping on the way to hold two meetings at Rochester, Ind. At Findlay we held six meetings and one seance, and organized and chartered a society of thirty-four members.

December 5 and 6, we visited McClure, Ohio. Our friends here rented a hall for our meetings, and the good (?) altruistic Christians visited the hall owners, and with threats of boycotting and other means, caused the owners of the hall to break their agreement. We gave one parlor lecture and held one seance at this place.

The house, which was small, was crowded, and it became necessary to lock the doors, as the crowd was pushing, crowding and making much noise in their struggle to gain an entrance, or in trying to break up the meeting, more likely the latter. After the door was locked, there went up a great howl, and there were sounds on the outside that indicated that they were whipping the house with boards, poles, etc. We held our meeting just the same, and Mrs. Sprague much interested two of our worst opponents, who had worked their way into the house, by giving them tests and messages, and at the close of the meeting one of them assured us that if we came again we should have a hall for our meeting if he had to buy one for our use. This is a case that tries one's "altruism," if he has any. We hope to return to McClure, and with solid facts and spiritual truths positively demonstrated, change the spirit of their would-be Christian inquisitors to reasonable seekers for truth.

We next visited Lima, Ohio, held four public meetings and gave one seance, added fourteen new members to the Lima society and left the people feeling encouraged.

From Lima we went to Chardon, O., held three meetings and one seance, organized and chartered a society with sixteen members.

Our next stopping-place was Middlefield, O., where we held two parlor and two public meetings, organized and chartered a society of 23 members.

On our way to Pittsburg, Pa., we stopped at Alliance, O., and held a very successful meeting in the nice little church belonging to the Spiritualists of that place.

Next day we went on to Pittsburg, where we held a joint meeting with Mr and Mrs. Kates, in the Sixth Street Church, under the auspices of the Spiritualists' Society over which our worthy Brother Stevens, of the N. S. A. board, presides. This meeting was a success in every particular.

Next morning we took the train for Philadelphia, Pa., just missing two railroad wrecks; one of the train preceding us, the other the one following us. We were delayed in consequence, but reached our destination in time to take part in the meeting; though we were a half-hour late. We remained here one month, filling our seventh annual engagement with the Philadelphia Spiritualist Society.

Hon. Thomas M. Locke, our worthy vice-president of the N. S. A., is the president of this society, and his good wife is the treasurer. We held three meetings each week, during the month of January, with this society, and officiated at the wedding of two of our former converts who were members of this association. The wedding was held in the society's large hall, which was well filled with invited guests. It was a very pleasant occasion; and on general principles we would advocate public Spiritualist weddings as very desirable and exceedingly proper.

While serving the Philadelphia society, we went to Royersford, Pa., and held two meetings with the fine society that we organized there last year. This society is doing excellent work and prospering finely.

We also visited Lancaster, Pa., while here, and organized and chartered a society. Mr. George A. Kiehl is its efficient president. This society has held regular weekly meetings ever since it was organized. We were told that there had never been a public meeting held in that city previous to our going there. Here is another of the many evidences of the benefit of missionary work and organization.

We visited the little society that we organized last year at Eagles Mere, Pa. We found it holding regular meetings and developing an inspirational speaker, and, if I mistake not, the fruits of the labor of this little band of workers will soon be realized by the Spiritualists of that vicinity.

We next landed in Pittsburg, Pa., where Mr. R. W. Simpson, editor of that bright little Spiritualist magazine, "The Psychic Era," and also president of the Allegheny County Spiritualists Association, had arranged for a series of meetings, and with him as our guide we visited the Sixth street Pittsburg society. Also Duquesne, Wilmerding, and Homestead, Pa., holding meetings in all of these places with excellent results, both financially and spiritually.

Our next place of labor was Elyria, Ohio, where we held two meetings with the fine little society that we chartered in that city last year. It is doing excellent work.

We then hastened on to fill an engagement with the Michigan State Spiritualists Association, at their mid-winter meeting, held at Battle Creek, Mich. This meeting was one of the best mid-winter meetings ever held by the state Association, according to the statement of the state officials.

Eight hundred people were packed into the hall and several hundred went away for lack of room.

The able workers present were at their best. The lectures were first-class, commanding the closest attention of the large audiences, and the work of the platform test mediums is seldom excelled. The Battle Creek local society deserves great credit for its kindly assistance and good management of local matters. More money was raised to aid the work of the state association than at any previous meeting of the kind. It was a grand success in every way.

From Battle Creek, we went to Lawton, Mich., where we held two meetings and organized a society composed of leading citizens of the place.

We next visited Owosso, Mich. There was once a flourishing society in this place, but it had given up its hall and ceased its work sometime before we arrived there. We held three meetings, raised $33 for the local work; a hall was procured and work has been carried on with excellent success ever since.

We visited Fort Wayne, Ind., remaining only over night, called the officers together, learned that the society had met with reverses, though they were still holding meetings regularly each week. They were quite discouraged but were determined to hold meetings if they had to give up their hall and go to private houses. They paid dues for this year, and we hope for a revival of the work in Fort Wayne.

Our next stop was at Rochester, Ind., with the society that we resurrected one year ago last November. It has done excellent work, having kept a regular speaker most of the time ever since. This society and the cause at large lost a loyal and true friend last April, when Major Bitters passed away. He was the father of Spiritualism in Rochester, and is still an inspiration to the workers that make up this band of faithful souls.

Harry J. Moore, a rising young speaker in our ranks, has done excellent work as a settled speaker for this society, and is engaged for the coming winter. Mr. Moore had prepared the way by securing the candidates, and we publicly received twenty-six people into full membership in this society. All were young people except two. Our missionary work of last year saved this society to do the grand work it is now doing.

We next visited the little society that we organized at Argos, Ind., last year. It is doing a much needed work. Its members are few, but they are enlightening the people, which is giving our cause a better understanding in the community.

We visited Rensselaer, Lowell and Sedalia, Ind., and organized a society in each of these small towns. They are composed of true Spiritualists, and if looked after by missionaries they must grow.

We visited our societies at Elwood, Anderson, Sheridan, Mechanicsburg, and Connersville, Ind. All of these societies we organized last year, and they have held regular services throughout the season.

We held anniversary services in the fine Spiritualist Temple at Anderson, Ind., March 23. We were assisted by local talent. An account of this meeting was published in the Spiritualist papers at the time.

We visited Versailles, Tell City, Stephenson and Chrisney, Ind., organized and chartered societies in these four places, all of which are active and are a credit to our cause, which, of course, encourages us to push on in the work, helping to make our organization strong and the Cause to prosper.

Besides paying the expenses of the meetings and also of organizing the society at Chrisney, Ind., Mr. and Mrs. Chrisney gave us a donation of $30 to aid the missionary work, which was gratefully received and acknowledged by ourselves and Secretary Longley. This donation came to us like a rain-shower in time of drouth. We were working so hard, holding meetings continually, and in spite of all were running behind in expenses. We feel very thankful for this kind and generous act of our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Chrisney.

At Tell City, Ind., we held four meetings in a Beer Garden Opera House. These were the first public Spiritualist meetings ever held in the town. We found the people cordial, earnest and anxious to learn the truth.

We next visited Evansville, Ind., where we held four meetings in the cozy little church owned by the Spiritualists. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley assisted us in the meetings, which added materially to their success. This is a good society and is loyal to the N. S. A.

We next visited Terre Haute, Ind., held two parlor meetings and organized a new society on the ruins of a once successful one which had died for want of such assistance as thorough organization can give. We left this society in good hands, and visited Frankfort, Americus, Economy and Williamsburg, Ind., holding meetings with these four societies that we organized last year.

We visited Buckwalter, and Springfield, Ohio, where we organized and chartered two very good societies; called at Coshocton and held two meetings; then visited New Philadelphia, O., held three public meetings and one seance, reviving the interest in the work.

This society is one that we organized four years ago. It did active work for a time and finally lapsed into inactivity. One year ago the members leased a room that will seat about fifty people, fitted it up nicely, and have been holding meetings for phenomena and for mediumistic development. They paid their back dues to the N. S. A. and were reinstated. I trust missionaries may be sent to them from time to time to encourage and help them. With proper work, this may become a fine, self-sustaining society, one that will do a grand and much needed work in this orthodox Christian town.

We called at Minerva, Ohio, held two meetings in the opera house, found the ashes of a dead society but could not resurrect it in two evenings, so moved on to Lyons, Pa., where we held two meetings in the nice little church owned by the Spiritualists of that part of the country. These were the first meetings held in this vicinity for some time. There are a goodly number of Spiritualists in the country round about. It is in a farming community, and of course, the people are scattered. This society was once strong. Their church is paid for. We encouraged them the best we could, and hope they may again open their church and hold meetings. Some of their leaders have passed away.

Circuits should be formed and speakers placed upon them to visit such societies. This method of work would build up this society and as in former days their little church would be crowded to overflowing.

We visited Titusville and Spartansburg, Pa., societies, both of which own the temples in which they hold their meetings. Our meetings were well attended here and we arranged to return.

Home, Sweet Home.

Our vacation month had now arrived and we spent the month of June at home. It did seem good to be at home once more after a hard year's work, mostly among strangers. We enjoyed it very much indeed.

During our vacation we attended the three days' picnic at Cassadaga and the two days' meeting at North Collins, N. Y. At both of these places our voices were heard in the interest of the N. S. A. organization, and the missionary work. The society at North Collins voted to take out a charter with the New York State Spiritualist Association.

June passed away all too quickly, and July found us again on the wing. During the month we visited Spartansburg and Titusville societies, resurrected and reinstated the Kaneville, Pa., society, organized and chartered a small one at Tideoute, Pa., officiated at the funeral of Mrs. Albert Winans, one of the pioneer mediums, and a member of the Lyons, Pa., Spiritualist Society, then visited the society that we organized at Findlay, Ohio, last winter, and held a Sunday grove-meeting at Reeves' Park, Ohio; held one meeting with our society at Payne, Ohio, and organized a society at Van Wert, Ohio.

Camp-meetings.

During the month of August we served the following camp-meeting associations: Vicksburg, Haslett Park, Grand Ledge, Mich., and Woolley Park Camp at Ashley, Ohio, finishing our work at the latter place the first Sunday in September. Our efforts were well appreciated at all of these camps. The interests of our organization and the value of missionary work were presented and explained to the many Spiritualists in attendance. The missionary work is a great help to the camp-meetings, and the camp-meetings are a great help to the missionary movement. This is as it should be. All Spiritualists should co-operate in the good work.

While at Haslett Park camp-meeting we attended the Michigan State Spiritualists Convention. It was held at Lansing, Mich. At this meeting the convention instructed a committee to buy a certain property in that city to be used for a home for mediums. The property has been purchased and $1,750 has been paid, and the Spiritualists of the state are in possession of the home. It is a very good property and will make a good home for the needy ones. This property cost the Spiritualists $4,750, and it is a great bargain.

Our camp work coming to a close, we made our way to Salem, Ohio, found the society there alive and holding Sunday meetings. We held one meeting in their neat little hall, then moved on to Williamsport, Pa., where we held four meetings and chartered this society with the N. S. A. Mrs. Lydia R. Chase, one of the faithful and true Spiritualists of this society, has given them a lot upon which to build a church, and we started the ball rolling by raising three hundred dollars toward the building fund, and the Spiritualists of Williamsport are to have a church in which to hold their meetings. We think a National mass-meeting would do a great deal of good in this place.

We visited Laporte, Pa., held three meetings in the court house, then moved on to Waverly, N. Y., animated the members of this once active, but of later years very quiet, society, and they decided to once more open their meetings. They have lost many members by death, or transition, and have not kept their ranks good with new recruits.

An active campaign should be inaugurated throughout the entire state of New York, at once, as work is needed in many other towns as well as in Waverly.

Mr. James Parks, who was a member of the Waverly society, recently passed to the higher life, leaving by will $5,000 to the Waverly society, and now the question arises as to the legality of that organization. It is chartered with the N. S. A., though it does not hold articles of incorporation from the state of New York. Every local society should either charter with their State Spiritualist Association if they have one, or join the N. S. A., and incorporate under the laws of the state in which they are domiciled. Then they will be perfectly safe, and will hold their endowments.

We visited the society at Auburn, N. Y., found it inactive, but after holding some meetings the earnest souls who have always wanted to see the cause prosper, took heart, and with the eight new members that we secured, the society has again gone to work.

October 1 closes one of the most active years of labor in our experience.

During the year we held three hundred and five meetings, which is an average of over twenty-five meetings per month, and nearly six meetings per week, for the entire year, including the month of our vacation.

Besides this, we took part in many conferences and meetings at conventions, camp-meetings, all of which are not included in the number.

This year we organized and chartered twenty-three new societies and reorganized and reinstated four more, making in all twenty-seven societies added to our organization. The average membership of these societies is twenty-six each, and the total membership is 700. We visited thirty of the old societies, seventeen of which were among those that we organized last year. This took considerable of our time, though it did a great deal of good.

Every society should be visited by missionaries at least once each year.

Nearly all the societies we have organized during the last two years are doing good work, and many are doing it where little or nothing was being done before.

State Associations.

We believe no state association should be organized until a sufficient number of local societies have been formed to sustain it, unless a state board may be formed with sufficient energy and push, as well as funds to send organizers into the field who will soon form local societies sufficient to support and carry on the work.

We have organized thirty-nine societies in the state of Indiana in the last two years of our missionary work, and we think with this number there should be a state association formed; that is, providing it is desired by these local societies, and if those who are worthy and well qualified to manage it will take hold of the matter and make it a success.

Correspondence and Leaflets.

During the year we have sent out over 1,600 letters and have written numerous articles for the press. We have distributed hundreds of leaflets and lectures which were furnished by the N. S. A. for free distribution. These leaflets are excellent missionaries. Their distribution should be continued.

Cost of the Work.

Total expenditures for the year ending October 1, 1902..... $1,787.41
Total receipts 1,411.53

Balance ..... $ 375.88

This leaves a total cost to the N. S. A. of $375.88, or a trifle over $1.23, over and above receipts, for each meeting held.

The per capita dues and collections from the 700 members of these 27 societies will more than pay the deficit in two years' time, and the National and State Associations will have the societies left.

The purpose of this explanation is to show that missionary work, from a financial point of view, is profitable to both National and State Organizations. When viewed from a spiritual standpoint, its value cannot be estimated, as the cause of truth, of justice, of human freedom, and the knowledge of a continued life beyond the grave are investments the true value of which are measureless.

We have been missionaries for the N. S. A. the entire nine years of its existence. The first seven years without salary. During this time we have organized and chartered more than one hundred societies. Each year's experience tends to confirm the belief that missionary work is of the most vital importance to the success of our movement.

Recommendations.

Reading Course.—What is very much needed by our societies at the present time, especially those we have organized, is a classified course of reading which should include the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism.

The societies that have followed our advice by forming reading circles for the study of Spiritualism, have invariably succeeded. Therefore, we would respectfully suggest that this convention take into consideration the utility of appointing a committee to select and arrange a course of reading and study that may be recommended and furnished to local societies by the N. S. A.

If this movement is properly managed we believe it will be the means of adding many societies to our organization, as well as to build up our weak ones, and make them strong.

Literature for the lyceum should be included in that which is recommended. People often enquire of us to learn where to get suitable literature for the lyceum, and we advise them the best we can, but there is great need of more literature adapted to the children. Books to read outside the lyceum, suited to their age, would help and should be systematically arranged for them. The good of our cause demands that we do all in our power to interest the children.

The question of song books might be taken into consideration by this committee. Uniformity is needed in the kind of music used.

Publications.

We believe that our mediums, speakers, missionaries and all Spiritualists should make continued effort to place our splendid Spiritualist publications before the people, securing subscribers for them wherever possible. They are our greatest missionaries.

Every Spiritualist should subscribe for and read a Spiritualist paper. A large majority of them seldom see one. It is plain to be seen that, where the Spiritualist papers are not taken, Spiritualism does not flourish; where Spiritualist papers are most plentiful, Spiritualism thrives best, for the people are kept posted on all the subjects of the day that pertain to our cause.

Ministers.

In our opinion, we need more ministers. We have many splendid speakers and mediums, and we are justly proud of them all. We need many more. We need more of those who can minister to the many needs of the people who compose our societies: Ministers to visit the sick, the poor and needy, those in distress and trouble. Ministers to advise, to instruct and harmonize individual members of our societies. Leaders who can work with tact, skill and energy for the cause of harmony and unity in the societies. This kind of men and women are wanted in our cause. There is room enough for hundreds, yes thousands of them. Such workers can make a place for themselves and build up societies wherever they go, that will be self-sustaining.

We need leaders such as I have mentioned, and my earnest prayer today is that the Morris Pratt Institute may be successful in furnishing to our cause first-class ministers and trained leaders, as well as good speakers and mediums, who may be permanently located.

Most of our societies that go down, do so for lack of a competent leader, and when we have them our cause will grow and flourish as it truly should.

Conclusion.

In conclusion we wish to say we are very grateful to all who have assisted us in the work. We have been greatly favored by our Spiritualist friends. This has made our arduous duties lighter and has given us strength to continue the work.

The Banner of Light, The Progressive Thinker, The Sunflower, Light of Truth, Philosophical Journal, Psychic Era and Sermon have published every article we have written for them, which has been a great help to our work, all of which we fully appreciate and are thankful for. Respectfully submitted,

A WORD TO THE WISE.

In Regard to Medical Monopoly and Vicious Medical Laws.

There are three classes of people: Wise people, foolish people and knavish people.

I beg to say a word to the first class. If I should address the second class they would not heed my words, and should I address myself to the third, they would become offended. But I am confident that the first class will not only hear, but seriously consider the subject I desire to present, which is the subject of medical freedom.

In one of his discourses to the people who were wont to listen to his words of wisdom, Jesus said, "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man who sowed good seed in his field, but while he slept his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat."

Our fathers sowed the good seed of freedom, in the soil of Columbia, but since they fell asleep, we, their sons, have not kept ourselves as wide awake as we should, and the enemies of freedom have been busily engaged in sowing the tares of tyranny, among our wheat. Among the foes of freedom, none have been more active and persevering than the enemies of medical freedom.

A good old lady was so full of charity that her son said to her, "Mother, I believe that should the Devil be criticised in your presence, you would have a good word to say for him."

"Well, my son, if we only had his perseverance."

The foes of medical liberty have the perseverance of the Devil. When this country became an independent republic, medicine was as free as religion and it continued so for more than three-quarters of a century. During that period more progress was made in the healing art than in twenty centuries before. During the dark ages but one church and one medical school existed, and that condition was not favorable to progress. Sects in religion and in medicine are essential to progress. The old Roman Catholic church and the old allopathic school of medicine, know this, hence one is hostile to religious and the other to medical freedom. The old church called the Methodists and other religious reformers, heretics, and the old-schoolers of medicine, called the Botanics, the Homeopathists, and the Eclectics, quacks. But these reform physicians, appealed to the Court of Public Opinion, resting their claims on their merits. The people divided, and the old and the new schools flourished side by side, each being equally protected by the Tree of Liberty.

In a paper read before the Chicago Homeopathic Society, November 4, 1899, by Dr. A. C. Cowperthwaite, president of and professor in the leading college of his school in the city, and vice-president of the American Medical Union, he said:

"At the close of our Civil War when rotten politics were dominating public affairs, the medical politicians took advantage of the situation. * * * Medical bills were presented to several state legislatures, including Illinois, couched in language calculated to deceive the public, but which meant, and only meant, the establishment of state medicine, and the absolute crushing out of homeopathy and all other so-called irregular systems of practice. The members of the irregular schools, however, were on the alert, and surprised the medical politicians by the promptness and vigor they displayed in battling against the passage of those pernicious laws, and by the astonishing following and support they had from the public. Later, after several attempts and failures to pass similar laws, the medical politicians realized that homeopathy was too strong to battle against. They yielded to the inevitable and sacrificing all show of truth, asked the aid of those they had denominated as quacks, the homeopaths and eclectics. * * * The recognition was an alluring bait, and some of our leaders swallowed it and were caught on the hook, which has ever since held them, and forced them to assist in the effort to crush out all other and weaker systems of medicine."

The magnetic healers are among the weaker sects, and the determined purpose of the medical monopolists to crush them out is shown clearly by the medical laws which have been lobbied through the legislatures of Illinois and other states, within recent years. In Illinois a new medical law was passed in 1899, which makes it a crime to heal the sick by the laying on of hands. When the bill was before the sub-committee of the Judiciary committee of the Senate I urged that it be amended so as to read, "The practice of medicine, under the provisions of this act shall be defined to mean the administration of drugs." "That is what is does mean," said Secretary Egan of the State Board of Health.

No," I replied, "under that clause as it now reads, magnetic healers would be denied the right to heal by their method."

"Well, if I thought it would have that effect I would not vote for it," said a member of the committee. "Nor would I," said another member.

"I assure you that it would not interfere with them," said Dr. Egan.

My amendment was not adopted. The bill became a law. Then what happened? Lend me your ears and I will tell you. Immediately after the law went into force, this same Dr. Egan, who assured the committee that magnetic healers could not be prosecuted under his law, notified the magnetic healers of Illinois that under the provisions of this new law they were practicing medicine, and that if they did not quit they would be prosecuted. A magnetic healer, Dr. York, disregarded this warning and was prosecuted. The lower courts decided in his favor, but Dr. Egan appealed to the State Supreme Court and won. That decision binds all the courts in the state, compelling them to convict of the crime of practicing medicine without a license, any man or woman who shall be found guilty of laying his or her hand on a sick person for the purpose of healing that person of any disease, for while the law allows Osteopaths to be examined and licensed, it makes no provisions for the Magnetic healers or Hydropaths.

If the people are knaves, they will sustain this knavish law; if they are fools, they will be indifferent to it; but if they are wise, they will demand its repeal, and demand it in a way that will prove effective.

The American Medical Union was organized in Chicago soon after the passage of that infamous bill, or law, by influential physicians of the four leading schools. Allopathic, Homeopathic, Eclectic and physio-medical, who believe in medical freedom. One of its chief objects is "To secure the repeal of all medical statutes, based on the principles of despotic paternalism."

The constitution provides that all persons of good character, either physicians or not, may become members, and a great many men and women besides doctors, have joined it.

It is now an organization of larger membership and more potent influence than any other ever formed to oppose medical monopoly, and it is constantly growing in members and influence. It is the proper agent of the profession and people by which to secure the repeal of the restrictive medical laws. Bills for that purpose will be introduced into the legislature of Illinois and several other states next winter and pressed to a passage by representatives of the A. M. U. We ask that all who are in sympathy with our purpose and wish us success, will join the Union, at once, and thus increase its membership and influence, and by their membership fees, help meet the expense.

"The entrance fee to all is $1."

Medical societies usually put the fee at $5, but we put it low to secure a large membership.

Reader, don't you feel impressed that it is a privilege as well as a duty to join this highly honorable and truly noble union. By direction of the third annual meeting held in Chicago, Jan. 14, this year, I wrote and published in a neat booklet, a history of the union, its origin, principles, purposes and progress. The price is 10 cents, but if you will send me 4 cents in postage stamps I will mail it to you. If you join the A. M. U you will get it free, and I shall expect you to join if you are wise, wide-awake and earnest.

Awaiting your favorable response, I am your for "Fraternity, Freedom and Progress," the motto of the A. M. U.

MAN'S MIGHTY POWER OVER HIS FELLOW-MAN

THE SECRET REVEALED AT LAST.

Astounding Discoveries Which Prove That People Can Actually Be Influenced and Controlled for Years Without Dreaming They Are Under the Mystic Spell of Another.

How It Is Done—A Powerful Secret Method of Mind Control, by the Side of Which Hypnotism and Kindred Influences Sink Into Insignificance.

At last the true secret of mental power and mind control has been revealed. A noted college in the city of New York has just issued a wonderful book by eminent scientists, which lays bare the mysteries of personal influence. Five thousand copies of this remarkable work are to be distributed free of charge for the purpose of acquainting the public with this mighty mind power.

This wonderful new force gives a control and an influence over persons that would astonish and mystify the most powerful hypnotist who ever lived. It enables you to know the secret natures and lives of everyone you meet; you can tell the character, abilities and entire nature of your correspondents, though thousands of miles away. You can exert a strange silent influence over others in your presence or at a distance entirely without their knowledge. You can quickly develop your will power, memory and other mental faculties to a marvelous degree. You can by a new secret process, quickly cure bad chronic diseases and build up your own health and strength in an incredibly short space of time. It explains the most marvelous system of physical and mental development known to man. It truly reveals the secret power of charming, the art of fascination. You can win and hold friends without number. You can master the secrets and know the power of the wise men of old. You can acquire that inward confidence, that magnetic power that will enable you to overcome all obstacles to success, and rise to a position of prominence in your community. The book is enthusiastically endorsed by ministers of the gospel, business and professional men. It is a work which should be in every home. This wonderful new work is entitled "The Secret of Power." It fully explains the uses and possibilities of the marvelous "Ki-Magi" system of personal influence. It lays bare the mysteries of magnetic control. It gives you a veritable key to the souls of men. It is richly illustrated by the finest half-tone engravings. It is by far the most remarkable, interesting and thrilling work of the kind ever written. For a limited time it will be sent to your address absolutely free. "In your 'Ki-Magi' System I have found what I for years searched for in vain," writes Mr. Joseph Steiner, 1100 Ninth street N. W., Washington, D. C. "It has changed the whole trend of my thought and given my life a new meaning. I feel younger and stronger every day. I find in it the key to business success." W. Rockwell Kent, of Binghamton, N. Y., writes: "Your Ki-Magi System is the most powerful agency on earth for the betterment of man. All who master it will become a power in the world and be successful and happy."

S. I. Yetter, of Middletown, Pa., says: "The 'Ki-Magi' System of personal influence has brought me the success in business for which I have been looking. It is the magnet which controls. There is no guesswork about it—it is a scientific fact. It has taught me to know and control myself as well as others."

Felix Moosbrugger, of 276 Halsey St., Newark, N. J., writes: "Many are the swindling deals I have avoided in my father's business through my knowledge of your system. The change which has taken place in my personal character is simply marvelous. I have developed a confidence and power in myself that I never dreamed I could acquire."

Col. C. E. Tuller, of 1201 Euclid ave., Cleveland, O., says: "My success in curing afflicted people is absolutely wonderful. A boy given up for sure death by five physicians I restored to perfect health inside of five minutes. A woman that could not touch her foot to the ground on account of rheumatism was cured by one application of the method explained by your system."

If you wish a free copy of the book which started Mr. Moosbrugger, Col. Tuller and others on the road to success, write to-day to the Columbia Scientific Academy, office 159H, 1931 Broadway, New York, and the book will be sent you by return mail, postage prepaid.

A large volume. Price, cloth, $1.25.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

MINISTERING ANGELS

They Visit the Poor Who Are Sick, Free of Charge.

A Divine Lesson for Spiritualists to Consider.

Visiting Nurses Aid Poor and Needy Ones—Go to Bedsides When All Others Have Forsaken Them—They Are Veritable Angels Administering to the Distressed and Cheering the Discomfited—Districts Where Medicine Is at Times Sorely Needed.

There is one thing I long for to-day. The longing is not a jack-in-the-box, hysterical kind of an emotion. On the contrary, it has grown slowly and reasonably. It is like a big snowball the children roll about in winter. Every day it grows bigger. Some days it grows more than it does others, I know, of course, my longing is as the snowball. It can never be a lasting, enduring globe. That being the case, what is the harm in telling? I'd like to be Andrew Carnegie long enough to sign a check.

Every Tuesday morning there is a meeting of the Visiting Nurses' Association at their headquarters in the Unity Building. I went up there last Tuesday in search of a story. The book was open wide. The story is endless; the plot as varied and intricate as Sherlock Holmes. Zola's realism seems not exaggerated when one begins to read. One feels that somewhere in the book there are a couple of pages stuck together where wise men and rich men might find an answer to the riddle socialism. There may almost be a page blood-red with "anarchy" for its title word.

Among Visiting Nurses.

The visiting nurses sponge off the pages to snow whiteness and write their own chapters each day. No matter what has been or is written; no matter how uncouth and grewsome and vulgar the printed matter, the visiting nurses leave in its place a cleanly written, wholesome tale. The gray pages of socialism and the scarlet pages of anarchy will be as white and fairly written as any when the nurses have turned them over and washed them clean.

They stock up their little leather hand bags every Tuesday morning. Rolls of bandages, antiseptic cotton, lotions, disinfectants, gauze, simple medicines, all go into the case. The contents are the keynote to the labor they do.

The office is a businesslike place. Mrs. Hugh J. McBirney was there, earnest and womanly. She was the center of a group of uniformed nurses when I entered.

After a little time she found leisure to tell me what they wanted to do, what they are doing. Her dark eyes glowed with enthusiasm. There was a lot of determination in her manner.

"What people don't seem to understand," she said, "is that religion or nationality or station in life have nothing to do with our work.

"The Visiting Nurses' Association was organized to care for suffering human beings. The fact that they are suffering is in itself an imperative demand for our services."

Talks About the Good.

The way she said "we," the tender little inflection upon "our" was beautiful. Mrs. McBirney did not say "our nurses," neither did she say "they" once while she talked to me. It was always "we" and "our work." I looked from her well-gowned figure to the fourteen bright faces of the uniformed nurses and understood the significance of the situation.

The directors of the association are women. They are women of means and position, but they are women of sympathies as well. In a measure the work of the nurses is theirs. They know how it is done and what results are attained. Besides they are level-headed, logical women or the organization would not have endured and accomplished the good it has accomplished.

Miss Fullmer is the superintendent of nurses. She alone wears a white gown and a white cap. Her tale is different from the one told by Mrs. McBirney. She speaks as a nurse, Mrs. McBirney as president of the association.

"We are skilled laborers," she says. "We are paid skilled laborer's wages. The directors do not mean that any inferior workwomen shall be employed. This means that the poor people under our care receive exactly the same consideration that wealthy people do in their homes. We are paid to use our skill; wherever it is needed and as long as it is needed. I love this kind of nursing. You may think it strange that women who might easily make $25 a week at private work are willing to do this for less. There is not a visiting nurse who is not a training school graduate as well as an experienced one beside. I will tell you why it is. Private nursing is give and take. We are paid for our services. While we are in the heart of a family they care for us, but after a little time when health has come back they forget. The poor people are not that way—they love us. Even skilled labor likes to be loved, you know. It is only natural this should be so. The people who are able to pay for skilled labor have other and wider interests. We mean less to them than we do to the poor."

Secret of the Work.

The whole secret of the association's remarkably successful career was out. The lady directors love the nurses and humanity. The nurses love humanity and their work.

To call the work charity is not right. Charities are too often fads. This is an earnest and practical endeavor to better the condition of a great city with all the labor paid for in cash.

No question of money is raised when calls are sent in, but, if the case is able to pay, charges of from 5 to 25 cents for each visit are made. Many people who could not afford the entire services of a nurse are thus enabled to pay for skilled care and not feel that they are in the least objects of charity.

I found it all out the day I was a visiting nurse.

Each nurse has some particular place where calls for her services are sent in. Usually it is a drug store. Miss MacConachy, the nurse who showed me the factory girl from "Little Hell," gets hers at the Polyclinic hospital. Miss Palmer, who works over on the west side, goes twice a day to a little drug store on the corner of Van Buren street and Ogden avenue.

At 9 in the morning and at 1 in the afternoon she may be found there, getting things out of her well-stocked supply closet and making notes of the new calls.

It was there the Chronicle photographer and I found her. We wanted to tell the story of her afternoon's labor in the pictures, so he photographed her as she stood at the telephone, notebook in hand, taking down the one new call, a simple request that she go to a certain number on a certain street.

At Her Daily Labors.

When she started out we went along. I don't know what street the first call was in. We went on the street car, and it was only a little distance from Ashland boulevard. There were comfortable, well-built houses on every hand. All the people we met seemed happy and well-to-do.

"It is a dreadful case," said Miss Palmer. "They live in a barn."

Astonishment kept me silent a moment.

"Is it far?" I asked at last.

"Only a few blocks."

Less than five blocks from a fine boulevard in the heart of a respectable locality, how could it be possible that a family lived in a barn?

We turned in at a side entrance, past a decent house. In the rear was the barn. The front door opens into the room where they keep the carriage. A white hen was strutting about pecking at a few grains of corn on the floor. The carriage was new and shining. On the left is another door leading into the hallways. Stairs from this lead to the living-rooms above. Another door opening off the hall shows the way into the chamber occupied by the horse. His room is about the best one in the house. Yet even he does not look healthy. His bones are much in evidence and there is a hungry look in his eyes that doesn't augur well for the condition of the family upstairs.

In a Squalid Room.

The smell about the premises is indescribable. The stairway is so dark we had to light matches to find our way up. Miss Palmer and I went alone. Discretion bade me ask the photographer to linger outside until I had cleared the track of obstacles.

The first room was a jumble. The foul smell was over everything. The only sign of life was a man and a boy of 14 standing near another door and a gas stove burning on the other side of the room. There was no cleanliness, no order anywhere. Piles of dirty bedclothes, unwashed garments, partially cleaned cooking utensils, boxes, carpenters' tools and two or three pathetic little half-worn-out shoes made a chaos of poverty and dirt.

"Good afternoon," said the nurse cheerily. "I've brought a lady with me this afternoon. How are the children?"

Then we went in. The room is the one over the shiny black carriage. Down in his chamber the horse nickered a little. With his camera the photographer waited to take the picture. There are two beds so close together one cannot walk between them comfortably. At the foot of one is a crucifix. The smell is in this room as much as in the chamber of the hungry horse.

Three sick children lay on the two beds. For weeks they have lain there. Now two are better, but one is still in danger. Their skeleton limbs and birdclaw hands, hollow eyes and yellow skins tell plainer than words what typhoid fever can do when it clutches hard.

The oldest girl and the boy laughed when we came in. The girl was nibbling at a bit of toast.

"I am going to have some apple sauce after a while," she announced.

"Don't eat the crusts," said the nurse as she went about her work.

"I've already eaten them; yesterday."

The nurse smiled.

"It may not hurt her; it might kill another child."

Feeding a Sick Child.

She bathed and dressed each child. Each one she rubbed with alcohol. Then she made the beds and straightened up things a little. Miss Palmer is a practical and tireless nurse, but she is a woman with a talent for home-making as well. The moment she enters a home she becomes part of it. While she was washing the youngest child I asked the father if we might take her picture.

He could not understand why we wanted it. "Fine picture that'll make," he said. After some coaxing he consented. While she was finishing her work I went downstairs and talked to the father. He is a cabman. His stand is in La Salle street near the city hall. People like to ride in new and shiny carriages. As it stood there in its black finery it made me think of the smile on the face of a corpse.

"The landlady won't do nothing for the place," he said.

"Does a woman own this hole?" I asked.

"Sure; charges $10 a month rent. It's a hole for fair. There is no sewerage connection. Whenever I wash off the carriage the water runs under the floor and stands. I've been at her to fix it until I'm worn out. My wife works during the day and takes care of the children at night."

He laughed sarcastically. "We had to have a barn for the horse. The woman who owns this keeps a carriage, too."

Anarchy's blood red page flashed before my eyes. Before I had time to read the nurse came down the stairs.

"I've finished. They're all right but Teresa. Her temperature hasn't gone down a bit. I'm worried about her."

I went upstairs and bade the little ones good-by. The beds were made, each child lay refreshed and comfortable in clean little gowns the nurse had brought. Teresa moaned as she tossed her curly black head about on the pillow. The two older children shook hands, but her brown eyes were half closed in the stupor of fever.

Still the Awful Smell.

The blood red page was no longer visible, but the horse nickered again hungrily and the indescribable smell went with me into the open air.

The new call came next.

"I haven't the least idea what it is," said Miss Palmer.

West side cars are sometimes slow. We were a long time reaching the place.

Once more the photographer waited below. On the third floor we found the case. Miss Palmer knew the signs.

"Where is the baby?"

This is a home where cleanliness and some comforts make life bearable. The conditions are not the best in the world, but the people are willing to learn. Sure it is the stork never carried his tender little gift into a happier home.

In a Happy Home.

"I'm very happy with my girl," whispered the wan-faced young mother as she looked at the insensate atom of humanity snuggled away in the depth of a pillow.

Upon the visiting nurse depends the success of baby's first bath. Piece by piece Miss Palmer took off the velvety morsel's wee garments. While she worked she talked as fond young mothers do.

"Oh, she's a nice girl. Her mamma's proud of her. Don't like to be washed, does she? Nice place they've brought her to, where she has to be rubbed over with an old wet cloth."

The downy baby squirmed and wriggled as babies will. Now and then it entered a squeaky little protest, but still Miss Palmer oiled and powdered and one by one put on the clean little garments.

"I love the little things," she said. "Isn't it curious that we should?"

For a moment it did seem curious. But when one reflects that, after all, universal motherhood is genuine motherhood, it is not half so strange.

The next case was a maternity case too. Again I found a newer meaning in the book. This mother has six children. The oldest is a girl of 10. In the parlor there is a piano. Everything about the house is spotlessly clean. On the wall I saw a high school diploma framed. The name of the graduate was Scotch. The little mother herself speaks with a broad Scotch accent. Eighteen hundred and ninety was the date on the diploma. We all know what graduation means to a girl—a pretty white dress, flowers, longings, uncertainties. Now the flowers are memories, the white dress has been made over for the oldest girl, the uncertainties are certainties. Only the diploma is unchanged.

Here, too, the stork set his burden down in a nest soft as love can make it.

"I often think it's queer," said the little Scotch woman, "how much we love them. One would think where there are so many and not overmuch money a mother wouldn't be so eager."

Fixing Up the Baby.

Once more Miss Palmer washed and dressed a baby. The photographer came around to the back door. In the kitchen, which for the nonce was the baby's bathroom, we took the picture. Perhaps in justice to the photographer it should be said that his behavior was admirable. He was not in the usual man's hurry to get out of the vicinity of an infant. He even waited round until it was safe for him to open the outside door so the draught wouldn't strike the baby.

There was one more case to visit. The time was 6 o'clock. Five is supposed to be the end of a visiting nurse's day.

It was the scourge of the city, typhoid, again. In this family there are six children ill in two rooms. Since the first of August one after another they have been taken. The first, a girl of 19, died. One or two are very ill now, the others are in various stages of convalescence. All are unable to sit up a moment. The illness is cruel enough, but it seems a positive murder to see the two well children shut up in the room with six typhoids. The youngest, a blue-eyed, plump little youngster of 4, romps about among them breathing infection every moment. The mother and father have no one to whom they can send her. Their store of money has given out. They themselves are worn out utterly with the watching.

Last April the family came here from South Carolina. It is an American family, poor but honest, with good-looking, intelligent children. On the farm the father's health had broken. They thought it best to move to a city. At first they were very comfortable, indeed. All the children old enough to work secured positions and things ran along smoothly until the illness came.

Now, but for the visiting nurse, the six sick children would be neglected. It was almost 7 o'clock when she went to work to bathe six sick people. That after a day of labor.

"I came here last so I could have lots of time," she said.

I came away then. There was nothing for me to do. I felt useless and selfish as I went down the stairs.

Many Dirty Spots.

Next morning I met Miss Macpheeters at the Chicago Commons. One afternoon wasn't enough. I wanted to read more of the book. I didn't care what Chicago thinks of itself. It is the dirtiest city, in some places, I ever saw. We passed places where there was a solid foot of mud on paved streets. We went into alleys piled up with the accumulated filth of months.

Miss Macpheeters told me a story about a man who swore as we went to the first case.

"He was drunk. In one hand he carried a beer can. "Blankety blank, blank!" he said when he met me on the street. "My baby is sick."

"Where do you live?" said I.

"Blankety blank," said he, with a falling inflection.

"How sick is the baby?"

"Blank!"

"Do you want me to go?"

"Blank, blank!"

"What is the number?"

"Blankety, blank, don't you know?"

"No."

"Blankety, blank, blank, blank. Then I'll show you."

He staggered along ahead. I followed. He took me up a stairway into an awful place. The poor baby was almost dead. The admonition was unnecessary. I've thought of it often since.

Other Cases to Treat.

Miss Macpheeters' first case was a maternity case. It was the Jewish New Year. The mother was another happy motner. She lay covered up in a feather bed. The baby was in a feather bed too.

"It is awful," said Miss Macpheeters, "but you know, we can't tear down traditions."

As Miss Palmer had done, she washed and dressed the baby and attended to the mother. I talked to the daughter of 14, who was making bread and cakes in the kitchen. There was not a spot of dirt anywhere that I could see. The girl of 14 was a dear little child-woman.

"I go to school yet," she said. "Only now that I'm needed at home I am staying out."

The father came back from the synagogue. He is a man of intelligence. While the daughter brought him a cup of coffee we talked on a variety of subjects. His first thought when he came in was for his wife. "How is she?" he asked as he went to the bedroom door and looked in.

Here again the association made possible skilled care for people who could not afford the entire services of a nurse. Before we came away the little girl placed cakes and wine before us. It was a home in every sense. The round-headed baby is a lucky baby.

Then we went into dirt and ghastly, horrible disease. We stood face to face with death. The mother was washing. Steam from the tub filled the room. A fire in the cook stove, the one window tightly closed, made the air unbearable. By the side of a table with a red cover sat the sick girl. Her black hair was combed in a pompadour. In spite of poverty and illness the eternal feminine held its own.

One of the girl's feet rested on a stool. It was bandaged so it looked more like a stump of a foot than anything else. Miss Macpheeters face was set as she disinfected a basin and filled it with water.

"Has it hurt you much since yesterday?" she asked.

"Not much since you dressed it," said the girl gratefully and began taking off the black stocking which covered the bandages. Deftly Miss Macpheeters unwound the bandages and exposed a hideous ulcer in the girl's ankle.

Cowardice came over me. I would have run away only that I was ashamed. It is right the public should know all the things they do, these visiting nurses, so I stayed and saw her bathe with minute care, lay on soft cotton and filmy gauze and bandage up the rotted limb with dexterous fingers.

Skilled labor it is to be sure. Miss Macpheeters is paid so much a week for what she does. That is the nurses' point of view. I'm thinking, though, that when the girl is free and looks down on the unclean shell which imprisons her now she'll not forget the tender fingers and gentle voice of Miss Macpheeters.

The mother took her hands out of the washing suds to shake hands as we came away.

"The girl is an innocent victim of heredity," said Miss Macpheeters.

"It is the hardest work I have ever done. In all my experience nothing has been so bad."

Miss Macpheeters is a visiting nurse. She is a skilled laborer. Before she came the girl had no rest night or day from the pain. She has made the end bearable. She will go so long as the girl breathes. She goes as one human being goes to another. It is not patronage, it is not persecution in the guise of religion. From the lady directors down to the typhoid children and the unclean girl it is humanity.

When I bade her good-by the scarlet page no longer flashed before my eyes. Somewhere in the back it may be hidden, but far away, so far the people shall never read.

The above by Jean Cowgill in the Chicago Chronicle, illustrates an important point which should be deeply impressed upon the minds of every Spiritualist. Humanitarian work is the one thing needed everywhere among that class that is constantly pinched with poverty, and where sickness is nearly always a crushing blow.

A religion that does not inspire a person to assist those in distress is not worth much to the one who possesses it—it is a barren waste without a single redeeming trait. These Visiting Nurses are veritable angels to those in distress; they carry with them joy, health, cheerfulness and happiness, and their mission is to constantly relieve suffering. Read the divine lesson here imparted—read until you realize that good deeds alone exalt you in the estimation of the angels of heaven. Ever bear in mind that your religion, if no benefit to others, either in example or in kindly humanitarian deeds, is practically of no value to yourself.

MYSTERY.

O Mystery, thy name hath charmed
These many years the human race,
And men have sought thy veiled face
As if in it, divinest grace,
And yet Religion's cause thou'st harmed

Ah, yes; the mother wast thou, of
That dread brood of human ills,
We, Superstitions call; that chills
In its embrace; aye, more, that kills
The very sympathy thou'dst prove!

'Twas thy dark shadow that did hide
The very God: the God of Light,
Men fain would seek; the sunshine, bright,
Of Freedom's day, didst turn to night,
And Faith wast left not where to bide.

Thine altars streaked are with blood;
Thy temple courts are graves—and bones,
Aye, bones are stark; and sighs and groans
Are what compose thine organ-tones,
E'en while thou'dst tell of mercy's flood.

But Mystery, thy days are numbered;
Religion now seeks Science's aid,
Nor yet in vain for it hast prayed;
For thou art pushed aside:—and stayed,
Thy reign upon the earth, thou'st cumbered.

Not now we worship "the Unknown;"
Though worship we the great, the good,
And worship we the source of flood
That comes to us, when understood;
But thou hast lost thy crown, thy throne.

We fear not thee, O Mystery,
Nor longer care, thy trailing robe.
With fearless touch doth science probe
The very secret of our globe;
And ours is immortality!

The light must shine, if we revere;
The truth be known, if Faith be ours,
For Faith rests not on magic powers;
Yet Faith, a heavenly structure, towers,
And from its height doth heaven appear!

The spirit world, the infinite,
This is to us what wast thy God,
It is no monarch, swaying rod;
But they who have the earth path trod;
And love and faith doth us unite!

THE HILLS OF ILLINOIS.

It is time for the leaves to be falling,
And I dream of frost in the air,
As I turn from this sunny country
To think of a land more fair.

Where the sunshine surely is brighter
As it shines on opening leaves,
And glints through luxuriant branches
Of grand old forest trees.

Trees that grace the valleys,
And crown the dear old hills,
That grow beside the streamlets—
The laughing, dancing rills.

There are tangles of roses and berries,
You may stand knee-deep in the fern,
And blue-bells, violets and posies,
Whichever way you turn.

And then, when you look to the meadows,
To their wealth without alloy,
Ah! you never saw such golden grain
As waves in Illinois.

Just think of the great black cherries,
The currants, and pears, and plums,
Apples, kings of the orchard,
And the peach, red-cheeked in the sun.

But now comes the mellow Autumn,
Laden with gracious stores,
And we wade to our knees in the rustling leaves,
For the nut-trees' bounteous hoards.

Aye, the golden glory of Autumn,
When the leaves are crimson and gold,
And the jewel-crowned hill-tops,
A spicy sweetness hold.

And then there's the Indian Summer;
Ah! I dream I'm lying still
On the brown earth's ample bosom
Of some smoke-encircled hill.

I am living in the present,
While the future may hold joys,
Aye, I'm dreaming on the hill-tops
Of my own loved Illinois.

ELLEN THOMAS RICHEY.

MATTER AND CONSCIOUSNESS

A Nut for Materialistic Philosophers to Crack.

In a letter, just received, from a certain "Grand Old Man," sent from London, where he had arrived on his fourth tour of the world, he says: "Demand that he tell how from counteraction of molecules and atoms he gets consciousness and reason?"

I address this essay, with its pertinent and pressing queries, directly to those atheistic writers, or professed materialists, who now and then appear in the columns of The Progressive Thinker. They are earnestly invited to meet the difficulty pointed out at the close of this paper.

Materialism assumes that thought and consciousness are but effects, or results, of molecular action. The molecules of the brain in motion, acting upon each other, produce thoughts. Out of the substance of the brain itself, by the motion or inter-action of its molecules, is created thought, and thought is the product of the brain matter, just as the perfume of the rose is the product of the rose substance. So materialism teaches that thought, hence mind and consciousness, are mere properties of matter. Instead of mind controlling matter it is asserted that matter actually produced mind.

That this is a perfectly fair statement of the materialistic position will not be called in question I presume. I will give one quotation in proof, however. Thos. H. Huxley said, in an address before an Edinburgh audience: "The thoughts to which I am now giving utterance, and your thoughts regarding them, are but the expression of molecular changes in the brain," or "that matter of life," by which he meant protoplasm, "which is the source of our other vital phenomena."

This is enough. It is a fact that the so-called scientific materialism not only assumes the origin of life to have been out of not-living matter, but also that thought, mind, intelligence, come into being as the result of purely physical processes. Thus Buchner says, in Kraft und Stoff, p. 32: "Matter is the origin of all that exists; all natural and mental forces are inherent in it."

But while the lesser lights among them, such average scribblers as place their scrawls upon the page of the Truth Seeker, Investigator, etc., glibly assert these ideas as established truths, the masters of that system of philosophy are a little more cautious. These men see the snag upon which their craft will run. Dubois-Raymond says: "Nor is it possible to explain how, out of the acting together of atoms, consciousness should arise."—Lecture on the Limits of Our Knowledge.

And Prof. Tyndall, in his great Belfast address, said: "You cannot satisfy the human understanding in its demand for logical continuity between molecular processes and the phenomena of consciousness. This is a rock on which materialism must inevitably split whenever it pretends to be a complete philosophy of life."

Again, in Materialism and Its Opponents, p. 589, he says: "The passage from the physics of the brain (that is, molecular action) to consciousness is unthinkable."

But materialism requires us to believe just this thing. Raymond says it is not possible to conceive how it can be, and Tyndall informs us that it is unthinkable and that you "cannot satisfy the logical demand of the human understanding" in this way.

Truly, as Prof. Tyndall said, "This is the rock upon which materialism must inevitably split." It may be safely said that no real thinker ever asserted that thought or consciousness resulted from molecular action of the brain substance without having at least grave doubts about the matter. The assumption that two molecules, or particles of matter, such as the gray substance of the brain, can by moving singly, or together, produce a thought is preposterous. No wonder Prof. Tyndall said it was unthinkable. An atom, an infinitesimal portion of matter, striking another atom and giving off a "spark of intelligence" as a spark of fire is struck from flint by steel! The idea of a molecule, mindless and unconscious, rubbing against another molecule equally destitute of these qualities, and as a result of this friction or motion, becoming endowed with consciousness! It is absurd.

But I do not propose to show the weakness of this assumption further. It is enough to show that this fundamental postulate of scientific materialism is discredited by those who are its chief friends, in that they say it is "unthinkable," "cannot satisfy," etc. My purpose, after stating the problem and certain formidable objections in the words of materialists themselves, was to present altogether another sort of difficulty. And to this I ask the careful attention of the materialists who may read. Let the minds of such men as W. F. Jamieson, B. F. Underwood, Channing Severance, et al, engage in its solution. I ask this, not to stir up controversy, but to get help in ascertaining a fact of profound importance. If consciousness, if thought and intelligence, is merely a "mode of motion," or the incidental result of the action of the molecules of the brain, let us know it. In that case, when the brain is destroyed thought perishes, reason vanishes, and mind is annihilated. Then death ends all. Personal immortality, or persistence after death with fixed identity of conscious being, is then an iridescent dream, a beautiful aspiration having no possibility of realization. If so, let us know it. For one I should gladly be assured of this truth, if it is a truth, even though it destroys what has been hitherto the fondest hope of my heart, that is, continuity of life beyond the grave with conscious personal identity and resumption of loves and interests that were abated by death.

Yes, if mind is merely a function, or product, of the organized brain, and thought simply an effect produced by the motion or inter-play of its molecules, then death, by destroying the organism, destroys mind and thought as well. Moreover, the position of the materialist has much apparently to confirm it. An injury to the brain injures the mind. The mind manifestly depends on the growth, size and condition of the brain, and, so far as we know or can ascertain, there are no mental operations possible without the existence of an organized brain. No brain, no thought, is an unquestioned fact it appears to me. And for years, being confronted with this cold, hard fact, I have been hard put to escape an open acceptance of atheistic materialism. The nightmare of annihilation, of the eternal extinction of my conscious being, has dogged my footsteps for many years. I have only escaped the hideous dogma by help of the following consideration. Let me state it briefly.

Suppose we grant thoughts are produced by molecular action. Let us agree that our thoughts, ideas, mental conceptions, are actually manufactured or created by the motion of the atoms of the brain. For every thought we will admit a corresponding motion of the molecules of the brain and a consequent using up or destruction of a definite amount of its substance. Not only will I admit this, but I will go further and say I believe, in the present state of our knowledge, we are justified in holding that our thoughts are thus produced. Without a doubt this is the method of all our mental operations. Thoughts are generated by molecular action. Motion of the atoms, impinging upon one another, produce thoughts, give birth to ideas.

Very well. Now comes my query: What causes and controls the action or motion of the molecules? For it is evident that this motion is not haphazard. It is not involuntary, cannot be classed with the other motions or processes of the body that are involuntary. It requires, we will say, a certain kind of motion of a certain kind and number of the molecules of the brain to produce certain kinds of thought as, for instance, thoughts on this very subject of which I am now writing. Now it is inconceivable that the molecules of my brain just by chance, without intelligent control, went to work producing the thoughts I am now recording. In fact I am face to face with consciousness, and consciousness, I, the ego, the real me, myself, is found to be back of the thought. I—I that determine, that will and control—I am back of all this motion of the molecules. For if anything is certain it is that I am consciously controlling and directing my thought; hence, of course, I control the machinery that produces the thought, that is the brain. Here, then, as Prof. Tyndall well said, is the "rock upon which materialism must inevitably split whenever it pretends to be a complete philosophy of life."

I grant the materialist all he asks, viz.: Thoughts are produced by molecular action in the brain. And then I find a Something back of this action, directing the motion, independent of the molecules as the operator is independent of the machine he manages. This Something is both conscious and intelligent, because it consciously and intelligently directs the action or motion of the molecules of the brain so we have connected, coherent, rational thoughts.

Thus the materialist is mistaken who fancies he has come to the beginning when he finds a thought is produced by the counterplay of molecules. He has only come to a Door of Life, and within sits a mystic Figure whom we call the I, the Ego, the Self-Conscious. This "I" has the brain as a workshop. Here he produces thoughts by directing the action of his servants which are the molecules of the brain. But this conscious "I" is back of the molecular action, controls it so as to voluntarily produce thoughts, now on one subject then on another. It is separate and distinct from the brain, using it as an instrument, as much so as the musician is apart from the piano he performs upon.

Gentlemen, what is this Something, if not a living spirit, that is back of the brain, and not only the cause of its molecular action but a conscious, intelligent cause, possessing will, discrimination, etc?

Right here the bottom drops out of materialism. I used to be an Adventist, and I sailed in the old materialist craft until it "split" on this identical "rock" which Professor Tyndall said was awaiting us down the stream. I found it to be, as he predicted, "not a complete philosophy of life."

Felix Adler, the Hebrew Giant, who has so long lectured for the New York Ethical Society, said in a lecture delivered in Chickering hall: "The materialist fails to account for mind; he does signally fail to do that." That is true. Mind manifests itself through matter but is not of matter. And though we follow a thought back to the molecules of the brain, even measuring the very motion that seems to give it birth, we still find the real cause eluding us. We follow it back along a material pathway, through the avenues of the delicate and highly organized substance of the brain, on and on until atoms and molecules shade away into almost impalpability, until we are on the very border where matter ceases to be matter, and still this potent thought rushes on and away. Back of molecular action and controlling it—back of matter and operating upon it—stands Mind, and to this mind, which is above and beyond matter, our thought leads us at last as parent source and primal energy.

That which generates thought is not molecules, nor yet the action of molecules one upon another, but it is that Something, conscious and intelligent, which stands by the intricate machinery of the brain and uses it as a refined and noble instrument of expression, producing upon it the music of thought in myriad ideas of beauty and utility.

This is why I cannot be a materialist. It "cannot be a complete philosophy of life." It breaks down whenever we attempt to explain consciousness. It "signally fails to explain mind." Mind and consciousness, reason and thought, can be followed back of even the most refined matter, such as the brain, and escaping the confines of matter, must necessarily have other than a material source and explanation. That source and explanation is, I believe, spiritual. "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding."—Job.

At least materialism, as I know it, fails to satisfy the demand of the understanding. I have shown here a glimpse of a Something, a conscious, intelligent, controlling something, back of molecular action, prior to and governing thought, apart from matter as the operator is apart from the instrument. I ask, What is this? Can it be explained by the materialist, or admitted, without overthrowing his philosophy? Have I not raised an insuperable objection to the materialistic system?

Has It Come to This?

An ultra-religious journal quotes the following, from one of the leading papers devoted to the news of the day, with the remark, "Is it not time some one should teach so (as in the full belief in the infallibility of the Bible) when multitudes are being wrecked and dropping into hell?"

Indeed it is time something should be taught, for in the glare of this awful arraignment it must not be forgotten that the Christian religion has been before the world almost two thousand years—and this is the result!

"Speaking of the Northwestern University, located at Evanston, Ill., and Garrett Biblical Institute, an adjunct of the university, and an institution for the education of ministers, Pastors W. T. Eustes (of the Wheedon Methodist Church, Evanston, Ill.) says that upon careful investigation of these (Methodist) institutions and their work, he finds they are miserably and almost hopelessly affected with the bad leaven of the prevailing 'higher criticism,' and are posting openly toward infidelity. Amongst other things, Pastor Eustes says: 'Professors are teaching that the so-called work of the Holy Spirit can be explained by hypnotism;' and, 'All so-called religious experience is simply a manifestation of animalism.' He adds that, after personal conference with students, he 'found only about four out of each hundred that are fit to lead a prayer-meeting.' 'I have not found one who would acknowledge that Jesus Christ knew as much about the Old Testament as do these modern professors,' again says Pastor Eustes. Also: 'The Christ they talk about is not the Christ of the Bible, but a Christ that is conjured up in the imagination filled with German rationalism.' Finally: 'Most of these young men are going out to preach in Methodist pulpits with a faith but little better than that of Paine, as expressed in his 'Age of Reason.'

"All this is indeed a terrible arraignment of Methodism and of certain of its established denominational institutions in which preachers are to be taught how to preach. Nor is it to be believed that the institutions named are more given to the vain speculations of our prevailing twentieth century skepticism than are others of the same sect. And what is to be the end of it all? God knoweth. 'Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, and the faithful fail from among the children of men.'"

And yet not only for these two thousand years, but from the remotest ages of recorded time, according to that gifted and inspired poet, Emma Rood Tuttle:

"Oh, the world is growing good, for the right is understood,
And our little lives are full of brilliant chances;
Martyrs have not died in vain, and we chant a glad refrain,
As we follow Truth wherever she advances."

Human Ignorance Greatest.

The greatest thing in the world, according to M. M. Mangasarian, who has just returned from a trip through Europe, is human ignorance. The religious observances and rites in some of the Catholic and Mohammedan countries, Dr. Mangasarian says helped convince him of this fact. He says:

"The greatest thing in the world that I encountered more than once during my recent wanderings in Europe—the greatest, not for value, but for size, force and power—was human ignorance. I was, against my will, forced to the conclusion that the country where there are the greatest number of churches or mosques is also the country where there is the greatest poverty coupled with the greatest ignorance. Constantinople, for instance, is really one of the most religious cities in the world. It was the scene of the conversion of the Roman Empire and has ever since been emphatically the most pious and at the same time the most poverty-stricken city in the world.

"Standing in St. Peter's, in Rome, I saw troops of Italian peasants, one after the other, reverently kiss St. Peter's toe.

"'You have been kissing that bare, dead foot all your lives,' I said to them in my mind, 'and so have your fathers and mothers before you; but what has it done for you or your country?'

"'It is only in England and America,' says Emerson, 'that such a thing as religious cant exists'; and he was right. Cant is a product of Protestant peoples. The Moslems and the Catholics are at least sincere.

"It is not enough for a country to be rich in crucifixes, golden vessels, Carraha marble virgins and angels, bronze Popes, alabaster Christs and mosaic Madonnas, with diamonds for eyes. What are wanted more urgently are decent homes for the people and bread enough to go around."

A CORRECTION.

MARY T. LONGLEY, Sec'y.

A Fine Musician When Asleep.

A correspondent from Halsted, Pa., in writing to the Chicago Journal, says that Harvey Joyce, who resides at Tingley, and who has never had any musical training, while in a somnambulistic state can play a violin with the skill of a professional.

Joyce is a planing hand. His fellow-worker and roommate is John Richler, who plays the violin at dances and other festivities. A few nights ago Richler awoke to see Joyce standing in the middle of the room with the violin in his hand. Richler saw by the fixed gaze of Joyce's eyes that he was in a somnambulistic state.

Suddenly Joyce struck up a familiar tune. Richler immediately recognized it as one he had played on various festive occasions. Joyce also rendered other selections, some of which Richler was familiar with, while others he never remembered having heard.

The impromptu programme consisted of selections ranging from the inspiring music of the waltz to the most difficult classical selections.

The midnight concert was brought to a sudden close by Richler leaning too far over in his excitement and falling out of bed, awakening the somnambulistic musician.

Joyce was apparently very much astonished to find himself in that attitude with the violin in his hands. He looked to Richler for an explanation. When informed of what had occurred he was as much surprised as Richler was.

Who can fathom the capabilities of the human mind, or penetrate into that magazine of intellectual force and power possessed by the Soul itself?

Here was a man who had never been instructed in the use of musical instruments, who knew nothing whatever of music, yet on the first occasion when acting the part of a somnambulist, he played with the skill of a master, difficult classical selections.

The Spiritualist may claim that Mr. Joyce may have been under the control of a spirit highly gifted in the use of the violin. The Swedenborgian would declare that there are different degrees in the powers of the human soul, and that one degree may assert itself while the mind in its normal state is totally oblivious of the fact. Others would assert that the somnambulistic condition alone brought into play the latent musical faculty of Mr. Joyce—so illuminating his mind that he was at once master of the situation.

If he were under the control of a spirit a mere movement on the part of his companion should not have destroyed the influence of the same, yet the adjustment may have been so delicate between the brain and the spirit that even the slightest disturbance would change the vibration, resulting in placing him in his normal state.

Again it is asserted that the somnambulic state is a peculiar condition—self-induced by one's own spirit when partially freed by sleep from the vibratory or attractive influence that attaches it to the body, and that then it can manifest its divine powers inherited through repeated reincarnations.

Thus one can go on theorizing without attaining the truth, or, perchance, he may hit the mark, and yet not be perfectly aware of what he has accomplished.

The fact that one while in the so-called somnambulic condition, though ignorant in his normal state, can give expression to most difficult classical music on the violin, leads one into a domain where he can not avail himself of chemistry, mathematics or apparatus of any kind to determine the truth or the exact status of the workings of the human soul.

Difficult problems have been solved, useful discoveries made, and essays of great value written while in the somnambulic state, yet no one has been able to fully explain the nature of that condition, whether self-induced, or caused by a spirit, or the direct result of the action of the soul itself—or some other agent unknown.

Must Be Cured Legally.

Commenting on the recent decision of the Indiana Supreme Court, the Chicago Chronicle is moved to say:

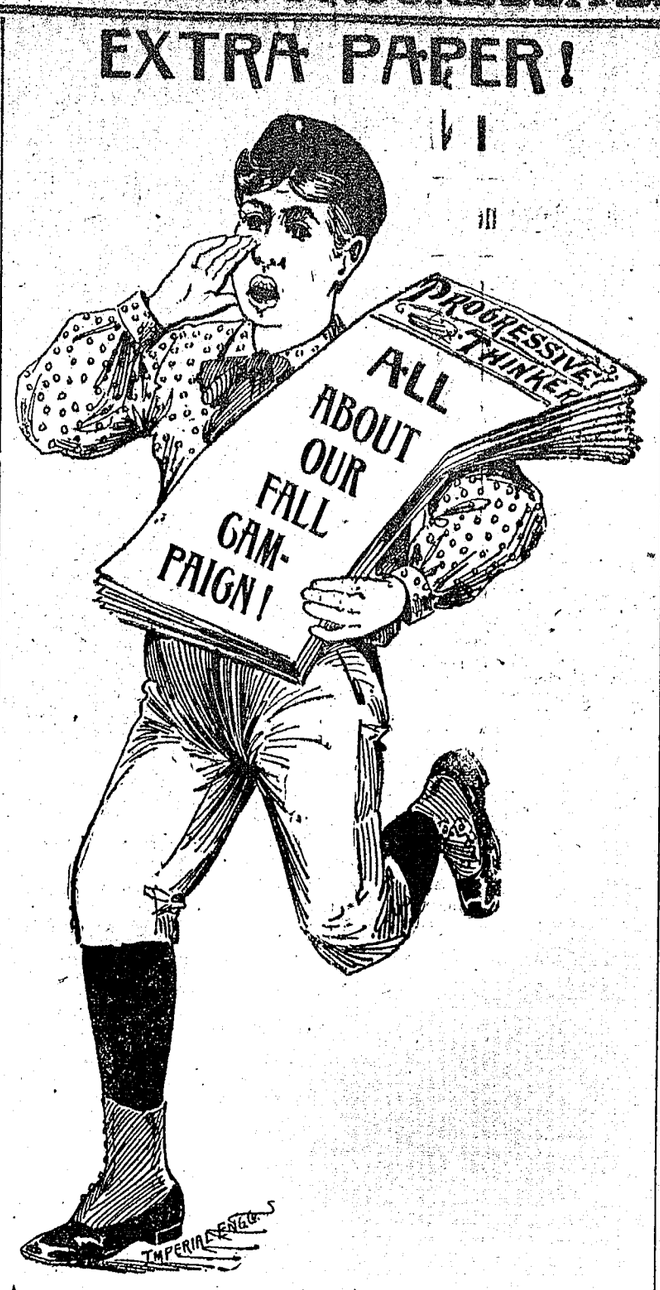
Invalids of Indiana will have to cross the state boundary line and come into Illinois if they wish to be healed by faith, magnetism, Christian Science or in any other way than by authorized medicine or surgery. The decision of the Indiana supreme court upholds only long-established schools of medicine and declares other methods of healing nonconstitutional.

At this late day when the largest churches in some of our largest cities are advocating healing by spiritual and mental rather than by material means it seems to be a decided step in the dark for a state supreme court to force a man to be healed in the old-fashioned, conventional way or not be healed at all.

How many have been restored to health under the care of those who had no authority to prescribe restoration by a course of gymnastics, by out-door exercise or by noon-day sun baths! How many there are to-day whose "faith has made them whole!" How many there are who needed an uplifting word more than medicine to rid them of dyspepsia and melancholy!

Until it can be proved that medicine heals in all cases and that mind has no power over matter the Indiana supreme court needs to reverse its decision. The court is trespassing on the religious rights of the people and consequently acting in violation of the constitution of the United States. It is also strangely perverse in acting against the dictates of common sense and the experience of daily life.

Prayers Fail to Bring Coal.



"For the first time in his so far triumphant career Rev. Frank Sanford, leader of the Holy Ghost and Us society of Shiloh, Me., is forced to acknowledge defeat. He is sending home all his followers owing to a lack of coal. Heretofore he has been able to explain to his followers that their every prayer would be fulfilled if they only believed in divine power as Sanford directed.

"When a new carpet, another organ, 10,000 bricks, a barrel of flour or an additional furnace were needed he and his associates would ask for them in prayer. Missionaries from Shiloh have in all earnestness said that they have personally known of instances where they have left the temple to do missionary work without a cent in their pocket, and have been weary and hungry and have found shelter and food and at times solid cash lying on the table when they awoke in the morning.

"'It was sent by the Lord,' they said.

"Sanford not only encouraged such belief, but published in his own paper over his own signature that he know of many such cases to be absolutely true. But coal proves not to be forthcoming, either through human or supernatural agency."—News Item.

For coal they have been praying to the wrong God. "Divine Providence" has long since placed entire control of this commodity in the hands of Lord Baer and a few other "Christian gentlemen."

Announcement Extraordinary!

Our Fall and Winter Campaign well be especially valuable to every thinking mind. THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER never becomes sluggish or stale in any respect. It is a constant incentive to every reflective mind. In order to maintain the interest in Occult and Spiritual subjects we have made arrangements to have several of the lectures by the great English Psychic, C.W. Leadbeater, now in this city, reported especially for The Progressive Thinker. Mr. Leadbeater's trend of thought in the domain of the Occult and Spiritual, is of such a character that one is led to think along new lines as they peruse his lucid presentations of his subject. He reasons logically; his ideas are clearly expressed; he speaks from actual experience as a psychic, and he will deeply interest you. The following are among the lectures that we have ordered reported:

"Man and His Bodies," "The Necessity of Reincarnation," "Karma—the Law of Cause and Effect," "Life After Death—Purgatory," "Life After Death—the Heaven World," "The Rationale of Telepathy and Mind-Cure," "Invisible Helpers," "Clairvoyance—What Is It? How it is Developed;" "Clairvoyance—In Space," "Clairvoyance—In Time."

The above lectures are not the only attractions that The Progressive Thinker will offer. Carlyle Petersilea's communications will be resumed. They are always read with deep interest. They carry one into the Spiritual domain. There will be other special attractions from time to time and like the boy's definition of salt, "That which makes victuals taste bad when you don't use it," it will make life taste bad to do without THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

During the long evenings of the coming winter, while sitting by the fire thinking, dreaming of children far away in the busy marts of life and of those arisen in some fairer land, you will grow sad and weary with life without something to read to remind you of the future. The Progressive Thinker in your home will come like a weekly messenger from the Spirit Land, bringing peace and soul comfort.

Now is the time to send in your subscription, and begin promptly with the soul-feasts, the intellectual harvest of high-class scientific, literary and occult readings. Induce your neighbors to subscribe also, and form your reading circles for the coming season and join us in this good work. Build up the educational side of the cause and perform a lasting deed for your fellowman. See our special inducements elsewhere in this paper.

Remember, the cause you love so well needs your most hearty support and co-operation here and now, and let us hear from you at once.

Do You Love Spiritualism?

It is certainly strange what influence money wields over humanity, and Spiritualism, or Spiritualistic humanity is not free from its influence by any manner of means. Human nature is the same everywhere; aspiring, desiring, acquiring and untiring in its energy—for what? Accumulation, laying up for a rainy day; hoarding for the to-morrow of life; piling up as a protection from the coldness of brothers and sisters who are growing old too, but who likewise only care for self, and would refuse all others within an hour from the time they had been offered a helping hand. Storing away money with which they expect to build a home for the homeless, the friendless, the aged and the afflicted; to establish some great institution of learning, or to help others to help themselves, and they pass to the great beyond not quite ready to use their means for the furtherance of their plans, leaving their business in a state of confusion and various institutions to battle with the heirs for that which they had long intended to provide.

Never ready to give now, but intending to a little later on, when death takes them in his arms to the tomb. Always "going to, pretty soon," but not quite ready till the boat pulls up to the shore. Ever anxious and full of suggestions for the accomplishment of some thing for the good of their fellowmen, but want to make just one more good haul from "this particular investment," and the gates swing open before them, and they are gone.

It will ever be thus while Gold is God and man is a victim.

Spiritualists, looking from the earth plane over into the plane of spirit, you know that your only chance to do good with your wealth is while you are here managing your own earthly affairs, and that should you pass away before you use that accumulation to further the cause or the institution you so much desire to aid, your business will be managed by others who have no interest in common with you, those who want your money and have been waiting for an opportunity to put their hands upon it, and your greatest aspirations will fall to the dust.

Spiritualism, the source through which you learned that there is a future state or sphere of conscious existence.

Spiritualism, the light of life eternal and the golden gate that swings to and fro between the two worlds for exit and entrance to immortal souls going and returning.

Spiritualism: Free and untrammeled thought; the boundless sea of spirituality, science, knowledge, inspiration, love and morality.

Spiritualism, the morning star of universal brotherhood; the goal of philosophy and the summit of religions, the basis of ethics; the foundation for the greatest and most sublime truth that has ever come to man.

Do you love Spiritualism? If a man loves his family he will endeavor to support them. If a man loves his wife he will be good to her, and try to provide for her, and if a man loves his mother he will try to make her last earthly days happy.

Do you love Spiritualism? What are you doing for its advancement and support? There are mediums and speakers to provide for, who are laboring at a sacrifice. There are institutions for the care of worn-out workers, and institutions for the education and proper training of the young men and women who are soon to take the places of the present workers, and last, but not least, there are papers to support.

Spiritualism has pushed its way from that blessed little cottage at Hydesville, N. Y., and the home of the Poughkeepsie seer into almost every country of the world and its dauntless principles are at work upon the vitals of every church in the world. What are you doing for it? You are not asked to strain yourself, you are only entreated to help the cause wherever you choose while you can. Do not wait for anything. If you are a true Spiritualist you only need to be aroused from your state of lethargy and you will see that the time to do is now, while you can, for you will only live on and regret on when it is too late to act in this matter.

The Medical Trust.

In these days when the people are so stirred up by the Coal Barons' Trust and other trusts in the interests of private individual greed against the interests of the people, it is well to call attention to the work of one of the most villainous trusts of all the unsavory lot, namely the Medical Trust. This is a trust organized for the especial benefit of what may be called the orthodox type of doctors.

The inroads made upon the practice and profits of the "regular" medics, by mental science healers, magnetic healers, christian science healers, and others, all of whom effect cures without dosing with drugs, poisonous or otherwise, has alarmed the medical gentry, and they are actively at work to devise means to corral the whole doctoring business in their own hands.

To this end they have had laws enacted ih their special interest in many states, and are working to the same end in other states.

A law of this kind was enacted by the legislature of Indiana, and has now been declared valid by the Supreme Court of that state.

Such laws are a disgrace to civilization, and an encroachment upon human rights, and should not be allowed to darken the statute books of any state.

Spiritualists all over the land, should take concrete and vigorous action to effect the repeal of such laws where they exist, and to prevent their enactment in other states.

The Medical Trust would rather the sick should not be healed at all, than that they should be healed by other than drug doctors, and if Jesus himself were now to practice healing in the state of Indiana, or if His disciples were to heal the sick after the manner that He commanded them to do, He and they could be prosecuted and fined or otherwise punished for their beneficent and humane work, made illegal by the statutes of Indiana.

Our Indiana friends should make an especial effort to have this monstrous, vicious perversion of justice in the name of law wiped from the statute books. And the same applies to our friends in other states that have been thus disgraced by legislators at the behest of the Medical Trust.

If this gang of men dubbed M. D. can declare what kind of healing we must or must not employ, it is time for the people to inquire in the case of the Medical Trust, as in all other trusts affecting the interests of the people, whether we have any rights which they are bound to respect.

RESURGAM—HINDERED LIVES.

Two Poems by Emma J. Nickerson, Now in Spirit Life.

Lift the veil, the Light is breaking,
Let my eager spirit soar
Upward, onward, still ascending,
Let me worship and adore.

This is life; through Death's glad portal,
I have broken prison bars;
Free and glorious sweeps my spirit,
Through rough places to the stars.

Mourn me not, O, friends and brothers!
I was of the whole a part;
Nature never fails nor falters,
Her's I am, and her's thou art.

Life is one; no links are broken,
Time, the garden of the soul,
Holds its soil for our enriching,
While the endless Seasons roll.

Heaven's mighty censers swinging,
Send their incense up to God;
As the flower in fragrance springing,
Seeks the sky from lowly sod.

Hearts attuned to Life's high numbers,
Learn to labor, wait and sow;
Stem, and flower, and fruit, perfecting
Souls, that ripe with beauty grow.

Now my spirit leaps to greet you,
Dews of love my vesture hides;
Mine and thine, Truth lives forever
Where eternal justice bides.

Hosts arrayed in garments holy
Guard the place where heroes fall;
Deeds, shall live to tell the story,
Good to one is good to all.

Crowned with sheaves, O earnest toilers!
Seek and enter Wisdom's door;
Lift your eyes, life's grace and glory,
Lies not backward, but before.

Earth is filled with sweetest music;
"God is love!" her billows roar;
Pause! and hear deep anthems ringing,
Life is one for-ever-more.

Hindered Lives.

How many 'mid Life's shadows grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope,
For Lives are tangled at the best;
And hearts by sorrow oft oppressed
That know no easing;
But even thus, we learn to say
"The hindered purpose of to-day
Makes stronger our to-morrow."

O, hindered lives! O, weary souls!
The sun is shining on your goals;
Above this tempest of unrest
Glad songs are waiting your behest
That have no ceasing;
Look up, and with brave spirit say
"Night shadows roll in mists away
To greet the Golden morrow."

How many those, who, all unknown,
Share burdens none may bear alone;
By Sorrow's hand God's gold is tried,
And all souls must be purified
Through Faith's affliction;
The World awaits Love's light to-day,
And all unconscious, while we pray,
'Tis breaking, for to-morrow.

Surgical Blunders.

One of the strangest surgical blunders of recent times was committed in Cleveland last week. A well known contractor was attacked with inflammation of the larynx, and the pain caused thereby led him to think that he had swallowed his false teeth, which were missing when he awoke from his night's sleep. He was taken to a hospital, where the impetuous surgeon performed an operation which caused his death. But he had not swallowed his false teeth or anything else which might cause mischief. The teeth were found in his bed.—Ex.

Is it any wonder that a profession boasting of its scientific knowledge, and requiring special legislation for its protection, desires to suppress mere pretenders, such as clairvoyants and magnetic healers?

How much short of manslaughter is the daily sacrifice of life on the operating table for appendicitis, an ailment unknown until within a few years, its fatality being the product of the surgeon's art?

If the annual waste of life through surgical operations could be taken into account the whole civilized world would be appalled because of their multitude.

Aided by His Own "Daimon."

Edward Everett Hale says of Josiah Quincy, president of Harvard, and mayor of Boston, who was old enough to have been an aide to Governor Hancock when Washington visited Boston in 1792, and who lived until after the beginning of the Civil War:

"It is interesting now to know what I did not know till after his death, that this gallant leader of men believed that he was directed in important crises by his own 'Daimon,' quite as Socrates believed. In the choice of his wife, which proved indeed to have been made in heaven, he knew he was so led. And, in after life, he ascribed some measures of importance and success to his prompt obedience to the wise Daimon's direction."

Dealing In Heavenly Realty.

Christian sharpers are at work in the Hawaiian Islands, according to a recent dispatch, which says:

"The United States should furnish protection to the Hawaiians against swindlers," said United States Senator J. R. Burton, who has just returned from Hawaii.

"The natives are in hard lines just now," he continued, "because of the fact that a number of missionaries from Boston have been trading them what they pretended were tickets to heaven for their lands and property.

"The game has been worked quite generally among the more ignorant natives of the island. Those who have discovered the fraud express resentment toward this country."

The Belle Bush Fund.

The committee, consisting of Zaida Brown Kates, Ella Royal Williams and Clara L. Stewart, report that they have during the past year collected for Miss Belle Bush, and paid over to her, $167.87.

The National Spiritualist Association.

We devoutly pray that the National Spiritualist Association may pursue such a course that after it adjourns we will not be compelled to tire our legs with kicking. We, however, give the delegates due notice that they (the legs) are stronger than ever. The convention has our best wishes.

IN MEMORY.

Dr. Emma Nickerson Warne Passed to Spirit Life.

Dr. Emma Nickerson Warne has joined the innumerable throng of that other world which lies about us like a cloud. Her earth life blossomed April 30, 1854, the youngest child in the numerous family of Freeman and Harriet Nickerson, whose home was in Colburn, Norfolk county, Canada; and the harvest came at 10:30 on the evening of October 7, 1902, in the lovely country home of her brother, Charles L., about two miles south of Flushing, Mich. In the beautiful August days she had hied to this delightful neighborhood of childhood scenes, as she had frequently done before. However this time it was in buoyant hope of recovery from an illness of some standing, but pneumonia set in to close the service of her fleshly tenement. While tenacious to the last in her purpose of recovery, yet her judicious habit led her on almost the last day to say to the dear ones ministering to her, "I am not afraid of death, and I want to live."

She was pre-eminently a child of nature. She was poetic in her character. She prized freedom and truth. She took delight in the fields, the woods and their products. She was fond of animals and made pets of them. She loved her human fellowships and was devoted in ministrations to them.

Her father having passed away quite early in her life, her mother with the younger children, took up a farm in Genesee county, Mich., where her youth was spent in the freedom of country life among hills and dales and brooks. Her primary education was such as the district schools afforded, and she followed with the advantages of The Edna Chaffee Noble School of Elocution in Detroit, and the Emerson School of Oratory in Boston. Even in childhood she often would drop any work to ask her brother or some other older person the meaning of life as portrayed in the question, "What is the bone in my finger for?" Thus was presaged the trend of her preparation which was rounded out when she and her husband, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, graduated from the Hering Homeopathic College in Chicago. To all this fitting by schools was added the rare fitness afforded by her receptive nature and her magnetic powers. As early as 1878 she began development of spiritual mediumship in inspirational music. This power rapidly enlarged through various phases and she became so acceptable a platform speaker as to be engaged in the east for two years in Berkeley Hall, Boston, and in the west for many seasons. In spiritual reform she had outlived many conditions of hindrance, and often she was far in advance of those who heard her lectures.

The dozen years of her married life were most happy ones in the unity with her noble husband in all good works. Together they were staunch supporters of the real in Spiritualism. The unreliable had no encouragement from either of them. They were full of hope in the present and in the future. It was her delight to talk with her husband "of what we shall do when we are grown old." Her whole soul went into whatever she did, and she confidently expected a long life of activity as her plans evidence.

While the writer was talking with friends about her last illness and he was noting the saying "without pain she calmly fell asleep," he was suddenly controlled and she distinctly said to him, "I'm not dead. Only my body is asleep. I am here."

The services were held October 10, and included the 23d Psalm and beautiful hymns, all favorites with Mrs. Warne, and were deeply impressive. Yet, inspired by her faith and knowledge of spirit communion, they were comforting and uplifting to the many friends present. They were conducted by Martha E. and Melvin A. Root, of Bay City, who always hold the thought of spiritual life and being above and beyond the material. The home seemed pervaded with the natural cheer of the departed. The burial place is a short distance east of the farm home she prized so highly, beside her mother's in Persons' Cemetery. All was peace and calm as the friends bore the "empty shell" away amid the splendid glory and fire of autumn leaves to its transformation with them into new forms of grace and beauty. The one eternal life and spirit of all remain untouched by death or loss, and they enter upon the liberty of larger, nobler service to men and angels by the enlarged understanding and development.

HEALTHFUL THOUGHTS.

A Sensible Woman's Criticisms on Mary McLane.

I am no longer young, and being a woman may surprise you with this candor and confession! I am not beautiful, I have no marvelous peach-bloom on my cheek, no carmine lips, and soft, melting eyes. I have a face that is quite guilty of big wrinkles and deep frowns and can look and feel dilapidated.

All this added to a fairly corpulent figure makes me conspicuous. I am an every-day person that enjoys life and health and the good things of the vegetable garden.

I am not gifted and dramatic and startling. I wait for nothing that I can secure without waiting. I live where the hills are soft and green. The fields that creep to them most gently from the river's bank bearing the moisture of its classic bosom in the daisy's cup and violet's dell, all told the story of the energy and steadfastness of nature's countless forces and endless ramifications to express her determined purpose, growth, advancement, unfoldment. It is all very true; very significant to one who is fat and fair and leaning on the sunset side of the hills. To a woman that has tasted the world's full cup of affection and love.

I say I am not a genius, I have been happy, grandly and splendidly happy. I have looked into a mother's eyes and found love, a father's eyes and found tenderness, into a sister's face and received its sensitive affection, a brother's countenance and discovered its bold, frank approval; and not being a genius I have enjoyed all this and more; I have a man tender-hearted, large in his conceptions of the rights of others and conservative in his opinions of his own rights and privileges; a man comprehensive and sensitive to the beautiful and true in nature; a man with no special characteristics of Mephistopheles; a real, plain, true, tender heart with a warm, bright, scintillating mind that loved, wooed and wed with me according to the law of the country we live in.

I have been the fond mother of sons and daughters who have brilliantly unfolded and gone out like shining stars from our little home among the trees and meadows green. I have felt the hand of care and the grasp of fear, the clutch of agony and the dragging hand of sorrow. Not being a genius, I have been able to suffer and go on in the world realizing that there was something for me in the black pool of anguish, whenever I was strong enough to turn the search-light of truth and the X-ray of common sense on its shadows. I being common-place have discovered the vast beauties of nature, even in her black pools, when I have turned on the lights.

The emotions of a woman not young and without genius are deep and placid when she beholds the panorama of God's splendor in the chariot banners' trails from Sol's car at close of day. The uplift of crimson and gold-kissed clouds, the purple garmenting of princely knight aglow with star-pointed jewels, waiting to charge upon the battlements of day and wrap the silent shadows on the vanquished king. All this may thrill the heart and fertilize the soul to richer growth of thoughts magnificent, but it will not disturb the heart's best trust, destroy its friendship, dismiss its God, or make the woman fiercely long for Devil's spawn to spring from out her flesh made violent by her misappropriate plans and thoughts of being genius-clad.

A woful thing it seems to me of ripened years and placid mind and body quite rotund to think of childhood without love, and of womanhood without affection. Somewhere 'tis said a fly can scale a wall smooth as glass, because he has hollows in his delicate little feet, that by suction hold tight, press out the air and let him climb up hard, smooth, almost impossible places. That fly is a little genius, for he has learned, or come here foreknowing, to hold fast to that which is good. Well indeed would it be for us before we are twenty to try that homely plan, and rather than declare our woes, scale the hard junk bottle of black environment and come creeping out at its nose.

It is, however, quite a difficult thing for us to do if the joy of our discontent is fixed with a big stopper of our egotism that we have pushed up through its neck. And if our extreme selfishness has wrapped us with twine that has been around the paper wherein the sugar jar our special kind of chocolate fudges has been tied up, then we will have a sore tangle to get into shape to walk up the sides of the green hollow bottle of life.

But if we are most part people and small part genius of the avowed order, we will get the chocolate fudge twine straight, the sugar devoured, the paper put by and the bottle neck clear and come out like the fly with a glad little buzz of our wings. I have eaten olives, and I may say while not a genius I have the art of enjoying them well. I see the far-off land of mystic years, the soft night, the yellow day of the desert sand, the tent, its brown women and men, its lithe-formed little children. I see the slender hands that touched the harp, hear the low sweet notes of tremulous music, breathe the spell of the mystic, watch the train of laden camels, hear the bell in the silent night, follow the sheik, watch the slaves setting the tables on the ground, take the silver pipe with its silken cord, place it to my lips, look up with a start to realize it is the pit of the olive, not the pipe of the Orient that I hold in my fingers. Oh, I am no genius, but I can eat olives and feel and dream about them; but one is apt to nap in one's chair when past middle age.

Fat, not fair, and no genius, I can tell you much more that I, a woman living without any special craving for the satanic visitation of his majesty, the devil, I, a woman without genius, who has friends, love and cherish them, and hold all humanity to be worth having in the world.

I, a woman, desire that as years increase I become more capable of true appreciation, and feel more fully day by day, the purposefulness of life and that I outgrow each fragment of conceit, which overshadows the sunlight of my calm existence.

From genius that distorts the soul, kind Lord deliver me.

From women with mannish frocks and no hips, kind Lord deliver me.

From women whose self-consciousness obliterates consciousness of others, kind Lord deliver me.

From women that seek dark pools and contemplate suicide, but do not accomplish it, kind Lord deliver me.

From women that overrate self, kind Lord deliver me.

From women that underrate self and all others, kind Lord deliver me.

From women that declare their inability for happiness in life's simple ways, kind Lord deliver me.

From women that vent the spleen of their system on a public, kind Lord deliver me.

From one who gives a gruesome feeling to every nerve, kind Lord deliver me.

Being without genius, and much advanced in years, after perusing the book of Mary McLane, I feel to say, not kind Devil, but kind Lord, deliver me.

THE SCHOOL OF LIFE.

Experiences and Lessons of Mortal Life.

When a child is five or six years old, the world looks very large; time lags heavy when waiting in anticipation of anything, but the child cannot stop at six. It unfolds into seven, eight, ten, twelve, and soon up into the teens, twenties, thirties, and all the time it gravitates upward; each year brings its corresponding changes in nature and condition from infancy to childhood and on to youth.

And when manhood or womanhood is attained, you look out upon the world around and feel that there is something more to do. You remember what you have accomplished in childhood and youth, but to stop there would be weakness and even bondage. Now higher results come, larger fields of labor, and you must grow into these; and you do inevitably, irresistibly, with a receptive understanding of them. Many do not advance as fast as they ought to, but the difficulty may be in some immature conditions or in circumstances and the impressions of social or religious life, but they never lose the line marked out by eternal foresight.

Individuals are individuals forever, all bound upon a pilgrimage forever. They are simply stepping forward, step by step, stage by stage toward perfection, upon instructions from without and within, supported by teachings from wise ones above or by the lessons from their own memory.

We have heard persons lament that they could not live their lives over again, thinking if they could they would avoid the shoals on which they have piled the wrecks of misguided lives. Yes, if they could live their lives over with the experiences of the past well understood, this might be so; but if their second life were as new to them their second life were as new to them as the past was, they would do no better than they did before. We make mistakes in this life, for almost every step in the road is a new step or a path never trodden berore; but the experiences and lessons we learn will be our capital or endowment with which to commence in the land of the hereafter.

Our earthly lot is fraught with toil and sorrow, sunshine and shadow. When the sun of prosperity shines and the wheels run smoothly everywhere, man becomes contented and inclines to inactivity. But sorrow is the power in human experience to regulate the tides of being when tried by the winds of adversity. The human soul is like a harp whose chords vibrate with pain if touched by rude hand, but yield exquisite strains of melody and tones of wondrous power when swept by the master hand of love.

You have seen gardens with their many-hued flowers giving forth their sweet perfumes. Like unto these are human souls that live lives of right-doing, of purity and truth; and for this we should live preparing to bloom in the garden of life eternal.

Some persons say "life is not worth living" or "life does not pay," and a few have, at times, intensely wished themselves in oblivion. This is evidently wrong. Life is worth living, because of the grand possibilities of unfoldment that lie within the human soul. Earth life is well worth living, because it is the gateway of immortality, peace, happiness, heaven.

Every recognition of an evil should be an incentive to you to conquer it. But if it has a strong hold upon you, your battling may prove unavailing for a time; but do not imagine that because it is unavailing it is a failure. Every good resolution counts, though it may end in apparent failure. Every effort counts; every good thought counts; every struggle with evil without or within counts; and you may be assured the victory will come by and by.

Though an individual may be surrounded by much to create happiness and contenement, there may be still a longing within which is not appeased. The struggle for perfection, peace and purity makes life become painfully unsatisfactory at intervals, and causes a desire in the soul for freedom. Then comes the mission of the unseen helpers, whispering words of cheer and inspiring with hopes, administering with love, bringing "the balm of Gilead" to heal our wounds. Were they empowered to bring roses with no thorns, they would gladly do so; but their mission is to heal, comfort, give renewed strength by which our burden is gently lifted and lightened.

Life is full of dreams, and we do dream in part, but life is not all a dream; it is interwoven with fine and coarse, with light and shadow, ideal and real. The soul from the divine realm of infinite light is placed here in time and sense, in the material body to work out its destiny and be aware of its immortal inheritance. Through the experiences of time, through the shadows of the senses, through the great barriers and walls of temptation, still the light of this transcendent kingdom is seen and the nature that is immortal attests the victory.

In olden times death was the dire calamity, and the grave carried the victory. To those who can see no to-morrow death becomes an enemy. To those for whom death does not close all, who have hope and knowledge of another world, life has its attractions, its beauties, its fairest flowers.

We are following down the stream of time and in every step of the way comes development of character. Progress and evolution are all along this line, from the simple to the complex, ever becoming more complete and perfect. It is because we have the great stores of the past and the possibility of reaching out over the shadows and gloom into the love-lighted future, toward which every moment is bearing us, that the present is so rich and beautiful; that the here and the now bear some fruitage of happiness.

SIGNIFICANT.

A Worker's Reply to a Pertinent Query.

To the Editor:—In a recent issue of your paper, over the signature of W. H. Tull, Dalton, Ga., some criticisms are made, which I feel prompted to answer.

Brother Tull wishes to know "Why we lecturers and mediums travel so much; and especially why we do not remain in our home cities?"

Brother Tull has not had any experience with local society work, I feel sure, or he would not ask such questions. In the first place, there are very few local societies that will engage a lecturer for more than two months; somehow, Spiritualists want a change; with them "variety is the spice of life." In the second place, there are few workers that can give their services and time without pay, to small communities; for, strange to say, we do have to eat and wear clothes, like other people. In the third place, it is not fair for a few to support local societies, while the many who really get the benefit of a speaker's engagement, fail to contribute toward the support of said societies, and stand on the outside and kick.

Permit me to say, my home is not Atlanta, Ga., but for seven winters I have served the Society of Spiritual Science there. I know that for three years one man, a noble, true Spiritualist, who never kicked, was the financial support of that society. For one year he paid the hall rent—$25 per month, beside his dues, and he is not a man well off in worldly goods. Last winter, when the meetings were commenced, the burden financial fell upon the shoulders of seven or eight who could illy afford to assume it, and when an appeal was made for outside contribution, our friends who were so much interested in Spiritualism, and anxious for Mrs. Prior's return, failed to come forward with their mite. In fact, the contribution paper seemed to act as a quarantine flag, it kept them away from the meetings. If all interested in Spiritualism in Georgia would come forward and help hold up the hands of the supporters of Spiritualism in Atlanta, then could a good home medium live there, and even go out doing missionary work throughout that state; but Brother Tull, such mediums must be paid a living salary, they cannot depend only upon private sittings; if they have to, then will they remain where they can do the best.

When Spiritualists and those interested in Spiritualism, will come forward and support their religion, and their speakers, thus taking the stamp of commercialism off of mediumship, then may we have to travel about, less. When Spiritualists see the need of a "circuit," and a "lecturing bureau," to follow in the steps of our missionaries, to harrow the plowed grounds, then may we workers do the good we are anxious to; for I feel that I am speaking for my brother and sister workers when I say we wish we could stay in one place and have the comforts of home, also to become better acquainted with our people, and to know their needs.

I hope the delegates to the coming N. S. A. convention will take up this matter and devise some way by which we poor "itinerant speakers" may become "settled pastors."

TELEPATHY AND ITS KINDRED PHENOMENA

The Most Marvelous Development of the Twentieth Century.

The invention of vitascopes [as set forth in the Cincinnati Enquirer] induced Czar Nicholas to predict that the progress of science would eventually discount the tricks of legerdemain, and it seems probable that the marvels of nature will do the same for the fairy realm of imagination.

Sea crabs with cold fire and eels with electrocution batteries are stranger creatures than the goblins of Grandfather Andersen, and the achievements of Tamalin are surpassed by our American forest bees. The clever dwarf could retrace his steps through the wildest thickets of the tangle-woods till the birds broke his corner in white peas, but ants and bees can dispense with landmarks, actual experiments having demonstrated their ability to find their homes by short cuts across purposely changed landscapes.

"A being equipped with a recording office for wireless messages from all points of the compass," a German zoologist describes a carrier pigeon, and the faculty of topographical clairvoyance has indeed become more mysterious by investigation. New experiments, instead of elucidating its enigmas, have resulted only in extinguishing old-time theories.

SIXTH SENSE.

The "sixth sense" of migratory birds was once supposed to have been developed by yearly round trips, repeated for an infinite number of generations, till the practice had perfected the knack of flying due south in fall and due north in spring. A bee-line course in both directions would thus bring the wanderers back in sight of familiar objects, and the difficulties of the problem would be reduced to the task of keeping a parallel of a meridian.

But the fact is that traveling birds do not pledge themselves to any such rules. If the season is mild they indulge in wide detours, turning off seaward to rummage the driftwood of a beach, or inland to explore the tributaries of a large river valley and then resume their journey as if nothing had happened. Captive birds have been sent for hundreds of miles out of their bee-line route, after being marked in a way to identify them in the neighborhood of their nesting-places, next spring, and a fair proportion generally turned up in time, marks and all. Some failed to return, but that is a risk incurred by all travelers. A good many of our wood birds rear two broods a year, and if all their young lived the respirable atmosphere of our planet would at last fail to hold their swarms, but traps, gunpowder and sparrowhawks combine to insure an abundance of wing-room. About three out of five winged emigrants perish, but the lack of compass facilities has nothing to do with their disappearance.

ANTS' MYSTERIOUS INSTINCT.

Ants of a species that undertake extensive foraging trips have been turned loose on the other side of rivers which none of their immediate ancestors could be supposed to have crossed before. Released miles beyond, in a country that must have been as unfamiliar to them as Transcaucasia would be to an American backwoods boy, the little exiles struck out bravely in the direction of their burrows, and some of them are perhaps still wandering up and down along the edge of the water barrier. As far as they found terra firma to carry them they held their course straight. New sights, new sounds, new scents of an unfamiliar vegetation failed to confuse their guiding instinct. What apparatus of their tiny heads can have recorded those "wireless messages" from the haunts of their anxious relatives?

How does a bee contrive to steer straight after its senses have been clouded by alcohol? For the trick of our American bee-hunters includes the use of intoxicants, mingled with bee-attracting treacle. The little forager, loaded with a jag, as well as with patent glucose, does find it hard to travel on schedule time, and is apt to alight and rub his eyes to study out a clubhouse excuse, but as long as he keeps on the wing there is nothing wrong with his direction. The Marconi messages prevail against schnapps and surfeits.

Mysterious instincts were generally supposed to be a prerogative of the lower animals, whom nature had, somehow, to compensate for the lack of reason. But, telepathy, or topographical second sight, undoubtedly also guides the steps of several species of mammals—not all of them quadrupeds.

Prof. Lessure, of Brussels, not long ago caused a lively controversy by publishing an account of his experiments with a pair of American coons that could not be separated by night and distance. Their forcible divorces always ended with a spontaneous reunion. A trained hound, who could be relied upon to track and tree them without hurting them, nearly always found them together, though they had been liberated on different sides of an Ardennes mountain range. There wasn't much risk of a "new coon in town" getting on the track of the grass widow, but her husband declined to take chances and generally had her under surveillance again before the end of the second day. Twice they were taken eight leagues (about 24 miles) asunder, but love laughed at leagues and the investigating hound soon had them both up the same tree.

How had they solved the problem in a land of strangers?

"Nothing mysterious about that," remarked a British critic. "Coons," he explains are naturally great rovers, nosing about and prowling as restless as hyenas, and by simply roaming in ever-widening circles, the distracted exiles soon came across each other's trail. The rest was still easier."

That explanation really may hold good, and prowling she-wolves solve more difficult problems any summer day of the year. Where game is scarce, as in the treeless uplands of Syria, the mother of seven starving whelps will range all over an area with a diameter of 50 or 60 miles, but return in a bee line, after contriving to break her fast.

SCENT DOESN'T EXPLAIN.

And hounds have found their way back to the kennels of an experimenter who had temporarily handicapped their faculty of scent. A dime's worth of musk will do that, if well rubbed in with an oiled rag; the victim of the procedure will rub his nose on the ground every few minutes, but fail to break the spell of the drug, and for days after will be able to hunt only by sight. A rabbit dashing into a patch of woodlands, under such circumstances, has effected its escape for that day. The pursuer may try here and there, staring about in a hapless way, but will soon relinquish the job in disgust.

Yet under the disadvantage of that same predicament a kidnapped hound will get back home as fast as a straight run of 10 or 12 hours could take him.

The "sixth sense," then, cannot be a synonym of keen scent, nor has it anything to do with sharp eyesight. There is an old-world species of migratory hawk (falco peregrinus) that follows swarms of smaller birds on their way to the tropics—and overtakes them, too, in time for dinner; but loses its appetite at sight of the sea, and has been known to cross the Mediterranean in a dense fog. A trained specimen, owned by Henri IV., of France, accomplished that feat, after having been sent as a present to a friendly Prince of Morocco. At home the bird could be trusted to hang about its roost all day, but the moment the Africans opened its cage it darted out and away, and was back home in 48 hours, though the weather had been damp and foggy all that time. The French chronicle mentions that meteorological circumstance and both Christian and Moors suspected that ElSheytan, the Prince of the Air, aided the deserter.

A well-attested case of a giant turtle returning to its hatching place in St. Helena (after being branded and flung overboard in the British channel) precludes all ordinary explanations of "telepathy;" the strange instinct is clearly independent of our five senses, yet it is shared by savages, and now and then manifests itself in civilized men.

The poet-philosopher Goethe, in his conversation with Prof. Eckermann, related a memorable experience of his own that made him suspect the existence of all sorts of dormant soul-faculties, "more or less akin to animal magnetism." A few years after his arrival at the court of Weimar he made the acquaintance of a young widow who had renounced the habit of matrimony and, indeed, of flirtation, but encouraged his visits and shared his delight in baffling the spies of gossipdom. Finding her room beset with relatives, one evening, he turned back at the threshold, and, for nearly an hour wandered about in the dark, then retraced his steps and found her home dark and deserted. He felt greatly disappointed, and was on his way to his own lodgings when he suddenly became conscious of a presentiment; nay, certainty, of finding his friend by turning into a certain street. There was nothing of preconcerted rendezvous about it—he had never seen her on that street, and at the time could, in fact, not see anything, the cross-road lamp of the poor little city being train-oil fed and shrouded with soot. His reasons for suspecting her outdoors at all were not very cogent, as she was in the habit of spending her evenings with female friends, unless he had met her before a certain hour.

PRESENTIMENT TRUE.

"But," as one of his biographers observes, "second sight impressions take no account of first sight probabilities," and the prowling poet turned into that side street "under an impulse so overruling" that he felt pleased, rather than surprised, when he really met his Platonic inamorata, who admitted that she had been guided by a similar presentiment.

The night was moonless, but that very circumstance, by keeping normal vision in abeyance, perhaps gave an elder faculty a chance to assert itself, as stars shine out more clearly in the dark.

Prof. Bates, the "Naturalist of the Amazon Valley," states that he could not lose his native gun carrier in the jungle, and expresses a surmise that the faculty of direction might prove to be remarkably well developed among the primitive races, even of our latter-day world.

Acting upon that hint Surgeon E. C. Garnier, of the French army, recently instituted a series of interesting experiments with the hill tribes of Madagascar—"about as uncivilized bipeds without feathers as can sustain their claim to the name of human beings," as he describes them.

Their habitations are mere dugouts, with a litter of dry fern leaves, and they rarely go to the trouble of cooking provisions that can be assimilated with the aid of strong jaws, but they have an ape-like knack of imitation, and Dr. G.'s assistant herb gatherer had acquired a chattering acquaintance with the French language.

"If he could smell his way home from the heart of the tanglewoods I do not know," says Dr. Garnier, "but I am very sure that his talent of path-finding stood the test where neither sun nor stars could have supplemented the assistance of landmarks and where beeline trails could not possibly have been known to him from previous experience."

On his transfer to Port Tanarave the doctor took that two-legged sleuth along and gave him no hint of his chief purpose when he arranged a trip to the hill country of the interior.

The woods up there were a little less impenetrable than on the coast, but far more continuous, and the experimenter had provided himself with more than one compass to find his way back to the overland road, if the faculty of his companion should fail him. The weather was cloudy and calm, and after a six hours' zigzag tramp through the forest the last sounds from the native habitation in the river valley had died away; a silence, broken only by the chirp of tree locusts and the occasional shriek of a hawk, brooded over the wilderness. Moreover, the doctor had kept his assistant a chattering by a pretended interest in his family affairs and antecedents, which incidentally established the fact that he had never before been within 100 miles of these woodlands.

"Say, it's getting late," remarked the doctor, after glancing at his watch. "We have about all the herbs we can carry. So please let's try and get back by the shortest road."

"Allons donc," assented the native. And, taking the lead, hitched up his bundle of sundries a little higher. Then, in a sort of matter-of-course way, turned slightly to the right, and in less than three hours regained the wagon road.

How did he do it? is a question that has puzzled his employer ever since.

F. L. OSWALD.

SOWING AND REAPING.

The Omnipresent Truth of Man's Moral Responsibility.

We were recently very strongly impressed with the fact that the true principles pertaining to man's spiritual life and destiny are more universally recognized than many of us are conscious of, and that its manifestations are not confined to any one religious sect or political party, but to any individual soul who honestly desires to be illuminated there will come a manifestation of that glorious presence which will not only quicken the intellectual perceptions, causing them to more clearly perceive the distinction between truth and error, but which appeals to the spiritual faculties, causing them to rejoice in the boundless manifestations of the truth which alone can emancipate the soul from its bondage to the lower life, and place it in the conscious presence and under the direct influence of that power which is the only true savior and redeemer.

A short time since we had the pleasure of listening to an address by the Rev. W. J. C. Wilson, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church of Central Bridge, N. Y. The subject of his discourse was, "Co-operation of the Human with the Divine Forces," showing the necessity of such co-operation if the work of human progress from the false conditions of life were brought to a successful issue. We quote a statement that he made bearing on that point:

"Here is a man that has degraded his manhood, has descended into the mud and mire of animalism. How is that man going to rise to honor and respectability? Only by going through a mighty struggle with himself. Yes, my dear friends, he must make one of the mightiest struggles of his life. He cannot rise by folding his arms and saying, if the Lord wants me to be saved, I will be, and if I am to be damned, then I will be any way.' Such a man will be damned (condemned). The Lord has no use for such a man as that; what is wanted is one that is willing to co-operate with the divine plan and work out his salvation, for in no other way can it be attained."

In the address there was entire freedom from any insinuation that some one else had accomplished that wonderful result, or would do it if they were asked, but he strove very earnestly to impress the fact upon the minds of his hearers that if salvation came to any soul from the degrading influences of their unspiritualized lives, it must be because that soul earnestly and intelligently co-operated with the divine forces; for if it did not failure would result, and that to make our life a successful one while here in this phase of existence we must be willing to recognize the power and influence of the supernatural, and that a non-recognition of those spiritual forces would result in failure of accomplishing what is necessary to make our life a successful one while here.

We have just finished reading "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and if the author's statements are correct, and we have no occasion to doubt their truthfulness, believers in the orthodox hell have a foundation upon which to base their assertions. The truth of the fact is becoming more acknowledged that whatsoever an individual sows that shall he also reap, and that the kingdom of the hells is within as much as the heavenly state, and is a result of internal conditions; and as "birds of a feather flock together," so those of the same type of mind, with the same ambitions and desires will congregate together and augment either the heaven or hell of their lives.

If every mortal would read "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands" and apply the truth that is announced by the author, it would revolutionize our present civilization; but the ascent up the mount of spiritual progress is slow and each individual soul must pass through an experience which alone can be his true guide, and with the majority of earth's children what is given to them as the experience of some other mortal is taken with large grains of allowance. To be convinced they must individually travel over the route.

The statements made by the author of the "Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," are confirmed by the testimony of all who have had their interior soul life illuminated by the truth, and those who have developed their clairvoyant sight have especially confirmed the statements made. Ann Lee, the founder of Shaker Communion, was a highly gifted medium, one who lived in, and held communion with the residents of the spirit land as perfectly as the ordinary mortal does with material things. She made the statement to some in her day that if they could see what she saw of the condition of those who were in the hells of spirit life, they would be horrified; they had sown to conditions of which they were now reaping the harvest, and in her beneficent visits to those places she rendered assistance to those who were anxious to leave their degraded state and advance toward a better one.

It is a blessed thing to have a knowledge of the truth, and to be willing to be guided by its ministrations, but to all souls who love their fellow-beings and are anxious to benefit them, there is sorrow when they realize the condition of those who will not because they cannot receive the light; the conditions of their spirtual development preventing their illumination. The law of evolutionary growth will have to work a change in their spiritual status before they can understand what is required of them in regard to their advancement.

The most important fact in regard to the instructions of the spiritual philosophy is that it is teaching mankind their moral responsibility, and that none of those universal laws that govern life can be violated without the penalty being paid. That one lesson is of more vital importance than all of the minor details of its manifestations. All else are secondary, assistant forces in helping to establish that one vital truth.

Among all denominations there are mediumistic souls who are being used by the spiritual powers as instrumentalities to advance the truth, and their testimony is condemning those false doctrines that are striving to hold progressive life in bondage to that which cannot nourish the expanding energies of the immortal spirit.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninty-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention, is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly due to catarrh. We are receiving hundreds of letters like the following.

Deafness Cured.

Sp'gfield, Mass., Mar. 30, '02.

Gentlemen:—Received the Actina all right, and would say it has done wonders for me. I have been deaf about five years so that I could not hear a ticking of a clock, neither could I engage in conversation, as it was very difficult to make me understand even with a speaking tube. After treating with several doctors and receiving no help or encouragement from them, I expected never to hear again and tried to make the best of it. A friend called my attention to Actina, saying that it had cured her. Not having much faith in it I did not use it according to directions at first, but after having it about 6 months noticed an improvement, and in five or six weeks after was able to hear public speaking and converse with anyone without any trouble. Quite a number of the afflicted called on me and are greatly encouraged by my experience.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

You should sign your own name and address to the items you send in; otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

Dr. C. W. Littlefield, of Alexandria, Ind., is open for engagements for the camp-meetings during the coming season.

Dr. John A. Wyeth, the discoverer of the hot water cure for tumor, who returned from Carlsbad and Paris to New York on the Kron Prinz Wilhelm, told of a wonderful theory advanced before the London Medical Congress at which Lord Lister presided, by Professor W. H. Welch, who holds the chair of bacteriology at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. "It was on immunization from all diseases," said Dr. Wyeth. "Professor Welch lays claim to having made some discoveries along the line of a universal virus which will give immunity from or prove a remedial agent in all diseases. All a man will have to do will be to get inoculated with the virus and he will never catch anything. The theory is entirely logical." Dr. Wyeth said Carlsbad, with its 50,000 invalids who thought they were ill, who were ill and didn't know it and who didn't know whether they were ill or not, was a show.

Christen Hoy says: "When a person is under hypnotic influence (it need not be hypnotic sleep) he performs actions that are foreign to his temperament. Such actions denote a change of specifically the same kind as is brought about by conversion. I cannot here follow this parallel farther. I will just note that hypnotism has had to encounter the same kind of skepticism that meets the sudden conversions. If anybody will take the trouble to investigate the methods employed by the Salvation Army, that has for its principal if not sole aim the conversion of sinners, and compare these methods with those employed by hypnotists, I think he must surely notice the similarity. We find the same endeavor to interest people, to put them in a passive state of mind, and to give the same suggestions over and over again, sometimes in the same words, but more often with just enough variation to avoid irritation. Compare also faith cure with hypnotic or magnetic healing. A possible explanation of the power of prayer is, in the first place, that many believers claim that the effect of prayer is directly on the one uttering the prayer, and that the general belief is that prayers may be and often are answered in different ways from the way wanted. In hypnotism is used what is called auto-suggestion, the individual giving himself suggestions in order to accomplish a certain result. Might not prayers be such auto-suggestions? May conversions not be manipulations belonging to the same class of facts as the hypnotic manipulations?"

Says Freedom, a Manilla newspaper: "There is insurrection to the papal authority among Filipino Catholics, and the Union Obrera Democratica have gone so far as to form a Filipino Catholic organization outside of the authority of the Church of Rome, name a bishop, or rather a president for the Philippine Islands, and bishops for each province, all of whom are renegade Catholic priests. The honorary presidents of the new church are Governor Taft, Emilio Aguinaldo, and Commissioner Tavera. The bishop or president of the Philippines is the former notorious renegade priest, Father Gregorio Aglipay; the executive president, Pascual Poblete. The pope is to be defied if he will not recognize this as the Catholic church in the Philippines. The churches are to be taken from the Spanish priests and friars and a general revolution of religious affairs is to take place." It is to counteract the work of this native church that Rome has sent the priest Guidi to the Philippines.

The Rome correspondent of the Morning Leader, writing on the 14th inst., said: "An additional interest has been given to the story of the death of Count Bonmartini at Bologna by a remarkable instance of telepathy in connection with it related by the 'Corriere della Sera,' one of the principal Milanese journals. There is a lady of Milan, the wife of a Signor M., who formerly knew Count Bonmartini. On the night on which the murder appeared in the papers, the lady suddenly woke her husband and declared that she had learnt in her sleep that the Count had been killed by the young lawyer Murri. Signor M. paid little attention to his wife's ideas, although she begged him to write to his brother, who is an inspector of the police force of Bologna. His astonishment when Murri's confession was published may be imagined."

The Torch of Reason says: "The murder of Mrs. Pulitzer by the grandson of Brigham Young in New York, was a Bible sacrament of blood Atonement, justified by texts the murderer selected just before he committed the horrid deed: Such as Lev. xvii:11; Heb. ix:22; Rev. xiii:10; Rom. i:32; I. Cor. v:5. If these passages mean anything they mean murder, and so Paul used them. (See Judge C. B. Waite's History of Christianity, p. 522). In view of this and repeated Bible and religious murders (like that of Freeman), is not the Bible the book not to be allowed in general circulation? Were any other book as dangerous, would it not have been stopped off by some authority long ago? If that is not possible, it should be discredited by the Truth about it in every possible way. The Science which kills it as a revelation is the only practical remedy!"

Wednesday evening meetings are being held in Unity Hall, New London, Ct. October 8, the rostrum was occupied by E. J. Bowtell, of Olneyville, R. I. Mrs. Effie J. Webster, of Lynn, Mass., occupied it October 15.

Important Correction.—Dr. E. A. Palmer writes from Blair, Neb.: "I saw in The Progressive Thinker a notice of the late decision of our Supreme Court on religious exercises in the public schools. I want to set you right on one point. You say that the suit was brought by an Atheist; that is a mistake. Dr. Daniel Freeman is a Spiritualist. I know this to be true as I have been in correspondence with him from the time the suit first started, but there is no credit due the Spiritualists or Liberals of Nebraska for the victory over bigotry. To Dr. Freeman and to him alone belongs the credit. He has fought the battle through the courts single handed except a small sum I collected from a few of my liberal neighbors and forwarded to him. Although I appealed to the president of the Nebraska State Association of Spiritualists and to the Omaha Philosophical Society in behalf of the cause to aid him in his gallant fight against the combined orthodox forces, but neither of them did anything or sent him a nickel. Besides breaking the back of orthodoxy in our public schools, Dr. Freeman has the honor of being the first homesteader in the United States. He is now living on Homestead No. 1, near Beatrice, this state."

J. McKinstry writes from Nelson, Ill.: "Although many persons, like myself, agree with Spiritualists in disbelieving and denouncing the superstitions of orthodoxy, yet we cannot be convinced of the reality of spiritual communion without having the evidence of our corporeal senses. We hear and read much about mediums who cause spirits to materialize, and who receive written or spoken messages from them, yet we have never had the opportunity of getting ocular demonstration, and nothing besides such proof can satisfy us that spirits do or can communicate with mortals. Although within seven miles of where I reside there are three cities containing in all as many as 20,000 inhabitants, I have never heard of a medium in either of them who claimed the power of invoking spirits or of getting communications from them. If we could see materializing or spiritual slate writing at our homes, or under circumstances where there is no possibility of fraud, we would become believers."

The following from the Dunedin Budget, New Zealand, will tell you of Mrs. Brigham's work there: "The Dunedin Psychological Society are in earnest in their endeavor to bring science and reform before the public eye. Mrs. Helen Temple Brigham, who is to

The following comes from Snohomish, Wash.: "John Nelson and his wife, who live several miles from town, tell a strange story of a dream, and a treasure revealed thereby. About six months ago Mrs. Nelson had a dream. In it she came to Snohomish, and tying her horse, wended her way down a winding path leading to the bottom of a deep gulch, which passes into the Snohomish river. At the bottom of the gulch she saw a board eight inches wide and two feet long. She raised the board and discovered a twenty-dollar gold piece, a dime, a nickel and a penny beneath it. The next morning she told her husband about her dream. Last week she had the identical dream again. The couple drove to town and tied up at their accustomed place. Mr. Nelson jokingly said, 'You had better look for your $20 now.' His wife took him at his word, going down the path she had seen in her dreams, curiosity impelling her to see just how much would come true. She had never been there before, but every inch of the way was as seen in the dream. At the bottom of the hill and just on the brink of a brook lay the board, as seen twice by her in her dreams. This was becoming too realistic, and she had to screw up her courage before she could look beneath the board. When, however, she did so, there lay the coins, exactly the ones she had dreamed of. She was inclined to faint, and made haste to leave the uncanny spot. Mr. Nelson, less startled, but sufficiently impressed to make his hands unsteady, picked up the coins and came down town to relate the wonderful tale. Mrs. Nelson was almost ill with excitement; her husband was also nervous. Both are absolutely mystified. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are trustworthy people, and none who know them doubt that the strange find was made. They have lived in this vicinity for years, and are not the kind of people who would be apt to get up a hoax."

speak for them on Spiritualism, in the Victoria Hall, comes with very high credentials as an inspirational speaker and poetess. She has held the platform in the New York Spiritual and Ethical Society for twenty years, and has a world-wide reputation as a speaker and expounder of modern thought. She comes via Melbourne and Sydney, where she has spoken before large audiences with immense success. This is her first visit to the Australasian colonies, and a treat is assured all those who go to hear her. She is accompanied by Miss Cushman, president of the New York Society."

G. H. Brooks writes from Newport, Ky.: "I am still at No. 508 Lexington avenue, Newport, and will respond to calls for funerals. The work is going on here very nicely indeed."

The marriage of Miss Alice Etta Schumacher and Dale Owen Dobson took place Wednesday evening, October 15, at the home of the bride's parents, 196 South Seventh street, San Jose, Cal. Miss Schumacher is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Schumacher, and a most charming young lady. She is a graduate of the Santa Clara High School and also of the San Jose Normal, and is a musician of much ability. Mr. Dobson is the son of the late Dr. A. B. Dobson, and a promising young business man of Oakland.

First Progressive Church of Christ, Spiritualist, holds services every Sunday night at 8 o'clock at Schott's Hall, 1203 and 1205 Belmont avenue, corner Racine avenue, Lake View; Wednesday nights at 124 Dearborn street. Rev. A. Lundeberg will lecture on "The Mission of Spiritualism." This church is in no way a business concern, but will endeavor to be a home and a help to every honest seeker after truth, who wants to investigate Spiritualism and find out for himself whether its claims are true or not. The services will commence the first Sunday in November.

W. J. Hicks writes: "Ottumwa, Iowa, has again had the pleasure of hearing an honest medium; this time Mrs. M. A. Burland, of Chicago, Ill. Mrs. Burland tells me she never advertises. Well, she should for we out of the city have no way of knowing the names of mediums, to whom we may write to fill engagements, and if those who are honest keep their names from the public, and the dishonest ones keep their names before the public, can we wonder why the fake medium gets the advantage over the honest one? This alone ought to be enough to convince every medium that it is right and proper for them to advertise in the acknowledged Spiritualist papers. Mrs. Burland is one of the very few speakers in our cause today that can take their subject from the audience and handle it in a masterly manner. She gave us four lectures here and every one of them was given in an excellent manner, and has won for her a place in the front rank with the people here. If the National and state societies would have a system whereby they would send into states and cities speakers in turn, it would not be long before the locals would be able to support themselves, and in that way all these hungry mortals would have a change to get fed on the truth they so eagerly seek. If it could be arranged whereby Mrs. Burland and all like her could be put out on a salary per month, they would do an untold amount of good. This medium is also one of the few that does her work for a reasonable price. She left here for Hayesville, Ia., and from there home to Chicago; then to fill a six weeks' engagement at St. Joseph, Mo."

Mrs. Gussie Farmer writes from Houston, Texas: "Having a little time I will give you an outline of work done here by Mrs. Laura B. Payne, of Topeka, Kansas. She came here the latter part of August, and gave Houston most of her time. She left here last week, Oct. 3, with mutual regrets by all of us, the expression from all being that she is the best lecturer ever heard on a Spiritualist rostrum here. At this time the Houston Spiritualist Society is in better condition, financially and spiritually, than it has been in several years before, and all the new members that come into our midst are substantial, respectable people. We are rejoicing that Mrs. Payne came to Houston and started us on the right direction once more. She also gave quite a nice drama for the benefit of our society, out of which we realized about $30. I must not forget to mention the many nice little home circles or parlor entertainments that she gave while here, in psychometric readings and vocal solos."

Rev. Elijah R. Johnson, one of the most widely-known Methodist ministers in the west, died at his home in Mulberry, Ind. He was 72 years old. He had the distinction of having died twice, according to the opinions of noted physicians. His first supposed demise was in June, 1869, when he was the pastor of the Oakland Hill Mission church, now Congress Street Methodist Episcopal church, in Lafayette, Ind. He worked so hard in building up his congregation and erecting a new house of worship that he was overcome by nervous prostration and after a week's illness apparently died. Dr. Kiefer, then one of the state's most noted physicians, pronounced him dead, and this opinion was concurred in by other doctors. Mr. Johnson always had been opposed to embalming and his body was not embalmed. To this fact he owed thirty-three years more of active life. The body lay three days while arrangements for the funeral were made, Rev. J. W. Joyce, now Bishop Joyce, had charge of the funeral service. The services had proceeded to the conclusion of the scripture lesson and the preacher had just uttered the name of Mr. Johnson, preparatory to pronouncing a eulogy, when a sudden gust of wind blew a door shut and the supposed dead man sat up in his coffin. Two weeks later Mr. Joyce accompanied Mr. Johnson to his church and from the pulpit said: "Here in this pulpit with me is a man that has come back to us from the gates of death." Many attempts have been made to get Mr. Johnson to make a statement as to his sensations during his cataleptic state. His invariable reply was: "What I saw then I shall never tell to mortal man."

Abbie E. Sheets writes to the Spiritualists of California: "I intend to pass the winter in Southern California, and I desire to make engagements for inspirational platform lectures with societies in the state. I will speak for a month or longer in a place, or if desired, will make arrangements for the entire season as settled speaker. I invite your correspondence and refer you to Harrison D. Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, or any well known worker of our cause, for reference. I hope to close an engagement at an early date. Address me at Grand Ledge, Mich., Box 833."

B. Frank Schmid, president, writes: "The First Spiritualist Church of Indianapolis, Ind., opened the season's work in September. The society is moving along in the even tenor of its way, and with twelve years of experience finds itself in greater need of help and encouragement than in years gone by, owing to the indifference of Spiritualists themselves. During the past week officers were elected to serve for the coming year, and among them were a number who had served the society continuously for twelve years, and they deserve great credit for their stability. Their unselfish devotion to the cause has made it possible for Spiritualism to live as a movement in our city. It seems more and more difficult all the while to supply the abnormal demands of an unthinking public, and unless fed by sensations their interest lags, while their minds dwarf and their souls remain dormant. We have had with us during October, Miss Lizzie Harlow, of Haydenville, Mass, one of the most intellectual of women upon our platform, with oratorical ability of no mean degree, and with deep philosophical truths for the world, she attracts the thinker and reasoner. She stands as a beacon light of advanced thought along all lines of reform, and has endeared herself in our hearts such as few have in late years. She has been re-engaged for three months of 1903, and may she be spared many years of usefulness, is the earnest prayer of one who loves the truth and appreciates ability. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley comes for November and December. Although a stranger among us, yet we shall extend her a most hearty welcome."

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

Read this Carefully.—T. Holmes writes from W. Superior, Wis.: "Mrs. Elizabeth Holmes, the Minneapolis medium, who held fourteen successful meetings on Sunday nights in this city, has begun meetings in Duluth. She had meetings there the two last Sundays, in Columbia Hall, with fair attendance. Mrs. Holmes is trying to open the field in Duluth, a town with a $50 monthly license for mediums. She has engaged an attorney and has an amendment to said ordinance before the city council, which reads, that mediums with credentials from the N. S. A., or societies auxiliary to the same, shall be exempt from paying any license. She is fighting this ordinance single-handed, and asks for the prayer and good thought of all earnest Spiritualists, who believe in honest mediumship, and do not approve of pulling up the wheat with the tares. Through her work in St. Paul, Minneapolis and West Superior, she has shown that she is capable of representing Spiritualism at any place, and it was by request of Duluth people that she came to this part of the country."

W. H. Burr, of Washington, D. C., writes: "Henry M. Parkhurst, who first gave to women an occupation by the use of the type-writing machine, lives almost opposite the residence of Mollie Fancher, the sleepless girl of Brooklyn. He and his family were for many years, if not still, the only near neighbors allowed to visit Mollie. Through them I was permitted to see Mollie three times in successive years. I made the first public announcement of her case in the Boston Investigator, suppressing her name and locality. Later, when her case was made public in a Brooklyn paper at considerable length, I sent the article to the Banner of Light, with an endorsement by way of preface. In the early '50s, Mr. Parkhurst tested the Fox girls at Washington; and he tested Mollie Fancher's clairvoyance by getting from her the reading of a printed slip under seal, which he himself had not seen. I ventilated that test in the Banner and other papers. I have seen Mollie write her name on a card for my wife, and we have letters from her written elegantly in pencil. We have also wax flowers and a tidy made by her."

Harry J. Moore is now located at 645 W. Sixty-third street, Chicago, where he can be addressed.

H. A. Cross writes: "Mrs. Maggie Waite and Dr. Burgess have begun a series of Spiritual meetings in Kimball Hall. Sunday evening, Oct. 19, I am to deliver an address at their meeting, when I will present evidence of the fact that many years before the Fox Sisters were born, a seance was held in this country by the use of a cabinet specially constructed for the purpose, which was very successful. Anyone interested in the subject will be satisfied, I feel assured, with the proof of my assertion. I gather my information from a historical work which I procured this season on the occasion of my summer vacation."

A. W. Kellar writes: "The meetings of the Englewood Spiritual Union are well attended in spite of the bad weather. Harry J, Moore's lectures are appreciated, and he is doing good work in organizing. Quite a number of new members have joined our society since opening up of our fall meetings. His friendly and social nature harmonizes well. He is liked by all members and workers of the society. Mrs. Gehring follows his lectures by spirit messages. She gives positive evidence of spirit return. Her messages are correct in every way, and recognized by all who receive them. We expect to have with us Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter for the month of November."

James Newton writes from Toledo, Ohio: "The Independent Society of Spiritualists, Toledo, Ohio, has purchased a lot adjoining the new Y. M. C. A. building on 10th street. The lot is 100 by 42 feet; the cost, $3,000. The association has made its first payment, $1,250. As soon as the lot has been paid for steps will be taken towards the erection of a temple which will be devoted to the needs of the society. The building will be the first of its kind in Toledo. Plans have not yet been laid for the building, but it is intended to have it sufficiently large to meet all requirements. At present the society meets in the Post Room of the Memorial Building, and will continue there until the new temple is completed. We have already had the promise of several large donations toward the proposed temple. The meetings of the society during the past month have been served by Mrs. Marian Carpenter. She will be followed next month by Mrs. Lole Prior, of Washington, D. C."

Mrs. L. LeSieur writes: "At the meeting of the Band of Harmony, Thursday, Oct. 16, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, our president, spoke of the passing to spirit life, recently, one of our most able workers in the cause of Spiritualism, Mrs. Emma Nickerson Warne, the wife of our esteemed brother, Dr. Warne, President of the State Spiritualists Association. Resolutions of sympathy were passed by the Band of Harmony, to be tendered Dr. Warne."

Mrs. F. J. Geiger writes: "I have taken your valuable paper three years, and feel it is so full of life and love to all humanity that I cannot well get along without it. I have four of your premium books, and am rejoicing to think that shortly my time will be out so that I can have Hudson Tuttle's book. Dr. Julia M. Walton, of Jackson, Mich., gave our society a lecture and seance at my home which produced great enthusiasm, and this third lecture since the organization of our society a year ago is doing its good work, as is plainly shown around about us. Our society is small and weak, but is gaining strength, and we hope for enough so that we may be able to spread the gospel far and wide."

Very elaborated and beautiful service, accompanied the public christening, baptism and giving of name to the daughter of Mr. C. Long, at the Church of the Students of Nature, 1565 Milwaukee avenue, on Sunday evening, October 5, Mrs. M. Schumacher, the pastor, officiating.

Mary L. Bettes writes: "On October 16 the Lake Brady Camp Association purchased the grounds they had leased the past season of Mr. and Mrs. D. R Brown, and in addition have also bought nearly a half acre adjacent and a small grocery and all the fixtures, paying cash for the same. Some shade trees have been ordered which will be set out this fall. About twenty-five lots have already been spoken for and a number of cottages will be put up in the spring before the camp opens. It is expected that many who have been waiting for the foundation stone of Lake Brady camp to be laid before investing, will now come forward and add their mite toward building up one of the best spiritual camps in the country, for nature has done her part, as it is one of the most beautiful spots for a summer home that can be imagined, and is easy of access from all points. The management are already planning their programme for next season and will secure the best talent possible. Those desiring further information will receive it promptly by addressing A. G. Keck, Akron, Ohio."

J. White is holding meetings at Fort Scott, Kansas. He can be addressed at Room 8, Huntington House.

Henry Heaton writes: "I have just finished reading The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science. It has been a long time since I have read anything that has given me so much pleasure. I wish that every person who has brains, and acquired knowledge enough to appreciate it, could be compelled to read it. The writer has a remarkable power of expressing, in forcible English; English so forcible that I do not see how any intelligent reader can fail to see that he is right. I found but very few things in the book that I did not agree with wholly."

Mrs. F. A. Logan will resume her Circle of Harmony at her residence, 1218 Railroad avenue, Alameda, Cal., every Sunday at 2 p. m.

Nebraska State Spiritualists Association.

The ninth annual convention of the State Spiritualists Association of Nebraska was held in Lincoln, October 4 and 5, 1902, in the G. A. R. hall. Owing to a down-pouring rain at the time for meeting on the 4th, no business was done. The 5th being Sunday, a fine, clear morning, enabled us to conduct our business with harmony and order. I am glad to report a good financial success, besides paying for hall rent for three meetings at $5 we were enabled to pay on past debts incurred, the sum of $23. After business we entered into an interesting discussion on Organization, the majority agreeing to the proposition that Spiritualists should support organizations. The new officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: Max Hoffmann, president, Lincoln; Mr. Madsen, vice-president, Lincoln; Mr. James Campbell, secretary, Havelock; Mrs. Mary J. Bonney, treasurer, Lincoln; Mr. G. S. Klock, trustee, Lincoln.

A very intelligent and attentive audience of about 300 met at the evening service Sunday, addressed by Mr. Campbell, followed by Max Hoffmann, our new president, in his own original style. He has a wonderful influence over the class of people who are searching for proof. His tests are very convincing. We expect that the slumbering forces of Nebraska Spiritualists will be awakened to an active interest in the cause, and that more members will be enrolled ere another convention comes around.

Dr. Sweringen Wants Light.

To the Editor of the Journal-Gazette:

Since we are to have two lectures on "Christian Science," pro and con, by the Hon. W. G. Ewing, of Chicago, and the Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, of New York, my attention has been directed to the subject, having also received a very kind and special invitation to hear the former gentleman.

If you will allow me space in your valuable journal for a few remarks upon the subject, you will greatly oblige not only the undersigned, but many of your readers who are interested in its discussion. They desire to get as much information concerning it as possible, and hope that the Hon. W. G. Ewing will clear up some points that evidently need clearing.

Personally, I would be satisfied to have my old question answered viz.: How do "Christian Scientists" cure the itch? Like Banquo's ghost, this question will not down, in my contemplation of the claims of "Christian Science." At the risk of being again accused by my "Christian Science" friends, of "itching" for newspaper notoriety, I ask it once more.

As regular physicians, we cured the itch with sulphur ointment and like remedies, long before we knew the cause of the disease. By the aid of the microscope, science (just ordinary, every-day, natural science) established as an absolute, undeniable truth that the itch is caused by minute animals or insects getting on and under the skin and rapidly increasing in number. But the discovery of the cause of the disease, has made no change in its treatment, sulphur ointment being as successful now, as before its etiology was established.

Now, what I want to know is, How can "Christian Scientists" cure the itch without using some "material remedy" that will kill those little microscopical insects, since it is only by killing them that a cure can be effected?

What is true of the itch is equally true of tuberculosis, trichinosis, tapeworm, phthiriasis and other diseases. Where would "Christian Science" be in a case of pediculosis pubis? I want the "Christian Science" modus operandi of cure of these diseases, because if merely thinking at them, or about them, or praying over them, or reading from Mrs. Eddy's book concerning them will kill the cussed little animals that produce them, I will engage to go hunting for bear, deer, quail, squirrel and rabbit, without gun or dog, and return with such a display of game as would make the nimrods of the country appear ridiculous.

It is claimed that "In discarding material remedies for healing, Christian scientists are but following the example of Jesus, who neither used nor recommended them." Now how do "Christian Scientists know that Jesus never used or recommended material remedies? Have all his words and works been recorded? Did he ever openly condemn material remedies? He certainly made use of an ointment composed of clay and spittle; fig poultices, oil anointing and other "material remedies" are mentioned in the Bible.

That "material remedies" were used and recommended in Bible times, may be inferred from the fact that they were kept in stock as they now are; for do we not read in the tenth chapter of Ecclesiastes that "Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savor?" So it appears that there were druggists even in those days.

Hoping that Hon W. G. Ewing will shed some light on these questions in his forthcoming lecture, I remain,

Yours, not afraid of the Truth,
H. V. SWERINGEN.

Says Mr. Barrett Is Mistaken.

In regard to the report published in The Progressive Thinker from Harrison D. Barrett, our worthy president of the N. S. A., I desire to call the attention of Spiritualists to one very flagrant error. Under the part of said report entitled "Clergy Rates," he says:

"No difficulty whatever has been experienced by the ministers of our denomination in obtaining recognition at the hands of the four great passenger associations of the West, when they have been legally entitled to the courtesy of clergy permits."

Does the president think that we of the West will let such a flagrant misrepresentation to our National convention go unchallenged?

Farther along under the same head, he says: "They (the Passenger Associations) have dealt with all of our people fairly and impartially, with no discrimination whatever against any one of our worthy workers." I have in my possession a letter from one of the passenger agents in which he states: "We will grant clergy permits to all workers in Spiritualism whom their National president will endorse." After examining my credentials, Mr. Barrett wrote that he could see nothing wrong with them, but that the passenger agent refused to grant my request and he (Barrett), was very sorry.

I have the honor of being president of the Kansas State Spiritualist Association, and we have fourteen licensed ministers in our state and only two of them have clergy permits—two worthy and twelve unworthy. I am greatly handicapped therefore, in getting my workers into the field, on account of transportation.

I am a delegate to the National convention, but not being a "worthy" worker and not "legally" entitled to half rates, I shall be unable to attend, though I should like very much to do so. It will be my earnest hope and thought that the good spirits may guide our delegates in selecting a president for the ensuing year, so that those of us who are struggling in the West may stand upon an equal footing with our worthy brothers and sisters who are in closer touch with the "able and efficient passenger agents."

A. SCOTT BLEDSOE.

Approves of Mr. Barrett's Work.

To the Editor:—Your valuable paper has been rife with wisdom and counsel from many learned and able writers for some time and it has interested me to a great extent to learn how people will differ on a subject that we all ought to unite on in some way.

Now regarding the National Association. I never read its constitution and by-laws so do not know except in a general way what is purposes are and how they are carried out, but I will say this much for the president, the only officer that I have had the pleasure of meeting personally. He is a gentleman and one that we ought to be proud of at the head of the organization. He is an able writer and speaker and a harmonizer as well. This present week there will be incorporated under the state law of Michigan an organization to carry on the summer camp-meetings at Briggs Park. On our charter list we have several of our wealthiest and most respected citizens. The organization is the outcome of the meetings here this summer and aside from the heroic and faithful labor of our chairman, D. A. Herrick, nothing did more to bring it about than the visit of Mr. Barrett. I do not disparage the work of any who were with us this season, but the visit of Mr. Barrett left a good impression and we were all benefited by his having been among us.

Personally I think that the National Association should be composed of state organizations and that each state should have representation as deemed wise by the majority. Each state society should levy a per capita tax on its membership to defray its expenses and the National as well. There should be an official organ printed in the interest of Spiritualism, and the workings should be fully set forth in this organ. Any and all amendments to the constitution and by-laws should be printed in it for a specified time and all delegates to the convention could then be instructed how to cast the vote of the state organization.

WOMEN VOTERS, ATTENTION!

In the general interest of the coming election for legislators and other state officials, there is danger that the women may overlook the fact that they have a voice in the election of important officers, namely three trustees of the State University. There will, doubtless, be more interest than usual in the election of these trustees. The Federation of Women's Clubs meets at Champaign and is entertained by the State University and the women ought, in return, to have interest enough to go to the polls and vote for those who will further the good of the school. Women's interest in all educational matters has been greatly augmented by the condition of the public schools in Chicago and they will surely not neglect the opportunity to express themselves concerning the one institution in whose management they have some voice. However they may feel in regard to voting in general, there are few women who do not consider that they have a right to take active measures in regard to the education of their children. Those women also believe that it is only just that they should have an equal voice with men on all questions which affect their interests equally, should not fail to register and vote, if for no other reasons, to prove the falsity of the remark sometimes heard, that women will not vote even when given the opportunity.

Women must register in the same manner as men. Several women have been nominated by the various parties. The Democrats nominated Dr. Julia Holmes Smith and two men. The Republicans nominated Laura B. Evans and two men. The Prohibitionists nominated Marie C. Brehm, Narcissa A. Akers and one man, and the Socialists nominated Gertrude B. Hunt, Lydia Swanson and one man.

Three candidates are to be elected and the voter may select any three candidates nominated, whether they be on the same or different tickets.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS AND
Other Offerings.
BY
EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Prof. W. H. Burr: Q. What do you think of the prophecies of St. Malachy? Who was he?

A. He is as mythical as Jack the Giant Killer and the prophecies he is alleged to have written are entirely spurious. They are adroitly worded, and show that they were composed in recent times. Of course it is difficult to prove that he not exist, or to prove that he did. A saint, or a prophet is of easy manufacture by the Catholic church. They come when there is necessity, and a "lost manuscript" is just as readily brought to light when demanded.

S. D. Gray: Q. Will you explain the subjective mind, which Prof. Hudson says means so much?

A. This question has been fully answered in preceding numbers of The Progressive Thinker, and it is not advisable to enlarge on the answers given. We believe that in the study of the mind, it must be taken as a unit. Objective and subjective are one, and not distinct. "Sub-conscious," at its best must be admitted is only a "working hypothesis," by which psychic phenomena may be explained. It is an assumption unproved, and no attempt has been made to demonstrate its existence.

Fred S. Guest: Q. Is the primal germ male or female? As for soul mates, are there two halves made for each other, which if not united in this life will be in the next?

A. The "primal germ" of all living beings is neither male nor female, but a blending of both in psychic qualities and physical organization. The accidents of environment, and perhaps the initial start determines the sex.

The matter of "soul mates" and "right halves" was discussed at length in this department some time since. It is an ancient speculation which ought not to have been revived. It is a pernicious belief and has not the slightest evidence in its support.

It has no support for it is entirely imaginary; it is pernicious, because husband and wife who believe it, instead of adapting themselves to each other, as in all cases necessary, will magnify slight differences into proof that they are not the right halves, and hence not "soul mates." They will then instead of modifying their characters in harmony with each other, go on a still hunt for the missing "half," which they usually, for a time at least, think they find.

Yet more this "two halves" speculation and "soul mate," has given rise to the yet more infatuating belief in "affinity." This has been extended into spirit life, as intimated in the question, for if the right mates do not get together in this life they "will in the next!"

Such a belief is immoral in its influence, and is the destroyer of domestic happiness. In the next life those who are in sympathy with each other enjoy each others' society as long as it is enjoyable. The distinction of sex may for a time be a factor in this spiritual attraction, like many other characteristics of the earth life, but ultimately disappears.

"Mother:" Q. So much has been said about the influence of motherhood, what is there to say about the influence of fatherhood?

A. Nearly everything, for while the mother has been held responsible for the character and training of the child, nothing has been said of the influence of the father. Those who have written about prenatal conditions have placed such stress on the mother, that the father has been lost sight of.

The influence and duties of motherhood! High and holy it may be, but what of fatherhood? To me it has greater power in fixing the character of the offspring.

Mother earth will take the seeds of wheat, the corn and the bitter ragweed, and give each the careful nourishment of her prolific breast. The sun pours its warm rays alike over all, and the clouds both impartially with the showers. The wheat will bend its head of life-giving grain; the corn flaunt its tassels in the wind, the ragweed mature because so bitter nothing will disturb it. The maternity of Nature is the same, but she cannot overcome the germinal influence imparted to the seed she fosters.

When will the old idea that the wife belongs to the husband, in bondage worse than slavery, be outgrown? The Bible is responsible for its preservation and continuance, and thus making two kinds of morality, one for man, another of woman.

The man after reckless years of "sowing wild oats," morally and physically polluted and diseased, expects and usually does marry a woman, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion. For her purity and trust, he gives the wreck of what dissipation has left.

It seems a mockery to talk of the holy influence such a mother must exert over children with such a father! A grim and horrible mockery! Will not the seed of the rag-weed mature into a ragweed, heaven watched and tended? The more generous the rains and more warmth of sun, the ranker is its growth.

Maternal care! How is it rewarded when the fatherhood is thus impaired?

She may be doomed to have her children die early, born with too weak vitality to survive perhaps a day, a week or year. More agonizing, they may thrive until the years of puberty without marked organic trouble and even of precocious intellect, then to become suddenly moral degenerates, or to succumb to some fatal malady, usually consumption. Thus are the sins of the parents visited on the offspring, and nature sternly refuses to allow the continuance of the imperfect and disease cuts them from the chain of the living.

Before this mocking praise of the divinity of motherhood let there be at least a mention of the divinity of fatherhood. The divine child, manger-born, was divine not because of his mother, but of his father.

Motherhood with such paternity, that of a clean and unpolluted life may be all that the most enthusiastic claim. The mother has something more than a weed to care for, and may place her hopes for a child with health, intellect and moral courage.

On the other hand, can we be surprised that the sensitive nature of the mother, outraged and intensified, reacts on the character of the child, and makes still worse that which in the beginning was bad?

The time-old legend of the primitive pair in Eden conveys this lesson most forcibly. Eve the confiding mother, with the fatherhood of the serpent—symbol of evil—had Cain, the first and typical murderer!

M. A. R.: Q. What examples, if any, are there in the Bible, of spirit writing?

A. By the spirit of Elijah, II. Chronicles, xxi:12.

By the "fingers of a man's hand," writing on the wall of the palace. Belshazzar "saw the part of the hand that wrote."—Dan. v:5.

This was reproduced in the seance given by D. D. Home to Louis Bonaparte, the hand of Napoleon holding the pencil and rapidly writing messages, which, if we believe the words of the medium, if followed would have changed the destiny of France.

Mrs. Amy Pierce: Q. Can you give me any information about the "Speaking Dial"?

A. Nothing farther than that contained in the article by E. D. Titus in late number of The Progressive Thinker. If such an instrument were possible to construct, it would be of inestimable value. How far, however, any medium may assist a spirit in producing audible sounds, is an open question, and the claim to any discovery in that direction should receive closest investigation.

THE HOME CIRCLE.

Excellent Progress Made in Materialization.

The fraudulent phenomena that have been palmed off on the public for the genuine by the physical and would-be physical mediums, especially in the materialization phase, have no doubt caused skepticism to arise in the minds of many of those who are philosophical Spiritualists, but have never had the opportunity of witnessing this material returning of those whom we have called dead, but who come to us again in the body, and volubly assert, and conclusively prove, that they are more alive than when they were participating in the probationary earth life.

Spiritual chemistry, of which we, as earth denizens, have little knowledge, can produce these results. How do I know it? Well, friend spiritualists, I have no occasion to tell you an untruth, I am unable to see how I could be the gainer thereby. I assert that I am not a hypnotic subject, I am quite sure that a home for the feeble-minded, or an insane asylum would hardly be an appropriate refuge. Neither have I been over enthusiastic in my investigations and observations, and now what do I know and what have I seen?

In our city some two years ago a home developing circle was started, principally to ascertain if one Wm. Snyder (a blacksmith by occupation) would become a materializing medium as had been asserted by the spirit help of a traveling medium who had previously given us a visit. A circle was formed; and not desiring to ask for space to go into details, I will say, in a few sittings he got materialized hands and other manifestations, and shortly thereafter came forms of his guides and controls. Now, we are enabled to have a fair light, as the spirit help have increased it from time to time, and our friends and relatives from the farther shore can come and often stay from five to fifteen minutes, conversing in independent voices or by the aid of the trumpet. Mr. Snyder, contrary to the ordinary custom, makes no charge to sitters who choose to pass the evening in investigation, or in visiting with their spirit friends. He gladly submits to any test conditions that are not injurious or degrading, and only a few evenings since his feet were enveloped in flour, hands filled with same, no clothing except pants and shirt of dark material, and other conditions imposed and precautions taken, which proved the fact of spirit return, through, not transfiguration, but pure materialization; for Dr. Powell, the cabinet chemist, sent forth from the cabinet many forms to convince those of the sitters who had become imbued with the old idea that their friends were dead. All came dressed in white, but different kinds of material, Pontiac, so stately and large of stature, Black Leaf, much smaller and as agile as a cat, Jerry Stevens, who was a real estate dealer in the earth life, and is still a good talker, Mr. Sommers, a German with his peculiar accent, and Charley Snyder, with his mirthful laugh. (He is a son of the medium, and was drowned several years ago). Mrs. McClain, the mother of Mrs. Wells, comes to us and converses on topics and happenings that transpired prior to and since her taking off.

I would like to have the space to relate in detail the various manifestations that are given us, but I am aware that The Progressive Thinker is filled to overflowing with progressive thinking and spiritual knowledge, so I can hope for but little space, but, to the wavering spiritual fraternity, I want to emphatically assert that what you have perused under this heading is truth, and I voice the sentiments of the developing circle, who were Mr. and Mrs. Stanley, Mr. and Mrs. Wagner, Mrs. Price, Mrs. Wells, Mr. Snyder's family, and Mrs. Bolenbaugh, Mrs. Wheeler, Mr. Swanton. IMPORTANT MATTER FROM OUR FOREIGN EXCHANGES

LIGHT, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Scintillations From the Lips of Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Death, to the pure in heart, is but going one step higher to clasp the shining hands of the loved ones gone before; or it may be compared to the rose, that that climbs up the garden wall to bloom on the other side. It is not so much the mission of Spiritualism to teach men how to die, as how to now live the strenuous, manly life of the just. As we come this way to tarry in mortality but once, it becomes us to make every day one of moral improvement and self-mastery. Our angel-teachers plead with us not to miserly live for self, for gain; nor to grovel underground like moles; but to move up out of the cerebellum along the pathway of intellect to the coronal brain region—the soul's parlors, where come angel guests to talk in tenderest tones of love.

Mr. Astor, one of New York's great multi-millionaries, influencing a sensitive, wrote thus: "I am not happy; better for me that I had been an orphan and begged for bread in the streets than to have been the hoarding, grasping man I was, treasuring up that which I could not take with me to this new state of being. Could I live my earthly life over again, I should pursue a very different course. Pray for me." Emerson wisely said in his "Conduct of Life," that "he who gathers too much of the earthly, in the very act loses an equal amount of the spiritual."

The overbrooding spiritual spheres are doubtless the spheres of inspiration and impressional causes; and Spiritualism, which so marvelously materialized to the sense-perceptions in Hydesville, was begotten in the heavens. So considered, small matters are, in results, often the mightiest. A babe, in a Bethlehem manger, three centuries later shook imperial Rome to its foundations. A tiny apple-stem broke and showed to Newton the law that binds in one the starry universe; a tremulous tendon in a frog's foot gave birth to galvanism; a kite revealed the lightning's powerful armament; in a bit of amber lay hidden the mighty force of electricity; tiny coral insects lifted up islands from the ocean; scattering, floating weeds told Columbus of a world afar in the West; and a few gentle tappings some fifty years ago in a midnight hour at a Hydesville farm-house, told of a peopled world unseen, and bridged the distance, hope merging into knowledge, and faith into fruition.

Soon the world felt the quickening force. Reforms were conceived in the heavens and mapped out to be materialized on earth. William Lloyd Garrison, the anti-slavery agitator, and an avowed Spiritualist, rose from pacing the floors of a Baltimore prison to see ere long slavery die and himself crowned with a nation's honor.

A few years ago Hudson Tuttle, writer and author, took me in his carriage to see the old brick Edison homestead, where young Edison, the world-famed inventor, attended his first spiritual seances. He is still impressionable and inspirational.

In 1863 the martyred Abraham Lincoln attended several spiritual seances at the house of Mr. Laurie, Washington, D. C. This gentleman, whom I well know, was a government employe in the post office department, and Mrs. Miller, his daughter, was a superior medium, whose seances, S. P. Kase, called the "railroad king," the Rev. John Pierpont, a Unitarian preacher and poet, the Hon. D. E. Somes, ex-Congressman, General N. P. Banks, Major Chorpening, and Abraham Lincoln, with other distinguished personages, quietly attended.

Hudson Tuttle, writing in the Banner of Light, March 7, 1891, says: "Mrs. Nettie Colburn Maynard was constantly consulted by President Lincoln, and the communications he received through her were of the most astonishing character. The result of battles was foretold before the telegraphic dispatches, and on several occasions advice was given and accepted, which, acted on, proved of momentous consequence."

It was well known in government circles that Lincoln frequently consulted the spirits through Colchester, Foster, and other sensitives, and it was quite generally understood that it was through messages from the ascended fathers of the Republic that Lincoln was induced to sign the proclamation that struck the shackles from four millions of human beings.

The Stanford University of California, reported to be the richest (including its lands and estates) in the world, owes its origin to Spiritualism. The son of Senator Stanford, an ex-Governor of California, while touring in Europe, gathering relics and costly curios, passed away by a fever attack, while in Italy, to a higher life. He was an only child, sixteen, and full of promise.

"The Stanford family was a Spiritualistic family," as Thomas W. Stanford remarked to me while attending one of his seances, just before I left Australia. This gentleman was for many years the American Vice-Consul in Melbourne, and his name, because of munificent contributions, is chiselled on the front of the Stanford University Library in California. These cultured, free-thought Stanfords, in this trying affliction, finding no consolation in church dogmas, consulted trance and clairvoyant sensitives. And, while considering the subject of constructing a mausoleum to the memory of their son, he, from spirit life, suggested that the most satisfactory monument to him would be the erection of an unsectarian educational institution. This desire of their spirit-risen son ultimated in that magnificent university which already has some two thousand students in attendance. It is the purpose, so I am credibly informed, that when these landed estates are sold and the income put into this institution, there shall be no tuitional charges to students. Here, then, is that Spiritualism, which is of God, made practicable, in educating the young of both sexes on an equal footing; and non-sectarian education in the line of evolution must be the crowning work of this twentieth century.

"Lo! I see long blissful ages,
When these Mammon days are done,
Stretching forward in the distance,
Towards a never-setting sun."

Spiritualism not only demonstrates a future existence, not only teaches the certainty of suffering in all worlds for wrong-doing, not only encourages invention, art, science, exploration, and all sanitary enterprises, not only shows memory to be the "recording angel," and self-denial, nobleness of purpose, purity of life and sweet spirituality to be the ascending steps to heaven, but it strikes the chains from millions of slaves and builds unsectarian universities. These angel ministries ever appeal to the silent, persuasive, and most powerful incentives to a better life. And though no subtle chemistry can impart a more delicate odor to the rose, though no lapidary can burnish the stars, nor rhetorician's art add to the moral beauty and dignity of a true altruistic life, yet everyone can cultivate that loving-kindness which disarms resentment, that patience which endures suffering, that gentleness which neutralizes acidity of temper, that forgiveness which obliterates personal animosities, that sweetness of disposition which adds lustre to all the heavenly graces, that consciousness of right which inspires justice, and that tender charity which, combined with the other virtues that angel messages inspire, make the harmonial man—heaven on earth.

"The golden age lies onward, not behind.
The pathway through the past has led us up;
The pathway through the future will lead on
And higher. We are rising from the beast
Unto Christ and human brotherhood."
(Applause.)

In Sympathy.

Josef Hofmann was asked whether an artist enjoys his own performance, and replied that he certainly does if he has the right audience; if there are, say, a hundred people who know, who feel, who sympathize. Asked how he could tell whether the "right audience" was present, he said:

"Ah, my friends, you ask too much. I do not know. No one knows how the communication is made, but it is instant, it is positive, and is as real as this table before me or the message you receive by the wireless telegraph.

"It is not what they do or say—these people who understand—it is what they feel that is helpful. Between them and the artist a current is immediately set up. They give him power, he gives it back to them, they return it to him; he gives it to them again multiplied, and so they go on with action and reaction, like the armature and magnet multiplying the force of the electric current in the dynamo.

"Without such aid as I have the artist cannot possibly be at his best, and no amount of simulated enthusiasm by the people who do not really understand can compensate for its absence."

Spiritual Prayers.

In the soul itself which lies below all my fleeting desires and external acts, may I make my permanent home. May I remember that my best moments are my most real ones, that I am most myself when I am most like Thee. In the silent protest which lies below every evil thought and makes me wretched until I cast it from me, may I see the essential nobleness of my own nature. May I honor that nature and be true to it. In spite of all my failures, may I prize myself. May I honor myself too much to stoop to what is low and base. Of every sin may I say, This is unworthy of me. So may I rule my own spirit. So may I emphasize the good and leave the bad. May I learn to say, No; and, most often, No to myself. Free me, I pray Thee, from this internal strife, this war with myself, which prostrates all my powers. May I cease to desire what I know I should not possess. So may I be freed from this bondage to self. So may I be made ready to live for others. So may my little life become useful, happy and blessed—a blessing to myself and to all. Amen.

Our Duty to Criminals.

Dr. Helen Densmore's article under the above heading clearly points out to us the need of a great reform in prison life. We Spiritualists advocate universal brotherhood, yet few of think of practical means of benefiting that brotherhood by properly treating crime and brotherhood by properly treating crime criminals, regarding crime as a mental disease, and endeavoring by rational means to effect a cure in the unfortunately afflicted brother. Two wrongs can never make a right, and it is certainly as wrong to treat a man with unnecessary harshness and severity for his misdeeds as it is to legally kill one man for illegally killing another. If we believe, as Dr. Peebles aptly puts it, that "thoughts are etheric points of force," why do we not concentrate our forces with the object of bringing about this and many other much needed reforms. Are we waiting for someone else to make the first move? Modern psychology teaches that persistent affirmations tend to bring about the desired end. Why do we not apply our knowledge in a practical manner? The remedy is in our own hands, and we must realize our responsibilities as our brother's keeper.—T. Rutherford Edwards.

The German Psychical Journals.

In the "Uebersinnliche Welt," Lpise Hitz concludes her account of the discussion on Spiritualism now going on in the Italian daily press. She gives only a few passages taken from articles in favor of Spiritualism, defending it from the attacks already mentioned; but the arguments used by these writers are mostly familiar to readers of Light, so that it will be sufficient to quote the concluding passage of this short article, containing two paragraphs from Vassallo's noted address, which Madame Hitz thinks are especially worthy of notice:

"These occult phenomena cannot be produced to order. Spiritism, like astronomy, is a science, which is founded on observation." "What does it signify, if, with Eusapia, a suspicious movement is occasionally detected? What is the importance of such an occurrence compared with the fact that she, together with her chair, are raised and placed upon the table?"

"In conclusion," writes Luise Hitz, "I will just give an observation of Ernesto Volpi, in the 'Vessillo Spiritista,' which seems to me to exactly hit the mark:

"'The newspaper discussion, due to Vassallo's public address, is not by any means ended. What will or can be the result? The one side will never be able to prove that all spiritistic phenomena can be produced by trickery, and the other must allow that even with the most celebrated mediums, as long as they use their mediumship as a source of gain, deception will occasionally creep in.'"

Madame Hitz also gives a translation from the French of an appreciatory notice by Charles Richet, of the late Mr. F. W. H. Myers.

While in Italy Spiritualism appears to be making rapid progress and many eminent converts—thanks chiefly to the mediumship of Eglitti in Rome and that of Eusapia Paladino in Naples—in Germany the strong arm of the law is doing everything in its power to crush out, not only Spiritism, but all kindred subjects. In "Psychische Studien," among the "short notices" is one by the editor, Dr. Maier, treating of this matter. He says that the highly interesting exhibitions of the South American, M. Papus, in Berlin, have been forbidden by the police. He writes:

"It is difficult to imagine what reasonable ground for prohibition in this case can exist, since in the scientific and highly interesting experiments in auto-suggestion of the 'mysterious M. Papus' all danger for his life is completely precluded by preparatory precautions, and—according to the testimony

TRICKERY IN THE NAME OF SPIRITUALISM AND MEDIUMSHIP.

The Opinions of Prominent Spiritualists---Honest Mediums Have Nothing to Fear.

As to our seventh question and the trend of opinion thereon, the following brief clippings from our Symposium edition sums the matter up in a nutshell:

7. Should the publishers of Spiritualist papers refuse to print any or all exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism, when satisfied of their informants' reliability; or, in other words, should Spiritualism be an exception to the general rule adopted by all honest investigators after truth — "Expose fraud and trickery wherever found?"

No, sir! that demand rests upon the idea that the disgrace lies in the telling and not in the toleration of such conditions. It has been said there was never a good cause that suffered by publicity, nor a bad one that did not thrive by privacy. The currents of all human experiences are not yet reversed in trend. Honesty is still the best policy and the only one that will insure enduring success. Tricksters who are paralyzing the progress of Spiritualism by consuming its very vitals are the ones solely benefited by silence about their nefarious practices. While shouting against trusts in the industrial world, they are bitterly opposed to turning the light of publicity upon their own secret methods. They would like by underhand means to silence individuals and muzzle, or wreck, our newspapers they cannot dominate.—Geo. B. Warne.

Self-deception needs as much exposing as being deceived. But that every known trickster should be exposed, goes without saying; and he who condones fraud is a participant—unless extreme pity or charity moves him to silence. Still he is derelict to duty if he does not make some endeavors to stop it.—Arthur F. Milton.

The main question (Number 7) is answered by the success of The Progressive Thinker. No one individual has spent so much time and money in gathering data as to fraud and fake mediums as has Brother Francis. The large circulation of the paper shows that Spiritualists generally vote in the affirmative on Question Number 7.—Jas. B. Townsend.

I do not countenance fraud or trickery in any form and any who without question can be shown to use deception wilfully, should have all the publicity possible, both through the spiritual papers and secular press.—Dr. B. O'Dell.

It is the duty of the press to expose a fraud, a cheat or dishonesty—but the fact should be well established. Again these fraud exposers are often ignorant of the alphabet of phenomena—too often malice and envy are the inspiration. It has become proverbial that much of the newspaper accounts of both "fraud" and "wonderful manifestations," as well, comes from "two seance people."—Sargis.

There is no such thing as fraudulent mediumship. Whatever is fraud is simply fraud, and not mediumship. Whoever starts out to perpetrate fraud should not be countenanced. Then and there is the time and place to give the matter due attention.—Mrs. A. B. Severance.

I do not conceive that fraud in Spiritualism is in any manner different from fraud in business, politics, morals, religion, social life, or any other relation of human life; and if fraud ought to be exposed and denounced in any of these, it ought to be accorded the same treatment when found in Spiritualism.—A. M. Griffen.

As publicity is the only way of combating these audacious rascals, Spiritualists, often humiliated and scandalized by their sham ghost performances, should resolve themselves into a committee of one, and persistently pursue, and expose them, whenever found, and turning them over to the officers of the law, for obtaining money under false pretenses, they would soon tire of their nefarious occupation.—Dr. R. Greer.

As an old-time Spiritualist I am opposed to deception in all the varied expressions of life; I favor strenuous measures to suppress fraud everywhere if necessary; I would remove the cause by going to the fountain; this course might be called radical and disturbing to some of our ambitious leaders.—Dr. M. E. Conger.

To your seventh, and last question, whether the spiritual press should "expose fraud and trickery wherever found," etc. I reply, most emphatically, Yes. The spiritual press that is too cowardly to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," about "tricky mediums," is itself a fraud!—Dean Clarke.

Fraud committed by mediums should be hit hard; but, a public howl in our papers for all critics and opponents to gain a weapon to excite prejudice amongst the incredulous, should be stopped. We need thorough organization so that we may inform each state association and they in return, each local society of wrong-doing by any speaker or medium in our cause—and also to in the same way commend right living and worthy capacity.—Geo. W. Kates.

In regard to frauds and their exposure, in Spiritualism, the same principle holds as in all other concerns. It is especially incumbent on Spiritualists to expose fraud and trickery. The work of advancing the cause is in their hands to be controlled and directed by them, and to guard against fraud and imposture is a part of that work.—E. J. Schellhous.

No one need fear the light if they are true. The exposures and denunciations of frauds (so-called) in daily papers are too often sensationalism, and not to be heeded. But the Spiritual papers are, it seems to me, the guides and credentials of many who seek to know and be known by, and their endorsements should be of value. Also there should be (because of the justice shown) just as much confidence felt in said papers that the frauds should be given full justice also.—Tillie U. Reynolds.

The spiritual press should be an avenue through which to discuss all questions germane to Spiritualism, and if the exposition of fraud isn't germane to true Spiritualism I would like to know what is. It is certainly right to let the world know that we do not father everything that crawls up under the cloak of Spiritualism. It certainly is the duty of the spiritual press to furnish all the news pertaining to the cause it can be put in possession of.—Dr. T. Wilkins.

Seventh. Here is a point whereon I have voiced my ideas before. If I were an editor I would be the judge in all cases. Where exposures are made or complained of in a malicious or revengeful spirit, they ought never to be published, nor where parties have not wholly proven on divers occasions that one who pretends to be a medium is wholly devoid of such heavenly gifts. If a lying spirit deceives, it does not necessarily prove that the medium is not honest, as we have a few liars left here between the barren shores of Labrador and the sun-kissed San Diego.—C. J. Johnson.

The press ought to be on the watch for the welfare of the people, and when notified, by reliable persons, of the perpetration of fraud, it should publish the information at once. The only excuse which ought to have any influence, is the liability to a suit for libel. But this should only cause a more thorough investigation, such as could leave no doubts as to the facts in the case. And when ascertained nothing should prevent the exposure of fraud.—J. S. Loveland.

I for one would say, let the editor publisher of a Spiritualist paper have the same liberty in this, as we are compelled to accord to the editors and publishers of other newspapers. In fact, they must have this liberty; and no one should be offended if they decline articles of this nature, as well as articles pertaining to other matters.—J. O. M. Hewitt.

Spiritualists, above all classes of people, realize and know that "As ye sow, so shall ye reap;" and if any mediums perpetrate fraud, in that cause, as in all cases, inexorable law prints upon their lives here and now its just reward. I do feel, though, that a little notice with their names attached, stating that "Mr. and Mrs. 'So-and-So'" have not yet grown to the required standard of unfoldment and are not fitted for public teachers, would not be detrimental.—Esther Gideon Thomas.

Question number 7 is of the greatest importance to all Spiritualists, and as an individual I do most certainly believe that all fraud and illegal practices on the part of mediums, or pretended mediums, should be exposed, and condemned in no uncertain terms. —Mary T. Longley.

With reference to Question No. 7, I would say Truth only asks a hearing. It is only the false that fears the closest scrutiny in Spiritualism as in everything else. I would say show them up, hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may. The time has come when honesty, morality, manhood as well as mediumship should be demanded by the public.—Ben F. Hayden.

It is the plain duty of the spiritual press to publish all obtainable facts and expose fraud whenever found., Right wrongs no man. "Expose fraud and trickery wherever found," is a sound and honest principle. Let integrity build the house where life and honor love to dwell. To condone trickery and deception in this matter is about as bad as to originate it.—J. P. Cooke.

Spiritualism should not be an exception to the general rule adopted by all honest investigators after truth—expose fraud and trickery wherever found. The trickster and fakir when known to be such, should not only be exposed, but some method should be adopted by the Spiritualist press to inform honest people who these tricksters are.—Will C. Hodge.

When a publisher receives accounts of exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism, they should be satisfied of their informant's reliability, either by sworn statements or something quite as binding, as to the truthfulness of said statements, then, without exception or prejudice, expose the fraud wherever found.—Georgia Gladys Cooley.

It is not the province of genuine Spiritualists to shape their action or disarm or conciliate those who are and who mean to continue their adversaries. But they can not afford to countenance or even be tolerant of anything dishonorable or fraudulent.—Alexander Wilder.

When the editor of a Spiritualist paper refuses to publish any expose, or criminal doings of a public worker, after due investigation, it would seem to be lending aid to the criminal inclinations of viciously determined persons.—George F. Perkins.

We would say, expose trickery and fraud on all occasions. If it is not done, Spiritualism will be charged up with it; if done it will be unloaded on the criminal parties. If the church exposed all its "frauds," what a time there would be in Gilead; yet the world would be the better for it. But be first sure of the fraud.—F. J. Ripley.

Every such paper should expose every fraud and fake; they are a scab and a menace to Spiritualism and to all genuine mediums. The editor who refuses to expose all well known fakes is not a true Spiritualist at heart; he may claim that all trickery will die out if you let it alone. It will not die out so long as curiosity and credulous spiritualists attend such sham seances.—F. R. Lockling.

I don't think I would publish a reported expose unless I had the positive proof that it was a genuine expose. The fakes should be exposed, but not to wrong an honest medium, for they have enough to endure without making their work still harded for them.—E. W. Sprague.

It is patent to all lovers of common decency that if this evil graft, that pollutes by its foul touch and blasts by its poisonous breath this beauteous, heaven-sent flower of hope for humanity, is not cut out root and branch, the day is not distant when Spiritualism's opportunity will have passed.—J. Rigdon.

I would also suggest that when tricksters are caught beyond a doubt, they be published. If the papers refuse to publish them and warn the people that a counterfeit is going about, then let officers and others write to each other the facts and spread the alarm in that way.—Stella A. Fisk.

Surely there is no good reason why a Spiritualistic trickster should be permitted to travel from one end of the country to the other fooling the unwary and over-credulous Spiritualists, misleading and destroying the hopes of honest investigators and intensifying the prejudice of multitudes against Spiritualism without being unmasked by the Spiritualist papers.—Walter P. Williams.

Mercilessly expose every fraud. If Spiritualist papers condone or conceal fraud then secular and religious journals will have room to pronounce the whole thing a fraud.—Eld. H. W. B. Myrick.

I think the knowledge of mediumship now sufficiently advanced to warrant printing every case where a sufficient number of good Spiritualists sign the condemnation papers.—E. W. Baldwin.

When all doubt of fraud is removed, it is justice both to the honest and true medium as well as to the trickster, that the trickster shall be publicly pilloried and branded for what he is. Such a course will be a protection to the genuine medium, through the punishment of the deceiver.—J. C. Underhill.

It is my opinion that every Jannes and Jambres in Spiritualism should be exposed publicly and repeatedly through our press.—D. W. Hull.

It is better that the vermin of a household be exterminated by the mistress thereof, and she ought to prefer no publicity. There may be mitigating circumstances that publicity would work injustice both to the mistress and the vermin.—W. Wines Sargent.

That will have to be left to the discretion of the publisher. Personally we have no use for the trickster, and believe all fraudulent demonstrations should be exposed.—Nellie S. Baade.

Spiritualist papers should publish exposures of all trickery, when satisfied of their informant's reliability. To refrain from exposing trickery and fraud, would be to pattern after the churches, who hold their church trials behind closed doors, making them regular "star-chamber" trials.—C. H. Matthews.

In reference to fraud and trickery among mediums, I will say that with fifty years' experience with nearly every phase of mediumship I have found more meanness and dishonesty among investigators than I have among mediums.—D. M. King.

The publishers of Spiritualistic papers should consider it their solemn duty to expose in public print all fraudulent mediums of whatever type or standing, let the chips fall where they may—the public wants to know the truth—the whole truth.—Henry Scharffetter.

About the subject of fraud, I am individually of the opinion that if the spiritual press has one office that is undisputably its own, it is the prompt publication of all known fraud, with names, places, dates and details; but that the subject as a subject should have no place in its columns; having the same effect on Spiritualism as articles on the subject of the crimes of preachers would in the Christian press have on Christianity.—H. W. Boozer.

I firmly believe that all fake mediums should be exposed, and shown up in the Spiritualist press; for if we shield these fakirs, they will continue in it.—A. C. Fisher.

The tricksters who are only simulating our genuine manifestations of spirit presence, should be exposed forthwith. They are wolves in sheep's clothing, and do not in any way belong to us, unless it is by way of Adam.—M. Theresa Allen.

It is the publisher's duty to give to their readers the truth so far as it can be obtained. "Hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may." However, we all know how difficult it often is to sift truth and falsehood apart, which makes duty in this department a critical task.—Mrs. M. Klein.

I emphatically say stamp out, by all practicable means, all and every form of fraud, trickery and deception practiced in the sacred name of Spiritualism.—Phillip Lamneck.

Publish all well-authenticated and reliable testimony for or against any one or all phases of the phenomena, whether mental or physical, whoever may chance to be the instrument or medium. But great care should be exercised in making public such charges and statement.—Edwin Wilder.

I venture, as my answer to your seventh question, to advise a moderate amount of publication, but with the foxy caution of a wise editor and a liberal use of his blue pencil.—Charles Dawbarn.

I most sincerely believe that the spiritual press should publish all exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism, when satisfied of their informants' reliability. Spiritualists should not be an exception to the general rule adopted by all honest investigators. Expose trickery wherever found.—Carrie Firth Curran.

I answer yes, most emphatically. But in judging what constitutes such practices great caution should be observed. —J. Clement Smith.

Yes, emphatically yes. The great truths of Spiritualism are too important to wear the filthy, loathsome garb of deception and falsehood. They are too sacred and involve too much that is dear and valuable to every human being, to have its name enshrouded and blemished with a lie. Because lies never enhance the value of an article, but cause the would-be purchaser to rather depreciate it and turn from it.—Dr. G. A. Bishop.

After a medium has been proven to be a fraud, why not just mention in the Spiritualist papers that such and such a medium is not endorsed by the Spiritualists at large?—Harry J. Moore.

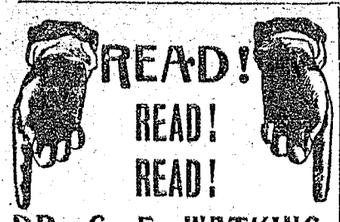
Where actual fraud and trickery is practiced, by well-known spiritual mediums, in the name of Spiritualism, and is exposed beyond a doubt, by reliable people, it should be by all means published in all Spiritualist papers, that all may know who are frauds and who are not. —C. P. Mitchell.

Fraud associated with manifestations should be treated on an equality with fraud connected with any other business or belief. It should neither be made more nor less prominent.—C. H. Murray.

If I were publishing a spiritual paper and I became absolutely certain that a fraud was being perpetrated, I would expose it, otherwise I would keep silent.—E. W. Bond.

I favor the publication of every method, trick and device known to the editor by which fraud may be perpetrated in the name of Spiritualism or spiritism, and to keep all this information ever before the public also, I favor the publication of the methods by which fraud may be detected.—A. H. Dailey.

The spiritual press can do much by publishing the unbecoming conduct of these mountebanks. There is nothing more void of spirituality than to pretend the return of the loved ones whom we think dead; and such spiritual lepers should be severely branded.—John W. Ring.



I am somewhat surprised at your seventh question, Brother Francis, "Should the publishers of Spiritualist papers refuse to print any or all exposures of trickery," etc. Have you any doubt about what my answer would be?—H. V. Sweringen.

No expose or punishment can blot it out. To me it seems higher education alone points to the way of relief.—H. L. Chapman.

The publishers of Spiritualist papers who are supposed to be the conveyors of all spiritual news-literature should not refuse by suppressing exposure of the truth, to publish or expose any practices of deceit, trickery and fraud wherever and whenever found, or any practices which debase the dignity, honor and purity of Spiritualism.—Addie L. Ballou.

When proof positive has been given that anyone posing as a medium for spiritual manifestations has been proven a trickster, we hold it the duty of any spiritual publication to expose them, and as far as possible warn of eminent physicians and other scientific experts, who during the past seven years have tested his powers in all the principal capitals of Europe—there can be no question either of imposition on a credulous public, or of danger to the peace or morals of the people.

"It even seems, as a result of the deplorable Rothe scandal, that in the capital everything even remotely connected with Spiritism, Occultism, Magnetism, etc., is to be proceeded against by the police. This is, no doubt, the reason that our esteemed fellow-worker, Herr Willy Reichel (Honorary Professor of the Faculty of Scientific Magnetism in Paris), according to a communication of July 19, which we have received from New York, has determined to change his residence for one in America in consequence of false accusations and threats, in spite of his great aversion to such a course. Let us trust that one so deserving in the cause of spiritual science may in the 'Land of Freedom' escape the persecution of official Science.'"

The only mention we find in the German journals of the unhappy Frau Rothe is the following short notice in "Spiritistische Rundschau":

"The medium Frau Rothe, we learn, has been taken from the Charite and replaced in the house of detention (Untersuchungs-gefaugnis) in Moabit. The doctors pronounce her to be suffering from acute hysteria. The medium's manager, Herr Jentsch, who has been staying for some considerable time in a natural cure institution in Leipzig, is about to return to Berlin."

Some mention is made of a seance Frau Rothe is said to have given to the doctors of the Charite, at which instead of flowers, stones were thrown, but this wants confirmation, and is, indeed, most improbable.

Trickery in the Name of Spiritualism and Mediumship.

the public against them.—Mary Webb-Baker.

You ask "Should the Spiritualist press refuse to print any or all of the alleged exposures of trickery done in the name of Spiritualism? We are inclined to think that this matter should be handled very discreetly, as what is published may act as a sword that cuts on either side.—M. E. Cadwallader.

In answer to your question numbered seven, my voice is always most emphatically, to keep nothing from the public which should be said. If I was connected with a newspaper, I would keep no well-proven facts from the public. If we do not expose the frauds and rascals who are with us just for the sake of what they can get out of us, we will sooner or later be exposed ourselves, as we ought to be. I would expose frauds, not as an act of enmity, but to save the world from their nefarious work. We have no more right to know what they are doing and not expose them, than we have a right to know of their intention to burn a neighbor's house over his head and not expose such person.—Moses Hull.

Last, but by no means least, the publishers of our Spiritualist papers should not refuse to publish the exposures of trickery and charlatanism, whenever authentic information has been received.—Will J. Erwood.

You want to know, among other things, whether Spiritualist papers should expose the trickery done in the name of Spiritualism. Yes, sir, with all your might.—J. Young McFarland.

Eliminate all semblance of fraud by which the credulous are deceived and the honest investigator disgusted and discouraged. We have no room for fakes who live off the over-credulous. Brother Francis, strike! and may the echo of your blows penetrate to the remotest parts of the earth.—S. W. Gould, M. D.

I would say no; for with all respect and deference to our good brothers and sisters, I believe but few of our Spiritualists have studied our philosophy enough to be able to tell when they come in contact with fraud.—A. N. Wadsworth.

Spiritualism at Canton, Ohio.

To the Editor:—The promulgation of the grand truths of Spiritualism through its phenomena has for some time been unusually quiet in Canton, but now that we have with us for a few days, Mrs. Alice Gehring, of 773 West 63rd Place, Chicago, Ill., and Mr. James A. Caton, of Washington, Pa., both of whom are excellent trumpet mediums, and through attending their seances which are being held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dehn, many Spiritualists and a number of investigators of the truth of spirit return and communion have enoyed some rare treats and pleasant visits from their arisen loved ones. Those mediums being of the same family, in fact brother and sister, are for the present holding their seances jointly, and as a rule the manifestations are indeed strong and the articulations of spirit friends clear and distinct, all of which is gratifying to the spirits as well as to us. In addition to the manifestations of blood relations and old-time friends, a number of other spirits whose near and dear friends were not there sent messages of love to their friends of earth.

Among the many who made their presence known and who had no special friend in the circle, was a gentleman, a jolly fellow, who passed to spirit life from New Berlin, Ohio, and who as well was a Presbyterian and active worker in the church to which he belonged, also an enthusiastic advocate of his orthodox beliefs, but who found the spirit side of life so different from that which he anticipated as a result of erroneous teaching and unsound doctrine instilled into him from childhood. This spirit came to two members of the circle, old acquaintances, and after conversing with them for a few moments he enquired about a number of his former New Berlin neighbors and also commented on them and their characteristics which was indeed amusing to those to whom he came and to the other members of the circle. Other spirits came and begged of members of the circle to deliver their messages to certain friends of earth, men and women, who through prejudice, as a result of orthodox teachings, will not investigate the truths of Spiritualism, thereby depriving themselves and spirit friends of God-given privileges and untold pleasures to their loved ones who have passed through the change called death.

On Tuesday evening, October 7, I attended another seance held by these mediums, that was indeed good, but the voices were not as strong as the evening before. However, that which was lacking in vocal phenomena was more than balanced by physical manifestations, one or two of which I would like to mention. For this seance two guitars were secured and placed on a table within the circle, from which they were taken, floated in midair and played upon while floating around the room. A little later Dr. Sayers, Mr. Caton's main seance control, requested us to sing a few verses and while we were doing so the two instruments were again taken from the table and while floating around the room an accompaniment to the vocal music was nicely played upon both guitars, proving the power of spirit, also that those who are musicians or masters of the art here carry those accomplishments into the spirit world. At the request of Mr. John Thomas, a member of the circle, Viola, a sweet little girl, who is one of Mrs. Gehring's controls, joined him in a song and with him sang several verses in a clear and sweet tone of voice and fully as well as any little girl of earth could have done. Dr. Sayers, by request, related his experiences just before and after final dissolution. He also said, as other spirits repeatedly have said (and no one knows better than they who have passed to the other side) that the much-thought-of and talked-of judgment day comes just before final dissolution, and the resurrection day immediately after, as most all Spiritualists are aware.

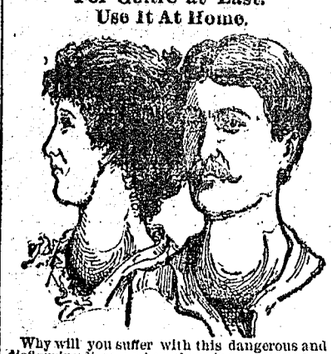
To Earnest, Honest Spiritualists:



I wish to correspond with some one who is able and willing to assist me in publishing and distributing a pamphlet giving in detail the methods used by bogus and dishonest mediums in deceiving and defrauding the public in the sacred name of Spiritualism. This work, which is now ready for the press, is the result of several years' investigation of the work of prominent mediums in all parts of the country, from Maine to California, by a life-long Spiritualist. Its contents will be a revelation to the average Spiritualist, and if it is the means of opening the eyes of those of our people who are blindly and credulously chasing after the sensational fakirs to the neglect and injury of the true and honest instruments of the angel world, then will the object of the author be accomplished. Only facts are stated in this work, and these can be verified by any intelligent person who will bring to the investigation of the matter the same earnest, common sense methods that they would use in any important business transaction. Please address for particulars, "Forrest," care of The Progressive Thinker, 40 Loomis street, Chicago, Ill. 675

OUR PREMIUM OFFER.

READ AND REFLECT.

Remember, please, that we send many of our Premium Books by express. If you do not receive your order promptly by mail, inquire at the express office. If not there, notify us at once.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to purchase any of these Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands." Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills on exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have NINE Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any seven of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.50.

Lastly all of these NINE valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $2.75, a price never before equaled in this country or Europe. The following is the list:

NINE REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $2.75.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism
6—The Next World Interviewed.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker. These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printers art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

SCIENCE SUPPLEMENTED BY AN EXALTED MORALITY, THE BIBLE OF THE FUTURE.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 26. CHICAGO, ILL., NOV. 1, 1902. NO. 675.

A CREED FOR TO-DAY.

The Twentieth Century Needs in Religion.

"No more opinions. I am done with opinions. I want work."—John Wesley.

The immortal founder of the great Methodist church cannot be said to have been deficient in sentiment or in faith.

The thing we call soul—the capacity for the ideal—was developed in Wesley to an extraordinary degree. He had opinions, opinions aplenty, but he also had a marvelous amount of common sense; and along toward the evening of his long and useful life, when experience was in full flower and reflection reigned supreme, the grand old man uttered the words which have been selected as the text of this article.

They are words to think about. No matter what one's political or religious views may happen to be he ought to be able to find in Wesley's words food for deepest reflection.

The "opinions" of which Wesley spoke were religious opinions—views of the universe; speculations concerning God, man and destiny; guesses regarding genesis and eschatology, the beginning and the end of things. It is well to bear this fact in mind. It is potent to the whole argument. It is, in fact, the heart of the whole matter.

Religious opinions! They have filled a large page in the history of the race! They have written themselves in blood all along the way of our human story! They have slain their millions and have done more than all other things combined to embitter human feelings and defeat the true aims of human society.

And lo! in these latest days we are learning that the terrible past with its mortal animosities and hates, with its thumbscrews and inquisitorial fires, was wholly owing to ignorant fanaticisms. If men had always been as wise and reasonable as they are to-day there would have been no page of history such as we are now compelled to read.

Had the men of the olden time known as much as men know to-day Catholic would never have persecuted Protestant, nor Protestant Catholic; Puritans would never have burned Quakers nor Anglicans tortured Dissenters.

The whole bloody business was the result of ignorance and of the fanaticism that was born of the ignorance.

To-day we know that opinion is merely opinion. To-day we know that there never was a theological creed that was not purely visionary, and that in the dark days of old men hated and destroyed each other not because they had any good reason for so doing, but simply and solely because they were deluded, crazed and maddened by their superstitions.

In the light of the splendid knowledge of the new century it is given us to see that both genesis and eschatology—both the beginning and the end of things— are wrapped in inscrutable mystery!

"Whence, what, whither?" are still potent questions which in the hushed moments of our busy lives we ask over and over again, as did the men of old; bue we know, as the men of old knew, that there is no answer to the questions.

We have reached the stage in our intellectual advance where we have discovered that the heart of the universe will not be plucked out, and that the great problems of the speculative reason are unsolved and, from the earthly viewpoint, unsolvable.

This does not mean that religion is a sham and that the great spiritual hopes of the ages are delusions and lies. Nothing of the kind! It simply means that so far as the great data of the speculative reason are concerned we must be content to be agnostic—not denying the data, nor affirming them, but simply holding ourselves neutral until they are either proved or disproved.

But in the meantime there are some things that we know. We may not know where we came from or whither we are going, but we know that we are here.

And we know more than that. We know that in order to live here in peace, happiness and honor we must dwell together in obedience to the laws of love, kindness and justice. We must check the selfish impulses and do what we can to strengthen the sentiment of altruism. We must curb the animal in our nature and to our utmost cultivate the human. We must do what we can to promote the feeling of the brotherhood versus the feeling of the clan. We must labor for the spread of the intelligence which shall make us tolerant, hospitable and forgiving.

In a word it is incumbent upon us all to make this world as bright, as happy and as beautiful as we can. To conquer the material forces of nature and turn them to the service of civilization, to curb the brutal in ourselves so that we may to the greatest possible extent realize in our experience the ideals of the great and the good of all ages—this is our duty, and, so far as this world is concerned, our only duty.

Not opinions about the mysteries at the bottom of eternity and infinity, but work for the good and glory of the present existence—such is the much-wanted creed.

Workers—men and women who love humanity and are prepared to labor for its advancement—that is what we need above all mere idle dreamers.—Rev. Thos. B. Gregory in Chicago American.

LIGHT AND SHADE.

I look, O Soul, into thy face,
And ask, but ask in vain:
"Is thy serenity the sum
Of merriment or pain?"

So sweetly now you sing and smile
I yield the palm to mirth,
But when anon I see thine eyes
I cast the dream to earth.

Once more I crown the brow of care
And count the sorrow dear
That can so light thy features with
The hope that conquers fear.

—G. G. B.

THE SOUL'S MIRROR.

A Spiritual Solvent for Internal Discontent.

Did you ever feel oppressed, irritable or captious without being able to assign any extraneous reason therefor? And furthermore, when in this condition of mind or spirit, fix the blame for your ill-humor on somebody else?

If so, you have had an opportunity of studying self, with the probabilities of finding the cause at home rather than abroad.

When all is sunshine within, the reflection is in accord with the soul's polish. Our thoughts generally take shape according to our feelings. Ill-humor makes pessimistic, except where love for an object is empowered to intervene and temporarily allay the ill-humor.

But that is selfish love, though not out of order, for it leads to the universal—is an impulse toward that end.

As a whole-souled principle it dominates the self-hood and engenders good feeling enough to repel vicious attacks or others' ill-humor, and reflects all the rest favorably, sympathizing with those not so endowed rather than meeting them with unloving impulses or unkind feelings.

Love is the conscious principle of the soul—that which makes it known to itself—and does not partake of ill-humor in its natural state. If it did, man would have long ago given it cause to manifest and felt its effects. But it is absolute, unchangeable, and not a feature of the human soul in its natural state. Thus it does not belong there, and when we feel it manifesting it needs removing—just as we would remove any other defect in our character, or physical imperfection that might occasion suffering.

It is certainly painful to be discontented or unhappy, and ill-humor is but a manifestation of that. Discontent may be the cause of ill-feeling, but is in itself the effect of a prior cause. That cause we want to eradicate, if possible.

We know that selfishness induces ill-humor in others, but do not always know the special form or feature of the evil. If in others, why not in us? Do we always know ourselves? Have we perfect self-consciousness? Not as long as ill-humor controls reason, for perfect consciousness is synonymous with perfect reasoning—the absolute control of reason over the emotions or passions—the animal.

Selfishness is animal love, or love dominated by animalism, whether for sensual or selfish effect, and, like our lower life companions, makes us more or less savage, as it were, of course to a modified degree, though we are often impelled to use the term "brute" in connection with some people. But brutal we are at times and under circumstances comparatively considered.

A harsh reply strikes many as such. Think of a high-minded, tender soul administering to the wants of a suffering patient, being uncivilly addressed for a moment's inattention!

An unconscionable vibration pouring in upon a sympathetic soul unprepared for such an attack is like wounding a dove in its sweetest innocence of any design upon its life's enjoyment. The pang of such a shaft must be experienced to be understood. And we occasion many such wounds unknowingly.

A worldly education alone does not prohibit such "brutality." A higher education than this is needed to refine the soul. The experience of suffering may lead to it, provided the same is not inculcated by brutality, as some of our worldly methods prescribe.

Individual suffering has a more accurate aim towards a consideration for other's feelings. But deeds of genuine love or sympathy are the most absolute soul-refiner; and he who does for others, leads the way to the "gates ajar."

Nature knows no swerving from an absolute impulse of love, finds no reasons for withholding its benignity, sees no cause for being unloving because man is, finds no fault with human frailties, seeks no apology to do wrong. It does "right for right's sake," and in that is a constant inspiration to its progeny for like effects. It could not do otherwise as an absolute unchangeable law, and the man who does not imitate her, must grovel his way through the shades of matter with inspiration partaking of the same hue. He cannot build a spiritual structure, either for himself or others, and must fail in the end.

The results will be as introduced in this article—the first indication being a soul discontent not accounted for in our life's program. At that period we need to begin our investigation of self—a probing to the interior for the cause. When the latter is found, a reversal of our life's actions is in order; and justice and consideration are the needed requisites toward a happier feeling.

Such is the narrative of a good little woman as she laid it out before my mental vision—one who has suffered until she was brought face to face with herself through a faithful spirit guide, but now happy in the knowledge of knowing herself, and content in being able to live the life prescribed to her as a balm for the rest of her days on earth.

GO RIGHT ON WORKING.

Ah, yes, the task is hard, 'tis true,
But what's the use of sighing?
They're soonest with their duties thro',
Who bravely keep on trying.
There's no advantage to be found
In sorrowing or shirking;
They with success are soonest crown'd
Who just go right on working.

Strive patiently and with a will.
That shall not be defeated;
Keep singing at your task until
You see it stand completed.
Nor let the clouds of doubt draw near,
Your sky's glad sunshine murking;
Be brave and fill your heart with cheer,
And just go right on working.

NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED.

A Copy of Its Constitution and By-Laws.

At a meeting in the Temple of the Morris Pratt Institute Building, on Thursday night, Oct. 9, 1902, a Spiritualist church was organized. As few people know just what Spiritualists believe and do, it is thought best to submit the following report of that meeting.

Mrs. Clara L. Stewart was chosen temporary chairman; Mr. H. A. Beckman, temporary secretary. Mr. Moses Hull, Mr. A. J. Weaver and Mrs. Clara L. Stewart had been selected to prepare a constitution and other necessary papers. When Mr. Hull made his report, after due deliberation, it was adopted. Eighteen of those present signed the preamble to the constitution, and thus became a nucleus for a church. After considering and adopting the constitution seriatim, Mr. A. J. Weaver was elected president of the new church. Mrs. Emma R. Abbott was made vice-president; Mr. H. A. Beckman, secretary, and Miss Agnes Chaffee, treasurer. A board of trustees was chosen, and the church was ready to apply for its charter.

The church resolved to hold public meetings, with Rev. Moses Hull for its pastor, and free admittance to its congregation, every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. The following constitution and by-laws which were adopted, may be of interest to the public:

Preamble.

We, whose names are hereunto attached, in order to promulgate and strengthen by word and example, the facts and truths of Modern Spiritualism and cognate subjects, hereby agree to organize ourselves into a church to be known as the Spiritualist Church of Whitewater, Wis., and agree to abide by its constitution, and to observe the following rules.

1. To try to walk in unison with each other.
2. To assist those who are in misfortune.
3. To pity those who are in trouble.
4. To enlighten those who are in darkness.
5. To visit and administer to those who are sick.
6. To make efforts to reclaim those who are erring, and
7. To make our thoughts and lives beautiful and acceptable in the sight of our arisen loved ones, and of each other.

Article 1.—Name.—This organization shall be known as The Spiritualist Church, of Whitewater, Wisconsin.

Article 2.—Explanation of the Word Church.—While Spiritualism is a science, because based on demonstrated facts; and a philosophy, because "it contains the knowledge of phenomena as explained by law;" it is also a religion, because it is a revelation from the spirit world, which inspires feelings of reverence, and love for the highest ideals of truth, of goodness, of wisdom and of all that is divine and heavenly, under whatever name, and in whatever clime. The word church is used in this connection, mainly to stand for and make emphatic the religious side of Spiritualism.

Article 3.—Objects.—The objects of this church are:

1st. To form a more thorough acquaintance with each other, in order that we may more unitedly, more harmoniously, and more thoroughly work together for the building up of an exalted and grand Spiritualism in our lives.

2nd. To try, by public meetings and otherwise, to spread the light of Spiritualism and progress among those with whom we associate.

Article 4.—Membership.—Any person of good moral character, who is in sympathy with our work, and who will industriously and harmoniously work with us to promote the cause for which we are united, can become a member of this church by signing this constitution and complying with the terms stated in our by-laws.

Article 4.—Officers.—The officers of this church shall consist of a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, and board of six trustees, who shall transact all the business of the church excepting what is transacted at its regular business meetings. All business done by the officers and trustees shall be subject to ratification, amendment or change at any regular meeting of the church.

Article 6.—Duties of Officers.—Sec. 1. It shall be the duty of the president to call all meetings; to preside and maintain order at all business meetings; to sign all orders drawn on the treasury, and to have a general oversight of all the business of the church.

Sec. 2. In the absence of the president it shall be the duty of the vice-president to perform all of the duties of the president.

Sec. 3. The secretary shall conduct the correspondence of the church, keep records of all important business transactions and of all the financial matters of the church. He shall also keep the members posted as to their financial standing in the church; and shall with the president sign all orders drawn on the treasury.

Sec. 4. The treasurer shall take charge of all property and money belonging to the church, and shall pay out money only on orders signed by the president and secretary.

Sec. 5. The board of trustees shall, in connection with the other officers, have general charge of the business and property of the church; shall do with it as the church, in open meeting shall direct, and shall make a report as often as once in six months.

Article 7.—Elections.—The officers of this church shall be elected by ballot, on the first Friday in October, and shall hold their respective offices for one year, or until their successors are chosen; all except the board of trustees, two of whom shall, after the first year, be elected annually to serve for a term of three years. At the first election two trustees shall be elected to serve one year; two for two years, and two for three years.

Article 8.—Quorum.—In the board of officers five of its members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Sec. 2. At business meetings of the church seven members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Article 9.—Amendments.—Any article of this constitution can be amended by a two-thirds vote of all who are present at any regular meeting, providing the notice of such amendment shall have been read at two previous meetings, and providing that notice of such action shall have been forwarded to each member of the church.

By-Laws.

Any person desiring to become a member of this church, shall, upon application to one of its officers, be furnished with a blank application for membership, which must be filled out by such person and presented to the board of trustees, or to the church at its next meeting, where a vote shall be taken. The applicants on receiving a two-thirds vote of those present shall be declared elected and notified of such election by the secretary, after which they can, if they so desire, be publicly taken into the church. After this public recognition they shall have all the rights and privileges of other members.

Article 2.—Those who are six months in arrears of payment of their dues, after having been twice notified by the secretary, shall, if the church so decides, be suspended from the church.

Article 3.—The weekly dues of each member shall be such an amount as he or she may choose and pledge to pay.

Article 4.—If for any good reason a member cannot pay his dues, the church can, if it sees fit, cancel a portion or all of such dues.

Article 5.—No member who is six months in arrears of his dues is eligible to any office in the church, or to vote on any of its business transactions.

Article 6.—No dues shall be required of any student in the Morris Pratt Institute.

Article 7.—Special meetings shall be called at any time on the written request of any five members of the church, for the transaction of any necessary business.

Article 8.—The officers and trustees of the church shall hold their regular meetings on the first Friday night of each month; and the joint meetings of the members of the church and officers shall take place on the first Friday night of each quarter.

Article 9.—The business meetings of this church shall be governed by Roberts' Rules of Order.

Article 10.—The order of business at all regular meetings shall be as follows:

1. Reading of the minutes of previous meeting.
2. Reports of committees.
3. Reading of communications and bills.
4. Unfinished business.
5. New business.
6. Remarks for the good and welfare of the church.

Article 11.—Any article of these by-laws may be changed or amended on the same conditions and in the same way as is laid down in Article 8 of the constitution.

THE FOOLISH ONES.

"They do not know what pleasure is,"
he often said of those
Who, being rich, still worked away and
still had worldly woes;
"If I could have their wealth I'd leave
all common cares behind,
And ever linger happily where there
was joy to find."

By working long and striving hard
wealth came to him at last,
And then he feared it might be lost unless he held it fast,
And those below looked up at him and
oft were heard to say:
"Why should a fool who still slaves on have riches, anyway?"

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

So Considered by the Writer of This Communication.

If spirit is life and life is spirit, then life is eternal, or non-dying. This being the case, let us investigate further. A single hair is animated and pervaded by spirit. We will suppose a single hair in a man's beard grows one-sixteenth of an inch each thirty days. Now, if that hair is cut off in sections, which are fractions of one-sixteenth of an inch each time the man shaves, does the amputation of that material hair affect the length of the spiritual hair? If you answer no, then I would ask you for a reason to substantiate your negative answer. You would probably say: "Because spirit is eternal, or non-dying, therefore the spirit hair continues to grow regardless of the fact that its material encasement—the material hair—is lopped off." Now I want to ask you, this being true, how long will the spiritual hair be at the time of the dissolution of the man's body, supposing he inhabits his body seventy years? We will leave the answer to the mathematician and pass on. What becomes of this hair? I am referring to the spiritual hair. Why is it that the beards of patriarchal spirits are not several yards in length? Do not think this question trivial. On its correct answer depends the whole question of life in a future state, or beyond the change called death. The same question may be asked with regard to the growth of the finger nails. Can you answer it?

It has been my good fortune to investigate deeply into matters psychical, and I have put this question, which I have just asked you, to many who had devoted much money and many years to the study and investigation of spiritual philosophy and phenomena, but I have not as yet received a logical answer which would stand the test of applied reason.

LYCEUM LESSONS.

Progressive Lyceum, Galveston, Texas.

Topic: Mediumship.

Gem of Thought: Ever upward, ever onward, tends the human soul, and a thousand beckoning hands lead us forward to the goal.

We note the joint growth of the mind and the body as they become accustomed to congenial association with each other, and thereby the proper expression of life. The mind of the child, while a babe in the mother's arms, chooses, but the body unaccustomed to respond to the mind does not reach, properly, with foot or hand. Now the influence of an excarnate mind upon the body of a medium is very much similar to this. First we must harmonize the vibrations of the body, and when a few—never more than seven—sit to investigate, the same people should occupy the same chairs each time, and in fact the room might well be dedicated to the sacred purpose alone, of seeking communion with the dear departed. This forms a magnetic current which may of itself cause rappings on the table; the table generally used for convenience to place the hands comfortably upon, and it does to an extent become charged with magnetism. This magnetic center thus formed is as the sounding board, and the invisibles operate upon it in such manner as the latent mediumistic qualities of the sensitives will permit. They are able to direct the magnetic vibrations and make raps or move the table; they may find a mind sensitive enough to make a mental impression upon and through that channel give a thought or appear clairvoyantly in such form as will be recognized. So indeed, "a thousand hands, beckoning, lead us forward to the goal."

Intermediate:—As we were talking some time ago, the spirit friends who have passed to the spiritual state are not far from us; some bound by conditions of necessary repentance and others held by the love-tie which death can in no wise sever. The thoughts we have, the books we read and the places we go, each are a force to determine what element of spirit influences will surround and guide us. When we think very seriously and when we sleep, we frequently go into this psychic realm—for such it is called—and associate with individual souls like unto ourselves; you know that when you read a story of wild adventure, you dream similar experiences, and when you go to bed thinking real seriously of a dear friend, in the morning you are not quite able to tell just what occurred, but there is a feeling that you have been with that friend. So in our hours of waking, the spirit friends whom we attract by our thoughts and the places to which we go, follow us and give to our lives a certain influence.

Soon you are to be the men and women of this land; the inventions which are now but thought of, flying machines and wireless telegraphy, must be completed by you; so don't you think that it is well to keep your minds clear by reading good books and by going where beauty and goodness is certain to be found? In fact, boys and girls, don't you believe that the best time is found by living such a life?

Oh, for an eye to see the beautiful,
An ear to hear the sweetest symphonies;
For feet to walk the path most dutiful,
And hands to touch life's joyous harmonies.
Oh, for a heart so full of sympathy,
That with patience I will love and pity.

Gem of Thought:

Let our lives be of the best
That our poor hearts know;
Higher Powers will do the rest,
Time will raise the low.

In concluding the month's study of mediumship it is well to again speak of the naturalness of all the demonstrations of phenomena. The mental phases of which we spoke are each of them the natural manifestations of the mind, almost all of the manifestations have been demonstrated by minds yet in the body and this again is evidence of the naturalness of the unseen, spirit world. We may enjoy all of the tranquillity and peace and joy of the spirit now, for we are living a spirit life, and if it be spiritual, all of the blessings attendant will be ours. We should become satisfied of the abundant power of Creative Energy to, in a natural way, provide for the needs of all earth's children; should know that Nature's laws are sufficient, if obeyed, to bless us with both spiritual and temporal requirements. The physical phases of spiritual mediumship are likewise natural and through the law of levitation almost all of the manifestations have been produced. All of the phases of mediumship are gifts, in the sense that life is a gift, the life germ in a grain of corn unless placed under proper conditions will never do that which it is possible for it to do, so man's possibilities of life must, by cultivation, be unfolded; and even so must his spiritual gifts be developed. The foot must not say to the hand, I have no need of thee, so we each are to be satisfied with the best that we can do with the careful use of the gift which is ours and hope that every one else does the same.

Intermediate:—Well, boys and girls, it is not probable that many of you aspire to be spiritual mediums in the sense of going before the public and teaching or demonstrating Spiritualism, but I trust that you will each and all carefully endeavor to be mediums in the sense that joy and sunshine may come to others through your life. You are now forming the foundation of your character; upon the ideas that you determine now, you must build your entire life; so how necessary it is to be particular as to the start. You note how well the foundation of a large building is laid, so if you would make your life a great structure of beauty and comfort, lay well the foundation. Happiness is the object of every life, and don't you think that from our lessons, the references made, and even your own experiences, the greatest happines is found in the happiness of others? Learn as well as you can the law of life, constant progress, step by step higher, and live by it. Take care to say all of the nice things you can to your friends while their ears can hear, and do all the kind deeds that you can while they may be conscious of them; do not wait until the body is deserted by the spirit, and then bring your flowers and your praise. We all appreciate, and we need, the encouragement which due and just praise gives, so be full of tenderness and sympathy to all.

Cheer the life of those you love,
And the stranger, too,
All are journeying above,
Give to each his due.

"What I owe to myself I owe to my neighbor, and what I owe to my neighbor I owe to the whole world."

It is of the highest importance, therefore, that a man keeps himself in the most highly vitalized condition for the sake of productiveness. No one can keep in this condition without the rest which comes from self-forgetfulness and the refreshment which comes from joy; one can never lose the capacity for play without some sacrifice of the capacity for work.—H. W. Mabie.

THE QUESTION.

Is Spiritualism a Belief or a Knowledge?

Yesterday I attended the conference meeting of the Seattle Spiritual Association, and was somewhat surprised at the diversion of thought given out on the topic, "Is Spiritualism a Belief or a knowledge?" I gave a few of my thoughts and experiences on the subject, and it was suggested that I send them to The Progressive Thinker. This morning, as the iron horse is rapidly speeding me back to my work at the mines, I feel impressed to write down a few thoughts.

What is positive knowledge to one, may to another be only a belief; and to another it may be void of even a belief. That depends a great deal upon the education a person has obtained upon the subject. Education is the foundation of knowledge and truth, while ignorance is the foundation of error and disbelief. Truth travels but slowly, while error goes with a rapid pace. The reason is obvious: Those who accept error do so on mere belief, while those who accept truth do so only after long searching and deliberate examination. A bold, daring mind concentrating its energies, its purpose once fixed, marches steadily forward in its research with a courage which no defeat can daunt, and a perseverance which knows no limit but success—like the spirit of Christopher Columbus, who after years of diligent study and searching investigation, came into possession of the knowledge and reality of the spherical formation of this planet, the Earth. While he had not actually encircled the globe, the evidence and knowledge that he had obtained were to him a positive truth. The minds of almost the entire population of the world were against him, a belief that proved erroneous and fell by the wayside when knowledge gained a footing on truth and reality. In order to impart this knowledge to mankind he was willing to risk his life and the lives of many of his fellow-men. And in seeking financial aid he secured a hearing before the highest officials of Spain, who were all intelligent and educated men in the channels of thought in which their minds had been trained, but who were ignorant (through lack of education) on the subjects of astronomy and navigation, and with all his maps and charts, and all the explanations he could give, they could not grasp it. One of the members sent for a Bible, by which he proved to the satisfaction of the assembly that the world was flat and had four corners. They arose in a body and ordered Mr. Columbus to depart immediately, or they would have him put into an insane asylum, and some wanted to put him to death for assuming to know more than God.

A short time ago I heard a prominent platform speaker say that he had heard of a city called Chicago, said city being in the state of Illinois. He believed there was such a place, but had not been there himself; therefore lacked the positive knowledge of it. I have never been in Chicago, and am glad that I am not of that arbitrary nature, to lack the knowledge and truth of its existence, when the positive evidence is so easy obtainable. And like the great philosopher who had not actually traveled around the globe, I have not actually been on the other side of life, but my research and investigation have brought me the positive knowledge and truth of its reality.

O, how comforting it is to know that there is a life beyond the grave, that others have passed that event called death and still live; and they tell me that I will be like unto them, that the gate stands ajar for one and all. And here my thoughts revert back to the time when I disbelieved. What an unsatisfied, unpleasant sensation enshrouded me. The first step toward my spiritual unfoldment was a desire to believe. I slowly and gradually made progress, and after a time reached that stage where I said, "I am inclined to believe." It was then that I really began to grow hungry, with a longing desire for more satisfaction, continually seeking, evidence piled upon evidence, until I fearlessly said, "I believe," I did not stop at that; I threw on the searchlight, penetrated deeper and with the X-rays (clairvoyance) I watched that belief expand and grow into a soul-satisfying knowledge, that

"When I lay down this mortal coil
I will reap the harvest from the seed of my earthly toil."
I know that others live
Without the physical breath;
I hear a divine whisper telling
My inner consciousness, "There is no death."

REMARKABLE.

The Seances at Spring Hill, Kansas

On a visit to Spring Hill Kansas, to attend some seances being held there for the production of another work by the same spirit band that has given to the world those two remarkable books, "Rending the Vail," and "Beyond the Vail," I reached that town on Sunday, September 28, and attended a seance that evening. Those seances are held at the residence of W. W. Aber, the medium employed by this band delegated by the Star Circle in the spirit world, now engaged in a work treating on Life in the Higher Spirit Spheres.

The seance room is situated on the second floor of the house, devoted exclusively to the purpose of holding the seances. A black curtain is stretched across one corner of the room for a cabinet, inclosing a space only large enough for a chair in which the medium sits profoundly entranced during the entire time of the seance.

The room is lighted by a large candle placed high up in the corner diagonally opposite the cabinet. The light is softened by a thin red cloth. Chairs for the circle are arranged around in front of the cabinet.

The seance is opened by the appearance of a human form taller than the medium and in a dress entirely different from that of the medium, and with heavy whiskers (the medium being clean shaven). This is Dr. Reed, the chemical control. After a greeting to the circle and a brief statement of conditions, he retires and the work begins. Another form appears and proceeds to write in a tablet, tearing out the leaves as fast as they are filled, writing at a rate of most remarkable rapidity—from 500 to 600 or more words in a minute. Sometimes a dozen or more pages are written in rapid succession. Then another form appears, opens the desk, takes out the sheets of paper prepared for the typewriter, and gives a typewritten message, some of which contains 1200 or 1500 words, and at a rate of 200 words per minute. The work is as neatly done as any typewriter in mortal form could do it.

And then appears another form and delivers an oral address which is taken down by the secretary. Sometimes the orator in female attire stands near the secretary and by means of a trumpet the secretary gathers the messages delivered by them in whispers and it is written out in full by the secretary.

Then frequently the artist appears, who is one of the old Italian painters, and in a brief space of time (from 60 to 90 seconds) executes a portrait of some one of the communicating spirits of a high order of intelligence and spiritual development. Some of these pictures are in colors remarkable for their beauty and expression. This is the general description of the seances held for the work (Thursday and Sunday evenings). The report of the preceding seance, written out in full, is read by the secretary just before the next seance, and passed upon by the circle and corrected and amended if need be, and accepted by the spirit band the first thing in that seance.

On Tuesday evenings the seances are given to the public, in which the visitors meet such of their relatives and friends as are able to come and be recognized. Each one is called up to the cabinet and there meets the loved ones and friends of long ago, and never fail to see and converse with them. The spirits attending the visitors not being accustomed to materializing and conversing, they are not able to speak so freely and plainly as those engaged in the work. Besides, visitors themselves are more or less excited on meeting their relations and friends, and their conversation is not so calm and well directed as is that of those who belong to the circle. Nevertheless, no visitor leaves without expressing pleasure and satisfaction with his or her visit. I have attended five seances and only regreat that I could not stay longer.

I consider these seances the most remarkable that I have ever attended or seen anywhere, or read of. The character of the work is of the highest order, treating of the philosophy of Spiritualism by the dwellers of the higher realms, and is of such a character as will fill a much needed and pressing want felt by the progressive Spiritualists.

Besides these seances afford the most indubitable and tangible proof of spirit return and communion that can be found anywhere. To one who has witnessed these wonderful manifestations it seems strange that more do not avail themselves of this grand opportunity of satisfying their minds on this most important subject. I am informed that many of those who have visited these seances either return or declare they will send members of their families to witness scenes so wonderful and interesting.

Anyone who comes here with a suspicion of fraud or trickery, soon gets that out of his mind, for every facility for testing the manifestations is freely offered. Indeed the manifestations themselves are demonstrations of their genuineness. Where is the mortal that can write in a clear, legible hand 500 or 600 words in a minute, following the ruled lines of the paper in a dim light? or write 220 words on a type-writer in a minute? or execute those beautiful pictures with exquisite skill in delicately blended colors in the time of one minute? I have seen all these, and it is impossible for any mortal to do these things. Are not these demonstrable proofs of spirit return and communion?

A CREED FOR TO-DAY.

The Twentieth Century Needs in Religion.

"No more opinions. I am done with opinions. I want work."—John Wesley.

The immortal founder of the great Methodist church cannot be said to have been deficient in sentiment or in faith.

The thing we call soul—the capacity for the ideal—was developed in Wesley to an extraordinary degree. He had opinions, opinions aplenty, but he also had a marvelous amount of common sense; and along toward the evening of his long and useful life, when experience was in full flower and reflection reigned supreme, the grand old man uttered the words which have been selected as the text of this article.

They are words to think about. No matter what one's political or religious views may happen to be he ought to be able to find in Wesley's words food for deepest reflection.

The "opinions" of which Wesley spoke were religious opinions—views of the universe; speculations concerning God, man and destiny; guesses regarding genesis and eschatology, the beginning and the end of things. It is well to bear this fact in mind. It is potent to the whole argument. It is, in fact, the heart of the whole matter.

Religious opinions! They have filled a large page in the history of the race! They have written themselves in blood all along the way of our human story! They have slain their millions and have done more than all other things combined to embitter human feelings and defeat the true aims of human society.

And lo! in these latest days we are learning that the terrible past with its mortal animosities and hates, with its thumbscrews and inquisitorial fires, was wholly owing to ignorant fanaticisms. If men had always been as wise and reasonable as they are to-day there would have been no page of history such as we are now compelled to read.

Had the men of the olden time known as much as men know to-day Catholic would never have persecuted Protestant, nor Protestant Catholic; Puritans would never have burned Quakers nor Anglicans tortured Dissenters.

The whole bloody business was the result of ignorance and of the fanaticism that was born of the ignorance.

To-day we know that opinion is merely opinion. To-day we know that there never was a theological creed that was not purely visionary, and that in the dark days of old men hated and destroyed each other not because they had any good reason for so doing, but simply and solely because they were deluded, crazed and maddened by their superstitions.

In the light of the splendid knowledge of the new century it is given us to see that both genesis and eschatology—both the beginning and the end of things— are wrapped in inscrutable mystery!

"Whence, what, whither?" are still potent questions which in the hushed moments of our busy lives we ask over and over again, as did the men of old; bue we know, as the men of old knew, that there is no answer to the questions.

We have reached the stage in our intellectual advance where we have discovered that the heart of the universe will not be plucked out, and that the great problems of the speculative reason are unsolved and, from the earthly viewpoint, unsolvable.

This does not mean that religion is a sham and that the great spiritual hopes of the ages are delusions and lies. Nothing of the kind! It simply means that so far as the great data of the speculative reason are concerned we must be content to be agnostic—not denying the data, nor affirming them, but simply holding ourselves neutral until they are either proved or disproved.

But in the meantime there are some things that we know. We may not know where we came from or whither we are going, but we know that we are here.

And we know more than that. We know that in order to live here in peace, happiness and honor we must dwell together in obedience to the laws of love, kindness and justice. We must check the selfish impulses and do what we can to strengthen the sentiment of altruism. We must curb the animal in our nature and to our utmost cultivate the human. We must do what we can to promote the feeling of the brotherhood versus the feeling of the clan. We must labor for the spread of the intelligence which shall make us tolerant, hospitable and forgiving.

In a word it is incumbent upon us all to make this world as bright, as happy and as beautiful as we can. To conquer the material forces of nature and turn them to the service of civilization, to curb the brutal in ourselves so that we may to the greatest possible extent realize in our experience the ideals of the great and the good of all ages—this is our duty, and, so far as this world is concerned, our only duty.

Not opinions about the mysteries at the bottom of eternity and infinity, but work for the good and glory of the present existence—such is the much-wanted creed.

Workers—men and women who love humanity and are prepared to labor for its advancement—that is what we need above all mere idle dreamers.—Rev. Thos. B. Gregory in Chicago American.

LIGHT AND SHADE.

I look, O Soul, into thy face,
And ask, but ask in vain:
"Is thy serenity the sum
Of merriment or pain?"

So sweetly now you sing and smile
I yield the palm to mirth,
But when anon I see thine eyes
I cast the dream to earth.

Once more I crown the brow of care
And count the sorrow dear
That can so light thy features with
The hope that conquers fear.

—G. G. B.

THE SOUL'S MIRROR.

A Spiritual Solvent for Internal Discontent.

"Did you ever feel oppressed, irritable or captious without being able to assign any extraneous reason therefor? And furthermore, when in this condition of mind or spirit, fix the blame for your ill-humor on somebody else?

If so, you have had an opportunity of studying self, with the probabilities of finding the cause at home rather than abroad.

When all is sunshine within, the reflection is in accord with the soul's polish. Our thoughts generally take shape according to our feelings. Ill-humor makes pessimistic, except where love for an object is empowered to intervene and temporarily allay the ill-humor.

But that is selfish love, though not out of order, for it leads to the universal—is an impulse toward that end.

As a whole-souled principle it dominates the self-hood and engenders good feeling enough to repel vicious attacks or others' ill-humor, and reflects all the rest favorably, sympathizing with those not so endowed rather than meeting them with unloving impulses or unkind feelings.

Love is the conscious principle of the soul—that which makes it known to itself—and does not partake of ill-humor in its natural state. If it did, man would have long ago given it cause to manifest and felt its effects. But it is absolute, unchangeable, and not a feature of the human soul in its natural state. Thus it does not belong there, and when we feel it manifesting it needs removing—just as we would remove any other defect in our character, or physical imperfection that might occasion suffering.

It is certainly painful to be discontented or unhappy, and ill-humor is but a manifestation of that. Discontent may be the cause of ill-feeling, but is in itself the effect of a prior cause. That cause we want to eradicate, if possible.

We know that selfishness induces ill-humor in others, but do not always know the special form or feature of the evil. If in others, why not in us? Do we always know ourselves? Have we perfect self-consciousness? Not as long as ill-humor controls reason, for perfect consciousness is synonymous with perfect reasoning—the absolute control of reason over the emotions or passions—the animal.

Selfishness is animal love, or love dominated by animalism, whether for sensual or selfish effect, and, like our lower life companions, makes us more or less savage, as it were, of course to a modified degree, though we are often impelled to use the term "brute" in connection with some people. But brutal we are at times and under circumstances comparatively considered.

A harsh reply strikes many as such. Think of a high-minded, tender soul administering to the wants of a suffering patient, being uncivilly addressed for a moment's inattention!

An unconscionable vibration pouring in upon a sympathetic soul unprepared for such an attack is like wounding a dove in its sweetest innocence of any design upon its life's enjoyment. The pang of such a shaft must be experienced to be understood. And we occasion many such wounds unknowingly.

A worldly education alone does not prohibit such "brutality." A higher education than this is needed to refine the soul. The experience of suffering may lead to it, provided the same is not inculcated by brutality, as some of our worldly methods prescribe.

Individual suffering has a more accurate aim towards a consideration for other's feelings. But deeds of genuine love or sympathy are the most absolute soul-refiner; and he who does for others, leads the way to the "gates ajar."

Nature knows no swerving from an absolute impulse of love, finds no reasons for withholding its benignity, sees no cause for being unloving because man is, finds no fault with human frailties, seeks no apology to do wrong. It does "right for right's sake," and in that is a constant inspiration to its progeny for like effects. It could not do otherwise as an absolute unchangeable law, and the man who does not imitate her, must grovel his way through the shades of matter with inspiration partaking of the same hue. He cannot build a spiritual structure, either for himself or others, and must fail in the end.

The results will be as introduced in this article—the first indication being a soul discontent not accounted for in our life's program. At that period we need to begin our investigation of self—a probing to the interior for the cause. When the latter is found, a reversal of our life's actions is in order; and justice and consideration are the needed requisites toward a happier feeling.

Such is the narrative of a good little woman as she laid it out before my mental vision—one who has suffered until she was brought face to face with herself through a faithful spirit guide, but now happy in the knowledge of knowing herself, and content in being able to live the life prescribed to her as a balm for the rest of her days on earth.

GO RIGHT ON WORKING.

Ah, yes, the task is hard, 'tis true,
But what's the use of sighing?
They're soonest with their duties thro',
Who bravely keep on trying.
There's no advantage to be found
In sorrowing or shirking;
They with success are soonest crown'd
Who just go right on working.

Strive patiently and with a will.
That shall not be defeated;
Keep singing at your task until
You see it stand completed.
Nor let the clouds of doubt draw near,
Your sky's glad sunshine murking;
Be brave and fill your heart with cheer,
And just go right on working.

NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED.

A Copy of Its Constitution and By-Laws.

At a meeting in the Temple of the Morris Pratt Institute Building, on Thursday night, Oct. 9, 1902, a Spiritualist church was organized. As few people know just what Spiritualists believe and do, it is thought best to submit the following report of that meeting.

Mrs. Clara L. Stewart was chosen temporary chairman; Mr. H. A. Beckman, temporary secretary. Mr. Moses Hull, Mr. A. J. Weaver and Mrs. Clara L. Stewart had been selected to prepare a constitution and other necessary papers. When Mr. Hull made his report, after due deliberation, it was adopted. Eighteen of those present signed the preamble to the constitution, and thus became a nucleus for a church. After considering and adopting the constitution seriatim, Mr. A. J. Weaver was elected president of the new church. Mrs. Emma R. Abbott was made vice-president; Mr. H. A. Beckman, secretary, and Miss Agnes Chaffee, treasurer. A board of trustees was chosen, and the church was ready to apply for its charter.

The church resolved to hold public meetings, with Rev. Moses Hull for its pastor, and free admittance to its congregation, every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. The following constitution and by-laws which were adopted, may be of interest to the public:

Preamble.

We, whose names are hereunto attached, in order to promulgate and strengthen by word and example, the facts and truths of Modern Spiritualism and cognate subjects, hereby agree to organize ourselves into a church to be known as the Spiritualist Church of Whitewater, Wis., and agree to abide by its constitution, and to observe the following rules.

1. To try to walk in unison with each other.
2. To assist those who are in misfortune.
3. To pity those who are in trouble.
4. To enlighten those who are in darkness.
5. To visit and administer to those who are sick.
6. To make efforts to reclaim those who are erring, and
7. To make our thoughts and lives beautiful and acceptable in the sight of our arisen loved ones, and of each other.

Article 1.—Name.—This organization shall be known as The Spiritualist Church, of Whitewater, Wisconsin.

Article 2.—Explanation of the Word Church.—While Spiritualism is a science, because based on demonstrated facts; and a philosophy, because "it contains the knowledge of phenomena as explained by law;" it is also a religion, because it is a revelation from the spirit world, which inspires feelings of reverence, and love for the highest ideals of truth, of goodness, of wisdom and of all that is divine and heavenly, under whatever name, and in whatever clime. The word church is used in this connection, mainly to stand for and make emphatic the religious side of Spiritualism.

Article 3.—Objects.—The objects of this church are:

1st. To form a more thorough acquaintance with each other, in order that we may more unitedly, more harmoniously, and more thoroughly work together for the building up of an exalted and grand Spiritualism in our lives.

2nd. To try, by public meetings and otherwise, to spread the light of Spiritualism and progress among those with whom we associate.

Article 4.—Membership.—Any person of good moral character, who is in sympathy with our work, and who will industriously and harmoniously work with us to promote the cause for which we are united, can become a member of this church by signing this constitution and complying with the terms stated in our by-laws.

Article 4.—Officers.—The officers of this church shall consist of a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, and board of six trustees, who, shall transact all the business of the church excepting what is transacted at its regular business meetings. All business done by the officers and trustees shall be subject to ratification, amendment or change at any regular meeting of the church.

Article 6.—Duties of Officers.—Sec. 1. It shall be the duty of the president to call all meetings; to preside and maintain order at all business meetings; to sign all orders drawn on the treasury, and to have a general oversight of all the business of the church.

Sec. 2. In the absence of the president it shall be the duty of the vice-president to perform all of the duties of the president.

Sec. 3. The secretary shall conduct the correspondence of the church, keep records of all important business transactions and of all the financial matters of the church. He shall also keep the members posted as to their financial standing in the church; and shall with the president sign all orders drawn on the treasury.

Sec. 4. The treasurer shall take charge of all property and money belonging to the church, and shall pay out money only on orders signed by the president and secretary.

Sec. 5. The board of trustees shall, in connection with the other officers, have general charge of the business and property of the church; shall do with it as the church, in open meeting shall direct, and shall make a report as often as once in six months.

Article 7.—Elections.—The officers of this church shall be elected by ballot, on the first Friday in October, and shall hold their respective offices for one year, or until their successors are chosen; all except the board of trustees, two of whom shall, after the first year, be elected annually to serve for a term of three years. At the first election two trustees shall be elected to serve one year; two for two years, and two for three years.

Article 8.—Quorum.—In the board of officers five of its members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Sec. 2. At business meetings of the church seven members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Article 9.—Amendment.—Any article of this constitution can be amended by a two-thirds vote of all who are present at any regular meeting, providing the notice of such amendment shall have been read at two previous meetings, and providing that notice of such action shall have been forwarded to each member of the church.

By-Laws.

Any person desiring to become a member of this church, shall, upon application to one of its officers, be furnished with a blank application for membership, which must be filled out by such person and presented to the board of trustees, or to the church at its next meeting, where a vote shall be taken. The applicants on receiving a two-thirds vote of those present shall be declared elected and notified of such election by the secretary, after which they can, if they so desire, be publicly taken into the church. After this public recognition they shall have all the rights and privileges of other members.

Article 2.—Those who are six months in arrears of payment of their dues, after having been twice notified by the secretary, shall, if the church so decides, be suspended from the church.

Article 3.—The weekly dues of each member shall be such an amount as he or she may choose and pledge to pay.

Article 4.—If for any good reason a member cannot pay his dues, the church can, if it sees fit, cancel a portion or all of such dues.

Article 5.—No member who is six months in arrears of his dues is eligible to any office in the church, or to vote on any of its business transactions.

Article 6.—No dues shall be required of any student in the Morris Pratt Institute.

Article 7.—Special meetings shall be called at any time on the written request of any five members of the church, for the transaction of any necessary business.

Article 8.—The officers and trustees of the church shall hold their regular meetings on the first Friday night of each month; and the joint meetings of the members of the church and officers shall take place on the first Friday night of each quarter.

Article 9.—The business meetings of this church shall be governed by Roberts' Rules of Order.

Article 10.—The order of business at all regular meetings shall be as follows:

1. Reading of the minutes of previous meeting.
2. Reports of committees.
3. Reading of communications and bills.
4. Unfinished business.
5. New business.
6. Remarks for the good and welfare of the church.

Article 11.—Any article of these by-laws may be changed or amended on the same conditions and in the same way as is laid down in Article 8 of the constitution.

THE FOOLISH ONES.

"They do not know what pleasure is,"
he often said of those
Who, being rich, still worked away and
still had worldly woes;
"If I could have their wealth I'd leave
all common cares behind,
And ever linger happily where there
was joy to find."

By working long and striving hard
wealth came to him at last,
And then he feared it might be lost unless he held it fast.
And those below looked up at him and
oft were heard to say:
"Why should a fool who still slaves on
have riches, anyway?"

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

So Considered by the Writer of This Communication.

If spirit is life and life is spirit, then life is eternal, or non-dying. This being the case, let us investigate further. A single hair is animated and pervaded by spirit. We will suppose a single hair in a man's beard grows one-sixteenth of an inch each thirty days. Now, if that hair is cut off in sections, which are fractions of one-sixteenth of an inch each time the man shaves, does the amputation of that material hair affect the length of the spiritual hair? If you answer no, then I would ask you for a reason to substantiate your negative answer. You would probably say: "Because spirit is eternal, or non-dying, therefore the spirit hair continues to grow regardless of the fact that its material encasement—the material hair—is lopped off." Now I want to ask you, this being true, how long will the spiritual hair be at the time of the dissolution of the man's body, supposing he inhabits his body seventy years? We will leave the answer to the mathematician and pass on. What becomes of this hair? I am referring to the spiritual hair. Why is it that the beards of patriarchal spirits are not several yards in length? Do not think this question trivial. On its correct answer depends the whole question of life in a future state, or beyond the change called death. The same question may be asked with regard to the growth of the finger nails. Can you answer it?

It has been my good fortune to investigate deeply into matters psychical, and I have put this question, which I have just asked you, to many who had devoted much money and many years to the study and investigation of spiritual philosophy and phenomena, but I have not as yet received a logical answer which would stand the test of applied reason.

LYCEUM LESSONS.

Progressive Lyceum, Galveston, Texas.

Topic: Mediumship.

Gem of Thought: Ever upward, ever onward, tends the human soul, and a thousand beckoning hands lead us forward to the goal.

We note the joint growth of the mind and the body as they become accustomed to congenial association with each other, and thereby the proper expression of life. The mind of the child, while a babe in the mother's arms, chooses, but the body unaccustomed to respond to the mind does not reach, properly, with foot or hand. Now the influence of an excarnate mind upon the body of a medium is very much similar to this. First we must harmonize the vibrations of the body, and when a few—never more than seven—sit to investigate, the same people should occupy the same chairs each time, and in fact the room might well be dedicated to the sacred purpose alone, of seeking communion with the dear departed. This forms a magnetic current which may of itself cause rappings on the table; the table generally used for convenience to place the hands comfortably upon, and it does to an extent become charged with magnetism. This magnetic center thus formed is as the sounding board, and the invisibles operate upon it in such manner as the latent mediumistic qualities of the sensitives will permit. They are able to direct the magnetic vibrations and make raps or move the table; they may find a mind sensitive enough to make a mental impression upon and through that channel give a thought or appear clairvoyantly in such form as will be recognized. So indeed, "a thousand hands, beckoning, lead us forward to the goal."

Intermediate:—As we were talking some time ago, the spirit friends who have passed to the spiritual state are not far from us; some bound by conditions of necessary repentance and others held by the love-tie which death can in no wise sever. The thoughts we have, the books we read and the places we go, each are a force to determine what element of spirit influences will surround and guide us. When we think very seriously and when we sleep, we frequently go into this psychic realm—for such it is called—and associate with individual souls like unto ourselves; you know that when you read a story of wild adventure, you dream similar experiences, and when you go to bed thinking real seriously of a dear friend, in the morning you are not quite able to tell just what occurred, but there is a feeling that you have been with that friend. So in our hours of waking, the spirit friends whom we attract by our thoughts and the places to which we go, follow us and give to our lives a certain influence.

Soon you are to be the men and women of this land; the inventions which are now but thought of, flying machines and wireless telegraphy, must be completed by you; so don't you think that it is well to keep your minds clear by reading good books and by going where beauty and goodness is certain to be found? In fact, boys and girls, don't you believe that the best time is found by living such a life?

Oh, for an eye to see the beautiful,
An ear to hear the sweetest symphonies;
For feet to walk the path most dutiful,
And hands to touch life's joyous harmonies.
Oh, for a heart so full of sympathy,
That with patience I will love and pity.

Gem of Thought:

Let our lives be of the best
That our poor hearts know;
Higher Powers will do the rest,
Time will raise the low.

In concluding the month's study of mediumship it is well to again speak of the naturalness of all the demonstrations of phenomena. The mental phases of which we spoke are each of them the natural manifestations of the mind, almost all of the manifestations have been demonstrated by minds yet in the body and this again is evidence of the naturalness of the unseen, spirit world. We may enjoy all of the tranquillity and peace and joy of the spirit now, for we are living a spirit life, and if it be spiritual, all of the blessings attendant will be ours. We should become satisfied of the abundant power of Creative Energy to, in a natural way, provide for the needs of all earth's children; should know that Nature's laws are sufficient, if obeyed, to bless us with both spiritual and temporal requirements. The physical phases of spiritual mediumship are likewise natural and through the law of levitation almost all of the manifestations have been produced. All of the phases of mediumship are gifts, in the sense that life is a gift, the life germ in a grain of corn unless placed under proper conditions will never do that which it is possible for it to do, so man's possibilities of life must, by cultivation, be unfolded; and even so must his spiritual gifts be developed. The foot must not say to the hand, I have no need of thee, so we each are to be satisfied with the best that we can do with the careful use of the gift which is ours and hope that every one else does the same.

Intermediate:—Well, boys and girls, it is not probable that many of you aspire to be spiritual mediums in the sense of going before the public and teaching or demonstrating Spiritualism, but I trust that you will each and all carefully endeavor to be mediums in the sense that joy and sunshine may come to others through your life. You are now forming the foundation of your character; upon the ideas that you determine now, you must build your entire life; so how necessary it is to be particular as to the start. You note how well the foundation of a large building is laid, so if you would make your life a great structure of beauty and comfort, lay well the foundation. Happiness is the object of every life, and don't you think that from our lessons, the references made, and even your own experiences, the greatest happines is found in the happiness of others? Learn as well as you can the law of life, constant progress, step by step higher, and live by it. Take care to say all of the nice things you can to your friends while their ears can hear, and do all the kind deeds that you can while they may be conscious of them; do not wait until the body is deserted by the spirit, and then bring your flowers and your praise. We all appreciate, and we need, the encouragement which due and just praise gives, so be full of tenderness and sympathy to all.

Cheer the life of those you love,
And the stranger, too,
All are journeying above,
Give to each his due.

"What I owe to myself I owe to my neighbor, and what I owe to my neighbor I owe to the whole world."

It is of the highest importance, therefore, that a man keeps himself in the most highly vitalized condition for the sake of productiveness. No one can keep in this condition without the rest which comes from self-forgetfulness and the refreshment which comes from joy; one can never lose the capacity for play without some sacrifice of the capacity for work.—H. W. Mable.

THE QUESTION.

Is Spiritualism a Belief or a Knowledge?

Yesterday I attended the conference meeting of the Seattle Spiritual Association, and was somewhat surprised at the diversion of thought given out on the topic, "Is Spiritualism a Belief or a knowledge?" I gave a few of my thoughts and experiences on the subject, and it was suggested that I send them to The Progressive Thinker. This morning, as the iron horse is rapidly speeding me back to my work at the mines, I feel impressed to write down a few thoughts.

What is positive knowledge to one, may to another be only a belief; and to another it may be void of even a belief. That depends a great deal upon the education a person has obtained upon the subject. Education is the foundation of knowledge and truth, while ignorance is the foundation of error and disbelief. Truth travels but slowly, while error goes with a rapid pace. The reason is obvious: Those who accept error do so on mere belief, while those who accept truth do so only after long searching and deliberate examination. A bold, daring mind concentrating its energies, its purpose once fixed, marches steadily forward in its research with a courage which no defeat can daunt, and a perseverance which knows no limit but success—like the spirit of Christopher Columbus, who after years of diligent study and searching investigation, came into possession of the knowledge and reality of the spherical formation of this planet, the Earth. While he had not actually encircled the globe, the evidence and knowledge that he had obtained were to him a positive truth. The minds of almost the entire population of the world were against him, a belief that proved erroneous and fell by the wayside when knowledge gained a footing on truth and reality. In order to impart this knowledge to mankind he was willing to risk his life and the lives of many of his fellow-men. And in seeking financial aid he secured a hearing before the highest officials of Spain, who were all intelligent and educated men in the channels of thought in which their minds had been trained, but who were ignorant (through lack of education) on the subjects of astronomy and navigation, and with all his maps and charts, and all the explanations he could give, they could not grasp it. One of the members sent for a Bible, by which he proved to the satisfaction of the assembly that the world was flat and had four corners. They arose in a body and ordered Mr. Columbus to depart immediately, or they would have him put into an insane asylum, and some wanted to put him to death for assuming to know more than God.

A short time ago I heard a prominent platform speaker say that he had heard of a city called Chicago, said city being in the state of Illinois. He believed there was such a place, but had not been there himself; therefore lacked the positive knowledge of it. I have never been in Chicago, and am glad that I am not of that arbitrary nature, to lack the knowledge and truth of its existence, when the positive evidence is so easy obtainable. And like the great philosopher who had not actually traveled around the globe, I have not actually been on the other side of life, but my research and investigation have brought me the positive knowledge and truth of its reality.

O, how comforting it is to know that there is a life beyond the grave, that others have passed that event called death and still live; and they tell me that I will be like unto them, that the gate stands ajar for one and all. And here my thoughts revert back to the time when I disbelieved. What an unsatisfied, unpleasant sensation enshrouded me. The first step toward my spiritual unfoldment was a desire to believe. I slowly and gradually made progress, and after a time reached that stage where I said, "I am inclined to believe." It was then that I really began to grow hungry, with a longing desire for more satisfaction, continually seeking, evidence piled upon evidence, until I fearlessly said, "I believe," I did not stop at that; I threw on the searchlight, penetrated deeper and with the X-rays (clairvoyance) I watched that belief expand and grow into a soul-satisfying knowledge, that

"When I lay down this mortal coil
I will reap the harvest from the seed of my earthly toil."
I know that others live
Without the physical breath;
I hear a divine whisper telling
My inner consciousness, "There is no death." C. M. CARTER.

REMARKABLE.

The Seances at Spring Hill, Kansas

On a visit to Spring Hill Kansas, to attend some seances being held there for the production of another work by the same spirit band that has given to the world those two remarkable books, "Rending the Vail," and "Beyond the Vail," I reached that town on Sunday, September 28, and attended a seance that evening. Those seances are held at the residence of W. W. Aber, the medium employed by this band delegated by the Star Circle in the spirit world, now engaged in a work treating on Life in the Higher Spirit Spheres.

The seance room is situated on the second floor of the house, devoted exclusively to the purpose of holding the seances. A black curtain is stretched across one corner of the room for a cabinet, inclosing a space only large enough for a chair in which the medium sits profoundly entranced during the entire time of the seance.

The room is lighted by a large candle placed high up in the corner diagonally opposite the cabinet. The light is softened by a thin red cloth. Chairs for the circle are arranged around in front of the cabinet.

The seance is opened by the appearance of a human form taller than the medium and in a dress entirely different from that of the medium, and with heavy whiskers (the medium being clean shaven). This is Dr. Reed, the chemical control. After a greeting to the circle and a brief statement of conditions, he retires and the work begins. Another form appears and proceeds to write in a tablet, tearing out the leaves as fast as they are filled, writing at a rate of most remarkable rapidity—from 500 to 600 or more words in a minute. Sometimes a dozen or more pages are written in rapid succession. Then another form appears, opens the desk, takes out the sheets of paper prepared for the typewriter, and gives a typewritten message, some of which contains 1200 or 1500 words, and at a rate of 200 words per minute. The work is as neatly done as any typewriter in mortal form could do it.

And then appears another form and delivers an oral address which is taken down by the secretary. Sometimes the orator in female attire stands near the secretary and by means of a trumpet the secretary gathers the messages delivered by them in whispers and it is written out in full by the secretary.

Then frequently the artist appears, who is one of the old Italian painters, and in a brief space of time (from 60 to 90 seconds) executes a portrait of some one of the communicating spirits of a high order of intelligence and spiritual development. Some of these pictures are in colors remarkable for their beauty and expression. This is the general description of the seances held for the work (Thursday and Sunday evenings). The report of the preceding seance, written out in full, is read by the secretary just before the next seance, and passed upon by the circle and corrected and amended if need be, and accepted by the spirit band the first thing in that seance.

On Tuesday evenings the seances are given to the public, in which the visitors meet such of their relatives and friends as are able to come and be recognized. Each one is called up to the cabinet and there meets the loved ones and friends of long ago, and never fail to see and converse with them. The spirits attending the visitors not being accustomed to materializing and conversing, they are not able to speak so freely and plainly as those engaged in the work. Besides, visitors themselves are more or less excited on meeting their relations and friends, and their conversation is not so calm and well directed as is that of those who belong to the circle. Nevertheless, no visitor leaves without expressing pleasure and satisfaction with his or her visit. I have attended five seances and only regreat that I could not stay longer.

I consider these seances the most remarkable that I have ever attended or seen anywhere, or read of. The character of the work is of the highest order, treating of the philosophy of Spiritualism by the dwellers of the higher realms, and is of such a character as will fill a much needed and pressing want felt by the progressive Spiritualists.

Besides these seances afford the most indubitable and tangible proof of spirit return and communion that can be found anywhere. To one who has witnessed these wonderful manifestations it seems strange that more do not avail themselves of this grand opportunity of satisfying their minds on this most important subject. I am informed that many of those who have visited these seances either return or declare they will send members of their families to witness scenes so wonderful and interesting.

Anyone who comes here with a suspicion of fraud or trickery, soon gets that out of his mind, for every facility for testing the manifestations is freely offered. Indeed the manifestations themselves are demonstrations of their genuineness. Where is the mortal that can write in a clear, legible hand 500 or 600 words in a minute, following the ruled lines of the paper in a dim light? or write 220 words on a type-writer in a minute? or execute those beautiful pictures with exquisite skill in delicately blended colors in the time of one minute? I have seen all these, and it is impossible for any mortal to do these things. Are not these demonstrable proofs of spirit return and communion?

"SPORT" AND CRUELTY.

Thoughts on the Habit of Destruction.

The Merry, Merry Huntsman.

Now the merry, merry huntsman goes to hunt in woodland ways;
He is eager to be shooting and he cares not what he slays;
Where he sees a moving object he takes sudden aim at it—
And then steals up through the bushes to find out what he has hit.

Oh, the merry, merry huntsman, what a happy soul is he,
Stumbling through the tangled thickets,
from all care for others free;
Where he hears the slightest rustle he begins to blaze away,
Thinking not of consequences, in his eagerness to slay.

Hear the merry, merry huntsman; how he makes the echoes ring
As he seeks what he may slaughter on the ground and on the wing;
He is adding to the orphans; widows wail to-day because He first shoots the moving object and then finds out what it was.

Under the head of "More Work for Audubons," the Chicago Tribune editorially says:

"In spite of recent triumph of the Audubons the glass eyes of dead parrots are seen gazing reproachfully over the brims of some fall hats, and millinery shops reveal that morgue-like appearance that is given them by glass cases filled with the remains of "winged gems." Of course these may be the "made birds," the kind that owe their creation to the manufacturer of milliner goods rather than to that greatest of all manufacturers, nature, but they wear the lines of life, and are proofs of the fact that women still look upon birds from the millinery standpoint. It is said that women dress to please men, yet few men can be found who admire these millinery monstrosities, and some go so far as to say that not only does vanity bear the name of woman but that cruelty also stalks about under the same sobriquet. And what profiteth a woman, it is asked, to know that there is a parrot in her hat if she be accused of harboring cruelty in her heart? Of course few bird buyers are conscious of any intentional sanctioning of cruelty, and they buy a stuffed owl with as few ethical scruples as they give to the selection of muslin roses. But the warning voice of Audubon has so long been heard in the land that ignorance in this matter is no longer looked upon in the light of innocence, and the woman who puts a dead bird in her hat takes her moral life in her hands."

There is a fine lesson in humane thought and feeling, couched in the following very readable essay in the Chicago Daily News. It is commended to the notice of those—we believe they are comparatively few among Spiritualists—who take pleasure in the destruction of birds, and things that may loosely be accounted as game.

Kingford in his youth and his high spirits is a capital specimen of our race. He is one of those big-hearted fellows, manly in all his tastes, but capable of being as tender as a woman. When he gets out into the country, which he loves, he reminds me very much of a great schoolboy. He is so thoroughly normal that he repays study. And this he has taught me—how deep-rooted in humanity is the habit of destruction.

Mankind is the enemy of nature.

Kingford came to visit me in the country. I insisted on a very early rising. I miss no chance of glorying in the first beautiful hours of daylight and of instilling in others a disgust of that incomprehensible custom which devotes to sleep the freshest and most inspiring moments of the summer days.

We walked over the dewy meadows and through the sweet-scented woods to the river's side.

Except for the song of the birds and the soft sound made by the little tongues of water lapping the smooth gray rocks it was very quiet—September is the sleeping time of the restless seasons. The spirit of peace brooded over the sylvan glades; the river rocked itself drowsily amid the mosses and the ferns upon its banks. Looking down through the water I could see the silver coats of the fish, which glided slowly from sunshine to shadow as if conscious of their graceful movements.

Now the first thought which entered Kingford's head when he, too, saw them, was our folly, as he called it, in not having armed ourselves with rod and line.

I wondered, if he could have had his way, whether any thought of pity or regret or shame would have affected him when he saw these poor things with lacerated mouths beating their lives out on the grass. His remorse at not being able to catch them was so sincere that I decided at once no such sentiment would be likely to occur to him. He was quivering with the desire to destroy; he was what the world would call a true sportsman and I thought then what pretty words we use to cover loathsome ideas—recalling at the time the account I had read the previous evening of an exciting race at the end of which it was said the winning horse "responded gamely" when the jockey began to use his whip.

Now there is a little red squirrel which lives in a big oak tree by the side of this river. I call him the little man of the woods. He has grown quite tame and no sooner does he hear the tapping of my stick on the ground than he runs to me and takes two leaps, by the first of which he arrives at my knees and by the second reaches my pocket, into which he plunges head foremost in the search for nuts that I never fail to provide.

This morning, however, he did not appear, though I heard him chattering among the boughs overhead. Kingford, too, heard the sound and his quick eyes caught sight of a little brown head peering down between the leaves.

In an instant his hands were filled with stones and if the little man had been less quick to dart away to his skyward nest his days would surely have been ended.

Will he ever learn to trust me again—shall I ever again feel his soft little paws on my hands while his intelligent eyes peer into mine, asking as plainly as if he could speak why my pockets ever grow empty of nuts?

Why should Kingford have wanted to kill that happy little creature? Would not he have felt one moment's remorse to have seen that tiny bundle of fur lying mangled and lifeless at our feet? Indeed, I am sure his only thought would have been of his skill in hitting so small a target.

I watched him curiously as we walked homeward across the fields. He gloried in the freshness of the air, in the charm of the scenery, in the beauties which met the eye on every side, yet all the while you could see that wild desire to destroy working within his heart.

The pretty thistles he struck at with his stick, leaving them hanging dismally on their broken stalks; he hit right and left at the scarlet berries in the hedge rows; he gathered great handfuls of wild flowers only to cast them aside as their fragile blossoms began to wither in the heat.

Two beautiful doves crossed our path, looking white as snow against the blue sky.

"If I only had a gun!" he said.

It must have been a hereditary instinct, for I know he has never learned to shoot. But he was aggressive at missing such an opportunity. It was in his blood to kill.

In my mind's eye I saw one of those pretty creatures lying at our feet, its pale feathers stained with blood, its soft eyes glazed, and the other with broken wing fluttering in agony over the green grass.

And in imagination I heard Kingford regretting that we have no dogs with us to prevent the wounded bird getting beyond his reach. He would have had no other thought.

He began to tell me how he had once gone on a ferreting expedition with some friends. They covered the entrance to the burrows with nets and then set the ferrets to work to drive out the rabbits. His part of the sport was to stand at the nets with a stick and kill the rabbits as they appeared, but he found that a surer method was to crush them with his foot. He told me it was one of his ambitions to go to England one winter for the fox and stag hunting and above all to go out west after big game.

It was the conventional sportman's talk—the kind of thing you may hear at any dinner table. But it struck me then, as it often had before, what a monstrous thing is the savage appetite of man to kill for pleasure.

Can it be that I am a witless crank because I think it strange that in the most cultured age one of the principal amusements of the heads of every Christian people, including our own, is the slaughter of harmless animals?

On the contrary, I believe a generation or two hence that "sportsman" will be a loathsome word seldom heard in decent society.

The lust for killing is to-day imbedded in the hearts of the people.

Poor hunted animals. Poor wounded things! I wonder if we have the same God and if He likes very well to see you tortured and killed for our amusement. I take it He does or there would not be so many ardent fishermen among His servants, the clergy; and yet I cannot picture Jesus of Nazareth dragging a hook from a fish's mouth or wringing the neck of some poor pigeon with half its little body shot away—for fun.

Have you ever looked into the eyes of a wounded bird or of a hunted deer brought to bay in the forest? I have. Have you ever heard the cry of little animals whose mother some hunter has killed?

Well, if not, it does not matter. It is not a question of momentary sympathy—it is a question of right and wrong. I believe that the sacrifice of life without cause is the greatest wrong for which a creature with a will can be held responsible. It is not possible for me to conceive the opposite view being taken by any person who thinks.

To inflict unnecessary suffering—can there really be an argument to show that this is a noble thing to do?

Kingford had gone on ahead of me. He had captured a gayly painted butterfly, which he brought back to show me, crushing its head between his thumb and finger.

"Isn't it a beauty?" he said.—Anna Woodward.

The above is a study in human nature, and not at its ideal best. The lust for killing is not a beautiful and ennobling quality, but rather points backward to a state of savage life whose traits, imbedded by ages of heredity, are not yet fully outgrown. The sport of killing is, when viewed ethically, of a very poor quality, and should be relegated to savage, merciless, carnivorous animals.

The slaughtering of animals, even for supposed necessary purposes, is brutalizing in tendency, very far from spiritualizing and uplifting. There is nothing in it tending to cultivate man's higher and nobler self, in the qualities that beautify and elevate humanity.

But even this work seems higher and nobler than the petty, miserable work of slaughtering for the mere sake of satisfying a low and essentially vicious selfish passion for slaughter; worse than all, when the shafts of destruction are aimed at such creatures as the beautiful innocent useful birds—even song-birds, for all are victims of the ruthless slaughterer.

Some beautiful lessons on this subject may be found in "Asphodel Blooms," by Emma Rood Tuttle.

LAWS AFFECTING WOMEN.

The opponents of woman suffrage often make the claim that the laws affecting women would be no better if the women voted, than they are now. The truth of this claim is not sustained by the facts as shown from actual experience. While the unfavorable laws affecting women have been slowly improved after much effort on the part of women, in the states where they do not vote, in the states where they do vote, the laws are changed without any effort on the part of the women.

Throughout Australia, before the granting of equal suffrage, a married man could will all his property away from his wife, leaving her penniless. She had no right of dower unless he died intestate. In those Australian colonies where women have had a vote, and in those only, the law has now been changed so that part of a man's property must go to his wife and family. The divorce laws of Australia and New Zealand were modeled upon those of England, by which infidelity on the part of the wife entitles the husband to a divorce, but infidelity on the part of the husband does not entitle the wife to one. Since woman suffrage was granted, the divorce laws have been equalized, and a number of other beneficent changes have been made.

In Wyoming, equal suffrage has caused the passage of a law that men and women in the employ of the state (including teachers) shall receive equal pay for equal work.

In Utah, equal suffrage has caused the passage of a law that female teachers in the public schools shall receive the same pay as male teachers, provided they hold certificates of the same grade.

Women teachers do not receive equal pay with men for the same work in a single state where women do not vote. If for no other reason than to receive equal pay for equal work, the teachers of the country should lend their influence towards securing woman suffrage in every state in the Union. Such a law would also benefit the men teachers for then they would not be obliged to compete with the low-priced women teachers. Each would stand upon their own merits, which is the only true guide in selecting a teacher.

A LADY'S EXPERIENCE.

A True Story of a Life, and Its Lesson.

About forty years ago I met at a Spiritualist convention in Flora Ill., a petite woman with soulful eyes, musical voice, and one of the most eloquent inspirational speakers I ever listened to. I was drawn to her at once, as her lecture was logical and radical. On making her acquaintance I found her in very poor health, and I invited her to my "Home" in DeWitt, Iowa, for treatment. She was with me about two months before being sufficiently restored to again take up platform work. Her former history as related to me was this:

She was born of extremely religious parents. Her mother passed away when she was an infant. She was a sensitive, thoughtful child, unlike the rest of the family. She had large spirituality, conscientiousness and benevolence; would do what she thought was right at any cost, but was a perfect hypnotic subject. Under the teachings of eternal punishment for the majority of the people, she went nearly insane with anxiety and horror at the contemplation of the eternal tortures to be endured by the great majority of the world.

While in this condition of mind, she went to work for a family of Spiritualists, who, she thinks, saved her from the mad-house by relieving her of this belief.

She soon developed into a medium and platform speaker. She was controlled by progressive, radical spirits, and was fearless in her utterances against all forms of superstition, especially our marriage institution, the spirits claiming it was a system of enslavement of woman, and urging for her equal rights with man. This was her theme when I met her. I had been full of such thoughts for some time, but had not yet voiced them in public, hence I was her ardent supporter.

Conservative Spiritualists were frightened, for at that time the subject was not being discussed everywhere as now. At a large meeting on the Fair Grounds at Whitewater, Wis., where we were both engaged afterwards, when we went on the platform she said to me, "I have some friends here from Clinton Junction who will be awfully shocked if I speak on the social question, so I will take some other subject." I was sorry, but never even thought of controlling her, but could not help wishing she would talk as I had heard her before. She started and seemed to be floundering for a little while, then launched into the subject and gave a lecture that greatly delighted me. When taking her seat, she said to me: "Dr. Severance, if I had the strength I would pitch you off the platform;" believing it was my desire that brought that influence against her will. I speak of this to show the power outside influences had upon her.

This susceptibility she felt, and fought against it, for it was always getting her into trouble of some kind, and Spiritualists did not realize that the same susceptibility of organization that made her such a fine instrument for the invisibles, was the cause of her being thus easily affected by the visibles.

I last saw her at my home in Whitewater, in 1862. After that she married and her husband was killed in the army. She wrote me of her affliction in his loss, of her persecution by the Spiritualists because of her teachings, said she did not feel she could endure the strain any longer, that those who were living lives she would scorn to live, were her persecutors, and that she would not endure it.

Time elapsed and I heard nothing from her until a mutual friend met her and she was then a Methodist. She had retired in her distress to a friend's in a country town. At the time a revival meeting was being held. To take her mind from her troubles, she attended. Coming into that influence, true to the hypnotic law she was controlled, and one of the most devoted.

I then lost all track of her and for all this time, thirty-eight years, I knew not whether she was in the form or out, until last February I received a letter from Michigan, asking all sorts of questions in family affairs, but with a signature wholly unknown to me. I ransacked my old account books to see if I had ever had a patient by that name. I found none. All at once I felt the old influence, and exclaimed to my my son, "It is Sophronia, I know the magnetism." I then hunted up an old letter, but the writing was unlike. But it was surely her, I felt, and wrote her, "Are you Sophronia?" I received a reply saying that she had forgotten she had changed her name. She wrote: "Since seeing you I have lived so many lives, died so many deaths, my heart is now dead, but I would love to hug you. I wish you could visit me, as I cannot leave my father, who is 92 years old and needs constant care."

I have recently returned from visiting her on her father's peach farm, and this is the brief story of her life since I knew her.

She was after her conversion so good a talker that they ordained her as a minister of the Methodist church. She traveled over the state of Kansas and elsewhere as an evangelist, riding on horseback, and when weary would picket her horse and lie on the ground and rest. Converted and baptized hundreds, felt earnestly the responsibility of saving souls from eternal misery until finally her health failed and she was compelled to return home utterly prostrated in body and spirit, and with little chance for recovery. While thus on a sick bed she received a letter from a lady in dire distress on account of her husband, who was an invalid, being unconverted, and asking her help to save his soul. She was deeply moved and earnestly prayed for help to recover in order to help save this soul from everlasting woe.

"Jesus Christ came to me," she said, "and I told him I knew he could make me whole."

I inquired, "How could you identify him?"

She replied, "He said he was Jesus and he did cure me, so I got up and went to that woman's assistance."

"Of course," said I, "any spirit at that time would have had to make that claim, to do you any good, as you would have had no faith in any other." She admitted that was true.

The last sermon she preached, she said, "I was explaining a portion of the Scriptures, when a voice as audible as yours said to me, 'How do you know that?' I stopped, asked the audience to sing, still that rung in my ears, 'How do you know that?' I said to my hearers, 'I must wait for more light.'

"I have been waiting ever since, for seven years. I can not believe any longer in eternal punishment; I simply cannot."

She had all these years lost me as I had her, and this was how she found me: A neighbor sent to the editor of The Progressive Thinker to know if he had any special news on the Pearson heresy case. He received with his reply the two papers containing the symposium. In reading them he was especially interested in my article and took the paper to this lady, showing her my article as the one he particularly liked. She glanced at the name and

THE PRINCIPLES OF EVOLUTION EXPLAINED AND APPLIED.

A Series of Instructive Lessons by A. J. Weaver.

Survival of the Fittest.

It is well to repeat, because it must not for a moment be forgotten, that if Evolution is true at all, it covers the whole field of organized life, both vegetable and animal, and that not a single form, not even the most unimportant bone or nerve or tissue of any form was ever created by any power outside of what resides in matter. There can be no evolution for a sea weed that is not for a rose of rarest hue, nor for the lowest worm that is not for man, nor for matter that is not for mind with all its attributes.

If the whole vegetable and animal worlds have come into existence and into their present order of existence by natural changes, it is proper to seek the cause of those changes. To find this cause is the object of this article.

Perhaps I ought to say causes instead of cause; for probably nothing comes from a single cause. What is the cause of the existence of the pen with which I write? Is it the inventor of the pen or the manufacturer or the material out of which the pen is made? What is the cause of the existence of the tree? Is it the seed, or is it the sunlight, or is it the earth, or is it the moisture? It is not one but all these conspiring together. So the life forms which cover the earth with all their varied parts have not come from a single cause, but are the result of many causes existing in nature.

The causes which I will present in this article are three, and they lie at the very foundation of Evolution. They are first, "The Struggle for Life," second, the "Survival of the Fittest," and third, "Heredity."

The first of these enters so largely into the work and is so very important that unless the mind keeps it constantly in view all the arguments that follow will fail to be appreciated because they will fail to be understood. Darwin says "There is no exception to the rule that every organized being naturally increases at so high a rate that, if not destroyed, the earth would soon be covered by the progeny of a single pair." This would be true even of the elephant which is the oldest liver and poorest breeder of any animal in existence. How much more would this be true of the first and lowest forms of animal life—such as made up the first or Protozoan age—animals not greatly unlike the "wigglers" which swarm in stagnant water, though many of them were as large as a tadpole.

With them there were no sexes. Males and females had not then come into existence. Among the swarming millions of that age, propagation took place by bisection. The small jelly-like mass of breathing matter would lengthen out, constrict in the middle and break into two parts, and each part form a separate being. In this way the number would double in a short time.

As the principle of competition ruled them and each one must care for himself or die, that age became a vast battle field of animal life. They not only struggled against one another but against the elements of nature around them. At the mercy of wind or tide they were driven by storms upon the rocks or washed by the waves upon the sea sands where they were left helpless. From that day to this, this principle of nature has continued, and even now among all classes of animal life, whether in the water, in the air, or on the land, including even man in all stages of his existence, savage or civilized, life is a struggle. Beings live on the brink of danger and death, and in the midst of fear.

Survival of the Fittest.

Some survive while others perish. Those survive which are "fittest." This discovery was made by Darwin and Wallace and is their contribution to Evolution. Darwin named it "Natural Selection." Herbert Spencer re-named it "Survival of the Fittest." By "The Fittest," as used in Evolution, is not necessarily meant the strongest nor the fiercest, nor the best fighters. The elephant is stronger than the mosquito, but stuck in the mire of a swamp the elephant will perish while the mosquito will live to feast on his perishing form. The lion is fiercer and a better fighter than the mouse, but we all remember the old fable where the lion, caught in a net, was set free by a mouse, which gnawed a hole for the lion to escape. The large majority of those animals which have survived the ravages of time and are alive to-day, are not the large nor strong nor fierce. "The fittest" means those which are best qualified to adapt themselves to their surroundings. They may be and often are the smallest, weakest, and most timid.

The third factor in nature which has helped produce the animal forms which cover earth, is heredity. Not only do the 'fittest" survive while others perish, but by heredity they transmit their superior qualities to their offspring and this is continued by them to their descendants and this goes on without end.

We have a most striking object lesson of the power of heredity, in select breeding. By it almost any desired characteristic can be developed whether of body or mind. The fine soft wool of the Merino sheep, the milking qualities of the Jersey cow, the great speed of the race-horse and greyhound, have all been produced by special improvement of some slight variation through attention to special breeding. Nature reaches similar ends in the same way; only there are more failures because more impediments intervene, and vastly more time is required.

Let us now illustrate nature's use of these three principles by examples from life. Let us go back to the beginning of animal life on earth and see if the action of the three principles, "The Struggle for Life," "The Survival of the Fittest," and Heredity, will account for the rise of new species and new forms in the animal world and for those parts of the animal form which had heretofore had no existence, and so were wholly new.

Shells.

The first most conspicuous characteristic of the animal form which followed the first or Protozoan age, was the shell in which the animal was encased. The first animals had nothing hard about them but were soft globules of matter. Now shells appeared. To this new class belong the clam and oyster. If God did not create this shell, where did it come from? How did it come wrapped around the animal to shut it in from danger and keep it safe? Who built this house? Evolution replies that it is not unreasonable to account for it in this way: In the fierce struggle for life and on account of the hard blows and other rough usage to which these animals were constantly subject, the surface of their bodies became toughened and thickened till a covering was formed not much unlike the way callouses and horny skin are formed in the palm of the hand or on the bottom of the feet when inured to long and continued harsh treatment. In the struggle for life those forms over which gathered the thickest and hardest covering survived, while those without covering perished; and those that survived transmitted their qualities to their offspring. In this way in long periods of time young animals came to be born with a hard, gristly, cartilaginous covering. Ages succeeding ages, this grew harder and became a better protection for life, and finally hardened into shell. These animals have received from naturalists the name of mollusks. They mark an age of their own in the evolution of animal life.

Bony Structure.

But this age did not always last. These shells were good in the age in which they came, but they proved poorly adapted to a higher and more advanced age. They necessarily kept the animal fixed to one locality. They were either attached to rocks or lay each in its bed on the sea bottom. The desire of the animal to move, to get a wider experience, to get out of the shell, which while it was a protection was also a prison, grew from age to age till by continued struggles to this end there naturally began to grow up within the body dim traces of what finally became muscles, nerves, membranes, fibres, and cartilages in such parts where nature demanded and where they were needed. By constant effort and action through untold ages under the continued operation of the three principles, the cartilages hardened and became bone, something as the cartilages in a four months' child in a mother's womb become bone when the child is born. The hardening of the cartilages formed the bony structure which belongs to the animal in the age which followed the mollusk and which is called the age of the Vertebrates or animals with a back-bone. This skeleton or frame work allowed freedom of movement, of expansion and of growth which was impossible with the shell. This was more complex than the shell or as Herbert Spencer would say, it was heterogeneous, while the shell was homogeneous. Spencer's definition of evolution is the change of organisms from the homogeneous to the heterogeneous, or from the simple to the complex. This coming then of the bony framework to take the place of the shell was for animal life a step from the lower toward the higher or from the simple to the complex.

Joints.

Animals do not bend their bodies and their limbs because they have joints, but they have joints because they first bent their bodies and limbs. Their bodies came into existence centuries before the joints. The joints came in those places in the body where the natural movements of the body created them. The places where the joints are situated are the exact places where the body was in the habit of bending after the shell was left behind and before the cartilages were hardened into bone. The constant bending made a joint in the cartilage. Had it not been for the constant bending of the back, the spinal column would have been a stiff bone instead of a series of vertebrae. The same would have been true of the legs. The foreleg has a hinge joint because the animal in trying to walk bent it only in one direction—backward. The hip has a ball and socket joint because when the bone was forming the leg was used to move not only forward and backward but in other directions. The same is true of the elbows and shoulder joints in man. The habitual movements of the body in the attempts of the animal to move while the cartilages were being formed and hardened into bone decided not only where the joints should be but the kinds they should be. The needs of the body produced not only every joint but every muscle and bone and sinew.

Teeth.

The first animals that had existence on earth had no teeth. The millions that swarmed in the Protozoan age were toothless and did not chew their food nor bite their enemy in their encounters. The same is true in the age of the Mollusk. Teeth did not come till after the bony framework of the body had superseded the shell. The coming of the bony structure brought a tremendous increase of activity and strength to animal life, hence the conflicts between the animals became more fierce, and destructive. In these encounters the jaws were brought into use and in most cases were the chief weapons for fighting. Not only this, they were also the chief and often the only means the animal possessed for securing its food. Thus they were in daily use.

But they contained no teeth. By constant use, however, the skin thickened and hardened and made gums. The gums rounded into projections which by use hardened into teeth. The teeth at first were all alike both back and front. They were cone-shaped or pointed and wholly adapted to seizing, holding, and killing their prey which they swallowed whole. The dolphin is this kind of an animal; so are the reptiles and all the lower orders. Their teeth are set in regular order like the teeth of a saw and in some animals are quite as sharp.

As animal life developed, the practice of chewing food commenced. It grew because the animal found it of advantage. The food digested more easily and less frequently created pain. The effect of this habit was to begin to wear off the points of the back teeth. As the habit continued they became more and more flattened. The outside being harder than the inside, the inside wore away the fastest, and the faces became broad and firm and fitted to each other in meeting and admirably adapted to mastication.

The front teeth also passed through a great change when animals left the water and began to live on dry land. The habit soon commenced with some of eating vegetable food instead of animal. This also was found advantageous in many ways. It required less exertion to obtain it and was always at hand. The habit grew and with a certain class it became very popular. We call that class now herbivorous; and the class that did not make the change, carnivorous.

The herbivorous commenced by eating fruit, nuts, leaves, and young stems and twigs; but they soon found grasses to be the best of all vegetable food and the most easily obtained; also that the closer to the ground the sweeter it was. Soon, of course, the habit of grazing prevailed. The front teeth being pointed, were unsuited for this work. They came into existence for a different end. But nature soon began to adapt them to the new condition of things. The points were off and by constant and continued biting of the grass each tooth formed an edge like a chisel. The change was slight at first, but increased with long and constant use. All improvement, even the slightest was transmitted by heredity from parents to offspring, and this helped to change the front teeth from a point to an edge. These teeth now are called "incisors," which means teeth that cut or bite.

On each side, in both upper and lower jaw, between the back teeth and the front teeth, we have a solitary tooth resembling the old, pointed, carnivorous or flesh-tearing tooth of the Dolphin and lower animal life, which lived on animals swallowed whole and often alive. Why do we have it? Why does this alone remain while those before it and behind it have been modified to modern uses? It remains unchanged because it is in a place where it has not been used. It serves no purpose in chewing; it serves no purpose in biting. It was of value in ages gone by. It is the tusk in the hog and the dog, the largest, longest and most dangerous of all the teeth and in some people to-day it stands out like a tusk. It remains a relic of what once was. It is an evidence from what condition man has risen. It is a reminder of what all our teeth once were and of what we were.

It must not be lost sight of that these changes in the teeth did not take place in one year, nor in a hundred years, nor in a thousand years, but stretched over a thousand centuries and that the three principles—The Struggle for Life, Survival of the Fittest, and Heredity—were the chief and ever active factors in the accomplishment of this work.

CALIFORNIA.

Progress of Spiritualism on the Pacific Coast.

Since my last letter many things of importance have transpired in the local field—many things that go to prove that Spiritualism is alive here, and is filled with possibilities of growth and usefulness for the future.

The state board held its first monthly meeting subsequent to the convention on Saturday evening, October 4, there being present President J. Shaw Gillespie, vice-president J. Munsell Chase, secretary, W. T. Jones, treasurer Anna E. Wadsworth, and directors Emma E. Shaw and Wm. M. Rider; also State Organizer Allen Franklin Brown.

The report of the latter was most gratifying. It showed that two new societies have been organized since the convention in September—the Society of Spiritual Progression of Los Angeles, with a charter membership of 33, and the Stockton Spiritual Alliance, with a membership of 35. Besides four new societies are in progress of formation.

A letter from Mrs. Maud Chesbro, of Los Angeles, conveyed congratulations to the board upon the happy conditions that seemed to prevail, and noting the fact that a second Los Angeles society was about to affiliate with the state association. She also expressed the opinion that Passadena will probably soon have a society that will affiliate with the state, and that she felt that San Diego's societies both are now favorable to the state.

The officers of the state association visited the Oakland Society, of Oakland, on Wednesday evening, October 8, where they received a hearty welcome.

The occasion was the return home of Mrs. Cowell and Mrs. Smith from their mission in Los Angeles, whither, however, Mrs. Cowell returned the following day; and it as notable for the happy spirit that animated the assembly, and the enthusing speecnes delivered by the speakers. The work of the evening was concluded with a banquet, so that throughout it was a feast of good things for the physical as well as mental and moral man.

On Sunday next, October 19, a general conference of Spiritualists will be held at the headquarters of the Sunflower League, the Ladies' Aid Society and the state association in the Hall Building, which will be under the auspices of the latter.

By the way, it is the purpose of the state association to hold such a conference at least once a month, and if there should appear a demand, once a week during the ensuing year, in order to keep themselves informed as to the opinions of all Spiritualists, and that the latter may be kept in touch with the state work.

TheSunflower League, which is the banner Spiritualist society of California, is growing rapidly in membership, and at its last meeting elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: J. Shaw Gillespie, president; Mrs. Sarah J. Stark, vice-president; J. Munsell Chase, secretary; Mrs. M. W. Billings, treasurer; Mrs. C. L. Ford, Mrs. D. N. Place, Dr. Geo. D. Keeler, Allen Franklin Brown and Dr. Sol Palinbaum, directors.

The League begins its winter campaign, which will be undoubtedly a labor of love and progress, under happy auspices. J. MUNSELL CHASE.

MAGDALENE.

You say "she is fallen, degraded,
A courtesan, shamelessly bold."
Yet, she fought life's battle unaided,
Unprotected; out in the cold.

A baleful dower was her beauty,
When poverty gnawed at the door;
While ignorance knew not of duty;
What could you expect of her more?

The Tempter that came so alluring,
With smiles and a low, tender voice;
The price of her virtue securing;
Alas! for the fate of her choice—

'Twixt the wolf, with hungry mouth yawning,
And the other—(false angel of light);
Who rose on her life, as the dawning
Of a day ever sunny and bright.

So young; so untutored; unthinking!
Not recking the folly and sin,
In the cup she fain would be drinking,
Corrupting without, and within.

"Too late," do you say, "was her trying
To undo the dread work of the past?
In the morgue, her dead form is lying.
Will it be of her stained soul the last?

Nay, rather in yonder fair city,
Encompassed with beauty and light,
Sweet angels of mercy and pity,
Will lead her wronged soul into Right.

The Combination Oil Cure for Cancer.

Has the endorsement of the highest medical authority in the world. It would seem strange indeed if persons afflicted with cancers and tumors, after knowing the facts, would resort to the dreaded knife and burning plaster, which have heretofore been attended with such fatal results. The fact that in the last six years over one hundred doctors have put themselves under this mild treatment shows their confidence in the new method of treating those horrible diseases. Persons afflicted will do well to send for free book giving particulars and prices of Oil. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, Drawer 1111, Kansas City, Mo.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,
By means of natural selection, or the preservation of a favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

The Religion of Science.
By Dr. Paul Carus. Ver thoughtful and interesting. Price, 25 cents.

Longley's Beautiful Songs
For Public Meetings and the Home.

VOLUME ONE
Contains the following songs with music:
I'm thinking, dear mother, of you. We miss our boys at home. The land of the bye and bye. The good times yet to be. The land beyond the stars. They are waiting at the portal. When the dear ones gather at home. Resting under the daisies. The grand jubilee. My mother's tender eyes. Dear heart come home. Come in some beautiful dream. Where the roses never fade. In heaven we'll know our own.

VOLUME TWO
Contains 15 new and beautiful songs, suited to the home circle, seances, local meetings, mass-meetings, conventions, anniversaries and jubilees. They comprise an excellent variety of poems set to easy harmony and ought to sell readily. These books are 15cts. each; the two for 30cts. For sale at this office.

VOLUMES 3 AND 4.
This is a book of 57 pages, filled with spiritual harmony from first to last. Spiritual societies need not be calling for something new to sing to the people if they will supply themselves with copies of this book, or in fact any of the above choice collections of Mr. Longley's musical publications. Volumes 3 and 4 are in one book, price 25 cts., 3 cts. each by mail.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.
By S. Weil. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents. This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.
The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion, that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and facts.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

the youth to create a greater social, intellectual, spiritual and numerical value to our organized enterprises.

All of this shows the activity and wide-spread influence of the missionary efforts—and should be a promise of greater work to follow. The N. S. A. officials have our sincere thanks for courtesies and generosity. This association is earnestly seeking for co-operation that shall advance the cause of Spiritualism in every locality without partiality, but in the spirit of love and good will for all.

Your missionaries will ever invoke aid for the cause of humanity; and pledge their personal efforts in unceasing devotion, no matter where their field of labor may be.

Fraternally and devotedly, your earnest servants,

GEORGE W. KATES.

Personal Addendum.

It is but just for me to say personally, that my wife has been a devoted helper and an untiring worker.

Most of the good that has resulted is due to her. She has shared the lecture work with me, given spirit messages at each meeting, supplied the constant necessity for song and music—and patiently devoted herself to the social exactions. Thus sacrificing home and friends, and enduring many privations, this personal expression of heartfelt gratitude for a worthy companion and laborer in the spiritual vineyard, is but trivial when we realize the great personal blessing that shall be hers in spirit some day—in the glad time that awaits every true soul.

THE BOSTON PAPERS AND THE CONVENTION.

We here append what the Boston papers had to say of the convention. It will prove interesting to all our readers:

FIRST DAY'S SESSION.

The National Association of Spiritualists opened their 10th annual convention in Berkeley Hall, Boston, October 21, with an attendance of about 300 delegates from 23 states. The sessions are to continue morning, afternoon and evening until Friday night.

Yesterday's sessions were devoted to addresses of welcome and to the organization of the convention in the morning, to the reading of the national officers' reports in the afternoon, and to a session in the evening which comprised music, addresse and spirit messprised music, addresses and spirit messages.

Berkeley hall was trimmed with bunting of yellow and white and the American flag hung on the walls and draped the speaker's platform. The hall was well filled when President Harrison D. Barrett called the meeting to order. The company joined in singing "America," and then the invocation was pronounced by Rev. Moses Hull, of Whitewater, Wis.

J. B. Hatch, Jr., chairman of the local committee of arrangements, spoke the first words of welcome to the delegates. President Barrett then gave the formal address of welcome. The response was made by Dr. C. R. Fisk, of Keokuk, Ia.

The morning session was marked by some discussion of the Morris Pratt Institute at Whitewater, Wis. The institute grew out of a need long unsatisfied among Spiritualists of a place to secure a systematic education in the phases special to Spiritualism. The topic was introduced by the Rev. Moses Hull, now in charge there.

The work began there six years ago in a small way and grew slowly, making a place for itself under many difficulties, until at the last convention Morris Pratt, of Whitewater, donated a building for the use of the school, since when the course has assumed more the character of a collegiate training. There are 30 pupils now studying, and a desire everywhere evidenced, in applications, to follow the course.

Mr. Hull reviewed the various stages of this process in a very dramatic and interesting manner, predicting a great future for the institute, pointing out that at a similar stage Tufts College was no larger nor had any greater promise of ultimate success.

Mrs. Sadie Jordan Clifford, of Waterville, speaking for her state in the general interchange of greetings that characterized the morning session, adverted to the school in the warmest terms, adding that her state association, at its last convention, made an appropriation for the school.

Dr. George A. Fuller, president of the Massachusetts State Association, also congratulated the convention on the organization of the institute and the advent of a day when Spiritualism felt the need of a special education and was strong enough to take measures for securing it.

E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, N. Y., spoke in much the same vein, adding that hitherto the propagation of Spiritualism had had too much of a bush whacking aspect that would shortly become with the aid of special schools, a systematic and more fruitful labor.

Among the speakers were Mrs. Elizabeth Kurth, of New York, very briefly; Mrs. Minnie M. Soule, more at length; Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, Providence; Miss Susie C. Clark, Cambridge; the Rev. F. A. Wiggin, who dwelt more particularly on the need of pressing the claims of Spiritualism as a religion; W. J. Colville, of New Zealand, who reported on the advances of Spiritualism in the antipodes and recalled an occasion 20 years ago in the same hall, when he first began his work in the field.

Committees Appointed.

The following appointments of committes were made: Credentials, H. W. Richardson of New York, J. B. Hatch, Jr., of Massachusetts and L. P. Wheelock, of Illinois; rules, Dr. C. R. Fisk, of Iowa, I. F. Symonds, of Massachusetts and Mrs. C. R. Pruden, of Minnesota.

Officers of the convention were appointed as follows: W. J. Colville, reading clerk; E. Warren Hatch, musical director; I. C. I. Evans, assistant secretary; James A. Foster, sergeant-at-arms; Fred J. Taylor, doorkeeper.

While the committee on credentials was preparing to report there was a general conference devoted to the good of the order. Brief addresses were made by Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, of Troy, N. Y.; W. J. Hicks, of Ottumwa, Iowa; Capt. Francis J. Keffer, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Helen L. P. Russegue, of Hartford, Conn.; Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Reed City, Mich.; George W. Burnham, of Connecticut; Moses Hull, of Wisconsin, Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of the First Spiritual temple in Boston; Mrs. Sadie Jordan Clifford, of Maine, Mrs. Elizabeth F. Kurth, of New York; Dr. George Fuller, of Onset; Mrs. Minnie W. Soule, of the Gospel of Spirit Return Society; Mrs. Ida P. Whitlock, of Rhode Island; E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, N. Y.; W. J. Colville, of Boston; Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, of Chicago, and Miss Susie C. Clark, of Chicago.

President Barrett's report reviewed the entire year in Spiritualism, telling of progress, persecution, the experience in the matter of bequests to the cause of Spiritualism, the charitable and missionary doings of the National Association and of the local societies, ordination, marriage, music, lyceums, bogus phenomena, discrimination against clergy of the denomination by the eastern railroad associations, the proposed International Spiritualistic Congress at St. Louis in 1904, reform issues, finance, mass and camp-meetings, fraternal delegates, necrology, the Spiritualistic press, and the beneficences of Theodore J. Mayer.

An interesting incident of the afternoon programme was the reception accorded to Treasurer Theodore J. Mayer, Washington, D. C., on his arrival. He has already made a donation of $15,000 to the Spiritualist cause, and offers $15,000 more to this convention, with the condition that the National Association subscribe an equal amount. The ways and means of meeting this condition is one of the serious problems of the finance committee. Mr. Mayer was greeted on his entrance with a Chautauqua salute that he acknowledge briefly.

The following committee appointments were made:

President's report—George A. Fuller, of Massachusetts; Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, of Wisconsin, Dr. A. B. Spinney, of, Michigan; E. R. Galloway, of Maryland.

Secretary's report—Samuel Wheeler, of Pennsylvania; Dr. Alexander Caird, of Massachusetts; W. W. Kelsey, of New York; Mrs. Sadie J. Clifford, of Maine and Mrs. C. D. Pruden, of Minnesota.

Auditing accounts—Mrs. Carrie L. Hatch, of Massachusetts; W. J. Hicks, of Iowa; E. R. Whiting, of Connecticut; Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, of Rhode Island and W. E. Bradish, of Maine.

Delegates' report—Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader of Pennsylvania, J. O. Perkins, of Rhode Island; Mrs. E. J. Knowles, of Iowa; F. A. Coggeshall, of Massachusetts; Mrs. G. A. Dorn, of New Jersey.

Amendments—A. A. Kimball, of Maine; Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, of New York; Miss M. J. Fitzmaurice, of New York; John K. Dyer, of Massachusetts, and E. Brewer, of Connecticut.

Finance, ways and means—Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, of New York; Mrs. May S. Pepper, of Rhode Island; Miss A. O. Wink, of California, Miss Margaret Gaule, of Maryland; Mrs. Julia A. Locke of Pennsylvania.

Resolutions—Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of Massachusetts, Mrs. Stella A. Fisk, of Iowa; Rev. Moses Hull, of Wisconsin; Dr. Dean Clarke, of Indiana and Freeman W. Smith, of Maine.

Although an admission was charged, the evening session was attended by a gathering which completely filled the hall and balconies. President Harrison D. Barrett presided and the exercises opened with an invocation by Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds.

After a selection by the orchestra Dr. George A. Fuller, president of the state association, made a very eloquent speech, in which he said that Spiritualism realized that man is an immortal being, and of all religions theirs is the only one able to prove this beyond a doubt.

"I have been touched time and time again," he said, "by those hands gone out from my home to the other side, and made brighter and more cheerful by their messages, of hope, love and joy, and I would not be true to myself if I doubted this.

"The voice of fraternity, the voice of love has gone out from every delegate to this convention. There are no high, there are no low. All are equally to share his love and protection, and this compels us to recognize this fraternity and to behold in all religions the striving after better things.

"Don't make the mistake of thinking that your religion holds all the good points of all the religions; yours is but a segment of the great circle. We should come nearer together and discover in all sects and denominations the reaching after higher and better knowledge."

Spirit Messages Received.

F. M. Davis gave a violin selection, and E. Warren Hatch sang a solo. Spirit messages were given by Mrs. Minnie M. Soule, of Somerville. She picked out persons in the audience and told them she saw spirits about them. She described the appearance of the spirit and some few characteristic actions of the dead person represented by this spirit. In all cases her descriptions were recognized by those to whom she spoke. She gave a brief message from the spirits to each of the persons to whom she talked, and the latter all said they understood the messages perfectly.

Charles L. C. Hatch gave another violin solo, and then Mrs. Carrie E. S. wing, vice-president of the New York state association, gave a talk upon "The Children Are Crowned Jewels," and told many new and interesting stories of child-life to illustrate her points.

The evening session ended with the reading of sealed messages by Mrs. May S. Pepper, of Providence, R. I. Sealed notes were written by about 75 of those present in the hall and sent up to a desk upon the stage. When Mrs. Pepper was introduced she chose notes at random from this pile and answered the questions contained in the notes, giving the full names of the spirits who answered through her—in all cases dead relatives of those who had asked the question being answered—her messages in many cases drawing tears from the eyes of those to whom she talked.

She satisfied one woman about a case of blackmail, a young man was eased of doubt in connection with a corporation he had been asked to form, although he had not mentioned it in his note. One woman was told that the spirit claimed a relationship with her, and this fact the woman denied several times, but was afterward brought to recollect that she was connected with the spirit through her brother's marriage.

SECOND DAY'S SESSION.

The second day of the Spiritualists' convention in Berkeley hall was called to order promptly at 10 o'clock this morning by President Harrison D. Barrett. The time was almost entirely taken up in reading the missionaries' reports, which were accepted very enthusiastically by the delegates.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates in their report urgently called for a vigorous campaign along missionary lines. They spoke at length of the progress of Spiritualism in Texas. Four societies have been organized and chartered in the state during the past year, and several others strengthened.

The report further encouraged the formation of family circles and conference of friends of the cause in localities where too few avowed Spiritualists exist to form a local society. It would lay great stress on the formation and support of Children's Progressive Lyceums, as a strong help to the movement in general.

In the report of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague stress was laid on the necessity of increased numbers of missionaries and ministers. It strongly recommended reading courses, and that the spiritual publication be made more of as a literary paper in the home.

Among the guests of honor at the convention are Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Tuttle, of Berlin Heights, Ohio. Both are prominently connected with the Spiritualistic movement. Mrs. Tuttle besides being editor of the Lyceum Guide, is also prominent in the National Society of Protection and Cruelty to Animals. Mr. Tuttle is a well-known author on scientific Spiritualism and reform works.

Mrs. Tuttle will be one of the speakers before the convention to-night, when, at 8 o'clock in Odd Fellows' Hall, special services in connection with New England Lyceums will be held.

The following committee was appointed to consider the reports of the missionaries: Mrs. H. P. Russegue, Connecticut; Mr. C. K. Fiske, Ohio; Mr. E. L. Allen, Massachusetts; Mrs. F. E. Ward, Maine, and Mrs. A. E. Pierce, Connecticut.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Spirits of the dead and long forgotten walked invisibly down the aisles of Berkeley Hall last night, their ethereal beings hovered over the heads of the audience, and even sent tender messages of love and comfort to assuage the sorrow and enlighten the burdened minds of friends.

The convention of the National Spiritualists' Association being held this week in Berkeley Hall has brought together more than 200 of the most prominent Spiritualists from all over the United States and Canada. Eloquent speakers are present and renowned mediums give tests of Spiritualistic phenomena.

The convention opened yesterday morning with addresses of welcome and a general conference about the work. The afternoon was thrown open to business and reports.

To an outsider Mrs. May S. Pepper's tests of spiritual phenomena were the attractive feature of the evening. Letters were written by people all over the audience and placed in a pile on the table. Mrs. Pepper then placed herself under the power of the spirit and was for a time the connecting link between this world and the other. She said she saw the spirits, just as we see persons, and she indicated it in her manifestations.

The audience listened breathlessly and received her messages with tearful eyes, as she stood on the platform directly in front, and began speaking with them.

"This little woman down here with a light waist and gray hair—there is the spirit of a gentleman here," she said, "and he comes to bring you cheer. There is the spirit of a young man with him, and I think it is your son—Ed is his name."

"That's right," said the woman.

"There is also an old woman—a bustling little woman, farther removed than the man. Your grandmother? That's good."

"And now this lady down here," she said, pointing to another. "You are full of mystic sensitiveness—a spiritual understanding with people. The spirit of a girl stands beside you—she is not clear yet. Ah! she soothes you with tears. She lays something precious in your lap."

"Here is a man walking up toward you. He is kind of nervous, tall, thin face, iron gray hair, constantly posing in thoughtful mood. Do you know who I mean? Yes, that's good."

Mrs. Pepper's hand hovered over the table again in the same way, again she selected a sealed packet and proceeded to analyze its contents in the same manner. She named a man, carried him to a woman down in the back of the room and had him converse with the woman. Again and again she repeated this.

Mrs. Minnie M. Soule, of Somerville, also gave some spirit messages. Addresses were made by Dr. Geo. A. Fuller and Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing. Mrs. Twing spoke on "Children as Crowned Jewels."

Reports of Officers.

The afternoon session of the Spiritualists' convention yesterday was entirely given up to listening to the reports of the officers of the association.

President Harrison D. Barrett, in a long report, said that during the past year Spiritualism had grown stronger in the affections of the masses than ever before. It had made itself felt in Spiritualistic circles in helping ways, and had shown all friends of freedom that it has become a permanency in the work of giving religious liberty to humanity. He called especial attention to the subject of ordination. "There is a need of sharp, decisive action on the part of the convention in regard to this matter," he said. "The question of morality is intimately connected with it, while the sanctity of marriage is jeopardized by it."

The secretary, Mrs. Mary T. Longley, in her report showed that the association had chartered 28 societies during the past year. She showed progress in other lines, particularly in the increase of members.

Hudson and Emma Tuttle.

What will probably be regarded by Spiritualists as the most important feature of this morning's session of the National convention in Berkeley hall was not on the programme. Late in the session of which the assigned work was the hearing of missionaries' reports, there appeared Hudson and Emma Rood Tuttle, of Berlin Heights, Ohio, both veteran Spiritualists and perhaps as widely known as any two persons among the followers of the belief. Mr. Tuttle is an author of works on Spiritualism that are already among among the classics of the religion. Mrs. Tuttle is not merely an author, but one of the earliest and still one of the most active workers in lyceums, a feature regarded by many Spiritualists as the most hopeful phase of the whole movement.

The two veterans were greeted with a Chautauqua salute as they entered the hall, and were promptly invited to the platform. This was their first appearance in Boston for nearly a decade, and the assemblage woke up at once from their dogged attention to business in listening to missionary reports to a pitch of enthusiasm that is rare even in a Spiritualist meeting, where enthusiasm is ever effervescent. During a momentary lull in the proceedings a call was made from the floor for a word from the veterans.

Mr. Tuttle's brief address was followed with close attention and frequently punctuated with applause. He rapidly reviewed the progress and changes in Spiritualism during the past 40 years, often in an amusing way, particularly when referring to some of what he characterized as imitations of Spiritualism. His chacterization of the differences between a "medium" and a "psychic" was particularly happy. The distinction is somewhat hazy, being a matter of choice and not very seriously regarded by active members of progressive societies. The characterization of theosophy as the "nonsense of all the ages," may be taken as an apt sample that met with amused approval.

Mrs. Tuttle's remarks, though brief, were enthusiastically received. The venerable couple were invited to attend the lyceum meeting to-night as guests of honor.

The McIlroy Will Case.

Another matter that evoked wide interest was brought up by Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, of Philadelphia, who asked for a special hour for consideration of the McIlroy will case. This is where a man bequeathed $30,000 to a Spiritualist organization, with which to build a temple and found a home for mediums. It was contested by relatives. The first judge before whom the case came allowed the will, but the contestants appealed, and the case was lost before a jury. The Spiritualists appealed in turn to the supreme court of Pennsylvania, where the case now is. One judge is quoted as having said during the proceedings that belief in Spiritualism is prima facia evidence of insanity.

It may well be believed that a statement of this kind in open convention enlisted attention. The matter was referred to a committee, which will report later, but current comment is emphatically for a determined fight for Spiritualistic rights, in the Pennsylvania courts, at least. It was urged by Capt. Keffer of Pennsylvania during the brief discussion that the whole question of the legality of Spiritualism was involved.

The Morris Pratt Institute.

Preparations were made also for a full discussion of the Morris Pratt Institute and of the readjustment of the relations of the state associations, the latter being a rapidly growing question, the bearings of which are in co-ordinating the efforts of Spiritualists everywhere to better advantage. It was urged that there was much waste of energy nowadays that could be more effectively employed by securing greater uniformity of organization and a better division of labor among the state organizations.

The reading of the missionary reports occupied most of the morning session, the contributors being Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague and President Harrison D. Barrett. Aside from the purely narrative information conveyed, the missionaries agreed that the work should be radically reorganized, so that one person's services should be confined to a smaller area of the country, securing greater service at less cost, both in money and in physical effort, and avoiding much duplication of labor.

Another phase of the missionary problem had to do with determining where the missionaries' efforts were most needed. This, as a matter of fact, is occupying the attention of committees concerned. The reports urged that in missionary work, frequent repetition was advisable, especially in the early stages at any given place. It has been found as a result of experience that sporadic appearances at long intervals do very little good.

THIRD DAY'S SESSION.

The convention of the National Spiritualists Association in Berkeley Hall, this morning, gave particular attention to three matters of apparently vital concern—the slight of the Woman's Suffrage Federation to the accredited delegate of the Spiritualists Association, the raising of funds, and the sending of additional missionaries into the field to stimulate Spiritualism and organize new societies.

Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, national secretary of the association, told the convention how she had been ignored by the Women's Federation, which met in Washington last spring. She said she believed that no further notice should be taken of that organization until proper apology had been made.

At this point, President Harrison D. Barrett announced the receipt of a letter from Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the Federation, recalling the incident and apologizing for the slight, which she declared to have been wholly unintentional.

Mr. Dyer of Boston objected to any action on the part of the convention which would savor of boycott, and he urged the association to stand on its own ground.

Mrs. Knowles of Iowa, hoped the association would stand on its dignity and follow the recommendations of the committee to ignore any association which ignored the National Spiritualists.

Mr. Stevens of Boston, said the Spiritualists should show magnanimity and express the Christ spirit.

The convention voted to adopt the recommendation of the committee to take no further notice of organizations which had ignored the Spiritualists' association until proper apology had been made.

A motion to reconsider the vote by Mrs. Barrett provoked a somewhat passionate speech by Dr. William A Hale of Boston, who declared the committee's recommendation was exactly right and proper and that Spiritualists would never receive respect from others until they respected themselves, and he objectd to the National Association of Spiritualists becoming subservient to any other body in this country. The motion was referred to the committee.

When this vexed matter had been disposed of, President Barrett called upon Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, of New York, to conduct the collection service, and the president knew that his choice of exhorter was a wise one. Mrs. Twing prefaced her remarks on the subject of giving with the statement that she wasn't much of a beggar.

She called for delegates to stand up, give their names and the amounts of their subscription, and reminded them that those "who love the Lord" should give liberally and willingly to his cause. In this fashion she exhorted the people:

"Right here, Mr. Richardson's always on hand. Come on! No time like the present. How much? Whose next? Five dollars, good! Are you taking all the names? Who next is going to contribute? This lady? Ah, here is Brother Dyer!

"Will you go round and get the money, Mrs. Reynolds? I think there are some others. I heard a voice over there, was it money? I'm gazing into their countenances, but they don't look at me. Who next is going to build a part of their mansion in the spiritual world? Rather have the cash."

Mrs. Twing garnered considerable money in this fashion, and then she took up a collection.

Mrs. Longley, the secretary, declared that lots of the people who were making promises would not send in the money, and she upbraided them for this fault.

President Barrett told the ladies to pass their hats, but Mrs. Reynolds confessed that her's wasn't built with that end in view, as it had a hole in the top of it. Men's head gear were requisitioned. "Here, Margaret, here's a hat," said President Barrett, who admonished the delegates that coppers would not do, only silver, greenbacks and gold.

Mr. Thompson, of Nebraska, announced that "a good giver was a friend of the Lord, and liberality was pleasing to his majesty.

The report of the committe on missionaries was then submitted, and that portion of the report dealing with an extension of the work called forth considerable comment and discussion. Mrs. Twing said that the difficulty of missionary work was that the places visited seemed to think that the missionaries had come to dispense money, rather than to do good and be assisted. She told of one silk-gowned lady in the South who put a cent in the collection, because she believed that the missionaries should help the state, and not the state the missionaries, but the silk-gowned lady said that she would remember the missionary. Later this lady presented Mrs. Twing with a cardboard picture of Whittier's home, "and now I'll never starve," said Mrs. Twing. (Laughter.)

One lady delegate from Philadelphia said that one of the societies of that city had not sent a delegate to the convention, because when the missionaries were in Philadelphia they had not visited that society.

Mrs. Zaida B. Kates, a medium and missionary, in reply, said that she and her husband had been in Philadelphia, had written to the society and received word that they were not wanted. "Do you want us," she asked, "to take a club and beat our way in? The whole trouble is that the Spiritualists of the country are afraid of their pocket-books. We need a devil in our midst, a devil to open the pocket-books. We are expected to go into a town or city like a lady and gentleman, pay all our own expenses and get no return from the societies. I have gone over corduroy roads in blizzards, in sand storms, have slept in dirty beds, and eaten sour bread until I was sick, and I propose once in a while to go to a place where I can live like a civilized being for a while."

One of the speakers had suggested that there should be state missionaries instead of national, and it was to this that Mrs. Kates was objecting. Said she: "I wouldn't be restricted to one state for man or God."

Dr. William A. Hale of Boston made a statement in regard to his remarks of yesterday concerning the arrest of Alexander Proctor of Springfield. Dr. Hale said that it was not correct that Dr. Harvey of the state board of registration had caused the arrest of Proctor in pursuance of a threat to arrest every magnetic healer in the state, "but," added Dr. Hale, "I understand that Dr. Harvey has made the statement that if he succeeded in convicting Proctor he would proceed against every magnetic healer in the state. I want to say that the threat did not precede the arrest."

The reports of the missionaries provoked an interesting discussion, in which Rev. Moses Hull, Rev. E. W. Sprague, Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Dr. C. D. Fisk, Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, Mrs. Z. B. Kates, Mrs. C. D. Pruden, Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Thomas J. Wheeler, Rev. Geo. W. Kates, Mrs. Longley, Dr. Wm. A. Hale and Mrs. Stewart took part.

The convention voted to increase the number of missionaries in the discretion of the board of trustees.

SPIRITUALISTS ADJOURN.

After a long and rather excited balloting, the National Spiritualists Association, in convention at Berkeley Hall, re-elected its old board of trustees last night, bringing the business of the convention to a close. The officers thus chosen were: Harrison D. Barrett, of Needham; the Hon. Thomas M. Locke, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Mary T. Longley, Theodore J. Mayer and Iltyd C. I. Evans, all of Washington; the Hon. Alonzo Thompson, of Fullerton, Neb.; Clarence D. Pruden, of St. Paul; Cassius L. Stevens, of Pittsburg, and George W. Kates, of Rochester, N. Y.

There was a warm contest also over the choice of a place for the next convention, four municipalities asking for the honor—Washington, Minneapolis, Buffalo and Whitewater, Wis.—the latter place being withdrawn after the first formal ballot. The choice of Washington prevailed after a second roll call.

The proceedings of the afternoon were largely a clearing up of business, one step being regarded as of considerable importance. This was the disbanding of the National Lyceum Association and substituting in its place a national conductor of lyceums, under the direct control of the National Association.

Max O. Gentzke, of the Lichtstrahlen, a German Spiritualist periodical, spoke briefly on Spiritualism among his compatriots. Greetings were exchanged with various co-operating bodies. The Morris Pratt Institute was given an opportunity to further its interests by enlisting pecuniary support. The general fund of the association was given a final fillip, and a total of about $2,500 was reported as the contribution of the week. The convention was pronounced, as a whole, one of the largest and most efficient held since the association's organization.

A measure discussed in the morning session recommended the employment for yearly engagements of lecturers and teachers who have proven themselves competent. This is in line with what is a comparatively new movement, of securing settled pastorates. The habit of half a century has been to rely on local, volunteer or circuit speakers among Spiritualist societies, rather than the class of regular pastors contemplated in the resolution. Debate was very summary, and the clause was adopted unanimously.

The president was also authorized to appoint a committee to be charged with the duty of compiling ritual forms, to be used in marriage, burial or other ceremonies under Spiritualistic auspices.

A long debate ensued over a report of the committee on history and education, the two points of importance being a provision for the compilation of a history of Spiritualism by Lyman C. Howe, and commendation of the Morris Pratt Institute at Whitewater, Wis. Both were referred to the "incoming board," an Atlas-like body, elected last night and burdened with a good year of such work.

The farewell meeting was largely attended. Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue defined Spiritualism and reviewed the efforts of its followers from the inception to the present day. The Rev. F. A. Wiggin told of his contention with the skeptics on Spiritualism, and the Rev. Moses Hull, of Wisconsin, spoke of his work. Miss Margaret Gaule and Mrs. Zaida B. Kates gave the spirit messages.

Views of W. J. Colville, Lecturer and Author.

One of the most striking delegates attending the convention is W. J. Colville, of London. Mr. Colville is a well-known lecturer and author, having spent the past five years lecturing through Australia, New Zealand and England on advanced religious, philosophical, ethical and socialistic questions of the day.

To a Boston Journal reporter Mr. Colville gave some interesting information in connection with the Spiritualistic beliefs and doctrines. When asked the essential differences between Spiritualism and other religions, he said:

"Principally this—that we are in communion with those who have passed on and that they are actively co-operating with us in all the progressive work in which we are engaged. All Spiritualists affirm the progressive character of the future life and conceive it to be in no way radically different from the interior life of thoughts and feelings which we are now living. We do not think that Christ died to save the world by sacrifice.

"'Passed on' conveys the idea that the individual keeps on living, and is in all respects the same self-conscious identity as before. Transition is a word often implied, but 'death' is discarded because it conveys false impressions. Passing on to the other world in no way alters our spiritual condition, but simply sets us free from our external coverings.

"It may be safely said that all Spiritualists agree that salvation depends on character, not on belief, and that the final destiny of all souls is to discover the true being and attain to a state of harmony. It is, however, never supposed that we shall arrive at a state beyond which there is no further progress either on earth or in heaven."

"Then you believe in a heaven?"

'Not as a place, necessarily; rather, a condition of harmony. When we attain to harmony with all life we are in a celestial condition, so that wherever our work lies, we can be happy.

"There is, I think, a hell; not a place of punishment, but a reformatory of suffering. It is primarily the suffering which we experience within ourselves before we pass on and afterward, until we have outgrown the errors which have produced it.

"The day of redemption out of all states which may be called hell is through benevolent work which can be accomplished in one word as well as in another. The spiritual philosophy teaches that no virtue can go unrewarded and no vice unpunished. Therefore, it inculcates the highest morality, but positively denies that any soul will be tormented by any angry Deity, or cause to suffer for any other than a benevolent purpose.

It may be said that most Spiritualists claim that their general knowledge of the future life is based upon direct communications which they have with those who are now living in it.

"I believe fully that everybody possesses psychic powers which can be usefully unfolded in some direction by setting apart some time to quiet culture of this power, the necessary conditions being desire united with expectation."

It is well known that Mr. Colville represents the extreme reform wing of the Spiritual movement. He thoroughly sympathizes with all the new thought movements of the age, which are by no means so fully indorsed by the conservative wing of the Spiritualist party.

Besides being a lecturer, Mr. Colville is also a well-known author. He has written several volumes on psychological subjects, therapeutics, and on Spiritualistic topics.

A LADY'S EXPERIENCE.

exclaimed, "I know that woman better than I do you." She then wrote me endorsing my unsectarian position.

We talked night and day, and only for being peach season might have gone hungry. She had kept to some of my teaching, as they used graham gems and no drink at meals but cereal coffee. (But she did say grace at table. Still my food digested.)

What is my reason for writing this? To show the reader something of what we lose by our ignorance of psychic law, and what others lose as well. Had Spiritualists been wise, just and honest, she would have been used to upbuild our cause instead of our enemies.

Was she honest when she became a Methodist? Certainly. She was under the control of progressed spirits when with us, and used by them to advocate their ideas. Coming under church influences spirits not having yet outgrown creedalism used her to promote their objects, under the same law.

Let us be careful never to censure anyone for any act. Everybody does as he must with his organization and environment. If you wish to change any organization, give it a different environment. Cause and effect are always equal. Let us be hospitable to every honest thought, and try to establish a reign of justice and brotherhood on this earth of ours.

GIVES HIS SECRET TO THE WORLD.

A Remarkable Discovery By a Remarkable Man.

The Art of Fascinating, the Power of Charming, the Secrets of Personal Magnetism Fully and Completely Revealed at Last.

A Marvelous, Mysterious Force Which Gives Wonderful Mental and Physical Strength, Overcomes All Diseases; Enables You to Know the Secret Natures of Others and to Handle Them as You Please.

Professor R. F. Robertson, Psych. D., C. D., is the greatest living teacher of Personal Magnetism. He has astounded the scientists of the world. He has discovered a new system of developing and imparting magnetic force. He believes the great power he has discovered lies dormant in every individual. He guarantees you can master its strange secrets at your own home and perform wonders of which you never dreamed. You can know at a glance the secret natures, talents, weaknesses, strength and vices of every person you meet. You can quickly develop marvelous physical and mental power, overcome all diseases in yourself or others, banish pain and bad habits without drugs or surgery. Professor Robertson can read your secret nature and influence your thoughts, though a thousand miles away. He can teach you how to do the same. This may seem incredible, but he absolutely guarantees this result under a forfeiture of $1,000.00 in gold. The power of hypnotism, persuasion, threats and entreaties pales into insignificance when compared with the wonders of this mighty force.

Professor Robertson calls his new discovery the "Ki-Magi" System of Personal Influence. You do not have to have subjects upon which to practice. Professor Robertson's instructions are so plain and explicit that you can read them carefully and at once use this great power secretly to influence and control the thoughts and desires of any one you wish. You will be startled and mystified at the wonderful things you can do; you will be astounded at the amazing power that you can exercise over others. Prominent ministers of the gospel, lawyers and business men have mastered Professor Robertson's new system, and they give it their highest indorsement.

S. I. Yetter, of Middletown, Pa., says: "Your 'Ki-Magi' System of Personal Influence has brought me that success in business for which I have been looking. It is the magnet that controls; there is no guesswork about it—it is a scientific fact. It has taught me to know and control myself as well as others."

Dr. H. H. Childs, Box No. 70, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "In your 'Ki-Magi' System of personal Influence I have found what I have for years searched for in vain. It has changed the whole trend of thought and given my life a new meaning. I feel younger and stronger every day. I find in it the key to business success."

the youth to create a greater social, intellectual, spiritual and numerical value to our organized enterprises.

All of this shows the activity and wide-spread influence of the missionary efforts—and should be a promise of greater work to follow. The N. S. A. officials have our sincere thanks for courtesies and generosity. This association is earnestly seeking for co-operation that shall advance the cause of Spiritualism in every locality without partiality, but in the spirit of love and good will for all.

Your missionaries will ever invoke aid for the cause of humanity; and pledge their personal efforts in unceasing devotion, no matter where their field of labor may be.

Fraternally and devotedly, your earnest servants,

GEORGE W. KATES.
ZAIDA B. KATES.

Personal Addendum.

It is but just for me to say personally, that my wife has been a devoted helper and an untiring worker.

Most of the good that has resulted is due to her. She has shared the lecture work with me, given spirit messages at each meeting, supplied the constant necessity for song and music—and patiently devoted herself to the social exactions. Thus sacrificing home and friends, and enduring many privations, this personal expression of heartfelt gratitude for a worthy companion and laborer in the spiritual vineyard, is but trivial when we realize the great personal blessing that shall be hers in spirit some day—in the glad time that awaits every true soul.

THE BOSTON PAPERS AND THE CONVENTION.

We here append what the Boston papers had to say of the convention. It will prove interesting to all our readers:

FIRST DAY'S SESSION.

The National Association of Spiritualists opened their 10th annual convention in Berkeley Hall, Boston, October 21, with an attendance of about 300 delegates from 23 states. The sessions are to continue morning, afternoon and evening until Friday night.

Yesterday's sessions were devoted to addresses of welcome and to the organization of the convention in the morning, to the reading of the national officers' reports in the afternoon, and to a session in the evening which comprised music, addresse and spirit messprised music, addresses and spirit messages.

Berkeley hall was trimmed with bunting of yellow and white and the American flag hung on the walls and draped the speaker's platform. The hall was well filled when President Harrison D. Barrett called the meeting to order. The company joined in singing "America," and then the invocation was pronounced by Rev. Moses Hull, of Whitewater, Wis.

J. B. Hatch, Jr., chairman of the local committee of arrangements, spoke the first words of welcome to the delegates. President Barrett then gave the formal address of welcome. The response was made by Dr. C. R. Fisk, of Keokuk, Ia.

The morning session was marked by some discussion of the Morris Pratt Institute at Whitewater, Wis. The institute grew out of a need long unsatisfied among Spiritualists of a place to secure a systematic education in the phases special to Spiritualism. The topic was introduced by the Rev. Moses Hull, now in charge there.

The work began there six years ago in a small way and grew slowly, making a place for itself under many difficulties, until at the last convention Morris Pratt, of Whitewater, donated a building for the use of the school, since when the course has assumed more the character of a collegiate training. There are 30 pupils now studying, and a desire everywhere evidenced, in applications, to follow the course.

Mr. Hull reviewed the various stages of this process in a very dramatic and interesting manner, predicting a great future for the institute, pointing out that at a similar stage Tufts College was no larger nor had any greater promise of ultimate success.

Mrs. Sadie Jordan Clifford, of Waterville, speaking for her state in the general interchange of greetings that characterized the morning session, adverted to the school in the warmest terms, adding that her state association, at its last convention, made an appropriation for the school.

Dr. George A. Fuller, president of the Massachusetts State Association, also congratulated the convention on the organization of the institute and the advent of a day when Spiritualism felt the need of a special education and was strong enough to take measures for securing it.

E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, N. Y., spoke in much the same vein, adding that hitherto the propagation of Spiritualism had had too much of a bush whacking aspect that would shortly become with the aid of special schools, a systematic and more fruitful labor.

Among the speakers were Mrs. Elizabeth Kurth, of New York, very briefly; Mrs. Minnie M. Soule, more at length; Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, Providence; Miss Susie C. Clark, Cambridge; the Rev. F. A. Wiggin, who dwelt more particularly on the need of pressing the claims of Spiritualism as a religion; W. J. Colville, of New Zealand, who reported on the advances of Spiritualism in the antipodes and recalled an occasion 20 years ago in the same hall, when he first began his work in the field.

Committees Appointed.

The following appointments of committes were made: Credentials, H. W. Richardson of New York, J. B. Hatch, Jr., of Massachusetts and L. P. Wheelock, of Illinois; rules, Dr. C. R. Fisk, of Iowa, I. F. Symonds, of Massachusetts and Mrs. C. R. Pruden, of Minnesota.

Officers of the convention were appointed as follows: W. J. Colville, reading clerk; E. Warren Hatch, musical director; I. C. I. Evans, assistant secretary; James A. Foster, sergeant-at-arms; Fred J. Taylor, doorkeeper.

While the committee on credentials was preparing to report there was a general conference devoted to the good of the order. Brief addresses were made by Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, of Troy, N. Y.; W. J. Hicks, of Ottumwa, Iowa; Capt. Francis J. Keffer, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Helen L. P. Russegue, of Hartford, Conn.; Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Reed City, Mich.; George W. Burnham, of Connecticut; Moses Hull, of Wisconsin, Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of the First Spiritual temple in Boston; Mrs. Sadie Jordan Clifford, of Maine, Mrs. Elizabeth F. Kurth, of New York; Dr. George Fuller, of Onset; Mrs. Minnie W. Soule, of the Gospel of Spirit Return Society; Mrs. Ida P. Whitlock, of Rhode Island; E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, N. Y.; W. J. Colville, of Boston; Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, of Chicago, and Miss Susie C. Clark, of Chicago.

President Barrett's report reviewed the entire year in Spiritualism, telling of progress, persecution, the experience in the matter of bequests to the cause of Spiritualism, the charitable and missionary doings of the National Association and of the local societies, ordination, marriage, music, lyceums, bogus phenomena, discrimination against clergy of the denomination by the eastern railroad associations, the proposed International Spiritualistic Congress at St. Louis in 1904, reform issues, finance, mass and camp-meetings, fraternal delegates, necrology, the Spiritualistic press, and the beneficences of Theodore J. Mayer.

An interesting incident of the afternoon programme was the reception accorded to Treasurer Theodore J. Mayer, Washington, D. C., on his arrival. He has already made a donation of $15,000 to the Spiritualist cause, and offers $15,000 more to this convention, with the condition that the National Association subscribe an equal amount. The ways and means of meeting this condition is one of the serious problems of the finance committee. Mr. Mayer was greeted on his entrance with a Chautauqua salute that he acknowledge briefly.

The following committee appointments were made:

President's report—George A. Fuller, of Massachusetts; Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, of Wisconsin, Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Michigan; E. R. Galloway, of Maryland.

Secretary's report—Samuel Wheeler, of Pennsylvania; Dr. Alexander Caird, of Massachusetts; W. W. Kelsey, of New York; Mrs. Sadie J. Clifford, of Maine and Mrs. C. D. Pruden, of Minnesota.

Auditing accounts—Mrs. Carrie L. Hatch, of Massachusetts; W. J. Hicks, of Iowa; E. R. Whiting, of Connecticut; Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, of Rhode Island and W. E. Bradish, of Maine.

Delegates' report—Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader of Pennsylvania, J. O. Perkins, of Rhode Island; Mrs. E. J. Knowles, of Iowa; F. A. Coggeshall, of Massachusetts; Mrs. G. A. Dorn, of New Jersey.

Amendments—A. A. Kimball, of Maine; Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, of New York; Miss M. J. Fitzmaurice, of New York; John K. Dyer, of Massachusetts, and E. Brewer, of Connecticut.

Finance, ways and means—Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, of New York; Mrs. May S. Pepper, of Rhode Island; Miss A. O. Wink, of California, Miss Margaret Gaule, of Maryland; Mrs. Julia A. Locke of Pennsylvania.

Resolutions—Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of Massachusetts, Mrs. Stella A. Fisk, of Iowa; Rev. Moses Hull, of Wisconsin; Dr. Dean Clarke, of Indiana and Freeman W. Smith, of Maine.

Although an admission was charged, the evening session was attended by a gathering which completely filled the hall and balconies. President Harrison D. Barrett presided and the exercises opened with an invocation by Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds.

After a selection by the orchestra Dr. George A. Fuller, president of the state association, made a very eloquent speech, in which he said that Spiritualism realized that man is an immortal being, and of all religions theirs is the only one able to prove this beyond a doubt.

"I have been touched time and time again," he said, "by those hands gone out from my home to the other side, and made brighter and more cheerful by their messages, of hope, love and joy, and I would not be true to myself if I doubted this.

"The voice of fraternity, the voice of love has gone out from every delegate to this convention. There are no high, there are no low. All are equally to share his love and protection, and this compels us to recognize this fraternity and to behold in all religions the striving after better things.

"Don't make the mistake of thinking that your religion holds all the good points of all the religions; yours is but a segment of the great circle. We should come nearer together and discover in all sects and denominations the reaching after higher and better knowledge."

Spirit Messages Received.

F. M. Davis gave a violin selection, and E. Warren Hatch sang a solo. Spirit messages were given by Mrs. Minnie M. Soule, of Somerville. She picked out persons in the audience and told them she saw spirits about them. She described the appearance of the spirit and some few characteristic actions of the dead person represented by this spirit. In all cases her descriptions were recognized by those to whom she spoke. She gave a brief message from the spirits to each of the persons to whom she talked, and the latter all said they understood the messages perfectly.

Charles L. C. Hatch gave another violin solo, and then Mrs. Carrie E. S. wing, vice-president of the New York state association, gave a talk upon "The Children Are Crowned Jewels," and told many new and interesting stories of child-life to illustrate her points.

The evening session ended with the reading of sealed messages by Mrs. May S. Pepper, of Providence, R. I. Sealed notes were written by about 75 of those present in the hall and sent up to a desk upon the stage. When Mrs. Pepper was introduced she chose notes at random from this pile and answered the questions contained in the notes, giving the full names of the spirits who answered through her—in all cases dead relatives of those who had asked the question being answered—her messages in many cases drawing tears from the eyes of those to whom she talked.

She satisfied one woman about a case of blackmail, a young man was eased of doubt in connection with a corporation he had been asked to form, although he had not mentioned it in his note. One woman was told that the spirit claimed a relationship with her, and this fact the woman denied several times, but was afterward brought to recollect that she was connected with the spirit through her brother's marriage.

SECOND DAY'S SESSION.

The second day of the Spiritualists' convention in Berkeley hall was called to order promptly at 10 o'clock this morning by President Harrison D. Barrett. The time was almost entirely taken up in reading the missionaries' reports, which were accepted very enthusiastically by the delegates.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates in their report urgently called for a vigorous campaign along missionary lines. They spoke at length of the progress of Spiritualism in Texas. Four societies have been organized and chartered in the state during the past year, and several others strengthened.

The report further encouraged the formation of family circles and conference of friends of the cause in localities where too few avowed Spiritualists exist to form a local society. It would lay great stress on the formation and support of Children's Progressive Lyceums, as a strong help to the movement in general.

In the report of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague stress was laid on the necessity of increased numbers of missionaries and ministers. It strongly recommended reading courses, and that the spiritual publication be made more of as a literary paper in the home.

Among the guests of honor at the convention are Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Tuttle, of Berlin Heights, Ohio. Both are prominently connected with the Spiritualistic movement. Mrs. Tuttle besides being editor of the Lyceum Guide, is also prominent in the National Society of Protection and Cruelty to Animals. Mr. Tuttle is a well-known author on scientific Spiritualism and reform works.

Mrs. Tuttle will be one of the speakers before the convention to-night, when, at 8 o'clock in Odd Fellows' Hall, special services in connection with New England Lyceums will be held.

The following committee was appointed to consider the reports of the missionaries: Mrs. H. P. Russegue, Connecticut; Mr. C. K. Fiske, Ohio; Mr. E. L. Allen, Massachusetts; Mrs. F. E. Ward, Maine, and Mrs. A. E. Pierce, Connecticut.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Spirits of the dead and long forgotten walked invisibly down the aisles of Berkeley Hall last night, their ethereal beings hovered over the heads of the audience, and even sent tender messages of love and comfort to assuage the sorrow and enlighten the burdened minds of friends.

The convention of the National Spiritualists' Association being held this week in Berkeley Hall has brought together more than 200 of the most prominent Spiritualists from all over the United States and Canada. Eloquent speakers are present and renowned mediums give tests of Spiritualistic phenomena.

The convention opened yesterday morning with addresses of welcome and a general conference about the work. The afternoon was thrown open to business and reports.

To an outsider Mrs. May S. Pepper's tests of spiritual phenomena were the attractive feature of the evening. Letters were written by people all over the audience and placed in a pile on the table. Mrs. Pepper then placed herself under the power of the spirit and was for a time the connecting link between this world and the other. She said she saw the spirits, just as we see persons, and she indicated it in her manifestations.

The audience listened breathlessly and received her messages with tearful eyes, as she stood on the platform directly in front, and began speaking with them.

"This little woman down here with a light waist and gray hair—there is the spirit of a gentleman here," she said, "and he comes to bring you cheer. There is the spirit of a young man with him, and I think it is your son—Ed is his name."

"That's right," said the woman.

"There is also an old woman—a bustling little woman, farther removed than the man. Your grandmother? That's good."

"And now this lady down here," she said, pointing to another. "You are full of mediumistic sensitiveness—a spiritual understanding with people. The spirit of a girl stands beside you—she is not clear yet. Ah! she soothes you with tears. She lays something precious in your lap."

"Here is a man walking up toward you. He is kind of nervous, tall, thin face, iron gray hair, constantly posing in thoughtful mood. Do you know who I mean? Yes, that's good."

Mrs. Pepper's hand hovered over the table again in the same way, again she selected a sealed packet and proceeded to analyze its contents in the same manner. She named a man, carried him to a woman down in the back of the room and had him converse with the woman. Again and again she repeated this.

Mrs. Minnie M. Soule, of Somerville, also gave some spirit messages. Addresses were made by Dr. Geo. A. Fuller and Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing. Mrs. Twing spoke on "Children as Crowned Jewels."

Reports of Officers.

The afternoon session of the Spiritualists' convention yesterday was entirely given up to listening to the reports of the officers of the association.

President Harrison D. Barrett, in a long report, said that during the past year Spiritualism had grown stronger in the affections of the masses than ever before. It had made itself felt in Spiritualistic circles in helping ways, and had shown all friends of freedom that it has become a permanency in the work of giving religious liberty to humanity. He called especial attention to the subject of ordination. "There is a need of sharp, decisive action on the part of the convention in regard to this matter," he said. "The question of morality is intimately connected with it, while the sanctity of marriage is jeopardized by it."

The secretary, Mrs. Mary T. Longley, in her report showed that the association had chartered 28 societies during the past year. She showed progress in other lines, particularly in the increase of members.

Hudson and Emma Tuttle.

What will probably be regarded by Spiritualists as the most important feature of this morning's session of the National convention in Berkeley hall was not on the programme. Late in the session of which the assigned work was the hearing of missionaries' reports, there appeared Hudson and Emma Rood Tuttle, of Berlin Heights, Ohio, both veteran Spiritualists and perhaps as widely known as any two persons among the followers of the belief. Mr. Tuttle is an author of works on Spiritualism that are already among among the classics of the religion. Mrs. Tuttle is not merely an author, but one of the earliest and still one of the most active workers in lyceums, a feature regarded by many Spiritualists as the most hopeful phase of the whole movement.

The two veterans were greeted with a Chautauqua salute as they entered the hall, and were promptly invited to the platform. This was their first appearance in Boston for nearly a decade, and the assemblage woke up at once from their dogged attention to business in listening to missionary reports to a pitch of enthusiasm that is rare, even in a Spiritualist meeting, where enthusiasm is ever effervescent. During a momentary lull in the proceedings a call was made from the floor for a word from the veterans.

Mr. Tuttle's brief address was followed with close attention and frequently punctuated with applause. He rapidly reviewed the progress and changes in Spiritualism during the past 40 years, often in an amusing way, particularly when referring to some of what he characterized as imitations of Spiritualism. His characterization of the differences between a "medium" and a "psychic" was particularly happy. The distinction is somewhat hazy, being a matter of choice and not very seriously regarded by active members of progressive societies. The characterization of theosophy as the "nonsense of all the ages," may be taken as an apt sample that met with amused approval.

Mrs. Tuttle's remarks, though brief, were enthusiastically received. The venerable couple were invited to attend the lyceum meeting to-night as guests of honor.

The McIlroy Will Case.

Another matter that evoked wide interest was brought up by Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, of Philadelphia, who asked for a special hour for consideration of the McIlroy will case. This is where a man bequeathed $30,000 to a Spiritualist organization, with which to build a temple and found a home for mediums. It was contested by relatives. The first judge before whom the case came allowed the will, but the contestants appealed, and the case was lost before a jury. The Spiritualists appealed in turn to the supreme court of Pennsylvania, where the case now is. One judge is quoted as having said during the proceedings that belief in Spiritualism is prima facia evidence of insanity.

It may well be believed that a statement of this kind in open convention enlisted attention. The matter was referred to a committee, which will report later, but current comment is emphatically for a determined fight for Spiritualistic rights, in the Pennsylvania courts, at least. It was urged by Capt. Keffer of Pennsylvania during the brief discussion that the whole question of the legality of Spiritualism was involved.

The Morris Pratt Institute.

Preparations were made also for a full discussion of the Morris Pratt Institute and of the readjustment of the relations of the state associations, the latter being a rapidly growing question, the bearings of which are in co-ordinating the efforts of Spiritualists everywhere to better advantage. It was urged that there was much waste of energy nowadays that could be more effectively employed by securing greater uniformity of organization and a better division of labor among the state organizations.

The reading of the missionary reports occupied most of the morning session, the contributors being Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague and President Harrison D. Barrett. Aside from the purely narrative information conveyed, the missionaries agreed that the work should be radically reorganized, so that one person's services should be confined to a smaller area of the country, securing greater service at less cost, both in money and in physical effort, and avoiding much duplication of labor.

Another phase of the missionary problem had to do with determining where the missionaries' efforts were most needed. This, as a matter of fact, is occupying the attention of committees concerned. The reports urged that in missionary work, frequent repetition was advisable, especially in the early stages at any given place. It has been found as a result of experience that sporadic appearances at long intervals do very little good.

THIRD DAY'S SESSION.

The convention of the National Spiritualists Association in Berkeley Hall, this morning, gave particular attention to three matters of apparently vital concern—the slight of the Woman's Suffrage Federation to the accredited delegate of the Spiritualists Association, the raising of funds, and the sending of additional missionaries into the field to stimulate Spiritualism and organize new societies.

Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, national secretary of the association, told the convention how she had been ignored by the Women's Federation, which met in Washington last spring. She said she believed that no further notice should be taken of that organization until proper apology had been made.

At this point, President Harrison D. Barrett announced the receipt of a letter from Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the Federation, recalling the incident and apologizing for the slight, which she declared to have been wholly unintentional.

Mr. Dyer of Boston objected to any action on the part of the convention which would savor of boycott, and he urged the association to stand on its own ground.

Mrs. Knowles of Iowa, hoped the association would stand on its dignity and follow the recommendations of the committee to ignore any association which ignored the National Spiritualists.

Mr. Stevens of Boston, said the Spiritualists should show magnanimity and express the Christ spirit.

The convention voted to adopt the recommendation of the committee to take no further notice of organizations which had ignored the Spiritualists' association until proper apology had been made.

A motion to reconsider the vote by Mrs. Barrett provoked a somewhat passionate speech by Dr. William A Hale of Boston, who declared the committee's recommendation was exactly right and proper and that Spiritualists would never receive respect from others until they respected themselves, and he objectd to the National Association of Spiritualists becoming subservient to any other body in this country. The motion was referred to the committee.

When this vexed matter had been disposed of, President Barrett called upon Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, of New York, to conduct the collection service, and the president knew that his choice of exhorter was a wise one. Mrs. Twing prefaced her remarks on the subject of giving with the statement that she wasn't much of a beggar.

She called for delegates to stand up, give their names and the amounts of their subscription, and reminded them that those "who love the Lord" should give liberally and willingly to his cause. In this fashion she exhorted the people:

"Right here, Mr. Richardson's always on hand. Come on! No time like the present. How much? Whose next? Five dollars, good! Are you taking all the names? Who next is going to contribute? This lady? Ah, here is Brother Dyer!

"Will you go round and get the money, Mrs. Reynolds? I think there are some others. I heard a voice over there, was it money? I'm gazing into their countenances, but they don't look at me. Who next is going to build a part of their mansion in the spiritual world? Rather have the cash."

Mrs. Twing garnered considerable money in this fashion, and then she took up a collection.

Mrs. Longley, the secretary, declared that lots of the people who were making promises would not send in the money, and she upbraided them for this fault.

President Barrett told the ladies to pass their hats, but Mrs. Reynolds confessed that her's wasn't built with that end in view, as it had a hole in the top of it. Men's head gear were requisitioned. "Here, Margaret, here's a hat," said President Barrett, who admonished the delegates that coppers would not do, only silver, greenbacks and gold.

Mr. Thompson, of Nebraska, announced that "a good giver was a friend of the Lord, and liberality was pleasing to his majesty.

The report of the committe on missionaries was then submitted, and that portion of the report dealing with an extension of the work called forth considerable comment and discussion. Mrs. Twing said that the difficulty of missionary work was that the places visited seemed to think that the missionaries had come to dispense money, rather than to do good and be assisted. She told of one silk-gowned lady in the South who put a cent in the collection, because she believed that the missionaries should help the state, and not the state the missionaries, but the silk-gowned lady said that she would remember the missionary. Later this lady presented Mrs. Twing with a cardboard picture of Whittier's home, "and now I'll never starve," said Mrs. Twing. (Laughter.)

One lady delegate from Philadelphia said that one of the societies of that city had not sent a delegate to the convention, because when the missionaries were in Philadelphia they had not visited that society.

Mrs. Zaida B. Kates, a medium and missionary, in reply, said that she and her husband had been in Philadelphia, had written to the society and received word that they were not wanted. "Do you want us," she asked, "to take a club and beat our way in? The whole trouble is that the Spiritualists of the country are afraid of their pocket-books. We need a devil in our midst, a devil to open the pocket-books. We are expected to go into a town or city like a lady and gentleman, pay all our own expenses and get no return from the societies. I have gone over corduroy roads in blizzards, in sand storms, have slept in dirty beds, and eaten sour bread until I was sick, and I propose once in a while to go to a place where I can live like a civilized being for a while."

One of the speakers had suggested that there should be state missionaries instead of national, and it was to this that Mrs. Kates was objecting. Said she: "I wouldn't be restricted to one state for man or God."

Dr. William A. Hale of Boston made a statement in regard to his remarks of yesterday concerning the arrest of Alexander Proctor of Springfield. Dr. Hale said that it was not correct that Dr. Harvey of the state board of registration had caused the arrest of Proctor in pursuance of a threat to arrest every magnetic healer in the state, "but," added Dr. Hale, "I understand that Dr. Harvey has made the statement that if he succeeded in convicting Proctor he would proceed against every magnetic healer in the state. I want to say that the threat did not precede the arrest."

The reports of the missionaries provoked an interesting discussion, in which Rev. Moses Hull, Rev. E. W. Sprague, Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Dr. C. D. Fisk, Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, Mrs. Z. B. Kates, Mrs. C. D. Pruden, Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Thomas J. Wheeler, Rev. Geo. W. Kates, Mrs. Longley, Dr. Wm. A. Hale and Mrs. Stewart took part.

The convention voted to increase the number of missionaries in the discretion of the board of trustees.

SPIRITUALISTS ADJOURN.

After a long and rather excited balloting, the National Spiritualists Association, in convention at Berkeley Hall, re-elected its old board of trustees last night, bringing the business of the convention to a close. The officers thus chosen were: Harrison D. Barrett, of Needham; the Hon. Thomas M. Locke, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Mary T. Longley, Theodore J. Mayer and Illtyd C. I. Evans, all of Washington; the Hon. Alonzo Thompson, of Fullerton, Neb.; Clarence D. Pruden, of St. Paul; Cassius L. Stevens, of Pittsburg, and George W. Kates, of Rochester, N. Y.

There was a warm contest also over the choice of a place for the next convention, four municipalities asking for the honor—Washington, Minneapolis, Buffalo and Whitewater, Wis.—the latter place being withdrawn after the first formal ballot. The choice of Washington prevailed after a second roll call.

The proceedings of the afternoon were largely a clearing up of business, one step being regarded as of considerable importance. This was the disbanding of the National Lyceum Association and substituting in its place a national conductor of lyceums, under the direct control of the National Association.

Max O. Gentzke, of the Lichtstrahlen, a German Spiritualist periodical, spoke briefly on Spiritualism among his compatriots. Greetings were exchanged with various co-operating bodies. The Morris Pratt Institute was given an opportunity to further its interests by enlisting pecuniary support. The general fund of the association was given a final fillip, and a total of about $2,500 was reported as the contribution of the week. The convention was pronounced, as a whole, one of the largest and most efficient held since the association's organization.

A measure discussed in the morning session recommended the employment for yearly engagements of lecturers and teachers who have proven themselves competent. This is in line with what is a comparatively new movement, of securing settled pastorates. The habit of half a century has been to rely on local, volunteer or circuit speakers among Spiritualist societies, rather than the class of regular pastors contemplated in the resolution. Debate was very summary, and the clause was adopted unanimously.

The president was also authorized to appoint a committee to be charged with the duty of compiling ritual forms, to be used in marriage, burial or other ceremonies under Spiritualistic auspices.

A long debate ensued over a report of the committee on history and education, the two points of importance being a provision for the compilation of a history of Spiritualism by Lyman C. Howe, and commendation of the Morris Pratt Institute at Whitewater, Wis. Both were referred to the "incoming board," an Atlas-like body, elected last night and burdened with a good year of such work.

The farewell meeting was largely attended. Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue defined Spiritualism and reviewed the efforts of its followers from the inception to the present day. The Rev. F. A. Wiggin told of his contention with the skeptics on Spiritualism, and the Rev. Moses Hull, of Wisconsin, spoke of his work. Miss Margaret Gaule and Mrs. Zaida B. Kates gave the spirit messages.

Views of W. J. Colville, Lecturer and Author.

One of the most striking delegates attending the convention is W. J. Colville, of London. Mr. Colville is a well-known lecturer and author, having spent the past five years lecturing through Australia, New Zealand and England on advanced religious, philosophical, ethical and socialistic questions of the day.

To a Boston Journal reporter Mr. Colville gave some interesting information in connection with the Spiritualistic beliefs and doctrines. When asked the essential differences between Spiritualism and other religions, he said:

"Principally this—that we are in communion with those who have passed on and that they are actively co-operating with us in all the progressive work in which we are engaged. All Spiritualists affirm the progressive character of the future life and conceive it to be in no way radically different from the interior life of thoughts and feelings which we are now living. We do not think that Christ died to save the world by sacrifice.

"'Passed on' conveys the idea that the individual keeps on living, and is in all respects the same self-conscious identity as before. Transition is a word often implied, but 'death' is discarded because it conveys false impressions. Passing on to the other world in no way alters our spiritual condition, but simply sets us free from our external coverings.

"It may be safely said that all Spiritualists agree that salvation depends on character, not on belief, and that the final destiny of all souls is to discover the true being and attain to a state of harmony. It is, however, never supposed that we shall arrive at a state beyond which there is no further progress either on earth or in heaven."

"Then you believe in a heaven?"

'Not as a place, necessarily; rather, a condition of harmony. When we attain to harmony with all life we are in a celestial condition, so that wherever our work lies, we can be happy.

"There is, I think, a hell; not a place of punishment, but a reformatory of suffering. It is primarily the suffering which we experience within ourselves before we pass on and afterward, until we have outgrown the errors which have produced it.

"The day of redemption out of all states which may be called hell is through benevolent work which can be accomplished in one word as well as in another. The spiritual philosophy teaches that no virtue can go unrewarded and no vice unpunished. Therefore, it inculcates the highest morality, but positively denies that any soul will be tormented by any angry Deity, or cause to suffer for any other than a benevolent purpose.

It may be said that most Spiritualists claim that their general knowledge of the future life is based upon direct communications which they have with those who are now living in it.

"I believe fully that everybody possesses psychic powers which can be usefully unfolded in some direction by setting apart some time to quiet culture of this power, the necessary conditions being desire united with expectation."

It is well known that Mr. Colville represents the extreme reform wing of the Spiritual movement. He thoroughly sympathizes with all the new thought movements of the age, which are by no means so fully indorsed by the conservative wing of the Spiritualist party.

Besides being a lecturer, Mr. Colville is also a well-known author. He has written several volumes on psychological subjects, therapeutics, and on Spiritualistic topics.

A LADY'S EXPERIENCE.

exclaimed, "I know that woman better than I do you." She then wrote me endorsing my unsectarian position.

We talked night and day, and only for being peach season might have gone hungry. She had kept to some of my teaching, as they used graham gems and no drink at meals but cereal coffee. (But she did say grace at table. Still my food digested.)

What is my reason for writing this? To show the reader something of what we lose by our ignorance of psychic law, and what others lose as well. Had Spiritualists been wise, just and honest, she would have been used to upbuild our cause instead of our enemies.

Was she honest when she became a Methodist? Certainly. She was under the control of progressed spirits when with us, and used by them to advocate their ideas. Coming under church influences spirits not having yet outgrown creedalism used her to promote their objects, under the same law.

Let us be careful never to censure anyone for any act. Everybody does as he must with his organization and environment. If you wish to change any organization, give it a different environment. Cause and effect are always equal. Let us be hospitable to every honest thought, and try to establish a reign of justice and brotherhood on this earth of ours.

GIVES HIS SECRET TO THE WORLD.

A Remarkable Discovery By a Remarkable Man.

The Art of Fascinating, the Power of Charming, the Secrets of Personal Magnetism Fully and Completely Revealed at Last.

A Marvelous, Mysterious Force Which Gives Wonderful Mental and Physical Strength, Overcomes All Diseases; Enables You to Know the Secret Natures of Others and to Handle Them as You Please.

Professor R. F. Robertson, Psych. D., C. D., is the greatest living teacher of Personal Magnetism. He has astounded the scientists of the world. He has discovered a new system of developing and imparting magnetic force. He believes the great power he has discovered lies dormant in every individual. He guarantees you can master its strange secrets at your own home and perform wonders of which you never dreamed. You can know at a glance the secret natures, talents, weaknesses, strength and vices of every person you meet. You can quickly develop marvelous physical and mental power, overcome all diseases in yourself or others, banish pain and bad habits without drugs or surgery. Professor Robertson can read your secret nature and influence your thoughts, though a thousand miles away. He can teach you how to do the same. This may seem incredible, but he absolutely guarantees this result under a forfeiture of $1,000.00 in gold. The power of hypnotism, persuasion, threats and entreaties pales into insignificance when compared with the wonders of this mighty force.

Professor Robertson calls his new discovery the "Ki-Magi" System of Personal Influence. You do not have to have subjects upon which to practice. Professor Robertson's instructions are so plain and explicit that you can read them carefully and at once use this great power secretly to influence and control the thoughts and desires of any one you wish. You will be startled and mystified at the wonderful things you can do; you will be astounded at the amazing power that you can exercise over others. Prominent ministers of the gospel, lawyers and business men have mastered Professor Robertson's new system, and they give it their highest indorsement.

S. I. Yetter, of Middletown, Pa., says: "Your 'Ki-Magi' System of Personal Influence has brought me that success in business for which I have been looking. It is the magnet that controls; there is no guesswork about it—it is a scientific fact. It has taught me to know and control myself as well as others."

Dr. H. H. Childs, Box No. 70, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "In your 'Ki-Magi' System of personal Influence I have found what I have for years searched for in vain. It has changed the whole trend of thought and given my life a new meaning. I feel younger and stronger every day. I find in it the key to business success."

Mrs. A. B. Egert, of 502 Woodland avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I do not see how any Reading the Bible Excluded From Nebraska Schools.

By the decision of the Supreme Court of Nebraska, last week [as set forth in the New York Sun] exercises by a teacher in a public school, in the presence of pupils, "consisting of the reading of passages from the Bible and in singing songs and offering prayer to the Deity in accordance with the doctrines, beliefs, customs or usages of sectarian churches or other religious organizations," are declared to be a violation of the Constitution of that State.

This decision, it will be seen, settles for Nebraska the vexed question of the reading of the Bible in the public schools; but, unquestionably, it was made necessary by this section of the State Constitution:

"All persons have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience. No person shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship against his consent, and no preference shall be given by law to any religious society, nor shall any interference with the rights of conscience be permitted. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for office, nor shall any person be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief; but nothing herein shall be construed to dispense with oaths and affirmations. Religion, morality and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the legislature to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship, and to encourage schools and the means of instruction."

The reading of the Bible in the public schools, prayers, spiritual songs and religious exercises generally are all features of religious worship. Even the version of the Bible known as the King James Version, the text which later revisions have not been able to drive out from Protestant use and veneration, is sectarian to the extent that the accuracy of its translation is rejected by the Roman Catholic church. Moreover, as a Nebraska Catholic priest says in expressing approval of the decision: "Catholics consider the Bible a holy book containing the inspired Word of God, and therefore not to be treated lightly or expounded by those having no authority." Jews, of course, discard the New Testament wholly. To infidels the presentation of the Bible as a religious authority is offensive. The Higher Critics, certainly of the more agnostic sort, find many flaws in the Bible and contend that there runs through it a thread of merely human legend which requires that the book should not be put before the people without cautionary explanations. Its morality provokes objection in other quarters. The whole battle of theology rages about the Bible and its interpretation.

This Nebraska decision shows the insuperable obstacle in the way of introducing the Bible into public schools simply as "a masterpiece of English literature," a project which was put forth at the recent meeting of the National Educational Association. It is impossible to separate the Bible from religion, for upon it alone as the Word of God, the whole Protestant world bases its religious faith. It is impossible to separate it from Christianity, of which the New Testament is the supernatural law and foundation. Except as a book of Divine authority, the Bible has and can have no standing with the people, and only for that reason is it read by them. Simply as a "a masterpiece of English literature" the Bible as it is known to English-speaking people would never have been preserved in their use. It would have become an obsolete book long ago if its vitality had not been sustained by religious faith in its Divine authorship and authority; nobody, except students of history, of philology and of archaeology would have read it; instead of being, as it is now, the most widely circulated book in the world it would be only on the dusty shelves of libraries consulted by the learned and the scholarly. Undoubtedly it has had, in the King James version, a profound influence on English literature, but why? Because it was regarded as the Book of books, the one and only revelation from God.

The decision of the Nebraska Supreme Court, therefore, is irresistible. The reading of the Bible in public schools is distinctively a religious exercise and can be made nothing else, unless by common consent the Bible shall be relegated to the place of human and secular literature merely, without supernatural and religious authority.

SOME REFLECTIONS ON THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

The National Spiritualist Convention, lately assembled at Boston, Mass., through the force of incorrigible habit, fastened upon it by ten years of unceasing indulgence in one iron-clad course, re-elected again that unusually bright, modest, unassuming young man, Harrison D. Barrett, to the position of President; in consequence of this we seronely enter into various occult cogitations and reflections in reference thereto while sitting in the one brilliant corner of our sanctum—illuminated especially with the corruscations of our own vibrating thoughts, which while affording a bright light, they seem to strike a mournful melody on the incoming zephyrs that pass unbidden through a broken pane of glass, and put us in mind of the mournful strains that emanated from the inspired lips of the lamented Emma Abbott when she used to sing, "Home, Sweet Home."

In consequence of our strange environments at this writing, coupled with the fleeting shadows of the golden sunset, intermingled with the variegated news from the National Convention, there arises in our mind a series of reflections in reference to this Brilliant Young Man of Destiny, who has been re-elected to the position of President of the N. S. A. so often that he no doubt thinks he is the "whole thing,"—the owner thereof—and that without him Modern Spiritualism would sicken and die.

The force of habit, beautifully perennial in its nature, and partaking of the characteristic of stern stubborness,—incorporating itself into the bones and sinews of its delegates for ten successive years—delegates who "turn up" at each session with the cheerful regularity of the seasons—spring, summer, autumn and winter—can not do otherwise than automatically elect Mr. Barrett. Should Mr. Barrett lose each member of his body in turn, so long as his parliamentary head remains properly adjusted to his shoulders, he will be re-elected with the monotony of the ticking of a clock, and with the solemnity that characterized an old-fashioned protracted Methodist camp-meeting.

To the great mass of Spiritualists, this serene monotony arising from the annual pilgrimage of the very same delegates, tramping their way across the country like domesticated automatons, armed and equipped with an immense store of good intentions in their grip-sacks that finally converge on Mr. Barrett for President, would become tiresome were it not for the amusing features connected therewith.

Of course these delegates are brilliant intellectually, are highly spiritual, are eminently good citizens, are said to be practical throughout, and so often have they traversed the continent to elect Mr. Barrett as President, that the sound of their footsteps have been so differentiated from that of the great mass of the people, that one can be detected and traced with perfect ease across the continent, even if a hundred miles in his rear.

In fact so fertile is habit in its various genuflexions and ramifications that the regular delegate to the N. S. A's. yearly convention has assumed a distinct personality, as easily distinguishable from the great mass as the difference between a crow and an ordinary anthropoid ape. Thus we are having an entirely distinct race or species of Spiritualists evolved by the stereotyped grip-sacked regular delegates who attend the N. S. A. convention, and some successor of Darwin will at no distant day be called upon to classify them, and place them in their proper place as a distinct class of the animal creation. Whether it is desirable to have this entirely new class of individualized entities evolved, to be known as "The Stereotyped Delegates to the National Convention to Re-elect Mr. Barrett," is a question that will be submitted to the wise savans of the collective world at their convocation which will convene in Chicago sometime during the next century.

We intend to be solemnly serious—a difficult task—in discussing the various phases of the N. S. A. After electing yearly a man for president of that body for nearly a quarter of a century, and then turning him down eventually, with fixed habits, with an established appetite for a good salary, and a good time at the expense of Spiritualists, a readjustment of his body as presiding officer, with parliamentary rules uppermost in his brain vibrations so that he is in danger sometimes of calling a crowded street car to order while he is hanging onto a strap for dear life—we say to turn Mr. Barrett down under those circumstances without a bank account to caress, would be the refinement of cruelty, to which we shall be exceedingly slow to submit.

But the reputation of the thing. To re-elect Mr. Barrett year after year indicates that Spiritualists are short on intellect and exceedingly long on stupidity and ignorance; in other words, in all our ranks there is not one besides Mr. Barrett who is capable of being placed at the head of the N. S. A.; not one even besides him who can with his parliamentary rules keep order with a refractory team of mules, or a jumping-up set of bipeds dancing a solemn jig over some motion or order of business. However, there is a way out of this miserable, unnatural dilemma, and we, sitting in our sanctum, baptized in the beautiful rays of a golden sunset, and as placid as the undisturbed waters of Lake Michigan, and imbued with a love for all and malice towards none, propose to solve the problem, even if we are compelled to go to school at Whitewater for one mortal year, and have our brain cells manipulated by that master mind who stands at the head of the educational institution there.

But we will proceed no further in this discussion, until the stereotyped class of delegates—the same old set—some musty with wrinkled old age, but wise nevertheless—some young, buoyant and hopeful that they may have the glorious privilege of embracing a good fat salary when the present incumbent as president is so feeble in his declining years that he requires a crutch to sustain his parliamentary rules in a standing position—we repeat that we will say nothing more until the very same class of ten-year-old delegates grasp their grips in October, 1903, and proceed to the National Convention and unanimously re-elect Mr. Barrett president. Then our remarks will be continued.

The above is the honest opinion of the left side of our brain, and being left-handed also, it invariably talks impressively and learnedly. Now comes the Right Side of our Brain and says:

We are delighted to learn that Mr. Barrett has again been elected to the presidency of the N. S. A. He is the right man in the right place, the delegates assembled exhibited their usual good sense in re-electing him again. Forcible and eloquent as a speaker, clear-minded in all things that pertain to Spiritualism, honest in word, act and deed, and ever trying to advance our glorious cause, he stands without a peer, and we shall take especial pleasure in working harmoniously with him along the various lines he may suggest. From our inmost soul we congratulate him on his success, and predict the continuance of his past brilliant career. We also congratulate the delegates on the wisdom displayed in re-electing that noble little lady to the secretaryship, Mrs. Longley. Thorough in business, always courteous in her treatment of others, and spiritually-minded, she brings to the office every quality required by the most exacting Spiritualist. Again we congratulate the delegates in selecting Theodore J. Mayer for treasurer. Splendidly endowed as a business man, thoroughly in earnest in reform work, overflowing with the spirit of benevolence, and the soul of honor, he is a man that everybody loves and respects. We also congratulate the delegates on their excellent work throughout the entire session, and they can return to their homes with the satisfaction of having done their whole duty, and knowing that The Progressive Thinker feels proud of them, and will stand faithfully by them in the good work during the coming year.

ANNOUNCEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.

Our Fall and Winter Campaign will be especially valuable to every thinking mind. The Progressive Thinker never becomes sluggish or stale in any respect. It is a constant incentive to every reflective mind. In order to maintain the interest in Occult and Spiritual subjects we have made arrangements to have several of the lectures by the great English psychic, C. W. Leadbeater, now in this city, reported especially for The Progressive Thinker. Mr. Leadbeater's trend of thought in the domain of the Occult and Spiritual, is of such a character that one is led to think along new lines as they peruse his lucid presentations of his subject. He reasons logically; his ideas are clearly expressed; he speaks from actual experience as a psychic, and he will deeply interest you. The following are among the lectures that we have ordered reported:

1. "Man and His Bodies."
2. "The Necessity of Reincarnation."
3. "Karma—the Law of Cause and Effect."
4. "Life After Death—Purgatory."
5. "Life After Death—the Heaven World."
6. "The Rationale of Telepathy and Mind-Cure."
7. "Invisible Helpers."
8. "Clairvoyance—What It Is."
9. "Clairvoyance—How It Is Developed."
10. "Clairvoyance—in Space."
11. "Clairvoyance—In Time."

The above lectures are not the only attractions that The Progressive Thinker will offer. Carlyle Petersilea's communications will be resumed. They are always read with deep interest. They carry one into the Spiritual domain. There will be other special attractions from time to time and like the boy's definition of salt, "That which makes victuals taste bad when you don't use it," it will make life taste bad to do without The Progressive Thinker.

During the long evenings of the coming winter, while sitting by the fire thinking, dreaming of children far away in the busy marts of life and of those arisen in some fairer land, you will grow sad and weary with life without something to read to remind you of the future. The Progressive Thinker in your home will come like a weekly messenger from the Spirit Land, bringing peace and soul comfort.

Now is the time to send in your subscription, and begin promptly with the soul-feasts, the intellectual harvest of high-class scientific, literary and occult readings. Induce your neighbors to subscribe also, and form your reading circles for the coming season and join us in this good work. Build up the educational side of the cause and perform a lasting deed for your fellow-man. See our special inducements elsewhere in this paper.

Remember, the cause you love so well needs your most hearty support and co-operation here and now, and let us hear from you at once.

The Open Court.

It is truly wonderful with what promptness the friends of truth respond to a call for opinions upon the vital subjects of Spiritualism. No greater interest was ever manifested in the affairs of the cause than was shown in our Symposium. It has a two-fold interpretation, or perhaps a three-fold.

First, it shows an awakening of the workers, and it shows that the N. S. A. is being carefully watched.

Second, it shows an inclination to discuss the live issues in a peaceable manner, to reason together upon questions that pertain to all and to the advancement of Spiritualism.

Third, it shows that The Progressive Thinker is appreciated in its effort to arouse the lethargic minds of progress to a feeling of deeper concern.

It shows that we have an army of workers in the field who are ready to respond to a toast propounded relative to the cause they love, and that while they may seem asleep, they keep an eye open to the interests of Spiritualism and the N. S. A., its needs and its possibilities.

It shows quite a different and more united opinion on the fraud question, and in many instances a better attitude toward the freedom of the press relating to the publication of exposures of fraudulent manifestations.

While The Progressive Thinker has always aimed to be sure it was right, there has never been any fear for the consequence of any exposures. No fear that the cause will be more greatly injured than benefited by judicious exposures of humbuggery and deception, but we highly value the consensus of opinion to be obtained in these symposium issues.

They call us together in friendly conversation; they introduce us to our brothers and sisters; they show the straws that are floating around and that become weather vanes upon the steeples of our organization, and show the drift of our movement.

Though a newspaper rightly conducted is a public educator, it is more by calling out the thoughts of others than by its own wisdom that the masses are instructed. It is by thought interchange, and analyzing, and figuring and criticising that the highest thought and greatest good are attained.

We learn from each other and make acceptable suggestions, and benefit and receive benefit.

The weekly issue and visit of a lively spiritual paper is of as much importance to the intellect of true Spiritualists as bread and butter are to the body and none should more reasonably expect to grow and expand mentally without spiritual food than they should to grow physically without natural nourishment.

President Roosevelt's Sister Will Vote.

President Roosevelt's sister, Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Cowles, presented herself the other day before the board of selectmen in Farmington, Conn., and registered her name to vote at the coming school election. When Mr. Roosevelt astonished the conservatives by recommending woman suffrage in his inaugural message to the New York Legislature in 1899, the reporters flocked around to ask his reasons. He is said to have answered that his home town of Oyster Bay had long been in great need of a new school building, but was never able to get the necessary appropriation till the women were given the school ballot. Then the mothers of the children voted the new school house at once.

Now that the President's sister has qualified to vote, perhaps some of the "society" women who have hitherto thought the exercise of the school ballot beneath them may suddenly see a great light. As a rule the women's school vote, although small, has been of excellent quality. In answer to the prediction that the best women will not vote, Col. T. W. Higginson says: "In Massachusetts, under school suffrage, the complaint has been that only the best women vote."—Alice Stone Blackwell.

The Boston National Spiritualists Convention.

Report of the Proceedings of the Tenth Annual Convention, Held at Boston, Mass., October 21, 22, 23, 24, 1902.

Should an explanation of this heading be needed, it will be found in the fact that the world is in New England; New England is Massachusetts, and Massachusetts in Boston. This was emphatically, as was expected, a Boston convention. This says no harm of Boston or of the convention; each is good in its place.

As the convention next year once more ventures as far west as Washington, I here and now put in an early bid for its return to Boston in 1904.

I started from Wisconsin to the convention on Saturday, October 18, and arrived in Boston about one hour late on the following Monday morning.

The convention, I think, was a larger affair than was anticipated. I reached Boston twenty-four before the convention was to be called to order, and went immediately to the hotel where we were to be entertained, and, like Jesus' parents, found "no room at the inn." Well, I mean no room for less than $2.50 per day, and that without board. I picked up my baggage and hied me away to another hotel, where I found equally as good rooms for less than half the money.

The Monday night reception in the Hotel Berkeley was a "swell" affair; a morning paper said there were about 400 guests on that occasion. Handshaking and visiting were enjoyed until after 9 o'clock when President Barrett stepped forward and called the house to order, and made a few appropriate remarks, after which music and speaking were the order of the evening until almost the "we sma' hours." The music was made by the Hatch Brothers. The speakers I dare not mention by name. I know that now I could not think of all their names, if I so desired, and being compelled to leave some out I will not mention any; suffice it to say it was all good. The consensus of opinion among those who spoke was that everywhere Spiritualism is on the up grade. Not only is Spiritualism making new converts, but old Spiritualists are waking up; they are becoming more liberal, both with their thoughts and in purse than ever before. I may add also that they are becoming more religious than ever before.

Another good sign is that many Spiritualists are becoming more rational than formerly. The "circus" phase of Spiritualism is rapidly being relegated to the shades. In its stead a religious and philosophical phase is coming to the front. Spiritualism is now more than ever attracting the attention of religionists and thinkers. These thoughts formed the gist of most of the remarks of the evening.

On Tuesday morning President Barrett called the meeting to order on time. After the appointment of the several committes necessary to prepare work for the convention, an hour was spent in conference.

In the afternoon as soon as we learned who we were and what we were, and what was to be done, work began in earnest. I think it is safe to say that no Spiritualist convention ever before did so much work in so short a time, nor did a convention ever do a better work. Of course, mistakes were made but they were not numerous nor fatal.

It did not seem to me that the Morris Pratt Institute had the show it deserved. Of course, being sent there by the board of directors of the institute, and on its expense, it seemed to me that I should be at work for it the most of the time. Three different hours were set apart for a hearing of the claims of the institute, but each one was staved off, sometimes it seemed to me, by long-winded speeches with little or nothing in them. Sometimes I half apprehended that some talk and business was done against time.

Once, when it seemed that our long delayed time had really arrived, we were told by a member of the finance committee that their committee must have an opportunity to bleed the audience—for the fourth time—before we could be heard in behalf of education.

Finally, when the time was passed for the closing of the convention, and the officers yet to be elected, we somehow succeeded in forcing the finance committee from the floor long enough to get in just ten minutes' work. Those minutes were valuable to us, for in them we raised in money and subscriptions between three and four hundred dollars for the Morris Pratt Institute—to assist it in doing its noble work for the young and talented ladies and gentlemen who are to represent the cause after we are gone to the hither side of life.

I think I can safely say that four-fifths, if not nine-tenths of the people assembled in that convention can now be put down as real friends of the Morris Pratt Institute. All wish it well, and many promise to help it to reach its destiny of being one of the most important educational institutions in the world.

Many now talk that we must have these institutions of learning in every state. Some Bostonians think, and said that the great draw-back to the Morris Pratt Institute is that it is so far from Boston. If the Morris Pratt Institute fails, I now believe that its failure will be because of an epidemic which may prove contagious, of founding institutions of learning. In this way institutions of learning could be killed as societies, camp-meetings and newspapers have been killed. It will not be unlike us to undertake to establish a dozen institutions where we fail to found and properly endow one. "When I told of the help which had been furnished by the good people of this convention, I neglected to state that furniture was provided for two more of its rooms.

I owe more than I can express to Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, the president of the Wisconsin Spiritualist Association, and the secretary of the M. P. I. for help rendered. She came as a delegate from the state association, but she did her full share of work for the M. P. I. Other good souls also deserve thanks for help in this good work.

Many good resolutions were passed which it was hoped that the N. S. A. will contrive in some way to get before the public. Mr. Wiggin, the chairman of that committee being called to a funeral, I acted as chairman a part of the time, and yet I somehow failed to secure a copy of the resolutions.

We had one good resolution against the use of intoxicating liquors, tobacco, and opiates, which hurt many who, to use their own words, were "temperate" users of some of the things denounced in that resolution; yet the resolution passed. Allow me to say in passing, that, according to my dictionary—yet to be written—the temperate users of either of the articles above mentioned are as scarce as hen's teeth or white blackbirds. Temperance consists in the moderate use of that which is good, and total abstinence from that which is evil.

I happened to be chairman of the committee on History and Education, and I retained a copy of its doings. Here is one of its items, which was adopted by a rising vote and cheers. I think the vote was unanimous:

3. Your committee invite all the world to unite with us in rejoicing that the venerable Morris Pratt, of Whitewater, Wis., has been moved upon to open his large heart and make it possible for Spiritualists to found a school where people can be educated in all that is necessary to fit them for public platform work, and this without being compelled to study the worn-out platitudes of an effete theology. We also rejoice that a school is now in successful operation in the Morris Pratt Institute Building, where history, grammar, rhetoric, oratory, voice culture, physical culture, psychic culture, comparative theology, biblical exegesis, higher criticism, homiletics, and kindred studies are being taught those who are preparing for future platform work; and we recommend Spiritualists everywhere to patronize this institution.

With all the talent assembled at Boston it could not be otherwise than that we would have good evening meetings. The house on every occasion was crowded to its utmost capacity, and that at an admittance fee of twenty-five cents per capita.

The lyceum entertainment, held in the larger Odd Fellows' Hall deserves especial mention. The little folks "quitted themselves like men." There was an immense programme which, under the conductorship of J. B. Hatch, Jr., was carried out without so much as a single break. This interested many of the guests insomuch that they resolved to go home and do their best to found lyceums.

Mr. Editor, I am on my way home, and as we are nearing the great city of Chicago, I must "dry up."

Hoping that each year of our convention may be as this has been, more interesting than any of its former years, I am, yours in the cause,

MOSES HULL.

N. S. A. MISSIONARY WORK

Report of G. W. Kates and Wife, Missionaries of the N. S. A.

To the National Spiritualists Association in Convention Assembled—Mr. President and Delegates:—We accepted an appointment as missionaries for the National Spiritualists' Association for one year commencing Nov. 1, 1901.

We have filled eleven months of the contract, and hereby make a report of the same.

The call gave us very little previous time to obtain engagements in localities; but, we had the months of November and December previously placed with societies in Philadelphia and Pittsburg, Pa., respectively.

These we fulfilled and also obtained several additional places for disengaged evenings during said months.

In the meantime, responses came and our services were sought by many localities. We were compelled to make our engagements enroute, hence the necessity of every locality desiring services of the missionaries making early application. The many places not visited, where we have been solicited, were denied because we could not afford to go long distances, nor to return over our route already traversed.

We would urge, therefore, that every locality desiring a visit from one of the N. S. A. missionaries, should make early application to the office of this association. Losses resulting from unemployed time and long distances traveled, might thus be avoided.

The important need of the missionaries, is to in advance fill every date. The expense is great and only constant work will justify the N. S. A. in sending forth competent talent to assist in the development of local societies. It should be noted that the so-called missionaries of the N. S. A. are sent out as agents and organizers of that body; and are not supposed to give their services entirely free of financial returns, but are expected to solicit and earn contributions and compensations in money for the development of a national treasury that shall hereafter be competent to carry on a vigorous system of propaganda.

We have seldom, however, been given a fee or a personal contribution to meet our expense or in aid of the N. S. A. Our earnings have nearly all been collections from our audiences—having made it a rule to offer our services for the voluntary collections taken at the meetings. Thus, we have frequently served local societies free of any salary cost. This form of co-operation is surely generous enough upon the part of the N. S. A., and should be heartily appreciated by every locality. It is necessary to say here that we have given our services most of the time to auxiliary local and state associations, and have not been missionaries into unorganized localities alone; yet we have gone for the first time of any Spiritualist speaker or medium and held meetings in a number of communities. The N. S. A. board specially desired that we should visit its auxiliaries and help strengthen them.

The title of "missionary" has been somewhat misleading; hence, it is necessary to more fully understand their mission, or else endow them with some other official name.

Our labors in the state of Texas is worthy of special mention, as the same may point the way to better results in the co-operative efforts of the N. S. A. and its auxiliaries. We served the Texas State Association for nearly five weeks. John W. Ring, its president, made all engagements for us and preceded us as an advance agent. He secured thirty-one meetings and procured competent local assistance. He held some advance meetings and thus heralded our coming. The results were large audiences and satisfactory financial returns.

We organized and chartered four societies in the state—and strengthened several others. The state association returns from our labor paid our salary and all expenses of ourselves and Bro. Ring, gave some per centage of receipts to two or three societies and equally divided with us the sum of $95.22 net profit. Our gross receipts in Texas, from the thirty-one meetings, was $338.70.

This shows the value to all concerned, of proper co-operation. What Texas accomplished with your missionaries, every state auxiliary can do, and thus soon place our cause in a condition of prosperity, with a resultant good to humanity.

This leads to a suggestion we desire to offer, as we deem it practical, and should result in great good. If a proper fund could be raised, this might be applied without local help. The president of this National Association should be authorized to secure co-operative help in every city of the nation for the purpose of renting a prominent hall or opera house in each place for one or more night. The president, accompanied by additional competent talent, to visit these places, after being well advertised, and hold free meetings to present the cause of Spiritualism, and thereat distribute a printed statement carefully prepared, setting forth the claims of Spiritualism as a provable religion.

Vountary contributions could be taken sufficient to pay for the expense assumed, provided local friends would supply the meeting-place. This prominent presentation of our cause would obtain wide-spread newspaper comment and notice, and thus result in positive propaganda. Instances in our career, where such an effort has been made, warrant the suggestion. We should prosecute a vigorous campaign if we expect to achieve great results. A strenuous effort succeeds—and the gospel of Spiritualism is a necessity for human welfare physically, mentally, morally and spiritually.

A summary of our labors and their results, is as follows:

We have held 276 meetings for lectures, followed by messages and delineations; and 21 meetings for organization benefits of local societies, etc., also one funeral; a total of 298 meetings. Being an average of 27 meetings per month.

The total attendance at the 276 meetings was 32,722 persons; or an average of 118 at each meeting. Whilst we have had very few persons present at some meetings, it can readily be seen that we have had some with quite large attendance.

We have also attended some receptions, entertainments and meetings held by local societies, in which we have not taken part. And we have visited and been visited until we have scarcely had an hour of leisure. The social exactions are very taxing to the missionaries, and should not be made an obligation.

We have traveled 11,600 miles by railway and 102 miles by private conveyances—some of the latter over corduroy and muddy roads.

Total receipts for the eleven months.....	$1,955.04
Total expense and salary for the eleven months.....	1,875.01
Net profit to the N. S. A.....	80.03

Charged to our expense account is $68.11 paid to the Texas State Association and several local societies as a per cent of our earnings, which makes our total profit, $148.14. At least $100 more have been earned by us for local societies—as profits from our meetings—the same being unaccounted for in our receipts and expense.

The receipts are not large for the labor given, and should appeal to all Spiritualists as a necessity to more freely aid the financial needs of their missionaries. We must learn to give more freely in order to freely receive. Our expense account, outside of salary, is not very great for two people who have labored in sixteen states—making about one hundred trips by rail or team.

The expense was greatly lessened by special permits of the railway passenger associations—for which we are grateful so long as class privileges are granted.

As such permits aid our organized cause, we should protect the same by preventing every unjust demand for their issuance.

Halls have usually been furnished free of any cost to us by local Spiritualists or societies; and occasionally a church has been granted. In several places we have occupied edifices, or temples, owned by the Spiritualists. There is an increasing effort to build a temple, or lease and control a meeting-place, by the auxiliaries of the N. S. A.

The press has accorded us generous courtesy, with few exceptions; and in a number of instances have given our meetings accurate and complimentary reports.

We have been generously entertained everywhere—and the cordial hospitality of our people emphasizes the boasted fraternity existing amongst Spiritualists. We have been in the palatial residences of the wealthy and the humble homes of widows and day-laborers. Each and all have made us welcome and extended every possible kindness. To all we offer our thanks.

We have organized and chartered 11 local auxiliaries—most of these with state associations. Have served and helped at three state conventions and five camp-meetings.

We have encouraged the formation of family circles and conferences of friends of the cause in localities where too few avowed Spiritualists exist to form a local society. Several of these will soon develop a possible public work. If the friends of our cause will hold parlor meetings for social intercourse, reading of literature, exercise of song and to help developing mediumship, we will soon see a local interest unfolded sufficient to assume public enterprise and to hold public meetings and employ public speakers. The lack of business methods and generous esprit is the root of inactivity in localities. Our people are not too few in any locality to meet together and prepare the way for a society and its attendant necessities. We have discouraged an assumption of expense or organization until the local people shall fraternize and develop mutual interests and a financial co-operation.

In a number of localities we have also encouraged the formation of a children's progressive lyceum; and in a few instances with good prospects for success.

The prevailing idea that an expensive paraphernalia must be employed, should be counteracted by our oft-repeated statement that no accessories are absolutely necessary—and two or three children with two or three adults are a sufficient start. A parlor room is ample if no hall is available Exercise your genius, friends, to interest the children, and do not wait for great opportunities or help. Be humanitarians!

Develop Spiritualists and save us from the difficult task of converting them in after years.

This also applies to the organization of Young People's Spiritualist Societies, that we may have the influence of Spiritualism in Its Relation to Life.

A Discourse by J. M. Peebles, M.D.

"Watchman, what of the night?..The morning cometh."

Inspiration, from inspiro—in-breathing—is universal. It oversweeps the epochs of all past ages, and is just as fresh and forceful now as in time's earliest morning. God is not dead, nor were the doors of Inspiration's temple forever closed when Malachi ceased to prophesy, Socrates to converse with his divine daimon, and John to see visions on rocky Patmos.

Athanasian sectarists may have turned their backs upon the everflowing fountain of inspired truth—upon that light which "lighteth every man that cometh into the world"—but the light still shines, and like a mighty river, widens with the soul's unfolding.

If Isaiah and Shakspeare, if Carlyle, Emerson, Longfellow, and Lincoln, were not quantitatively, they were qualitatively, all equally inspired—inspired as were the prophets of old, because God, the Divine Fountain, the Infinite Consciousness, Life and Intelligence, the Source, was and is One. Seraphs, angels and spirits of various grades of intelligence and purity have ever been the intermediaries in sympathetic touch with us.

Inspiration warms the nerve centers of the brain, and kindles into liveliest activity the fires of the higher moral nature. It feeds and nourishes the spiritual; and Spiritualism is an affirmation, the basic foundation of which is demonstration. Spiritualists, through careful, critical investigation and persistent research, have become the religious positivists of this period. They are the earnest advocates and philosophers of demonstrated facts, which facts, physical, mental, and psychical, verified by consciousness, intuition and reason, combine to give the very highest degree of certitude. The great souls of song and psalm and philosophy that made radiant the past, were spirit-inspired men. Spiritualism, as the distinguished Alfred R. Wallace writes, is a "scientifically established fact."

PHENOMENA AS SCAFFOLDINGS.

Jesus of Nazareth, standing upon the summit of moral science and real Hebrew Spiritualism, and holding with some of his disciples a spiritual seance upon the Mount of Transfiguration, talked with the returning spirits of Moses and Elias. There is no record of any dead angels or spirits. Heaven's doors of mercy and tenderest sympathy were never shut. John, on the mountainous Isle of Patmos, saw and conversed with one of the old prophets, "a fellow-servant." God is unchangeable. Deific laws are unvarying, and lute-like voices of love have vibrated out of the silence through all the agone ages. The Hydesville concussions half a century ago or more, were not deceptions in a Methodist family; were not curious occult inventions, but the discovery—the re-discovery—of the bridge consciously connecting the world visible with the world invisible. These, or similar phenomena, were known to the ancients, as the old cuneiform writings and the remotest Akkadian inscriptions now being deciphered by Orientalists abundantly demonstrate. These spirit manifestations were needed in our time as a check to materialism. They were means to an end. They were scaffoldings in constructing that magnificent temple of truth whose inspired builders, with their divine teachings, were ultimately to enlighten and transfigure the world.

CHANGING ATTITUDES OF SCIENCE.

Social science, mental science, metaphysical science, and especially psychic science, are just as much sciences as is that university-taught science called physics, the text-books of which, though authoritative to-day, are repudiated by the next generation. There have been new discoveries, widening knowledge and deeper research, necessitating frequent alterations and amendments in the classically arranged and tabulated "natural sciences." The chemistry of my academic years is no longer chemistry. This should induce modesty, a virtue with which Haeckel and his materialistic satellites are not too familiar. Truths, as fixed principles interrelated to cause and effect, do not change. It is our conceptions of them that change, which changes demand frequent revision.

SPIRITUAL SCIENCE SUPERIOR TO PHYSICS.

The original atoms and constituents constituting the physical sciences as booked by Humboldt, Tyndall, Huxley, Lord Kelvin, Virchow, Haeckel, and other observing experimentalists, cannot be cognized by the sense perceptions. Scientists cannot get even a glimpse of them with the thousand diameter microscope; they cannot measure them by any lineal measurement, melt them in crucibles of intensest heat, nor weigh them in the most delicately-balanced scales. And further, of the origin of these hidden moulding forces they know absolutely nothing. Denying inspiration, and rejecting the spiritual as scientific helps, these intellectual giants are of necessity agnostic materialists. But why should the results of their investigation—why should the physical sciences of which the aforenamed distinguished investigators are students—be labelled "sciences" in preference to the discovered and carefully classified facts of spiritual phenomena? Is matter to take precedence over mind? Is physics superior to metaphysics? Is the hypothetical atom to be more honored than consciousness, intuition, or moral reason? Certainly, gravity does not think; electricity does not solve mathematical problems; the telegraphic wires do not originate the messages they transmit; polarization does not philosophize, nor does the mad avalanche, rushing, thundering down the mountain side, crushing alike the infant and the aged, manifest a particle of benevolence or reason. Metaphysics must necessarily precede physics and research; mind and morality should, must constitute the corner-stone of all true science and spiritual unfoldment.

JUSTICE TO SPIRITUALISM.

Telepathy, psychometry, mental therapeutics, and these "New Thought" theories, worthy of consideration, are allied to, and factors of, psychic science, the substratum of which is Spiritualism in some of its various manifestations and demonstrations. What lack of manliness and moral justice, then, is all this vociferous voicing of "mental science," and the "new-thought" flirting, without the bare mention of their maternity. Acorns may be pardoned for expressing no gratitude to the life-imparting oak. Incapable of reasoning, they know no better; but liberal thinkers know, or ought to know, that Spiritualism, centered in spirit—essential spirit—is the Father-Mother fountain of all these higher sciences. It is the vitalizing, fruit-laden vine, of which telepathy, psychometry, "New Thought," Mental Science, and theosophical speculative assertiveness, are the branches—some of which, I confess, are sadly distorted, requiring trimming, training, and very careful watching.

"Watchman, what of the night?"

In this colonizing age of commercialism, this maddened rush for pelf, power and luxury, there is a reversion of thought and tendencies towards the gross materialism of ancient Greece and Rome. Epicurus, in the time of Leucippus, a Greek philosopher, denied the immortality of the soul, and taught the self-origination of life on earth through matter, or rather, the interacting affinities and forces in matter.

Democritus held similar notions. The Roman poet Lucretius (born B. C. 95, and ending his life by suicide), predicated life, not upon essential, conscious spirit, but upon the vibratory motions, attractions, repulsions, and atomic laws inhering in matter. His life is reputed to have been very unhappy. Much of the wordy theorizing to-day concerning the origin of life is as fruitless as to talk of the origin of space. Life being allied to God, the Infinite Spirit Presence, had no origin. It is eternal. Related to time and mortality, all manifest life on this planet must be the resultant of antecedent life. Nothing can never produce, nor become something.

DEAD MATTER VERSUS SPIRIT.

Vital action does not belong to ordinary matter. Force cannot spring from non-force, nor life from absolute death. As there is organic and inorganic, structureless and non-structureless matter, there is also "dead matter," as scientists and such distinguished living microscopists as Professor Lionel S. Beale, F. R. S., F. R. C. P., F. R. Mchi.S. (vice-president of the Victoria Institute), and other illustrious authorities, prove beyond cavil. Professor Dewar, in his late address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, when treating of liquid and solid hydrogen; of helium, crypton, xenon, and neon, as recently discovered, invisible atmospheric elements—remarked that "helium when liquified, would be as hard to see as a ghost in the sunshine." He was further reported as saying that "certain seeds frozen for a hundred hours in liquid air" caused "their protoplasm to become inert, but," said he, "on non-living matter the effects were much more marked." To contend that there is life in matter, or that life permeates matter, is a very different thing from saying that matter is alive, consciously alive. The former is true; the latter is unproven.

Standing several times in the King's Chamber of the Great Pyramid, Egypt, I saw before me a solid block of granite weighing several hundred tons. It has stood there, according to learned Egyptologists, several thousand years, stationary and cold. Is it dead or alive? The proof that it is dead and unreasoning lies in the fact that it did not cut itself out of the Syene quarries, did not transport itself across the country, did not lift itself up on the fiftieth tier of that great pyramidal pile of stones, nor did it architecturally adjust, chisel, and beautifully polish itself. It is dead and speechless, dead as atheistic spiritism.

Spirit is life—life in activity; and action implies something to act upon. This something may be denominated unseen substance, which, impulsed and duly manipulated by immutable laws, becomes matter, somewhat as invisible steam becomes ice, or sunbeams becomes coal strata, tangible to the senses.

UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD.

Conscious, regal-souled man is not an Eden-fallen display of total depravity, not a materialistic mist floating in the immensities, not a wailing waif cast up from the non-purposeless past by fortuitous combinations of interacting atoms and conflicting forces; nor is he a "religious animal," as extreme Darwinians have taught; but he is a thinking, rational, moral being, whose first conscious thought-act is existence; the second is the perception of the existence of others, and the third relates to the acting social relations between ourselves and others, which, deepening, implies the family, the race, the nation, the international relations, a world-wide brotherhood—and still widening and rising in conception, includes in one universal brotherhood all those circling, glittering planets that dot the unfathomable spaces.

RELATION OF THE INFINITE TO THE FINITE.

Exalted and towering as are man's aspirations, he is finite, and the finite necessitates the idea of the Infinite. No machine can shape itself. Tesla manufactured a nicely-shaped talking man, but the thing did not—could not reason.

No unthinking machine can evolve, or construct another machine; nor can any individualized finite, unaided, produce another finite. Not even a blade of grass can grow on an iceberg. No egg on a rock can, without warmth, hatch a living bird, nor can the new-born babe live, clothe itself, and grow without antecedent life, love, and intelligence; and the source of that life is the Infinite, our Father-Mother—God!

If it be said by the antagonizing carpist that the "Infinite may have had a cause behind it," the say-so suggestion is of little account. The logical reply is, if any be required, that that would render the Infinite finite, involving as pitiful a contradiction as to state that a circle was triangular-shaped, or that a sphere was tetrahedron in form.

There must necessarily exist between the Infinite and the finite some such relation as obtains between cause and effect—that is, there must invariably be something in the cause to which the effect corresponds. The process of creation, or rather manifestation, implies consciousness, purpose, adaptation, wisdom, and power, resulting in the glory of divine man—a spiritual being.

The activities seen in structural forms neither create nor constitute life. They are the effects of life acting upon and through the structures. Conscious life is the inducing, compelling power, from which functional activities emanate. The life of man, then, is not merely mental or muscular activity, but rather spiritual vitality, proceeding primarily from the higher Divine Source.

ORIGIN OF LIFE ON EARTH.

From whence is it? It is from the inflowing Infinite Life, and is much more than mere existence. The rock and the oyster exist, but they do not really, consciously live and aspire to higher states of being. Sensations are not reasoning faculties. Tendencies do not create, they only excite; neither do functions create organs, but organs adapted to use, manifest functional activities and aims.

There are doubtless units of force, vehicles for consciousness, in numbers infinitely beyond all mathematical calculations, generated in the bosom of the Divine Life, and flowing therefrom something as crystal drops emerge from an ever-flowing fountain.

These units, atoms, monads, may be considered as infinitesimal segments of the circle of Being—as semi-detached entities, sympathetically and spiritually connected by the rarest films of vibratory ether to the Infinite Life—the energizing, infilling, over-brooding Father-Mother Spirit.

In consonance with the above, Professor Fleming, in a recent science monthly, writes of monads and invisible corpuscles as fragments chipped from a neutral atom, calling them "electrons," or "ions"; and he considers that one atom of hydrogen may contain from seven hundred to one thousand of these inconceivable, infinitesimal electrons. If this be science, it is surely getting very nearly to spirit.

These ethereal entities and ions, evidently unlike in possibilities, unlike in germinal potentialities, are naturally adapted to different planes and spheres of etheric existence—endless diversity in unity. Nature quite as much abhors monotony as a vacuum.

These units of consciousness are evidently climbing up to better conditions, and to more complex structures, towards the befitting keystone in the arch—perfected manhood! The distance they reach, and the altitude they attain, depends much, if not altogether, upon the original germinal life, or infilling potency. Aspiration is the measure of destination. The platform vaporings of pseudo-scientists extolling the properties of matter without any indwelling consciousness or intelligent purpose (though they are ever compelled to admit some self-forming adaptation of means to ends), have become tiresome. It is not strange that Haeckel's and Buchner's books are not read as they once were. Mental icicles are not inviting to the sensitive touch. It is not pleasant to read, or think that one's body, life, and conscious spirit are at death to be packed into a coffin, and all to become alike grave-yard dirt!

EFFECTS TRANSCENDING THEIR CAUSES.

Conversing once with Thomas Carlyle, at Chelsea, he characteristically pronounced America "the great maw, that was ever hatching out desperate and pestilential things." There was something of truth in this. The last American-hatched fad to be put as a tag upon Spiritualism is that "effects transcend their causes.....We see evolution everywhere." Yes, but evolution implies something—some substratum to be evolved from; otherwise, we have the silly position of something from nothing. Evolution is but half of the circle. Involution in time must precede evolution. The sensible old farmer said he "could not get water out of his well till there was first some in it." If effects transcend their causes, all fathers' sons should be Isaac Newtons, or Emersons. A wheelbarrow of wood and iron, as a purposed effect, should "run" the man that made it. Turtles' eggs, sand-warmed and hatched, should produce strong-winged eagles. Automobiles, being effects, should build and guide themselves. "Oxygen and hydrogen," says this new-born philosopher (?) "combine to form water.....The effect, transcending the cause, is unlike the cause." But the very word "combine" here used, indicates motion; motion necessitates a moving force, and a moving force implies life, all of which agencies combined, we are gravely told, are not equal to the effect, water. Here is logic run mad! This theory squarely dispenses with God, and is therefore rankest atheism under the guise of Spiritualism. One may be a Spiritist and at the same time an atheist; but cannot well be an atheist and a real heartfelt Spiritualist, because the latter is necessarily reverential, encouraging prayer and holiness of life. In Anglo-Saxon the word "God" is used in the sense of "good," and who, morally capable of a religious emotion, does not find both peace and profound philosophy in contemplating the Infinite Good?

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

Though consciously and intuitively knowing something of God (in wholeness), He is incomprehensible. The Neo-Platonian Proclus defined God as Causation, and Jesus as Spirit—pure, essential, immortal Spirit. And this sacred word constitutes the corner-stone of Spiritualism. The derivatives therefrom are spiritual, spirituality, spiritual-mindedness, spirit-communion; and the fruits of the "spirit" as expressed by the Apostle, are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.....If we live in the spirit, let us also walk in the spirit."

The mere conversing with spirit intelligences behind the veil does not constitute a Spiritualist. If it did, then African Voudous and American Mormons are Spiritualists; but emphatically they are not. The ancient Assyrians, as the cuneiform tablets testify, held intercourse with the dead. Promiscuous converse in Moses' time with spirits that "peeped and muttered," was called necromancy, and forbidden. It may have been demonism from the dark chambers of the underworld; if so, the forbidding was justifiable. Israel's seers stood on the higher plane of inspiration, prophecy, and angelic ministrations. Seers and sitters alike should be examples of purity and moral excellence. Conscientiousness, fidelity to the principles of right, righteousness, cleanliness, and a candid search for the truth, should be the actuating motives. In this religious attitude largely lies the secret of Mrs. Everitt's seances, so wonderful, convincing and spiritually uplifting.

The same may be said of Mr. George Spriggs' seances, both in Australia and Cardiff. His influencing spirits, as spirits always should, arranged the conditions. The photographer necessarily arranges the conditions for the picture. The farmer, with plow and spade, controls and fixes the conditions for the ripened harvest; and so spirits, dwelling on that more spiritual plane of existence, are the most competent, and should be permitted to fix the conditions for the manifestations. In Mr. Spriggs' seances the sitters were selected. They were to attend punctually. Each was to take a bath before entering the consecrated room; all were to abstain from meat-eating, intoxicating drinks, and tobacco, and were to fast from breakfast time till after the evening sitting. Here was purpose, system, and moral integrity. And with these conditions, spirits proved the passage of matter through matter in both a subdued light and in broad daylight. Fruits, flowers, nuts, branches of trees, and bits of rock were brought through solid walls in profusion. The spirits, clothing themselves in substances, materialized, and in the quietness of twilight walked about in the greenhouse and garden. Lately I witnessed very similar manifestations in the elegant residence of Mr. Thomas W. Stanford (Melbourne), brother of the originator and founder of the Stanford University in California, and the reputed richest one in the world. The medium was Mr. C. Bailey, and his controlling intelligences always opened the sittings with prayer. All such orderly, religious seances tend to lead the researchers from the physical up to the psychical; to impress the mind with the sublime thought of immortality; to arouse the inner conscience, to quicken the spiritual faculties, to reform vicious habits, and attune the soul to the harmonies of infinite love and perfection.

THE SPIRITUAL AND THE CHRIST-LIFE.

As aforesaid, Spiritualism is of God, and therefore divine. It was in Jordan's waters that Jesus clairvoyantly saw the "spirit," descending like a dove, a beautiful symbol of his mission. Previous to this heavenly baptism, he was Jesus, the Galilean carpenter, traveling, according to Hafed and Talmudian writers, in Egypt and other Oriental lands; but now he was Jesus Christ—the anointed, the divinely illumined. There was no miracle in this. It was natural to spiritual law. Every Spiritualist should be baptized from the Christ-heavens, becoming a Christ now. "As many," said the Apostle, "as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." Let "Christ be formed in you." And again, the Apostle said, "Christ liveth in me." Christ should live in every one.

Afire with the Christ-spirit, Jesus declared that "believers in Him" should do the works that He did, and "even greater works." He chose the apostles, not because of their scholarship, but because of their susceptibility to spirit influences. Paul never saw Jesus Christ in the flesh, and yet he was more the founder of this now-a-day Christianity than Christ. A Jew by birth, a Pharisee by education, he was to the end more of a spiritist than a Christ-illumined Spiritualist. Though stricken down by spirit power on his way to Damascus, and though caught in vision up to the "third heaven," he confessed in his writings that he was the "chief of sinners," and had not yet "attained." His real name, as traced in the Talmud by the late learned Dr. Wise, president of the Hebrew College of Cincinnati, Ohio, was Acher. Afterwards he was called Saul, and still later Paul. Changing the name when traveling was common in that period. Plato's real name was Aristokles. Paul preached Christ as the loftiest spiritual altitude to be in his time attained. Paul, being confessedly given to "diplomacy"—another word for duplicity—wrote of "salvation by faith," and said that "without the shedding of blood there was no remission of sins." Evolution was doing its work, however, in the apostolic period; and when more highly inspired, he exhorted the Jewish believers to leave their "first principles," their Pharisaic religious notions, and "go on unto perfection." And again he wrote: "Being reconciled, we are saved by His (Christ's) life." Mark this; it was and is the life—the life of justice and mercy, the life of purity and love—love inspired by faith, and guided by wisdom, that saves.

The parabolic style of writing was common in the early days of Christianity. When Paul wrote that "this rock was Christ," he had no reference to a granite boulder. And when Jesus said, "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood there is no life in you," he did not intend to encourage cannibalism. This was the symbolism of Oriental imagery. The real meaning was, "Except ye partake of my spiritual doctrines, and drink or assimilate these spiritual teachings, there is no life in you, because it is 'the spirit that giveth life.'" The spiritual Christianity of Jesus Christ, and the spiritual illumination of Gautama Buddha, and true Spiritualism, are all in perfect accord; the essential thought being that it is not belief, not creed, but character that saves.

KNOWLEDGE NOT THE WORLD'S SAVIOR.

It is a stock phrase among many spiritists that "Knowledge is the world's savior." Knowledge is not the world's savior, neither is ignorance. Knowledge, unless guided by a high moral motive, is dangerous. The most knowing men are the most crafty in crime. Forgers are excellent penmen. Counterfeiters are often fine mechanics. Bank defaulters may be expert accountants.

Dr. Webster, professor of Chemistry and the Natural Sciences in Harvard University, America, owing Dr. Parkman a debt that he could not cancel, murdered him in the University building, and then employed his knowledge—his chemical skill in acids and heat—to conceal the terrible crime. He was tried, convicted, and executed, and Andrew Jackson Davis clairvoyantly watched the process of his dying, and his entrance into the world of spirits—not the spiritual world, or summerland world of love and harmony, but the Tartarean world of spirits.

Death, the act of separating the material from the spiritual, settles no final destiny. Jesus preached to Hades-imprisoned spirits, which preaching implied repentance and reformation. When in Palestine a number of years ago, I plucked and ate delicious grapes in hell, the Valley of Hinnom, Gehenna, that "hell-fire" (St. Mark ix:47) where the "worm was never to die, nor the fire to be quenched." Progression spans all worlds, visible and invisible. Returning spirits confirm and exemplify this gospel—a gospel, not so much of hope, as of knowledge.

But the future out of mind, it is infinitely better to reform to-day—better to do right and live right now. Duty was the keystone to the moral philosophy of the great German philosopher, Fichte. To his students he said: "Duty is the foundation of a successful life." In all mental equipments, moral qualities should be put forward as guiding principles. There are not two worlds, only two aspects of the one world, visible and invisible. It is but a filmy mist that separates them. The clairvoyant eye can pierce it, and the clairaudient ear, like John's on Patmos, can hear the vibratory voices of the other-world intelligences. We may and should live the spiritual—the heavenly—life now, as a foretaste of those evergreen shores and temples of truth, that over there, await the truly good.

THE RELIGION OF SPIRITUALISM.

Pure and undefiled religion is a divine soul emotion, inspiring reverence for God and love to man. And religious Spiritualism, in contrast to materialism, or atheistic side-show spiritism, is a life, emphatically a life of love, guided by wisdom, a life of consecrated self-sacrifice for that truth which makes the soul free indeed, and was never making such rapid strides as now. Its progress is co-extensive with the progress of English-speaking nations. It is not noisy and boasting. Comparatively quiet and incisive, it is leavening the great lump of priestly ecclesiasticism. And in a few centuries, as the English language will be the cultured international language of the world, so will Spiritualism be the religion of the world, chanting the triumphant anthem:

O Death, where is thy sting,
O grave, where is thy victory?"

SPIRITUALISM AND THE AFTER LIFE.

Death, to the pure in heart, is but going one step higher to clasp the shining hands of the loved ones gone before; or it may be compared to the rose, that climbs up the garden wall to bloom on the other side. It is not so much the mission of Spiritualism to teach men how to die, as how to now live the strenuous, manly life of the just. As we come this way to tarry in mortality but once, it becomes us to make every day one of moral improvement and self-mastery. Our angel-teachers plead with us not to miserly live for self, for gain; nor to grovel underground like moles; but to move up out of the cerebellum along the pathway of intellect to the coronal brain region—the soul's parlors, where come angel guests to talk in tenderest tones of love.

Mr. Astor, one of New York's great multi-millionaires, influencing a sensitive, wrote thus: "I am not happy; better for me that I had been an orphan and begged for bread in the streets than to have been the hoarding, grasping man I was, treasuring up that which I could not take with me to this new state of being. Could I live my earthly life over again, I should pursue a very different course. Pray for me." Emerson wisely said in his "Conduct of Life," that "he who gathers too much of the earthly, in the very act loses an equal amount of the spiritual."

SPIRITUALISM AND REFORMS.

The overbrooding spiritual spheres are doubtless the spheres of inspiration and impressional causes; and Spiritualism, which so marvelously materialized to the sense-perceptions in 1848, at Hydesville, was begotten in the heavens. So considered, small matters are, in results, often the mightiest. A babe, in a Bethlehem manger, three centuries later shook imperial Rome to its foundations. A tiny apple-stem broke and showed to Newton the law that binds in the one the starry universe; a tremulous tendon in a frog's foot gave birth to galvanism; a kite revealed the lightning's powerful armament; in a bit of amber lay hidden the mighty force of electricity; tiny coral insects lifted up islands from the ocean; scattering, floating weeds told Columbus of a world afar in the West; and a few gentle tappings some fifty years ago in a midnight hour at a Hydesville farm-house, told of a peopled world unseen, and bridged the distance, hope merging into knowledge, and faith into fruition.

Soon the world felt the quickening force. Reforms were conceived in the heavens and mapped out to be materialized on earth. William Lloyd Garrison, the anti-slavery agitator, and an avowed Spiritualist, rose from pacing the floors of a Baltimore prison to see ere long slavery die and himself crowned with a nation's honor.

A few years ago Hudson Tuttle, writer and author, took me in his carriage to see the old brick Edison homestead, where young Edison, the world-famous inventor, attended his first spiritual seances. He is still impressionable and inspirational.

In 1863 the martyred Abraham Lincoln attended several spiritual seances at the house of Mr. Laurie, Washington, D. D. This gentleman, whom I well knew, was a government employe in the post office department, and Mrs. Miller, his daughter, was a superior medium, whose seances, S. P. Kase, called the "railroad king," the Rev. John Pierpont, a Unitarian preacher and poet, the Hon. D. E. Somes, ex-Congressman, General N. P. Banks, Major Chorpening, and Abraham Lincoln, with other distinguished personages, quietly attended.

Hudson Tuttle, writing in the Banner of Light, March 7, 1891, says: "Mrs. Nettie Colburn Maynard was constantly consulted by President Lincoln, and the communications he received through her were of the most astonishing character. The result of battles was foretold before the telegraphic dispatches, and on several occasions advice was given and accepted, which, acted on, proved of momentous consequence."

It was well known in government circles that Lincoln frequently consulted the spirits through Colchester, Foster, and other sensitives, and it was quite generally understood that it was through messages from the ascended fathers of the Republic that Lincoln was induced to sign the proclamation that struck the shackles from four millions of human beings.

The Stanford University of California, reported to be the richest (including its lands and estates) in the world, owes its origin to Spiritualism. The son of Senator Stanford, an ex-Governor of California, while touring in Europe, gathering relics and costly curios, passed away by a fever attack, while in Italy, to a higher life. He was an only child, sixteen, and full of promise.

"The Stanford family was a Spiritualistic family," as Thomas W. Stanford remarked to me while attending one of his seances, just before I left Australia. This gentleman was for many years the American Vice-Consul in Melbourne, and his name, because of munificent contributions, is chiselled on the front of the Stanford University Library in California. These cultured, free-thought Stanfords, in this trying affliction, finding no consolation in church dogmas, consulted trance and clairvoyant sensitives. And, while considering the subject of constructing a mausoleum to the memory of their son, he, from spirit life, suggested that the most satisfactory monument to him would be the erection of an unsectarian educational institution. This desire of their spirit-risen son ultimated in that magnificent university which already has some two thousand students in attendance. It is the purpose, so I am credibly informed, that when these landed estates are sold and the income put into this institution, there shall be no tuitional charges to students. Here, then, is that Spiritualism, which is of God, made practicable, in educating the young of both sexes on an equal footing; and non-sectarian education in the line of evolution must be the crowning work of this twentieth century.

"Lo! I see long blissful ages,
When these Mammon days are done,
Stretching forward in the distance,
Towards a never-setting sun."

Spiritualism not only demonstrates a future existence, not only teaches the certainty of suffering in all worlds for wrong-doing, not only encourages invention, art, science, exploration, and all sanitary enterprises, not only shows memory to be the "recording angel," and self-denial, nobleness of purpose, purity of life and sweet spirituality to be the ascending steps to heaven, but it strikes the chains from millions of slaves and builds unsectarian universities. These angel ministries ever appeal to the silent, persuasive, and most powerful incentives to a better life. And though no subtle chemistry can impart a more delicate odor to the rose, though no lapidary can burnish the stars, nor rhetorician's art add to the moral beauty and dignity of a true altruistic life, yet everyone can cultivate that loving-kindness which disarms resentment, that patience which endures suffering, that gentleness which neutralizes acidity of temper, that forgiveness which obliterates personal animosities, that sweetness of disposition which adds lustre to all the heavenly graces, that consciousness of right which inspires justice, and that tender charity which, combined with the other virtues that angel messages inspire, make the harmonial man—heaven on earth.

"The golden age lies onward, not behind.
The pathway through the past has led us up;
The pathway through the future will lead on
And higher. We are rising from the beast
Unto Christ and human brotherhood."

Restores Eyesight.

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery Which Cures Diseased Eyes, No Matter Whether Chronic or Acute, Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. Here are the names and addresses of a few test cases and the names of the diseases cured: Miss Reed, 500 Prospect Ave., Kansas City, Mo., eyesight restored. Robert Baker, 80 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., blindness prevented. A. O. T. Pennington, Mass. Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., cataracts cured. W. W. Lauber, Aledo, Ill., astigmatism cured. R. W. Randall, Chicago, Ill., blindness prevented. W. W. Owen, Adrian, Mo., blindness prevented. General Alex. Hamilton, Tarrytown, N. Y., neuralgia of eyes cured.

Hundreds of other names can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial, post paid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Ass'n, Dept. T, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

Contrasts in Spirit Life;
And Recent Experiences of Samuel Bowles in the First Five Spheres, Etc. Written through the hand of Carrie E. S. Twing. Paper, 50c.

AFTER HER DEATH.
The Story of a Summer. By Lilian Whiting. Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual experience. Price, $1.00.

THE DESCENT OF MAN.
By Charles Darwin. Cloth, gilt top, 75 cents. On its appearance it aroused at once a storm of mingled wrath, wonder and admiration. In elegance of style, charm of manner and deep knowledge of natural history, it stands almost without a rival among scientific works.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

You should sign your own name and address to the items you send in; otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

The Ladies' Aid of the Englewood Spiritual Union will hold an entertainment and bazaar on the afternoon and evening of October 30. They will serve supper from 6 to 8:30 p. m. The admission including supper, is 25 cents. In the afternoon, Thursday, October 30, preceding the bazaar and supper and entertainment there will be the regular auxiliary services at which good mediums will serve with messages and lectures. Come and spend the afternoon with them.

The Herald of Joplin, Mo., says: "The East Joplin Spiritualist Society have begun the construction of a temple, that they may have a more suitable place to meet, as the society and congregation have grown until the present quarters will not accommodate the people who desire to attend. We desire a suitable place to meet that we may teach the people freedom. We believe in every man, woman and child thinking for themselves. We are in need of financial aid in this undertaking and courteously ask the assistance of the public in this undertaking that our people may get a broader view of life. We are all children of one father and should live brother unto brother and sister unto sister."

Mrs. Catherine McFarlin writes: "I wish to announce that I will be in La Crosse, Wis., to speak for W. J. Erwood's Spiritualistic church during December and January. I would like to make engagements for the rest of the season, and also for camp-meetings. I will also answer calls for funerals. I can furnish the best of references. Societies or Spiritualists wishing parlor meetings can address me at 166 Juneau avenue, Milwaukee, Wis."

J. M. White writes from Fort Scott, Kansas: "The Bourbon County Occult Association was started here on Sunday, October 12. The meeting was also held on the 19th at G. A. R. hall. In both instances the representative people of the town attended. The tests were well received and unsolicited verifications were instantly forthcoming. We expect to distribute free Spiritualist literature at all meetings and will appreciate all papers, books or magazines sent for distribution. Send literature to Geo. B. Moore, Secretary Bourbon County Occult Association, 510 National avenue, or J. M. White, Room 8, Huntington Block, Fort Scott, Kansas."

In the Chamber of Deputies, Paris, France, Ernest Roche (nationalist) introduced a bill providing for the separation of church and state, the abolition of the budget of public worship and the suppression of the French embassy at the Vatican. The bill was presented as a challenge to the government to carry out the radical programme, M. Roche declaring that the question had figured long enough in the radical platform, and that if the struggle against the congregations was sincere the government ought to carry out the separation of church and state. The deputy demanded that the chamber declare urgency for the measure, but Premier Combes refused to accept the motion, saying the bill was only intended to embarrass the government. Henri Brisson declared that he, and his radical friends would also oppose urgency for the same reason. The chamber rejected the urgency motion by 285 to 179 votes, but ordered an early discussion of the counter-proposition referring all bills dealing with the separation of church and state to a special commission, which, M. Lasies (nationalist) said, meant "a funeral for the bills."

John Thorpe speaks favorably of the meetings he attended at Battle Creek, Mich., Mrs. Amanda Coffman, speaker. He says she is not only a pleasing speaker, but forceful and logical.

The Republican, of Denver, Colorado, says: "When Cotton Mather ended his crusade against witchcraft, it was supposed that 'my lady of the broomstick' had been most effectually banished from the New World, but the following clipping taken from a New York paper of not so many months ago, proves the contrary. It was sent from a town in Berks county, Pennsylvania, and reads: 'David Clay said spirits told him to kill his mother because she was a witch. He killed her because he could not find a black kitten with three white feet, which he was to skin alive in order to break the spell. Clay is about 42 years old. His mother was 85. He had accused her several times of 'laying things on him'—that is to say, hypnotizing him and causing him to perform actions against his will'"

Prof. Ransby, speaker and test medium writes: "I am open for engagements in any city, but rather go East. I am a good life reader. My work will speak for itself. All letters answered promptly. Address me at No. 68 Ransom street, Grand Rapids, Mich."

The Toledo, Ohio, News says: "Last night Mr. A. J. Smith, a well-known real estate man, who has quarters at Room 220 Gardner building, consummated a deal, whereby the Independent Association of Spiritualists will come into possession of a lot 42x100 feet in dimensions, fronting on Tenth street, and immediately to the north of the new Y. M. C. A. building just being erected. The price paid for the property to Mrs. Harriet C. Parker, the owner, was $80 per front foot or a total sum of $3,360. It was stated last night by Mr. Smith that it was the intention of the association to erect a temple on the property in the near future, the building to cost not less than $10,000 or $15,000."

Dr. Geo. W. Carey lectures at Indianapolis, Ind., during the month of January. He proposes to commence the publication of a monthly there, entitled, Bio-Chemistry, January 1.

Jerry Robinson writes from Albin, Miss.: "I hope to have Geo. P. Colby here in a few days, and will keep him a month is possible. I am alone in the work and doing all I can to bring the knowledge of life beyond the grave to our people."

An interesting experiment under the auspices of the Astronomical Society of France, took place October 22, at Paris, when ocular proof of the revolution of the earth was given by means of a pendulum, consisting of a ball weighing 60 pounds attached to a wire 70 yards in length to the interior of the dome of the Pantheon. M. Chaumie, minister of public instruction, who presided, burned a string that tied the weight to a pillar, and the immense pendulum began its journey. Sand had been placed on the floor, and each time the pendulum passed over it a new track was marked in regular deviation though the plane of the pendulum's swing remained unchanged. The experiment was completely successful.

United States Senator Burton arrived at Topeka, Kansas, Oct. 16, preparatory to entering the state campaign. He has lately returned from Hawaii, where he went as one of a Senatorial investigating committee. "The Hawaiians are fine people," he said, "but they are in hard lines just at present. Their condition is the result of the work of Boston missionaries. A number of missionaries have been over there recently and have given many of the natives certificates guaranteed to admit them to heaven in exchange for their lands. A number of the more ignorant natives have been swindled in this way. Those who have learned their mistake are naturally a trifle suspicious of all Americans." In connection with the above Ajax writes: "There is no pleasing of these ignorant Hawaiians. What better price could they get for their lands and earthly possessions than a pass to Paradise, from a Boston missionary? It is evident that Senator Burton is a free-thinking infidel and is endeavoring to cast reflections upon evangelistic work. Many of these Hawaiians cannot appreciate the vast difference between a few acres of miserable earth and the supernal glories of the new Jerusalem guaranteed to them in exchange. We need greater missionary zeal in tropical countries and millions more money for the great work. We need also a period of fasting and prayer in behalf of Boston missionaries, and I advocate the setting apart of a special time for the holy work—say from 10 p. m. until 6 a. m. during the turkey season. Let us pray."

Mr. J. Howard Jacobs, one of the leading criminal lawyers of eastern Pennsylvania, died at Reading a short time ago and was buried wearing a red necktie. His relatives, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, explained this by saying that it was Mr. Jacob's wish to have on a red necktie when he went to meet his Maker. About a dozen years ago, while acting as counsel in a murder case, the gentleman wore a red necktie. In spite of the fact that evidence and the judge were against him, Mr. Jacobs won. He attributed this to his red necktie, and after that whenever he had an important case in court he wore a red necktie. To the credit of the red necktie be it said that it brought victory to the wearer every time. It is little wonder, therefore, that Mr. Jacobs wished to have his mascot with him when he appeared before Saint Peter. Let us hope that it served the purpose for which it was intended. Unfortunately, however, we can never know whether his red necktie won his last case or not. If it did and he could send back word in some way a great deal that has been said concerning the red necktie would be willingly and even gladly withdrawn. —Star of the Magi.

Mrs. O. S. Crane writes: "In union there is strength. United we stand, divided we fall. If a person is a fraud, give him rope and he will hang himself. I do contend, that if we have that perfect love to all which bids us do to others as we would they should do to us, we will not spend our valuable time fraud-hunting."

The Duluth News Tribune, Minn., has the following: "The request of I. Gretum, attorney for private parties, that the ordinance imposing a license on fortune-tellers and clairvoyants be amended so as not to apply to Spiritualists, on the ground that they form a religious sect, was turned down by the ordinance committee, which reported that the ordinance is not open to amendment. Under the present construction it applies only where readings are given for hire, and in this practice Spiritualists are held to be in the same class as the others." The State Association of Minnesota should take this matter in hand at once, and have this odious ordinance so modified that it will not affect mediums.

The Herald, of Baltimore, Md., says: "The police of Cambridge and Somerville engaged in an attempt to solve the mystery of the murder of Agnes McPhee on Chester street, Somerville, a week ago last Friday night, have been furnished with a description by Miss Amelia McCauley, a friend of the murdered girl, of a man whom she believes to be the "slugger," and whom she says she saw in a dream, in company with Miss McPhee, at just about the time when the brutal murder was committed. While the police are inclined to make light of the matter, and profess to place small confidence in the fact that the dream will lead to any tangible result, it is a fact that they have been looking for a man to fit the description furnished by Miss McCauley, and Inspector McBride of the Cambridge police, and Lieut. Carter of the Somerville force, went to the home of Mr. Stephen McNeil, the uncle of the dead girl, at 376 Maverick stree, East Boston, on Thursday afternoon, to talk with Miss McCauley, and obtain from her personally every detail she might furnish."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

T. J. Haynes writes: "Regarding the exposing of fraudulent mediums, I believe that Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader comes nearer voicing my opinion than anyone else that I read. The question cannot be settled by public discussion. In all of my experience with the workers in our ranks, and it has been varied, I do not know of but very few that have not been slandered. I will except one only and I have no doubt that I could find some one who would be willing to say a word to her discredit if I were to look around much. Yet I have been fortunate enough to entertain at different times many of the workers who have labored in this field and have found them to be true and noble. I am not much of a phenomena hunter. In any investigation I always must be able to see the first cause. With Mrs. M. E. C. I say, let the public take care of themselves. They must learn and if persons are so credulous that they will be imposed upon, let them learn better by experience. In the famous trial of Walter E. Reed, Judge Severance told him that he was protecting the credulous when he confined him in the state house of correction at Detroit."

Virginie Barrett writes: "Last Sunday found me in Muncie, Ind. I passed the day with Mr. and Mrs. Zohlsom, a member of the city board. We held a meeting in the afternoon in their hall, the first held this season since last May. I met a number of friends of this society. A business meeting was held, and I believe that future work will continue. There is no reason why this society should not become a power for good if those interested will only harmonize. I will here say that I will speak and hold class work for societies (but will not do test work) at reasonable terms; officiate at funerals, and speak upon reform subjects. Terms easy. Address me at 1915 Broadway, Indianapolis, Ind."

Dr. F. S. Scott speaks as follows of Theosophy as a religion: "In the second place, theosophy makes most copious provision for the satisfaction of the religious principle. If it did not do this, it would have no claim to the title of religion at all. It might be a philosophy, an ethical system, a scientific doctrine—anything you please—but it would not be a religion. And yet this does not mean that it proclaims an authoritative body or dogma, or that it proclaims a form or method of worship. It does neither. It does, indeed, present a symphony of facts which, with scrupulous care, its most advanced representatives have for unnumbered ages gathered from the universe and verified, and it advises that these, because of the enormous presumption in their favor, shall receive candid examination from every man who wants certainty rather than guess work; but it never tells any one to disbelieve if he dares, and it has no threats or blandishments in store for thinkers. It welcomes freest investigation."

Georgia Gladys Cooley writes: "I will begin my next engagement at Indianapolis, Ind., the first Sunday in November, and societies nearby can secure my services for week-night meetings during the month."

The Tribune, of Terre Haute, Ind., says: "Miss Lizzie Harlow, of Massachusetts, is to give lectures in this city at an early day upon the general subject of Spiritualism. Miss Harlow is widely-known as a speaker of decided ability and persuasive eloquence. She has given many years to the study of her subject and whatever one's opinion may happen to be, certain it is that the lecture of Miss Harlow must be pronounced an intellectual treat. Not only has Miss Harlow made a study of Spiritualism, but she has also been and is an earnest and powerful advocate of the interests of the working class. In New England, Miss Harlow and Eugene V. Debs, of this city worked together, along the same general lines, and Mr. Debs speaks in the highest terms of Miss Harlow. Mr. Eugene V. Debs will be present to introduce the speaker."

The Washington Post says: "Race Perfection Through Reincarnation was the subject of a lecture given by the Rev. Columbus Bradford, pastor of the Walnut Park Methodist Church, St. Louis, Mo., in Metzerott's Hall before a representative audience. The Rev. Mr. Bradford is the author of a book advocating the doctrine of the reincarnation and in a measure reconciling the Christian belief with the theosophic idea of successive births and lives, leading to ultimate perfection or annihilation, according to the moral character of the life led. Because of his doctrines advocated in the book, Rev. Bradford was deposed from a church in Illinois." The reverend gentleman said: "Besides many incidental evidences in the New Testament which go to prove that reincarnation was generally believed in the time of Christ—as in the question of the people about the man born blind and of Jesus as to who the people said he was—there were several occasions on which Jesus specifically taught the doctrine. In the conversation with Nicodemus both the physical and spiritual rebirth is taught. In the parable of the unjust steward such a use of money is enjoined as will 'make to yourselves friends* * * that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations,' which can only mean that the route to individual immortality is through the living race by means of another birth after death. More specifically yet does this doctrine appear in the reply Jesus made to his disciples when the question came up as to what they were to receive for all they had lost in following him. He said they should have it all back, in kind, and more in quantity in the regeneration. This can apply only to a future life on this earth."

Dr. W. M. Forster writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "I scarcely ever open The Progressive Thinker without thinking how extremely appropriate the title is. I look for its arrival weekly, as I would look for the visit of a dear friend. I have met with a generous reception since my return to San Francisco, and am pleased to say that I am in grand health, with plenty of work, and good wishes in my soul for everybody and everything."

Mrs. W. A. Miller, of Springdale, Ark., writes from Spring Hill, Kans.: "Two years ago after reading Rending the Vail, I came to this place and attended the seances for seven weeks, when the spirits were giving matter for the book, Beyond the Vail. I found that nothing I had read in Rending the Vail had been exaggerated, and I became deeply interested in the work, so much so, that I have returned to attend the seances now being given. I find the work even better than in the past, and only those attending can form any opinion of the wonderful work being done here by materialized spirits, through the mediumship of the well known medium, W. W. Aber. The work, consisting of typewriting, portraits, etc., has been described in your columns before, so I need not go into details. Those intending to visit these seances should not delay, for they are drawing to a close, and one should, if possible, attend several, for only in that way can they comprehend the full import of the work."

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

Critic writes: "One of your correspondents in a late issue, speaking of fraudulent mediums, intimates—'Let the public take care of themselves!' Yes, let fraud, counterfeiting, trickery, passing of bogus money, adulteration of food, etc., etc., alone!—let the public take care of themselves. What kind of a world would this be to let wrong-doing alone and remove all restraining influence, and let counterfeiting of our money, counterfeiting of spirit phenomena, counterfeiting of our food, etc., go on without molestation. Such a course would be absurd, a violation of common sense, and would lead to anarchy and confusion. If anything is wrong, under whatever cloak it is hidden, expose it."

Mrs. B. Rhodes writes from Elmira, N. Y.: "It has been some time since any report as to the progress being made by the First Spiritualist Unity Society of this city, has appeared in the columns of The Progressive Thinker. There is an increasing attendance each Sunday and now as the entertainments held at our parks and Sunday excursions are at an end, we are convinced that the people have a preference to the teachings promulgated from our rostrum through the inspired lips of our speaker and test medium, Mrs. Mary C. Von Kanzler."

In a home on Hill street, Morristown, N. J., Edith Gertrude Decker, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Decker, is dead. Connected with her death is a remarkable story of a spiritual vision. Miss Decker was only 16 years old, tall, pretty and accomplished. She had a keen mind, better developed than usual in girls of her age, and her temperament was sympathetic. She had been ill for some time, but was not expected to die. On the night of October 17, Miss Decker appeared to be in good spirits and seemed better than usual. Her mother retired, but was soon called to see her daughter die. The dying girl told a strange story. A short time after her mother had left her, she said, as she lay awake she felt a strange thrill and felt that some one was near. She heard no sound, but the presence to her was real. In a few moments she saw the form of her sister Helen, who died a year ago. She attempted to cry out, but could not. Her sister's face was sad, her head was bent and she walked slowly. Then she disappeared in her mother's room. The sick girl lay in a stupor and listened. She heard the dead speak. "Edith, come to me," the voice said. Then the vision reappeared and with a loving look vanished. The spell that held Miss Decker lasted a moment longer. Then she called her nurse, who informed Mrs. Decker, and together they listened to the wonderful story. The reaction from the strain made Miss Decker unconscious and her condition became worse. She revived and said, "I am sure I am to follow Helen. I am willing to go," then fell into a sleep and never awakened. Mr. Decker is a New York tea and coffee merchant. He came to Morristown recently for his daughter's health. When a New York Sun reporter called at the Decker residence, October 18, Mr. Decker refused to talk concerning his daughter's vision. There is no crepe on the door and the house is brilliantly illuminated.

C. H. Figuers writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "I opened meetings in the East End Spiritual Hall, 1231½ Euclid avenue the first Sunday in September, and the attendance has been good. The children's lyceum was re-organized the first Sunday in October with the following officers: Mrs. R. R. Wills, conductor; Mrs. Florence Barber, guardian; Mr. Ed Bevee, musical director; Miss Elizabeth Chadwick, treasurer and secretary. We are arranging to have a benefit entertainment for the Lyceum, Nov. 4. The proceeds will be used to purchase some additional flags, Lyceum Guides, etc. We, as a lyceum, are very poor, but we will get along all the same. Last Sunday evening the pastor, C. H. Figuers, assisted by Mrs. I. W. Pope, christened seven children. The ceremony, floral, was simple, yet beautiful, and the large audience, which taxed the capacity of the hall to its utmost, was deeply interested. Mr. Butts rendered some beautiful songs which left an influence strong, sweet and powerful. Mr. Pope delivered an address which fell upon appreciative ears. C. H. Figuers followed with tests."

George A. Kiehl writes from Lancaster, Pa.: "The First Spiritualist Society here, organized last January by Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, has begun its fall work by getting a charter from our court in addition to the one it holds from the N. S. A. The society has rented a nicely furnished hall in the center of the city, and above all, was enabled through the kindness of the First Church of Spiritualism of Williamsport, Pa., to have Mrs. R. W. Barton, of Rochester, N. Y., here for the month of October, to dedicate the new hall to the cause of light and truth, by giving lectures and tests. Mrs. Barton speaks under control. The subject of each lecture is taken from the audience. All listen spellbound to the words of truth. Her tests are convincing. Our hall is crowded. We wish we could keep her longer, because her earnest, truthful words, gentle, ladylike manner and convincing platform work would win many a heart over to the truth of Spiritualism."

Geo. W. Langdon writes from Springfield, Mo.: "The warm weather is over, and the South Side Spiritual Society of Springfield is again nicely quartered for the coming season's work in the G. A. R. Hall, on St. Louis avenue. Through the courtesy of our resident speakers, Mr. J. Madison Allen and his wife, Mrs. M. Theresa Allen, the society has not been deprived of lectures during the heated term, for they have thrown open their parlors for that purpose during the whole time. Weekly circles for members are also held there regularly. Having lived here for several years, those who are pronounced skeptics are free to say that if there is any such thing as inspirational speaking, that either of these people are truly giving just what they receive and nothing more. Springfield may well be proud of having two mediums who are unselfishly and devotedly working to the end of educating the thinking people of the great blessings that are just beginning to be realized after all these centuries of superstition and mental slavery. Spiritualism needs more mediums that can gain the confidence of a prejudiced people; mediums that are truthful enough to stand any test, and less giving of mere phenomena to satisfy the curiosity, much of which can be duplicated by magicians. The cause must be promulgated by those who have a standing among truth-seekers if it is to gain as it deserves to."

L. Dustin writes from Rochester, N. Y.: "The Spiritualists of Rochester have again been highly favored by a visit from our former instructors, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates, who were on their way from their missionary work in the west to attend the N. S. A. convention. We congratulate the N. S. A. on their choice of such able workers. They were with us from the 5th to the 12th inclusive, and gave six exceedingly instructive lectures to large and appreciative audiences, each of which was followed by spirit messages through Mrs. Kates, which for force and accuracy we have never seen excelled."

E. D. Williams, of Utica, N. Y., writes: "On the evenings of October 15, 16 and 17, we had with us those noble and earnest workers, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates. They held meetings in K. O. T. M. hall, to large audiences; many people turned away each night. Bro. Kates' lectures were very attentively listened to, while Sister Kates, though suffering from a very severe cold, gave several splendid tests, all of which were recognized and appreciated. Brother and Sister Kates have established a reputation in this city which will insure them crowded houses whenever they come here."

Byron Barber writes from Mineral Wells, Texas: "I am almost alone here, but the work is going on in a limited way, and some good people are begging me to get a fine medium here so they can see the phenomena; the philosophy pleases them. If some good medium would make a visit to this wonderful health resort and remain long enough to demonstrate the beautiful truths, it would bear abundant fruit. I am in a quiet way practicing the gift of healing, and of course that is doing some good in a general way, but the people demand more, and we are not able to pay for the work. Let me say with reference to the Open Court, I think every good medium should be protected to the full extent of our ability, and the fakir will soon fall on account of his own crookedness. Let us all work to the common end of proving to the world the truth of spirit return, and let every one believe his little side issue as he pleases. We do not care whether the moon is made of green cheese or not. Let all who know the truth of immortality and know the sacred truth of spirit return stay together and never quarrel with one another over minor issues. When the world knows these two truths, priestcraft and political rottenness will cease. I shall forever love the people who brought me to this knowledge."

A. C. Fisher writes from New Haven, Ct.: "As there seems to be many who do not believe in an Infinite Intelligence, I would suggest that if the National convention decides not to strike out this Infinite Intelligence, that it (the convention) offer a few proofs to support that belief, the same to be printed in all the Spiritualist papers of the country. We want to show the world that we are intelligent, and that we are students of nature, and not of a single book; that jails and the electric chair will never cure criminals. We declare that our judges should study the law of cause and effect; that bad effects will never be removed until the causes are discovered and removed. Jails should be transformed into educational institutions where all may study and listen to lectures upon different subjects. Spiritualism is just commencing to emancipate the world from the trinity of superstition, ignorance and crime. Brother Sprague and his wife made us a two days' visit, and organized and chartered a society of twenty-one members. His lectures were very interesting and brought conviction to the minds of all his hearers. Among other things he said: 'Everything in the universe is seeking for light except a bigot.' Our new society is a promising one, and the prospects for increasing membership are very good."

Ann Johnson writes from Allegheny, Pa.: "The Rev. Nellie S. Baade, of Detroit, Mich., is giving her second series of lectures here on the Higher Spiritualism. Her audiences are composed of the educated classes and the hall is packed to its utmost capacity. She teaches a practical Spiritualism. She also teaches us that we are now spirits and while living here should cultivate the latent forces within. Her public tests are of the best, as many testify at each meeting. Last Sunday evening her guides reached many souls in her audience and many were heard to say, 'It is wonderful. How can a woman lecture as she does—not a break anywhere.' Her private readings are of the very best, as her patrons can testify."

E. R. Kidd writes: "In reply to the much-discussed question of fraud and trickery of dishonest mediums, trumpet, materializing or otherwise, I am decidedly in favor of exposure of all such when it has been proven by the evidence of reliable people, competent to judge the genuine from the spurious, that fraud upon the part of the medium has been resorted to. I have attended a number of seances held by a certain well-known materializing medium and witnessed genuine materializations. I have also seen the medium leave the cabinet under control and come out to some one in the room and to whom the spirit in control delivered a loving message to his or her friend of earth. I have also received loving and consoling messages in the way from my spirit friends. Now this manifestation by some was called fraudulent and the medium threatened with an exposure. Why? Simply because they were not familiar with spirit phenomena and especially so with this particular manifestation, or more properly speaking, impersonation. It is a well known fact, and I believe, Mr. Editor, you will bear me out in the assertion, that lying spirits yet in the flesh as well as out of it have been known to invade the seance room, a room sacred to the Spiritualist, and through their admission to the seance communications were received that were not true, like attracting like. At materializing seances materializations have been witnessed that were not genuine productions of denizens of the spirit world, therefore it behooves all truth-loving Spiritualists to keep an eye open for the trickster and when caught in the act expose him, but at the same time use judgment and caution. That little word 'caution' has kept me out of many a trouble. Do as David Crocket said, 'Be sure you're right, then go ahead.'"

Max Hoffmann is now at Lincoln, Neb. He says the hall is filled at each meeting, among them many investigators.

Mrs. N. Ewan writes from Denver, Colo.: "The Spiritualists of this city held a most interesting conference meeting, October 19, at Hours Hall. The opening address was by Mrs. Walters, followed by other prominent speakers, among them John Slater, of California. The music was composed of solos and quartettes, and added much to the occasion. The meeting was one of the most enjoyable the writer has ever had the pleasure of attending. The proceeds of these meetings is to buy books for a lyceum which is to open as soon as the required amount is received."

A. W. Keller writes: "The Ladies' Aid of the Englewood Spiritual Union will give a bazaar and entertainment on Thursday, October 30, both afternoon and evening. Supper will be served between the hours of 6 and 8 p. m. Admission 25 cents. The ladies are working very hard to secure funds for a meeting-house of the Englewood Spiritual Union. They have arranged an elaborate programme, and a good social time is expected."

There will be a special session, and free entertainment by the Band of Harmony, the fifth Thursday of this month, October 30, in the afternoon, the ladies bringing refreshments, as usual. Coffee and tea served for 10 cents at six o'clock. Euchre party in the evening. Six prizes will be given. Score cards, twenty-five cents, which includes admission.

R. N. Keer writes that Mrs. Bledsoe and Mrs. Wagner, of Topeka, Kansas, did some good work at Glenlock and Garnett, Kansas—Trumpet work and lectures.

Mrs. Alice Gehring's circle nights, by appointment, are Monday and Thursday. She wishes to hear from some good trumpet medium, thoroughly honest, to assist her in her work. Address her at 645 W. 63rd street, Englewood Station, Chicago, Ill.

John B. Chrisney sends the following from Chrisney, Ind.: "Rev. A. Scott Bledsoe, president of the Spiritualists Association of Kansas, gave lectures at Mozart Hall, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights of this week to large and appreciative audiences. His soul readings were very interesting and showed the reverend gentleman to be a man of strong intellect and powerful thought."

Mr. Henry Clark Moore will entertain the Band of Harmony with readings from Shakspeare and other choice selections, Thursday afternoon, October 30, at 3 o'clock. Supper at 6:30; progressive euchre at 8 p. m.

The Women's Benevolent Aid Society of the First Spiritual Association of St. Louis, Mo., will hold a Bazaar, December 3, 4, 5 and 6, 1902. They send forth the following greeting:

"The Women's Benevolent Aid Society are Going to hold high carnival in a Fancy Work Bazaar—
'Tis not an original idea, yet we wish to surprise
Our patrons with something new in aprons and ties,
Kerchiefs, cushions, pillows, a shawl or head rest,
Whichever or whatever can be fashioned the best;
And for which we solicit your fraternal aid
Of an article of use for bachelor or maid,
Tho' of those for family use there is no bar,
Unless we except that famous family jar.
Be assured whatever you kindly contribute
We will gratefully receive and proudly exhibit,
And then, if all the truth must be told,
Gaily tagged, shall be gladly and generously sold."

Wm. F. Nye, of New Bedford, Mass., a prominent Spiritualist, has been stopping for a few days in Chicago.

Moses Hull returned from the National Convention safe and sound, after his arduous labors there.

Mrs. Clara L. Stewart was a delegate to the National Convention. She is the efficient president of the State Association of Wisconsin.

Mrs. J. D. Palmer writes: "As winter approaches many people are getting ready to go south where they will escape the snow and sleet of the frozen North. I hear of a good many who are going to the Southern Cassadaga Camp. The coal famine will not affect them there. Wood is $1.50 to $2 per cord. There are some cottages now being built, one by Dr. and Mrs. Hilligoss. Mrs. J. D. Bartholomew informs me she will go to Lake Helen the first of December; will build a cottage. There are several who leased lots last year that expect to build. There will soon be a deep well drilled which will supply the camp with water at a small cost. I expect to go south soon after the 20th of November. All letters should be sent to Lake Helen, Florida, after that date."

Mrs. L. M. Deibler writes: "I have enjoyed reading the different opinions of the intelligent men and women who contributed articles for the Symposium, but I liked the article of Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader best of all. I think the missionaries have been doing a grand work, and I love to read of their self-sacrificing efforts, but I think there could be found in almost every community those who with a little encouragement and a little more understanding could do good work as home missionaries. It is essential to the welfare of every society that the organizer or promoter should understand the business principles involved; then if the business is carried on rightly the society will have a firm foundation."

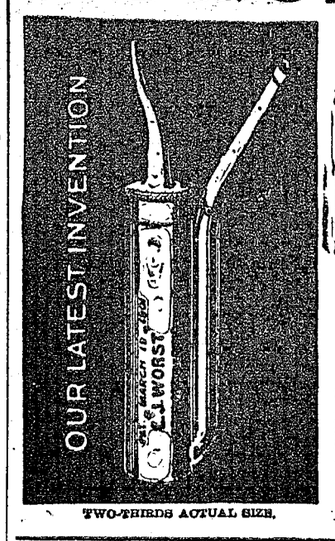
Mrs. Lillian Baeltschy writes: "A number of earnest co-workers and truth-seekers have banded together and formed a society, which they have named 'The Woman's Progressive Spiritual Society.' Officers elected: Mrs. Ella J. Bloom, president; Mrs. W. Hilbert, vice-president; Mrs. Lillian Baeltschy, secretary; Mrs. B. Bloom, treasurer. Their aim and object is to give the beauty of Spiritualism to the public and by their earnest and truthful work, they hope in time to construct a Spiritual Temple. All earnest and truthful mediums are invited to join us and assist in this noble work. The public is invited to attend the meetings, where communications will be given. The mediums who join us will be uplifted and blessed for putting their shoulders to the wheel, and the public will receive Spiritual food, the Truth. Our motto is Truth. Everyone who desires to own a brick in our Temple is invited to join us. We want your presence; we need your help; we want to help you. The next meeting will be held at Mrs. E. Biederman's, 650 School street, November 5, at 1:30 p. m."

Mrs. J. S. Dixon writes from Spring Hill, Kansas: "I have become greatly interested in the intellectual seances now in progress at this place. Any description that I can give of these wonderful manifestations would be inadequate to fully portray the work now being given. It is very instructive as well as interesting and undoubtedly proves the continuity of life and spirit return."

Items From Texas—Laura B. Payne's Work.

To the Editor:—It has been some time since I have published anything concerning my missionary work in Texas, so will send you a line. During most of the month of September I was at Houston and Galveston. On my way form the northern portion of the state to the convention at Galveson I stopped for two nights at Houston. Here I was greeted by large and enthusiastic audiences. At Galveston I found quite a strong society of earnest, good people, moving on under the leadership of that tireless young worker, John W. Ring. You have had a report of the convention so I need not dwell upon it here.

From Galveston I returned to Houston by way of League City, where I stopped and held some meetings with good success. I worked a month then for the Houston society. During all the time the crowds were large and of the intelligent class. Rev. M. D. Tenney, of League City, is now lecturing for that society and it promises rapid growth. Mr. Tenney is a late convert to Spiritualism from orthodoxy, having preached forty years for the Methodist faith.



From Houston I returned to Galveston to take charge of the society there during Mr. Ring's absence of two weeks. There also the attendance was fine and I left feeling great hope for the Higher Spiritualism.

Last night, October 21, I spoke at this place (Rosenberg) a small town containing but few Spiritualists. A society was once organized here, but is dead now to all appearances. However there was a good attendance at the lecture and the closest attention was given.

The people, wherever I go, I must say, are very kind and courteous toward me, and open to conviction concerning the truth. Not only are my lectures well attended, but every kind consideration is shown. My pathway is literally strewn with roses of good will by the hand of the skeptic as well as the Spiritualist.

From here I go to Flatonia, where I speak to-night and to-morrow night. Then to San Antonio, where I shall perhaps remain a month. Mail addressed to me there, General Delivery, will reach me. LAURA B. PAYNE.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
--OR--
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the Formation of Circles and Cultivation of Mediumship

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old sea captains whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. Veritas: Q. Is the position that all is force or spirit, and that matter has no existence, tenable? I ask this question because some distinguished scientists maintain that there is only force or energy in the universe, and some Spiritualists that all is spirit.

A. The position taken by the materialists that all is matter and its potentialities, has led to a reaction and the counter assumption that force or spirit is all. This has a theological bearing, for God is a spirit—an infinite spirit—and created matter and all its forms. By simply changing the word God to "energy" or spirit, the new assumption has form and being.

Yet this so-called spiritual philosophy that force is all, and spirit the creator, is speculative, and of that kind which does not admit of demonstration and of which writers and speakers may go on for a lifetime writing and talking of without definite and understandable conclusions, only bequeathing a bank of fog to bewilder those who follow.

Granting that matter is a form of force only, what is gained by ruling it out of existence. Man has coined words to stand for certain appearances and things. Of metals he calls one gold, another iron; of plants, one an oak, another a pine. These are tangible expressions to the senses. All together, the material of which they are composed is called matter. We understand that the various forms this matter takes on, is the result of force, and it is assumed that this force or spirit is a part of and inseparable from matter.

Force or spirit never is recognized by the senses except it is expressed through and by matter. This will at once be admitted, when it is considered that the senses are the means by which matter is recognized and the mind made conscious of its aspects.

All language and ideas are fashioned around this conception, and it is impossible to think coherently if all be referred to force.

As illustration take man. You may say he is a physical being, or that he is a spiritual. Neither statement would be correct. He is both, and the physical being is the means by which the spiritual finds expression. A combination of both is essential, for with the body alone we have only a lifeless clod, and the spirit is beyond recognition by the physical senses.

Whatever speculation may be indulged in, when we come down to common sense we have to begin by calling the things which tangibly appeal to our sight, smell, hearing and touch, matter, and the impelling agency to activity, force or spirit. They may be inseparable, but we cannot think clearly or describe phenomena without preserving this distinction. I sit down in my chair by my table with pen and ink and paper to write this answer. One comes to me and says your thoughts are products of the "potentialities" of matter; another that the chair I sit on, the table supporting my paper, the ink, even my physical body have no existence, are only illusory, for the spirit is all. To the first I reply, the existence of the table, the paper and ink are quite realities; were it not for the chair I should be sitting on the carpet. The material of these we call matter, and if we do not, how are we to speak of it?

To the other I say, I know that the ideas written do not come from these material forms, but from that higher realm of individualized spirits. That force can create is not only entirely speculative, it is illogical. There is evolution by force, never creation. If it be said that there can be no matter without force, equally true to say there can be no force without matter.

As illustrative, light, heat, electricity are vibrations in attenuated matter (ether) without matter there could be no vibrations; hence none of these forces.

All that we know of force—spirit—(let this term be distinguished from individualized spirits) is by means of matter by which it is expressed. Matter as a wall stands between us and the energy which impels it to activity in the phenomena of the universe.

A. L. Farnham: Q. What is the origin of the saying "Oil on the troubled waters?"

A. This question has been so often asked that it has called forth more than the usual research given such questions. The origin is quite romantic, as the story is told by Bede in his Eccl. History, written in 735. King Oswin sent a young priest to bring a maiden for his wife. St. Aiden gave the priest a cruse of oil, to pour on the water if the voyagers encountered storms. On the return storms came, and the priest pouring out the oil, calmed the sea.

From this story it would appear that the fact that an angry sea may be calmed by the thinnest film of oil, which has in recent years been revived as a new discovery, was well known in most remote times.

The pertinency of the phrase in its application, to the influence of kindness over angry contention has made it one of the most frequently used.

W. H. Burr, Washington: Q. Cannot the failure of the gypsy prophecy that Prince Albert would be king, but would not wear the royal diadem, be rationally explained in this way: The seeress foresaw the preparations for the crowning and their abandonment, but not the sequel. It is said that she also prophesied that his son Clarence would never become king. Clarence soon died, and the second son of King Edward becomes heir apparent.

A. This is a plausible explanation. There are limitations to the clairvoyant's perceptions, and often of most unexpected and perplexing character. But there is no urgency for an explanation until the genuineness of the prophecy is proven. Who was this gypsy? Who are witnesses of the time and place when she gave this doleful insight into the future?

I confess to a strong belief that the whole matter is manufactured for the occasion. There may have been a gypsy prophet and she may have told the young princes the future as the story goes, but this would be contrary to the practice of these people, who earn their money by pleasing their customers. The gypsy has disappeared, and King Edward remains the only witness who can decide the dispute.

"Mizpah": Q. Where can I find in the Old Testament an account of a letter written by a spirit who had been long in spirit life?

A. The story of this "letter" may be found in II. Chronicles xxi:12 "And there came a writing to him (Jehoram) from Elijah the prophet saying. Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, etc." Then follows a statement of his sins and punishment. A correspondent in the second volume of American Spiritual Magazine, edited and published by Rev. Samuel Watson, for 1876, discusses the chronology of this passage, and Mr. Watson gave it place in his volume on the Religion of Spiritualism. An early commentator saw that the criticism could be made that this writing was given after the death of the prophet, and inserted in the margin "which was writ before his death." The marginal chronology affirms this, for it is carefully inserted, the date of the writing being 889 B. C., and of Elijah's translation 896 B. C.

If the narrative be consecutive, and there is no reason why it should not be so understood, Elijah was translated at the time or nearly of Ahaziah's death, which was at the beginning of Jehoram's reign, (see II. Kings i:18 and ii:i, 1). The death of Ahaziah was in the eighteenth year of Jehoshophat's reign, and this king ruled twenty-five years, seven years afterwards; hence seven years after Elijah's death. His son Jehoram reigned four years, and the writing came to him in the last of his reign. Hence ten or eleven years had elapsed since the translation of the prophet, and he could have sent it only from the spirit world. Who was the medium, how it was written, or by what messenger delivered, of these details the account is silent, and the fact is made more striking by its simplicity. The story intends to convey the wonderful fact that eleven years after his ascension in a fiery chariot, Elijah sent a written message to the wicked king.

The Rev. Samuel Watson was a Christian Spiritualist, and made the closest study of the Bible to support his belief. He was a distinguished Methodist, and becoming convinced of the truth of Spiritualism he gave up his position and all the honors he had labored all his life to gain, for the new faith. By his lectures and writings he sought to graft Spiritualism onto the old religion, expecting a vigorous growth. That he failed was no fault of his.

In this instance a startlingly clear case of spirit communion in exceedingly remote ages is presented, and for a believer in the Bible's authority, it furnishes strong argumentative support of Modern Spiritualism. No one knew better how to use the weapons thus placed in his hands than Samuel Watson. Yet he did not succeed in moving his church the shortest step from its old belief. The new wine could not be placed in the old church bottles.

MEDIUMSHIP.

Trance Not Involved in All Phases.

To the Editor:—Please allow me space for a kindly criticism. I read with interest the various articles appearing in your valuable paper and have enjoyed very much the articles by Bro Loveland; but are not our brightest and ablest writers liable to become a little biased on some subjects and make mistakes? In No. 665, Bro. Loveland gives an article on "Mediumship," in which he makes the statement that "the trance is sleep, and some degree of trance is involved in all phases of mediumship."

It seems to me that that is not a correct statement.

Only lately I attended one of Mr. Earle's public slate-writing seances in which the messages given on slates hung to the chandeliers were varied and remarkable, and yet Mr. Earle was one of the widest awake men in the audience, conversing and giving tests while the slate messages were being written by spirit friends.

In my own room, with an audience of about a dozen, the medium, a Mrs. Annie Johnston, has held the slate (my own and cleaned by myself) out in front of her and under the glare of a large lamp, and with no pencil near, while every one present heard distinctly the writing, and those touching the slate felt the vibrations, and on turning it over there would be a message signed by one that some person in the room knew, and yet the medium was wide awake, and all the while conversing with those present.

Clairvoyance and clairaudience have been manifested in my presence in all kinds of places, in homes and on the public street, and the medium in a perfectly normal condition.

Automatic writing and physical manifestations have been witnessed by me and the medium while carrying on an animated conversation.

I have even seen in my own room and my own cabinet and before an audience of 20, while the medium was sitting outside in full view of all and conversing with those present, and without the least condition of trance yet present, full form materializations and some outside the cabinet. Afterwards when the medium was in the cabinet and in trance the manifestations were much stronger and brighter.

So it seems to me we cannot lay down a cast-iron rule and say all must come this way or that way. I find that new variations in mediumship are being developed constantly, and we should hold ourselves open to the truth from the angels at all times, yet at all times use our own reason. I find one of the hardest fights I have with myself is in keeping liberal in thought and investigation and keeping out of ruts.

The universe is limitless and the laws of manifestation are varied and beyond our ken, so let us hold ourselves open to truth, and from the vast ocean of the universe it will come flooding to us as we become capable of receiving it.

SPIRIT PHOTOGRAPHY.

A New Phase Described by Prof. Petersilea.

To the Editor:—I have been very much surprised of late at something that appears to me quite remarkable; which I think must be a kind of spiritual photography. To-day, my wife pinned a sheet of common letter paper against the window-pane where the bright sunlight would strike directly through it. There was nothing upon the paper, the sheet being taken from an unbroken ream. After pinning the sheet of paper to the window-sash, she ran the tips of her fingers over it a few times; when, presently, there appeared upon the paper twenty-three faces, excellent likenesses of men, women and children, youths and maidens.

These appear only as transparencies, for when the paper is taken down nothing is visible upon it.

These pictures, as one looks through the paper, are exceedingly beautiful. My wife has about a doezn sheets of paper already covered with these likenesses, for in order to hold, or retain them upon the paper, she is obliged to outline them with an ordinary lead pencil; but any one can see them while the paper is hanging against the window-pane.

Of the twenty-three faces that appeared to-day, four are those of children, three are those of exquisitely beautiful young ladies, two Turks, two Indians, two Greeks, two Romans, six grand, intelligent-looking men of middle age, whose nationality is not apparent. Two are decidedly German; one a fine likeness of Mozart, the other of Beethoven, as he must have looked in his palmiest days on earth.

My wife has been seeing pictures, on various things, for the last ten years, but did not think that spirits had anything to do with it. She attributed it to failing eyesight and imagination, and probably would never have discovered her mistake had not a lady from El Paso paid her a visit. The lady, in question, is a Mrs. Hadlock, somewhat known in spiritual circles, and, if I am not mistaken, is often seen upon the rostrum as a lecturer; a very charming lady, earnest and truthful, as anyone can see at a glance. This lady told my wife that she was partially developed as a picture medium; that the pictures came upon the canvas all right; but, as yet, she had not the power to retain them there after the canvas was taken from the window. As my wife had no canvas, they took common writing paper and the pictures appeared just the same, and all others could see them as well as Mrs. Hadlock and Mrs. Petersilea; it could not be said that they were the freaks of the imagination; it also led to the discovery that this power had been with Mrs. Petersilea for the last ten years, all unknown to herself, now to burst forth like a pent-up stream.

As one looks at these pictures one is led to ask: What are they? What causes them to appear upon the paper? They do not come in colors but like transparent photographs, simply light and shade, but delicately, spiritually beautiful.

As my wife cannot draw or sketch anything, the outlining in pencil is coarse and uncertain, and yet it plainly shows all these different faces and suggests the great beauty that lay just beneath the lines.

I am well aware that there are many mediums who are able to get spirit photographs, and I have seen a number of pictures, on canvas, that were obtained through the mediumship of the Bangs Sisters; one especially, that was taken for Mrs. Harper-Lake. It is an exceedingly beautiful picture of Joan of Arc, in very delicate colors. Mrs. Lake and her husband together visited the Bangs Sisters, in Chicago, to obtain a picture, if possible. They selected a clean canvas, placed it, themselves, in front of a sunlighted window, and both watched the canvas intently as the picture slowly outlined itself upon it. But one of the sisters was present and she simply touched the frame with her fingers. Slowly, surely, and clearly the outlines came; then, the dainty coloring. Mrs. Lake remarked that the form was not quite upright upon the canvas, leaning too much to one side, and as they all gazed the form moved into an upright position. The picture was now perfect and very beautiful, but unfortunately the eyes were closed. "Oh!" said Mrs. Lake, "It is too bad! I should like it so much better if the eyes were open," and to the utter astonishment of both the lady and her husband, the eyes slowly opened as they gazed; and they are the most beautiful eyes I ever saw in any picture; they are like wells of spiritual light; soft, yet resolute, liquid and deep.

When visiting Mr. and Mrs. Lake, at their beautiful home in Santa Monica, as I stood admiring the picture, they told me its history and how it had been obtained. But these transparencies seem to be entirely different and still more beautiful. Can it be possible that we are to have, at last, something that will forever set at rest the great question, "If a man die shall he live again?" Will it demonstrate to all the world at large, so that not one can possibly doubt the life after the so-called death? And I now call on my spiritual guides, those who have so often controlled my hand to write, to answer the questions herein asked, for of myself I cannot understand them, nor how these pictures are made, or if they are spiritual or not. Do they represent spiritual beings in the higher life, or people in the earthly life? and how are they brought and made visible on paper, or through the paper, rather?

CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

Letter From William Denton.

Carlyle Petersilea, My dear friend; for such you have proved yourself to be. You call upon your spirit guides to answer some very important questions—important to you and of very great importance to the world at large. When I say world, I mean the spiritual and material world, for they are so completely blended that they really form but one world. The material cannot, or does not, exist without the spiritual, and the spiritual must make use of the material. We are friends and brothers and must help each other, although I have thrown down my outer covering while you still retain yours. All the better, my friend and brother—better for me that I have you to help me in the material, and better for you that I am able to help you spiritually and thus through you aid and help the world.

You often say that you are very grateful to your spirit friends for what they are able to do for you. We are also grateful to you for what you are able to do for us; so, now, we will shake hands and be friends.

I said, in a former letter, that I hoped to be able to give some scientific facts, through your instrumentality, to the world; and I intended to keep my word if possible; in the meantime I have been trying to perfect, and make use of, a power which I discovered that your better half possessed; and I am well pleased with the result.

Yesterday, I, with the help of my spiritual photographers, was able to throw the likenesses of thirty spiritual beings upon an ordinary sheet of paper; your wife being able to outline them in about three hours' time. Not so bad, that! Why an earthly photographer would call that a pretty good day's work.

I have chosen my subjects from all classes and nationalities, the wise and the unwise, the gifted and the idiot. I wanted to give you as great a variety as possible.

My dear friend, I did not choose a great artist through whom to give these pictures, one highly educated and polished in the business. I might have so chosen if it had pleased me, and I, together with others, had thought it the wisest thing to do; but, we have given them through one who has never been able, in the whole course of her life, to draw the simplest thing.

Now, my dear earthly brothers, don't rise up, one and all, and condemn me for not choosing a highly educated and gifted artist—one who had taken a thousand lessons or more in the art of sketching, drawing, painting, coloring—one who had visited all the great artists of the Old World and the New, to perfect himself, or herself, in the art. Now, don't, I beg; and let me softly whisper in each belligerent ear the reasons why.

First, "Through the mouths of babes and sucklings are the wise confounded." Those who are exceedingly wise and learned never yet brought Truth to light. The great artist knows so much, or thinks he does, that he will not become as a little child, he will not return to first principles. So the New Truth must be born within virgin soil. And thus it ever has been, and thus it will ever be. Moreover, if these pictures had been given to a great artist, the artist is capable of drawing all such pictures himself without calling in the aid of spiritual beings. No one could or would believe that spirits had anything to do with it. Of what use would the great artist be to us toward proving that we still live? Why, the great artist would not even give us a hearing—or a chance to pose for him rather; moreover, "The old shall pass away and lo, all things shall become new."

Why, friends, your old paintings will shortly become obsolete, your old way of taking pictures and photographs will pass by and be forgotten, and the new child will be born of a virgin; that is to say, a new method will shortly be discovered that will completely overshadow the old, and through this new method will be demonstrated the positive proof, beyond shadow of doubt, to all the world at large, that we still live. Those who do know do not need it, but the sick, the halt, and the blind, in other words, those who do not know. But, to return again to my pictures.

All those who ever heard my lectures in earth life, well know that I was accustomed to illustrate them with stereopticon views, that is, pictures thrown upon a large, white canvas or coarse cloth stretched across the rostrum at my back, my eldest son working the stereoscope in the gallery. These lectures pleased me more than any other lectures I ever gave, and my audiences manifested their appreciation and delight by long and loud applause. I knew, at that time, that this was the beginning of a new era in the photographic art, and as I had previously shown in my books, that all material substances held the image cast upon them, you must necessarily see that I was deeply interested in the picture-making business. I had hoped to remain in the flesh long enough to prove to the world what I myself knew to be true; but circumstances shaped my career differently. I was not to do this while in the flesh, but as soon as I had gathered myself together in the spiritual world, my former desire returned full upon me. Now I should be able to discover the whole truth and know positively if I had been right in my conjectures. And, my friends, I now, from this side of life, most solemnly affirm that I was right. I not only found that all material substances held the images cast upon them, but the air, the ether, and as you all know, the water, and most of the gases. O, delight! What a vast reservoir and storehouse nature is, to be sure. I had not previously understood all about the ether, or the ethereal atmosphere, although, with others at that time, I had suspected that there was no such thing as a vacuum, that all space must be filled by that which was real and substantial, within which all other things must live and move and have their being. And to illustrate, as I so like to do, we will take the ocean.

The great ocean lies, apparently, a compact body of water, and who would suspect, that did not know, as they looked upon its placid surface, the countless millions of living objects, as well as inanimate things, that exist within its depths? Islands and continents—and what a sublime step from the largest continent to the grain of sand—from the great leviathan of the deep to the infusoria. But man cannot live within the depths of the sea, because he is not adapted to it, neither can the material man live within the depths of the great, infinite, ethereal sea, because he is not adapted to it; yet, in one sense he does live within; but, when he throwns off the material, then he retains the ethereal and spiritual which is adapted to the great ethereal ocean that fills all space.

Now, I found that the ether was one great photographic gallery, and that all things that passed through it left their images behind them. O, delight! What a storehouse of knowledge! Nothing is lost. Nothing fades. There it is indelibly fixed forever. It cannot lie or deceive any more than your photographs can. It even takes up photographs and registers your thoughts, and each and every act of your lives.

Now this is not vain imagination, but positive, absolute truth. You are all aware that when a picture is thrown upon a stretched canvas or white cloth it looks precisely as though it were there; but you all know that it is not; you all know that the real thing is many feet away, in front and on a line with the canvas. The room or hall must be dark and the picture is then thrown upon the sheet by the aid of chemical light—calcium lights they are called. The picture thus thrown is but a picture itself, taken from a real object or, sometimes, even from another picture, but the first picture must necessarily have been taken from a real object.

It is not my purpose to enter into the details of photography, but just enough to show how spiritual beings take pictures or cause their mediums to take them. Prof. Petersilea refers to the Bangs sisters and the pictures that are taken through their instrumentality. This method has been explained many times by the spirits themselves by independent writing through mediumistic persons, and the explanation, in the main, is correct.

A spirit artist first throws the picture upon the canvas, other artists, who understand how to gather and use the chemical properties within the ether, fix it with their delicate chemicals upon the canvas. And now, to answer the question that is uppermost in your mind: How about these photographs that appear upon an ordinary sheet of writing paper, my wife being able to see them in all their delicate beauty? Not only is she able to see them but to outline them? Are these pictures upon the paper or are they not?

No. They are not. The paper answers, just as the stretched canvas did behind my rostrum, for me to throw the pictures upon it; and that is why, when the paper is taken down, nothing appears visible unless they are outlined, as these pictures are not fixed there by chemical artists. It is not my purpose to fix them there, at least, not at present.

Many have said that the Bangs sisters were frauds; that they have concealed pictures already prepared; that they adroitly slide them between the window and the canvas. Now we intend to give something that cannot be doubted or called fraud, and your wife is one of the chosen mediums to be used for this purpose.

The real artist, which in this particular case is myself, stands a number of feet away from the medium, back of her, about the middle of the room, and on a line with the paper pinned to the window-sash; she sits in front of the window gazing intently at the paper, just as an audience gazes at a canvas in front of them, the artist being away from them in the gallery, and as she gazes I throw picture after picture upon the paper; she wishing to hold the pictures outlines them as she also desires to prove to you and others that she really sees them and does not imagine that she does. I have already thrown one hundred and thirty photographs upon a half-dozen sheets of paper at three sittings. I told you, sometime ago, that I intended to give some scientific demonstrations, and I am glad to have been able to keep my word.

Now you ask me how I am able to throw them upon the paper Have all these spirits been present to have their photographs taken? Not at all. Not at all, my dear professor. I told you a short time ago that even thoughts were registered and photographed within the ether.

Now, I stand there and throw my thought pictures toward the paper; the ether registers them faithfully and as the vibratory action of the thought strikes the paper, it is fixed there for the time being, just as the vibratory action of the chemical lights fix a picture, for a time, upon the canvas before mentioned. It really is in strict accordance with natural laws. Your wife being a great sensitive perceives these pictures with the natural eye, and they really would be visible to most sensitives, especially those who are clairvoyant and highly spiritualized; they might not be visible to everybody; but the thought pictures which I project upon the paper are photographs of real spiritual people, after all, people whom I have met here in this life, for memory is but a photographic gallery. The mind of man retains all that it has ever seen, felt, or heard. Not the mind of man alone. It is just the same with birds and animals. How well all animals remember persons and places that they have seen before. A carrier pigeon returns hundreds of miles to its home; and the higher man climbs up the scale of being and intelligence, the less he despises all living things beneath him; as he ascends they seem to ascend with him. Not that they are any different than before, but he is able to look at them in a different light; he recognizes that in them that he did not perceive when he was filled with egotism and his own importance. Not that I would have him underrate himself or his capabilities; consequently, I would not have him underrate that which is lower in the scale of being than himself.

Thought photography will yet be an assured fact. If Marconi has succeeded in wireless telegraphy, by making use of etheric vibrations, another will arise who will also succeed in finding the method by which thoughts may be pinned and fastened securely as they also ride upon etheric vibrations. How do I know this? For the simple reason that in this spiritual life thoughts are visible everywhere.

Very little language is used here in this world and less language will be used in your own world as time goes on. That is one reason why I have ceased to be a great stickler in the use of language, that it shall always be cut, weighed, measured and dried according to the most approved grammatical rules. While one is weighing, measuring, cutting and drying, the living thought has rushed on and one holds the unmeaning husks on paper, as dry and tasteless as chips.

Don't be too hard on the poor medium who, in his great earnestness to give the flying thought from the spirit, slips a little in his grammar; throw the husks to the wind and grasp the living kernel.

In reading these messages many have misunderstood my meaning, taking me to task for going against education. I do not undervalue education, but I do say that mediums are not made by education. A medium is one thing and education another, and by the time you have drilled a large number of lecturers, for the so-called spiritual rostrum, the real mediums—the sensitives whom we select to do our work—will be so far in advance that the cut and dried ones can never overtake them. I tell you, friends, we can't stop to find out whether our sensitives are well up in the use of grammar or not. If we have found a sensitive, shining brain, whereon we can photograph our thoughts, we make use of it regardless of grammar.

Some have thought that I opposed the school at Whitewater. There, again, they are mistaken. I wholly and entirely approve of the school at Whitewater, in the same sense that I approve of any other college or school; but, if it should happen to become sectarian, then I wholly disapprove; and, just here is the rock on which we split. If it is not sectarian, if it is not a Spiritual college, then how does it differ from other colleges that stand on a liberal platform? In this sense I do most heartily endorse it, as a liberal educational institution for youth of both sexes as well as for those who have reached maturity, it has my most hearty approval. But, if one talks of educating mediums to run in certain grooves and ruts, just as the most of the colleges have in the past, then it becomes sectarian, and I have no more use for sectarian Spiritualism than I have for sectarian Methodism or Episcopalianism; and as for dear old Moses, why, bless his great loyal heart! How I should like to shake him by the hand once more. A better or nobler man never lived. Heaven forever bless and cheer him! But Moses must be Moses and Denton must be Denton. You cannot transpose us, try as you may; and I hope to meet him, ere long, face to face. He has given a large part of his earthly life to the cause of truth. Verily, he has been a Moses, a shining jewel found in the bull-rushes—found at early dawn when the fog hung thick and low—found by the king's daughter and her shining retinue and taken from out those rushes and that fog-bank and set before the world to lead it into the promised land.

Yes; a true leader is Moses; and who shall be able to prevail against him.

Every epoch of time has its Moses. The children of Israel, or the Jews, had theirs, and the Christians had theirs in Jesus, and now the Spiritualists have theirs in Moses, once more.

By the way, that was not the olden Moses' name, however. But Moses, dear brother Moses. Have not I got a little the better of you—a short start ahead of you—where the scales have fallen somewhat away from my eyes?

WILLIAM DENTON.

THE SCHOOL OF LIFE.

Experiences and Lessons of Mortal Life.

Have you ever watched children at play and thought how they were like men and women? You sometimes see the brutal nature cropping out, when the stronger ones will oppose the weaker, or the little ones are held in fear and made to obey; and you always flash out in your righteous indignation when you see it. But when you see some one boy or girl a little stronger than the others, using their strength to help the little ones, in a gentle and loving way, how beautiful it is. If you admire this in childhood, why cannot it be put in practice among children of larger growth? Let the wise and strong help the weak and ignorant, and get away from this selfishness—this grasping—this spirit that is always striving to take advantage of others.

Excessive selfishness is a hateful principle; and it is better to be too generous or liberal than too selfish or greedy. The man who calculates on slipping through the world, giving the least value he can for the good received, will be sadly disappointed finally, for we only receive spiritually as we surround ourselves with an atmosphere of good for others.

There are in the city and country thousands of persons who have environments of comfort, of beauty, music, leisure, each and every thing that would seem to make the soul blossom with all the immortal sweetness of love and purity, tenderness and peace. And yet in these homes, all too often the vanguard of selfishness holds back the sweet impulses of the heart. Too often there is that cruelty of purpose, that hardness of heart, that lack of divine impulse which can make the home a luxury. These things make it the abiding place of hell rather than heaven.

Spiritualism comes to teach that we are not here for the gratification of self only, or for the unfoldment of merely selfish propensities, but for the acquisition of that which is for the enduring benefit of others, and therefore for ourselves.

Often, in the school of experience, that which seems a bitter lesson comes to us. We are obliged to go over it, line by line, and apply it to our individual life, and thereby we learn patience, prudence and a just regard for the rights of others, which, if exercised will redound to our credit and success. For how true it is that those who work solely for self, regardless of the rights of others, who ignore the principles of justice, who do not consider that which belongs to their fellows, but push out recklessly in pursuit of some aim or end—set on winning their own course, whatever others may wish or want—are certain in time to be defeated, and to find their plans passing away from themselves stripped of the outer covering of ambition and pride, a picture of desolation and despair.

The use and purpose of Spiritualism is to add another step to your comprehension of life's ends and aims, namely, that of soul culture. Every earnest thinker, every honest person who comes to the work determined to unite his forces with those of both worlds, in spreading the gospel of truth as preached by the angels; every soul inspired with a real desire to be of use to his fellow-beings, has begun that work of self-culture.

The good work thus established goes on by the power of divine affinity, naturally attracting to itself the presence of unseen helpers. Beings once your friends on earth, now ascended to the higher plane of existence, return to you from spirit life, declaring that in that stage of experience they have received compensation for their every right act on earth. And when they recognize that you are disposed to profit by their teachings and to come into a condition of receptivity to their influences for good, they will exert all their powers to lift you up to their own plane; and acting in harmony with the law of progressive unfoldment, you will find that at every step conditions are constantly provided to aid in the carrying on of the same noble service for humanity at large.

Thus does Spiritualism demonstrate one of its uses to the world; and we know of no such thing as defeat or failure. Under the mighty influences thus demonstrated to human apprehension to exist, the world to-day has risen to a height of spirituality which surpasses all that the ages of the past have known.

In arriving at this high place of development many grand souls in the mortal life have been crushed and heartbroken; but these earnest pioneers who have prepared the way for you have gone onward to a yet higher sphere where a just reward awaits the doer of every good deed. Are these purified ones, these souls uplifted through suffering, idle now? No! they are with you in every department of earthly experience, striving for the benefit of thinking humanity. They are here in our midst, and wherever earnest souls are gathered these bright spirits come to bless and sustain them in every honest and noble aspiration and endeavor.

Out of the past with its gloom and decay
Cometh the beauty and growth of today;
Out of the shadows of night and the showers
Cometh the beauty and bloom of the flowers.
The pure and the true shall live like these flowers,
In life and in light through unnumbered hours.
So, friends, without wings you shall rise and fly
To a fairer life developed on high.
Away from the earth and its changing mould,
Away from the grave with its chill and cold,
From the errors that lie beneath the sky
You shall upward mount and nevermore die.

DR. PHELON'S LETTER.

Notes and News From the Pacific Coast.

Is the Golden Age re-dawning? Has the mantle of reasonable justice and mercy fallen upon us, with all our short-comings? Never has it before been beheld, when the ruler of hundred millions of people, by personal influence, and the honest interest he has for those over whom his will is supreme, sought the line of cool-headed arbitration, instead of resorting to the mediation of the warlike implements of destruction, which ravage, blast and destroy friend and foe alike. At this rate, how long before the sword shall be beaten into plowshares, and spears into pruning-hooks? Verily, the power of the Past trained in the Invisible World, has wonderfully manifested itself.

Have we not the "oil of joy instead of mourning?" Let us hope the distressful conditions will not be driven into the lives of innocent sufferers; and the 30,000,000 tons deficit in the coal supply will soon be made good. Then once more will the passions and the lower instincts of man be made to glorify the highest and best of the spiritual man, who shall unimpeded come finally to his throne.

One thing has always seemed a puzzle to me, and its recurrence a few evenings since has filled me full of interrogation points. At the corner of Grant avenue and Market street in this city, during the early evening, when belated teamsters make that crossing particularly busy, there stopped a group of men who had been nominated for defeat on the State Socialistic ticket. One of them commenced to harangue on the peculiar doctrines of this cult.

The loungers and idlers drew closer together. Hurrying passers stop to hear what it was all about. Teams entitled to the use of the street became entangled in an inextricable knot. The fellow "in evidence," kept on pumping words. An incipient mob awaited a fire-brand. The police have charge of the streets. One of their duties is to keep the streets open for travel, this especially as the twilight turns into darkness. The officer in charge of the beat asked the pumper to transfer his machine to some less crowded quarter, in other words, "move on." As the fashion has been set of having only the president of United States deal with reformers (?) the pumper replied he had no use for a "common cop." But the figure was too big. A few quick motions, a sudden pull at a mysterious box on a lamp post, then almost instantaneously the jangle of bells, a wagon-load of the "finest" tumbled out of the wagon on their feet, with their clubs drawn. The crowd sullenly surges before the order, "move on." The pumper stops his pump, accepts the united invitation of "several cops," and rides with such of his comrades as "talked sassy" to the police station for further adjudication of the "little scrimmage."

The question puzzling me is: Why all this row was deemed necessary by the Socialist agitators? The other parties who are discussing the questions and the conflicting ideas of the day do not attempt to impede the avenues of traffic, or to evade or obstruct the working of any public utility. They hire a hall and argue their case to a finish. Why should not the socialist appeal in the same fashion to the law-abiding of this people, who certainly are in a large majority. Thus only can they abate the distrust that rests upon them as the result of their peculiar methods.

If one seeks a place of honor or trust, it would certainly be considered poor policy for the seeker to be demonstrating an utter unfitness for the position. Is this not a common-sense view? Is it not true that socialistic communities have not, as yet, proved a "roaring success?" It would seem, that the Anglo-Saxon, with his intense individualism and self-assertiveness, was hardly pliant material enough for socialistic moulding. Some day, when this dominant race, has thoroughly absorbed the "golden rule" and can treat others as it would like to be treated; the new doctrine, old as the hills, can be received as a practicable teaching for man's unfolding.

I told The Progressive Thinker readers, not long since, of Mrs. Phebe Hearst's contribution to Egyptology generally, and to the State University of California at Berkeley specially. Now, I have to chronicle the gift to the Leland Stanford University at Palo Alto by Mrs. Senator Stanford of a collection of similar nature. The curios that have been placed in the archives of this institution are due, as we understand, to personal research and effort on the part of Mrs. Stanford. Many of the relics of the past age which so closely concerns us are priceless, for there are no duplicates.

The beloved son, who passed beyond, is neither dead nor sleeping, as he, thus constantly, through the loving heart of his mother increases the souvenirs and memorials, that are to tell the world, so long as this university exists, of the deathless spirit and the mother love that has overcome all obstacles, to make the Leland Stanford University worthy of this state, and the beliefs and doctrines it recognizes through the expressed act and deeds of its patroness.

THE MISER'S DOOM.

Oh, the mustard-seed old conscience,
That knows naught but pinch and grind,
In the future world of progress
Will be left away behind.
While all others are advancing
Toward the life that they should live,
This old fossil by King Justice
Will be rattled through a sieve.

Oh, the being of this planet
Who so little having grown
That he cannot see a pleasure
Or a comfort not his own;
That with all his lucky dealings
And accumulating gold
He has not a cent for helping
The decrepit and the old.

Oh, the miser who has hoarded
Up his millions from the poor,
And is using all his powers
Other millions to procure,
Will but grovel long in darkness,
Near his hoarded treasure here,
While he should be ever rising
Toward the higher, brighter sphere.

Out in soul-land there are misers
Who no doubt would like some light.
But the walls that they have builded
Keep their selfish souls from sight,
And imprisoned there within them
They must stay till they aspire
To be noble, free, unselfish,
Then will Justice lift them higher.

WHOSE FAULT IS IT?

Some Reflections on the Luxury of Church-Going.

What are the churches doing to-day? Are they doing the good they profess to do? Is it possible to go to church any more without a well-filled purse?

No, indeed. One is supposed to pay his way to heaven nowadays, the same as he pays his railroad fare or hotel expenses, and yet the minister and church members say, "Come, join us. Seek salvation; it is free, free to all who come."

No, indeed, it is not free. It is money, money dinned into one's ear from the beginning of the sermon until the close.

I meet an old friend on the street, a gray-haired old man noted for his good deeds and kindly sympathy for suffering humanity. He no longer attends church, as he once did long years ago. I say to him: "Come, Mr. Kindly, go to church with me to-day."

He shakes his gray head solemnly. "No, my friend," he says, "I can no longer afford to go to church. I can not sit quietly by while my neighbors give of their abundance, and, alas! I have nothing to give. That is the reason I never enter a church any more."

I went along on my way, soon overtaking a young man whom I knew well. "Come, my young friend," says I, "go with me to church."

He shook his head much as the old man had done, saying: "I cannot afford the luxury of going to church; you see it costs me a dollar every time I go, and a poor boy working by the day has not many dollars to spare. Churches are not for poor people any more. It is only the wealthy that can afford to attend."

So he, too, passed on his way. Then rushing wildly toward me was a small boy, some ten years old. He was chasing a butterfly, and would have passed me without a glance had I not seized him by the collar of his coat.

"My little boy, you should remember the Sabbath to keep it holy," I said. "why are you not in yonder church?"

He hung his head, and said, "I can't afford it."

"Why, it costs you nothing to go to church."

"Oh, yes, it does ma'am," he replied. "Our teacher always asks us for a dime. I did go when papa had work, for I had my dime like the other boys; but now he is laid off, and he can not afford it."

I said no more. The boy was right. No sensitive person, young or old, can go to a place where one is expected to pay his way, and crowd through free of charge, and yet the church-going people will hold up their hands in horror at the very mention of Spiritualism.

True it is that Spiritualism is fast taking the place of the church in this advanced age. One must think for himself, and if one understands the Bible in a different way from some one else, can he not be allowed to give voice to his thoughts?

Because one cannot believe that the rod of Aaron blossomed, must he be condemned for what he does believe? Even in this age of wonders we know such things do not exist; that only through eyes that were hypnotized could be seen flowers blooming at the end of iron pokers.

The minister can preach what he likes. Truly he must work as hard for his salary as any other working man, but how many of them would leave a fine church, an aristocratic congregation in the heart of the city where he receives a high salary, and go to the slums among the poorest of the laboring classes where the salary would barely enable him to live, just simply to save souls? Are there many, I wonder, who would do this, and yet are the souls of poor people not as great in heaven as the souls of the rich? If the minister of to-day would follow in the steps of Jesus, he would not demand such a price for the saving of souls.

Bondville, Ill. ELLA KELLER.

American Men and Australian Women.

It is announced that in a Louisiana parish at a local election just held to decide whether liquor license should be granted, it was found that only one man was qualified to cast a ballot. As a parish in Louisiana is equivalent to a county in the North and West, this fact is the more remarkable. The Philadelphia Bulletin says:

"The provisions of the Louisiana election laws are so complicated that a large proportion of the white population has never taken the trouble to meet them."

It is not urged, however, that the one man who had public spirit enough to qualify as a voter ought to be forbidden to vote because the majority of the white men in that district were too indifferent to do so. He cast his ballot unchallenged, and decided the election—we are not told which way.

On the same day with this news item appears the announcement that in New South Wales the question of woman suffrage is to be submitted to a vote of the women. If a majority of the women express a wish to vote, equal suffrage will be granted.

The only time an official vote of women has ever been taken in this question was in Massachusetts in 1895. Then 22,204 women voted for suffrage, and only 861 voted against it. As this so-called referendum was to have no legal validity, and was to give the women nothing if it went in their favor, their vote on both sides was naturally light; but it showed that the women who cared enough about the matter to express themselves were in favor of the ballot, twenty-five to one.

If this was the case even in conservative Massachusetts, there cannot be much doubt about the result in progressive Australia. In New South Wales and all the other Australian colonies, women have had municipal suffrage for many years, and they have just been given national suffrage throughout the whole of federated Australia. If the press dispatch is correct, the question now to be submitted to them is whether they shall be allowed also to vote for members of the local parliament of New South Wales. It is as if women throughout the United States had already been empowered to vote for President and members of Congress and all municipal officers, and then were then asked whether they would like to vote for the members of a state legislature. The outcome will be awaited with interest.

But observe how different in the reasoning applied to men and women. It is assumed that those women who are public-spirited enough to wish to vote ought not to be allowed to do so unless the majority of women desire it. But if only one properly qualified man in a community wants to vote, his right to do so is unquestioned, despite the indifferance of all the rest.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

First Progressive Church of Christ, Spiritualist, holds services every Sunday night at 8 o'clock at Schott's Hall, 1203 and 1205 Belmont avenue, corner Racine avenue, Lake View; Wednesday nights at 124 Dearborn street. Rev. A. Lundeberg will lecture on "The Mission of Spiritualism." This church is in no way a business concern, but will endeavor to be a home and a help to every honest seeker after truth, who wants to investigate Spiritualism and find out for himself whether its claims are true or not. The services will commence the first Sunday in November.

Church of the Spirit Communion, Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Conference and messages at 3 p. m. Lecture by Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt at 8 p. m. Messages by H. F. Coates and others. Plenty of good music.

The Progressive Society holds services at 183 E. North avenue, corner Burling street, every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m. Lectures delivered in English and German by Mrs. Hilbert, assisted by Mrs. Schwann and other good speakers. Tests and good music at all services.

The Spiritual Research meets every Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, in Van Buren Opera House, corner of Madison street and California avenue. Good music and singing. All are invited to attend.

First Spiritualist Temple, Lakeside Hall, Indiana avenue and Thirty-first street. Conference at 3 p. m. Dr. J. M. Temple will lecture, and Mrs. Lucille de Loux will give messages.

The Progressive Spiritual Mission will hold services at Van Buren Hall, corner of California Ave. and Madison street (Hall A) every Sunday afternoon and evening at 2:30 and 7:45 p.m. Good mediums and speakers. Nora E. Hill, pastor. Residence 750 West Lake Street.

Band of Harmony, auxiliary to the Church of the Soul, meets at room 608 Handel Hall Building, 40 Randolph St., every first and third Thursdays of the month, beginning afternoons at 3:30. The ladies bring refreshments. Supper served at 6:15. Evening session begins at a quarter to eight o'clock. Questions invited from the audience, and answered by the Guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. Name poems given to strangers.

Progressive Spiritual Mission holds services at Van Buren Hall corner of California and Madison Sts. Services at 3 and 8 p.m. sharp. Spirit messages and lecture from good mediums. All are welcome Nora E. Hill, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union meets at Hopkins' Hall, 528 W. 63d st. Conference meeting at 2:30. Lecture followed by messages at 7:30. Every Thursday at 2:30 the Ladies' Auxiliary holds services at which good mediums serve with tests and lectures. Harry J. Moore, lecturer; Alice Gehring, test medium.

First Spiritual Science Church, 77 Thirty-first street, American Hall. Mediums' conference at 3 p. m. Lecture, followed by tests and messages, at 8 p. m. J. Q. Adams, President.

The Church of the Soul, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, pastor, has resumed its regular Sunday services for the season. The meetings will be held until further notice at Hall 309 Masonic Temple, corner Randolph and State streets. Sunday-school at 10 a. m., Mrs. S. J. Ashton, superintendent. Discourse by Mrs. Richmond at 11 a. m.

The Metropolitan Spiritualist Society meets every Sunday at 8 p. m., in Kimball hall, corner of Wabash avenue and Jackson boulevard. Dr. A. E. Burgess, president; Mrs. Maggie Waite, pastor. Platform demonstrations and good music.

The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature hold services at Nathan's Hall, 1565 Milwaukee avenue, corner Western avenue, Sunday evenings, 7:30 p. m. Mrs. W. F. Schumacher, pastor.

5.—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.

6—The Next World Interviewed.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printers art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. (Including Methods and Instruments." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. For sale at this office. Price 75 cents.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

SHAKSPEARE'S GENIUS.

Some Pertinent Reflections Thereon.

"One of these men is genius to the other,
And so of these which is the natural man?"—Comedy of Errors.

All the other arguments of the Shakspeareans in support of the theory that the man of Stratford was the writer of the plays that go under his name, having been shown after a half-century of critical controversy to be too improbable, too irreconcilable with known facts and altogether untenable—their sole remaining hypothesis, maintained with strenuous persistency no less than with ill-fated logic, is based on the ground of his genius; it rests on his power of inspiration.

The claim of genius is a legitimate one, within reasonable restrictions. It is often, however, as loosely as it it is incorrectly applied to any and every extraordinary production. But ask not too much of this gift, miracle-worker though it be. It has its metes and bounds. Its limitations appear on every side otherwise the views of the ancients must be accepted, of a tutelary divinity presiding over certain men, directing their actions and inspiring their minds, so that they appeared godlike by comparison. Do Shakspeareans make this claim for "this god of their idolatry?" The claim of the Spiritualists is mild reasonableness compared to any such pretense.

Remember, how every unusual work, whether good or bad, especially in literature, is heralded as evidence of the possession of "genius"—the escapades of Don Juan, the revelations of Marie Bashkirtseff, the erotic and neurotic fantasies of Amelie Rives, the deviltries of Mary McLane—it is all the same, "genius" has to be burdened with these manifold sins, and with no power to protest.

"O Liberty! what crimes are committed in thy name!" pathetically cries out Madame Roland on the scaffold.

O Genius! what absurdities are attributed to thee! What falsities are perpetrated in thy name! What follies are sought to be covered with thy fair shield!

Remembering something of all this, one may expect to see maximum effects proceed from minimum causes, two demonstrated to be five, and the creation of something from nothing, yet pass current as the postulate of "genius."

Dr. Appleton Morgan says: "Miracles have happened. Why is it not the simplest plan to let Shakspeare stand as a miracle?" Why, indeed? One reason is, because it would be both moral cowardice and mental idiocy. Other reasons are quite superfluous. When intelligent Shakspeareans have reached that degree of "simple-mindedness," it is time they ring down the curtain. No wonder Coleridge, in anguish of mind, exclaimed, "Are we to have miracles in sport?"

God's ways—Nature's methods—are orderly. Plato says, "God geometrizes."

All else failing, to be obliged to allege divine jugglery as the only other means to account for Shakspeare as being the author of the plays, shows to what a desperate strait one may be driven in order to explain what is otherwise acknowledged to be impossible. The plea of hocus-pocus is ruled out. The days of Elizabeth and James were not spiritualized by the outworking of miracles that reversed alike the laws of matter and of mind.

A "genius for poetry," for instance, does not furnish specific, intimate and wholesale knowledge of dead languages, of philosophy, jurisprudence, medicine, history, customs, etc., such as is so lavishly displayed throughout the Shakspeare dramas. To claim that it does, is evidence on the part of the claimant that he possesses a "genius for absurdity," tiresome in the extreme.

Archimedes must have a place to stand, in order to move the world. Genius must have a suitable home, for its outcome to be harmonious and glorious. It must needs be supplemented. Without the necessary background and accessories, it is like an eagle with but one wing—it cannot fly. Genius of itself is insufficient and alone cannot account for the revealments found in the plays. The science of numbers is not the offspring of simple genius; neither does the knowledge of all manner of sciences come from genius, as do ideas and original and brilliant thoughts. Both law and gospel declare that such knowledge is the result of assiduous study.

The highest expert testimony on the subject of genius, by some of its greatest exponents, is to the effect that it was but another name for aptitude, and that its chief factor was application, as illustrated by Newton, La Place, Cuvier, Agassiz and other like indefatigable students. Buffon, the great naturalist, defined genius to be patience. The genius of Napoleon largely proceeded from and was the result of a mastery of all the principles and details of his undertakings. Genius is no substitute for solid information, technical knowledge of law, of literature, of ancient languages and civilizations, any more than it is a substitute for the Latin grammar or the multiplication table. Such acquisition is never born of itself. Our butcher's apprentice was not twin brother of Minerva. Genius evermore has its dependencies. Even comets are confined to their orbits.

The assimilation of all past book-lore is not the result of any magical transformation. A familiarity with Sophocles, Euripides, Plautus, Lucian, Ovid, with Horace, Virgil, Lucretius, Seneca, Plautus, and other Greek and Latin authors, and with their untranslated as well as translated works, comes not from "genius," whatever colossal claims are made for it.

GEORGE A. BACON.

Washington, D. C.

Of all injustice that is the greatest which goes under the name of law, and of all sorts of tyranny the forcing of the letter of the law against the equity is the most insupportable.—L'Estrange.

A SPIRIT MESSAGE.

Thoughts on the Living God, Heaven and Hell.

"Holy spirit! quickening all;
On thy boundless love we call;
Send thy messenger of light,
To unseal our inward sight;
Lift us from our low estate,
Make us truly wise and great,
That our lives, through love, may be Full of peace and rest in Thee."

I come once again to earth from the land where spirits dwell, to give expression to some thoughts by writing of a few truths, as I have found them, in regard to God.

Friends, what would you think of me, if I told you that I had never been able to find the God (as is generally believed to be in existence) in a place which is called by the preachers, heaven?

These same preachers also tell those who have come to hear them preach the word of God, that if they wish to find favor in the sight of God they must belong to his church, and should they join his church they will be permitted (after passing through what is called death) to enter heaven, and they will also be permitted to play on golden harps and to sing praises unto God himself.

But those poor creatures who do not belong to some church, they will enter a place called hell, and within this hell they will suffer forever.

I have not found such a God nor a hell, such as the preachers make them both appear unto the children of earth.

Friends, do not misunderstand me. I have not said that there is not a God; I have just simply said that I have not found God, as the Bible tells us of him, generally speaking.

I have found that each person is a personal God within himself, or within herself, although they may not be aware of it, neither will some believe it.

Within each person is the spark of the Living God which goes to make the mighty whole.

The Apostle Paul at one time made this statement to his followers: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God; that the spirit of God dwelleth in you?"

Now, if what Paul said was true, each one of earth is a god in themselves; and again if that is the case there will be no punishment excepting that which they cause to come upon themselves by the acts which they do, which are not in accordance with the natural or the spiritual laws which exist and which must be complied with.

There may be those who will not want to accept as a fact, that the power has been given unto them to inherit the Kingdom of God or of heaven, but they would much rather think that there was some other way by which they might enter the kingdom of heaven.

All on earth to-day are creating their own heaven or hell; though they may not be aware of it at the present time, it is true nevertheless.

Now supposing there was some who knew there was a fire in a certain stove, and they walk right up to the stove and place their finger either in the flame, or on the hot stove, what would be the result of their act? They would receive a burn and that burn would cause them pain. Why? Because they have disobeyed one of the natural laws which control the outward body.

Just so if the things which you do are not in accordance with the spiritual laws, you must suffer for it in accordance to the extent of your knowledge of spiritual things and of spiritual laws.

To those who know not of these things their punishment will be much less.

There are some who will not want to believe that a spark of the Infinite Being dwells in them. Please read in II. Cor. 6:16. "For ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them and I will be their God and they shall be my people."

If you believe what is written in the Bible, and its teachings you must acknowledge that this is true.

I have found that God is the life-giving principle, it is the cause of all that exists on earth, no matter in what shape or form it may appear to the eye of man.

Friends, the only hell that you need to be afraid of is the hell that you make for yourselves, which will come to you after you have passed through the changed condition brought about by what is called death.

This hell will come in the form of mental agony instead of the preached hell of the olden times.

This hell is brought on by lost and misused opportunities for doing much good while on earth.

Terrible will be the suffering of those who are losing and misusing opportunities given to them, while they are on earth.

The time has come when messengers are sent to show them the way that leads to eternal life and happiness.

Do not close the door of your hearts against these messengers of light and of truth, but strive earnestly to do all within your power, not only to make your own body a temple for the living God, but help others to do likewise.

Labor earnestly while it is yet day, for the night of earth life cometh when you know not, and by so doing you will not have to grieve over wasted opportunities, and you will be prepared for that peace of mind which cometh to those who have been faithful in the discharge of the duties intended for, and given to them to perform on earth.

The greater progress ye make on earth, so much more advanced shall you be when you pass through what is called death, and you can at once enter into a more advanced condition of the spiritual growth, which is truly heaven.

The above was received by L. M. Cobb, at a home communion with one who had entered the higher life.

DR. PHELON'S LETTER.

Notes and News From the Pacific Coast.

As we near the day of the state election, the secular newspapers are more and more flooded with the freshet of words poured forth from the swarm of speakers, who on both sides are promising "all there is in it" to their adherents and supporters. But as it is evident that both opposing forces cannot occupy the same place at the same time, one side is sure to be in the plight of the fellow who said anybody could perform the conjurer's trick of pounding up a watch in a hat, exhibiting the pieces and then returning the watch unharmed to its owner. On being dared to do it, he asked for the loan of a hat and a watch. As usual, there was somebody ready to put up. Having smashed the watch in the hat, after the most improved manner, he covered the hat with his bandana and mumbled some fastastic sounds over it. Then looking into the hat, he remarked, as he sadly shook his head: "Gentlemen, I thought I could; but really I find I can't." That is the defeated candidate. How much of a hat and watch of election expenses he will get away with, no outsider, at the present time, can ascertain. Perhaps it will not be possible, even after he has proved that he can't. But the red-light glare of politics is the dominant color of everything in the State at the present writing.

Other matters, mental, intellectual and spiritual, are waiting for the high-pressure to be relieved, in order that they may have a chance to breathe. We shall probably live through it.

We understand that the drugless healers of this state are taking the preliminary steps towards organization for mutual protection. Their headquarters are in Los Angeles.

The local work of Spiritualist propaganda, started in this state by the last convention, goes merrily on; may no clouds nor rain be able to delay or stop the progress thereof. The officers whose commendable activity is thus displayed, are better fitted to give you the details, for your readers, than is this correspondent, for they are able to speak from what they know. Too long has the cloudy darkness of careless inertness been allowed to rest upon us and our cause. But certainly, now has the command gone forth: "Awake! arise! and behold thy helpers on all planes." Let us seek no excuse for longer dallying, but let every Spiritualist stand in his place armed with whatever implement is at hand, ready for the fray. With our faces set toward the light of the Beyond, we shall conquer by this sign: "The constant presence and communication of the Invisible Ones."

It is not necessary for us to listen to the disputatious talk-twisters, who desire to split, and define and complicate, until we are not quite certain whether our greatest grandfather of the "Stone Age," commenced his name with a spiral Q or a plain Z. Whatever may be taught to aspiring devotees on these lines, the statements can hardly be considered as a part or parcel of the New Thought.

Never was there a time, in the history of man's unfoldment, when there was such a wide scattering of the "Lo, here! and Lo, there!" kind. People crowding here and rushing yonder on the announcement of some new and wonderful thing on the psychic lines. Often the claims are preposterous and imaginary, and the disappointed aspirant for knowledge then classes the false and the true altogether, and denounces the whole as fraudulent or criminal.

The secret of true success, although offered them, is not accepted: "The kingdom of God is within you." Unless the secret of all power and force is understood by our own mental forces and soul intuition, we can never make it ours.

Outside of ourselves, the topic which comes up in volume, refrain and echo, is the struggle now on between those who have seized upon the necessities of life, and are willing to do their best to wring famine prices from the poor—are willing to see women and children freeze to death, rather than abate one jot or tittle of their assumed dignity. It is a new question for the American Republic to face. We believe that President Roosevelt is the man above all others to solve the problem. Meanwhile, time does not lag, and no man knows the outcome, nor the character of the road by which the solution is to be reached. Under such ominous conditions, it seems strange that some of the devotees of anarchy who are so willing to sacrifice the lives of innocent men, have not already considered the president of the Reading railroad a suitable oblation to their ideas of patriotism, duty to their fellows and the world at large. But however this may be, there is no doubt that the opposing thought of millions, which the unfortunate man is drawing upon himself, will work out to its fullest, the ancient decree: "He shall come to his end and none shall help him."

While we are most deeply in sympathy with our dear friends everywhere, who are likely to suffer from the cruelty of the coal barons; we are glad that our climate is not rigorous enough to give us alarm concerning possible suffering from cold.

SACRED PAPAL RELICS.

Romish Sacred Trumpery Adored by the Faithful.

I have before me a catalogue of some hundreds of relics [Citizen, Boston, Mass.], which are objects of popish devotion in several churches in France, Spain, and Italy. Many of them are too gross to appear in print. The least offensive are the arms, fingers, legs, and toes, of certain saints; and some of them must have had as many limbs as a centipede; for in Flanders, Spain, and France, there are no fewer than eight arms of St. Matthew, which would of course produce forty fingers, and these would enrich as many churches. The author of one catalogue in my possession, assures his readers that he himself had seen three arms of St. Luke, and he could not tell how many St. Thomas a Becket had.

Such relics are considered the treasure of the churches to which they belong, and in fact they bring no small gain to the church, as great sums are received annually from devout pilgrims, who come hundreds of miles to feast their eyes and warm their devotion by looking upon those limbs, which would have been more honored by being allowed to rest quietly in their earth.

They have, however, many things besides fragments of human bodies, and some articles are of great antiquity, which one would think could not possibly be in existence, or find their way into what is called Christendom but when the pope has said that they are what they are called, the simple faithful have nothing to do or say, but to believe what they are told. For instance, they have in the church of Laterau, in Rome, the ark of the Lord which Moses made in the wilderness, together with the rod of Moses; and they profess to show in the same church the identical table on which our Lord ate the last supper with his disciples. Though this table is shown in Rome, there are pieces of it in both Spain and Flanders. I suppose no papist doubts that a thing may be entirely in one place, and partly, or even wholly, in another at the same time. For instance, they believe that the whole body of Christ is in every place where the mass is celebrated, and in every particle of every consecrated wafer, though it were broken into a thousand pieces and scattered to the winds. There is, therefore, nothing incredible in the story of the miraculous table, which has done many wonderful things, if we may believe the Jesuits.

Upon the high altar in the said Lateran church, there stand the heads of the apostles Peter and Paul; and whenever these are shown to the people, there are so many pardons and indulgences granted. Though the heads be in Rome, there is a great piece of the skull of Peter in the possession of the Augustines in Bilboa, and of that of Paul in the possession of the Franciscans in the same city; and I believe Peter has an entire head somewhere else.

It is by no means my intention to disgust my readers with a complete catalogue of the trumpery in which the wealth of many a church consists: I shall merely mention a few of the most harmless, and then proceed to describe the use which is made of them. The Augustine friars in Burgos are said to have the Virgin Mary's chamber-pot, which they regard as a very precious relic; but whether they honor it with hyperdulia, that is, the same degree of adoration as they give to the virgin herself, I can not say. In St. Peter's church they have the cross of the good thief, somewhat worm-eaten; Judas' lantern, a little scorched; the dice the soldiers played with, when they cast lots for our Sevior's garment; the tail of Balaam's ass; St. Joseph's axe, saw, and hammer, and a few nails he had not driven; St. Anthony's millstone, on on which he sailed to Muscovy. These are taken from a catalogue dated 1753; and I presume the articles remain there still. The same catalogue contains the following, among hundreds more, which enrich different churches: part of the wood of the cross, a little decayed; and a nail of the same. There are said to be as many pieces of the timber of the true cross in different parts of Europe, as would supply a town with fuel for a winter. Part of the manna in the wilderness; and some blossoms of Aaron's rod. The arm of St. Simeon, ill kept. The image of the blessed virgin, drawn by St. Luke, the features all visible; one of her combs; and twelve combs of the twelve apostles, all very little used. Some relics of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The arm and some part of the body of Lazarus; ill kept, and smells. A part of the body of St. Mark; and a part of his gospel, of his own handwriting, almost legible. A finger and an arm of St. Ann, the blessed virgin's mother. A piece of virgin's veil, as good as new. The staff delivered by our Lord to St. Patrick, with which he drove all the venomous creatures out of Ireland. Some of St. Joseph's breath, which an angel enclosed in a phial, as he was cleaving wood violently; which was so long adored in France, and since brought to Venice, and from Venice to Rome. The head of St. Denis, which he carried two miles, after it was cut off, under his arm, from Montmatre to St. Denis. A piece of the rope Judas hanged himself with. Large parcels of the blessed virgin's hair. Great quantities of her milk, some butter, and a small cheese made of it, which never decays, etc., etc.

These precious relics are solemnly certified to be what they are said to be; and many of them have proved themselves genuine by most stupendous miracles; all which is piously believed by their devout worshipers. I appeal to every man of common sense, whether he can imagine a system of more palpable and abominable falsehood than that which is here exhibited? It is impossible that any one of the articles which I have enumerated can be verified or proved to be what it is called. There is not one of them entitled even to the credit of probability, few of them to that of possibility, and yet the priests of the churches in which they are deposited, will assert their authenticity with more confidence than they will maintain any article of divine revelation; and the pope himself is not ashamed to lend the sanction of his pretended divine authority to support and recommend the imposture.

The great matter with the pope, and his army of priests, is, to get the poor deluded people to believe that some miraculous virtue resides in the relics, which, on certain occasions, are exhibited to their view; to get them to come and pay their devotion to these relics, and pay their money for the sight of them; for, as I have often said, and proved, there is no blessing to be had from the church of Rome without money.

MAN'S DIVINE ESTATE.

A Prophecy of the Age of Alchemy.

Biologists and physiologists have searched long and patiently for a solution of the mystery of the differentiation of material forms.

No ordinary test can detect any difference in the ovum of fish, reptile, animal, bird or man. The same mineral salts, the same kind of oil, albumen, fibrine or sugar or carbon is found, not only in the egg or germ of all forms of life, but in the substance or tissue of the bodies of all the varied expressions of materiality.

The answer to this "Riddle of this Sphinx" is found where Bio, or life, Chemistry merges into Alchemy over the door of which is written "It is finished"—"Let there be Light."

Prof. Loeb says, "The ultimate source of living matter is chemical." To the Biochemist the above is a truism. I, a student of Biochemistry for fifteen years, offer the following explanation of the differentiation of material forms:

First; There is no such thing as inert, or dead, matter. All is life.

The base of all manifestation is mineral. Out of the dust, ashes or minerals, of the earth physical man is made.

The twelve mineral salts are the basis of every visible form, animal or vegetable. No two different forms have exactly the same conbination of the minerals, but all have the same minerals. These minerals, inorganic salts, are the twelve gates of precious stones described by John in his vision. When the divine Word speaks the mineral atoms, or molecules of its body into a certain formula or combination, a germ or egg which is the basis or nuclei of the form to be manifested. This little plexus of intelligent (all atoms, being part of the I Am, are intelligent) atoms then commence to attract to their centre by the law of chemical affinity, which is only another way of saying God in action, other atoms known as oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, etc., and thus condenses or materializes them, until the building is completed according to the plan of the Architect or Designer. Thus the Word operating through chemistry is the Alpha and Omega.

There would be no eagle, fish, horse or man without the word, Divine Wisdom, and there would certainly be no word if there was no substance to obey the word, and likewise there would be no substance if there was no law of chemical affinity, or action and reaction whereby the operation of materialization and dematerialization may be carried on.

It will be demonstrated in the near future that so-called nitrogen is mineral in solution, or ultimate potency, which explains the reason why nitrogen enriches the soil.

The Atmospheric Product Company, at Niagara Falls, whose promoters expect to extract and condense nitrogen from the aerial elements by electrical process are the forerunners of machines that will manufacture our food and clothing direct from air and also produce heat or cold as needed by different rates of vobration of the substance, body of God, everywhere present.

Neither light nor heat comes from the Sun, for they are not entities that can come or go, they are effects or results. What we call the Sun is surely a great vibrating center of energy sometimes spelled G-o-d, (or word) that which by its thought moves the atoms of our earth envelope and chemically causes light and heat in different degrees according to its good will and pleasure.

By chemistry, the court of last resort, will man come into his divine estate. He will then place the "Poles of Being" and produce vegetable or animal forms at will.

Thus the prophecy of man's dominion will be fulfilled, for he will have attained knowledge that will enable him to manufacture a psychoplasm (if I may be permitted to coin a word,) from which he can bring forth all manner of vegetable or animal life as he wills.

Let man stand upright and splendid,
Let woman look up from the sod,—
For the days of our bondage are ended
And we are at one with God.

LESSONS LEARNED

Out of the Mouths of Baby Philosophers.

Most of the infallible things in life turn out liars now and then, says Jean Cowgill, in the Chicago Chronicle. The other day the X-ray machine was caught in an awful fix. A man went to bed at night with his false teeth in his mouth. In the morning they were gone. The man's head ached, his throat was sore—these all the indisputable symptoms of swallowed false teeth. The man hied him to a doctor. Wise man of scalpels and drugs that he was, the doctor set his X-ray machine going and took a photograph. An X-ray machine had never been known to lie. The photograph showed plainly that the man's false teeth were in his stomach. There was nothing for the doctor to do but put on his white apron and cut them out. After a great deal of difficulty he couldn't find them. They were not in the man's stomach.

Just as the doctor was trying to make the damage good the man's sister put in an appearance. She had the teeth. With her unaided eyesight she had located them under the man's bed. The X-ray machine had been caught in a lie.

At last accounts the man was not likely to pull through his attack of operation for nothing. The doctor's feelings may be imagined. No one likes to fish all day in a lake where there are no fish. Doubtless the sister wishes she had looked under the bed a little sooner.

They can keep on wondering and wishing. Infallibilities are always turning out lies. There is heart-break enough in that statement to keep the world's tear fountains playing for the rest of time. The tumble of a manufactured infallibility like an X-ray machine doesn't so much matter. Even if the man dies it doesn't change more than half a figure in the great sum total. It is the shattering of the human infallibilities that goes to our hearts. The destruction generally begins in childhood. Then it is double-headed, octopus-armed, horrible.

About a year ago a friend sent me an invitation to spend a month at her country house. I hung up my scissors, put my pencils in a box and went. She has everything that would make most women happy. Her home is so comfortable as to be almost luxurious, her husband is considerate and loves her devotedly. They have two dear little girls, aged 3 and 5. I have a girl of my own. She is 7. The three children became great chums. Their conversations were a source of much amusement to all of us.

Very soon I found out that my friend was not happy. Neither was her husband, although he loved her. We can be very unhappy for a few years with people we love.

Her extreme thinness seemed to worry her. There was nothing the matter with her bodily health. Doctor after doctor had pronounced her physically sound—wrinkles, not the reasonable lines that come with years and cares, were gathering in the wrong corners of her face. She often spoke frankly of these troubles. They were not enough to make an unhappy family. Rather were they the result of unhappiness. An honest desire to help a woman I had known a long time made me wonder what the real sorrow was.

Lucile, the tiniest girl, gave me the clew.

She and my Helen were playing church on the plazza. The service was a mixed affair. The only hymn they both knew was "Abide With Me." They supplied the deficiency with the chorus of "A Hot Time In the Old Town." Lucile's Presbyterianism went queerly with Helen's Episcopalianism. Lucile was the congregation, Helen the minister, with a towel and pillowcase pinned on for vestments.

Helen's voice is a deep childish contralto. Lucille speaks in a piping treble.

"Lord have mercy upon us miserable sinners," chanted Helen.

"Lord have mercy upon us miserable sinners," piped Lucile.

They tried it several times The effect was not pleasing to Helen's ears.

"Lucile," she said politely, "can't you make it a little holler?"

"What's that?" queried Lucile.

"Why, as if you believed it, like mamma does."

"Does she say things as if she thought they was true?"

"Why, yes," said Helen, aghast at the heresy. "Don't yours?"

"Sometimes. Is your mamma just the same all the time?"

"I don't know what you mean."

"Well," went on precious Lucile, "does she love you just as much when there ain't any visitors as she does when they is?"

A light was dawning upon me. I held my breath to catch Helen's answer.

"No," she said, decidedly. "At night when we're going to bed she's always lovinger than she is any other time. There isn't anyone round then."

Lucile pondered a while.

"Our mamma is, too," she observed after a moment. "That's not a fair time. I mean, does she laugh and tell folks what a nice little girl she's got and then scold the minute they're gone?"

I held my breath. Layers and layers of scales were dropping from my eyes. Eagerly I searched my soul for evidences of guilt before Helen answered.

"I never noticed. She scolds me just the same before folks. Don't you remember," enthusiastically, "how she sent me up stairs the other day 'cause I was afraid you would break Abigail and didn't want you to play with her?"

"I didn't, did I?"

"No, but you might. Mamma was wrong to do it. She wouldn't like to have some one carrying me 'round so I might get busted any minute."

Another layer of scales dropped away from my eyes. Helen had been willing to put Abigail away and not play with her at all. My zeal had been misplaced. Helen had found a tiny mar on her cherished ideal. Her tiny soul rebelled at my lack of logic. I made a mental note of this remark.

Both children were silent a moment. "My mamma says you always min your mamma," said Helen, "and tha she never has to speak loud——"

Some more scales fell. I must speak loudly sometimes or Helen wouldn't think about it.

"That's cause she does it when you can't hear—when you're up in your room or out in the grove. She gets whoppin' mad and bangs things."

The honesty of childhood is brutal. Five-year-old Amy skipped up the steps.

"We're talking about our mammas," volunteered Helen by way of welcome. Amy paused. A sharp glance in the direction of Lucile told her about what the conversation had been. In a moment her baby face became a little old woman's.

"Papa says we mustn't talk about things," she said vaguely.

"Mammas ain't things," responded Helen, as the three walked thoughtfully to the other end of the piazza, where I could no longer hear their baby prattle. Whether they discussed their respective mothers any more I do not know.

A prayer of thankfulness went up from my heart that my own child's opinion had been no worse. I saw the woman who had been my friend put Lucile and Amy to bed that night. She bathed them and kissed them; heard them say their prayers and tucked them in bed. As she did these things, which good mothers are wont to do, any one watching would have called her a model mother.

That night Helen and I discussed the matter of Abigail thoroughly. Helen showed me that I was wrong to make her venture the sacrifice of her child, I'm not sure, but I think there was a mutual confession of faults. While we talked blonde Abigail lay snuggled cozily in Helen's arms. As my brown-haired little girl bent tenderly over her yellow-haired big dolly there was in her childish attitude a prophecy of years.

We went home next day. There was no use trying to see through the cloud. The unreasonable wrinkles on the face of the woman who had been my friend became ghastly milestones along the line of a life gone awry.

Perhaps this story should not be told. It has the merit of being true, at least. I do not mean it in any sense as a reflection on modern or any other motherhood. It is simply a story of how I was sent thinking along certain lines. The lie told by the X-ray machine is to blame for my telling it now. It is much better to understand people so thoroughly we do not believe them infallible. Parents should teach their little ones the lesson. Live with them, not above them. When a person begins on cold baths he takes one lukewarm. After a while he does not mind the shock from the cold water. It is just the way with children—with grown ups, too, for the matter of that. A series of little shocks soon hardens one to almost anything. When a condition of general indifference has been reached life has lost its joy.

No doubt many good mothers, and others as well, could gain a clearer perception and wiser views of things, in many instances, listening to the children's free and frank expression of thought, and taking the child's own view. Children have thoughts of their own, though they are often taught not to express them. They think, and can not help thinking, and more than older people can. And they think from their own standpoint. Many an older person could, like Jean Cowgill, gather rich lessons of deep practical wisdom, by listening to the simple unconsciously frank prattle of these baby philosophers.

IN MEMORY OF EMMA CHALLAND.

Go where bright pearls their lustre shed,
Or diamonds corruscate and glow,
Go, where the ambient cloudlets spread
Their lily drapery of snow.

You shall not find a gem more rare,
A glow more pure nor more serene
Than she, whose form is resting there
Beneath yon turf of emerald green.

Great nature gave her to the world,
Mid toil unblest and weary care;
And on her youthful shoulders hurled
Crosses they were not formed to bear.

Yet bravely all her ills she spurned,
From gloom to light her pathway sped
Upward where glowing genius burned
In iridescence 'round her head.

Her mind well stored with knowledge rare,
Artistic grace, melodious song;
She gave them all to ease and share
The suffering of the endless throng.

Where'er was pain or ghastly fear,
Where'er was heart by grief o'erborne,
Her heart and hand were ever near
To soothe, to comfort, and to mourn.

In early life her vision fell
On banner borne by seraph arms—
A fleckless banner, o'er the dell
Where peace and plenty spread their charms.

Upon its bright escutcheon seen,
In letters golden as the sun,
The sole word 'Duty" kind, serene.
"'Tis mine," she said; "thy will be done."

To that one motto gave she all,
Youth, grace and womanhood divine,
For self she had no care nor thrall,
Duty, her love, her rest, her shrine.

Thanks, Mother Nature, for the boon
You gave us by her advent here;
We mourn that she was borne too soon
From our blessed midst to yon bright sphere.

Earth was made sweeter by her aid,
Her purity and tender care,
And heaven a fairer home is made
Since Emma's found a dwelling there.

SPIRIT RETURN

Is Demonstrated in an Awful Tragedy in Michigan.

Meets Awful Death—Little Julia Wosniak Murdered at Menominee—Joe Beck Crushes Her Young Life Out With His Hands—Supernatural Agencies Point Out the Guilty Man.

Menominee, Mich.—Not since white men first set foot on the shores of Green Bay [says the Chicago Chronicle] has there been committed such a horrible crime as that of Sunday morning, Sept. 28, when little Julia Wosniak was brutally murdered in an old blacksmith shop in Finntown, a suburb of this city.

It was a crime without parallel in the history of Michigan and the wretch who committed it and has admitted as much cowers white and trembling in a jail seventy miles distant in another county to escape the righteous indignation of the people of this community, who would have meted out summary punishment for the crime had the man been left in this city. Sheriff Stiles spirited the man away when he heard the muttered threats against the criminal's life. Beck is now awaiting trial and the gallows in the jail at Iron Mountain.

Joseph Beck, known far and wire in Finntown as "Joe Blacksmith," is a man 58 years of age, ignorant and not far removed from the brute. He has admitted to half a dozen people enough to tighten the noose around his wizened neck and Willis N. Wills, the prosecuting attorney has in his possession, besides the admissions of the abject criminal a mass of evidence that is unassailable and strong enough to convict of murder in the first degree.

The details of the slaying are too sickening to tell. They stagger the human mind. It is almost impossible to believe that anything in human form could perform such atrocious acts. The victim, a sweet-faced girl of 10 years, light-hearted, happy and care free, tripped lightly into the old blacksmith shop on that bright Sunday morning, but she never came out into the sunlight again. An old man, nearly 60 years of age, big and muscular and brutal, grasped her in his great arms and with his hard and callous hands crushed the life out of the tender little girl as though she had been a flower, and then hurled her maimed and bruised body under his very doorstep, coffinless, face downward and doubled together shockingly.

Supernatural Agencies Appear.

And to add to the fearfulness of the crime there have been supernatural agencies at work, so some of the people connected with the frightful occurrence aver, and it is said that it is owing to a dream that the crime was ever imputed to Joe Beck, and he was finally arrested and the truth wrung from his unwilling lips.

Hovering about the story are allegations of weird dreams, of bloody apparitions and of soul-shaking occurrences. And these tales, together with the appalling story of the crime, have frenzied the foreign people living in that part of the town where the murder was done. It was only through the watchfulness and care of the sheriff that the man was not torn limb from limb by an infuriated mob. The day after the body was found chucked in a hole under the very doorstep of Joe Beck's blacksmith shop hundreds of men refused to go to work, and they walked up and down the streets cursing and swearing and vowing vengeance on the criminal.

At night hundreds of men congregated along the street near the old shop and talked over the frightful details. The more the mob heard the more anxious it was for blood. Saner minds tried to control the more inflamed and unreasonable, but the attempt was useless. The storm grew in volume and the mutterings that were at first sullen and deep grew louder and became bolder until the officials had to hurry away with the miserable creature to prevent a fearful ending to the tragedy so atrociously begun.

Said one of the most prominent officials in the city: "It was not that we had any pity on the vile brute in our charge that we wanted him out of the way. But we knew full well that Sheriff Stiles would protect his prisoner to the very last. For fear, then, that someone who really did amount to something might be wounded we felt it safer to have the man taken away. That beast in human form is not fit for anyone, no matter how low, should suffer on his account. It was not for his sake, but for the sake of our own townspeople, that we were glad when the sheriff took him out of the county."

Killed While on an Errand.

Julia Wosniak was killed while on an errand for her aunt and foster mother, Mrs. Mary Kachenski. The little girl's mother died four years ago and since that time Julia has lived with her aunt, who has no children of her own. Before that time the little girl had been fond of her aunt and was with her the greater part of the time. When the mother died the little girl went to her aunt naturally and found a new mother who fully filled the place of the one gone. The girl was fairly worshiped by both Mr. and Mrs. Kachenski and was looked upon as their own child.

Saturday before the tragedy Mrs. Kachenski sent the little girl down to the blacksmith shop to get a beet knife repaired. The blacksmith had made the knife and it had come apart, so it was sent back for repairs. The girl went with a playmate and they were told that the knife could not be fixed right away.

"Come again this evening," said the blacksmith.

The little girls went away and about 5 o'clock that evening Julia Wosniak and a companion again went to the shop.

"The knife is not done yet," said the blacksmith. "It won't be done until in the morning. You must come down early in the morning or you won't get it," asserted the blacksmith earnestly. "Mind, if you don't come down early I will shut the door and you can't get in."

It cannot be known whether or not the blacksmith was at that time planning his atrocious crime, for he will not say. The little girl's foster parents think he was then planning his fiendish assault, but others more charitable hold that the crime was the ungovernable impulse of the moment, the climax of a life of lust and insatiable bestial passion.

Be that as it may, the little girl went home and told her aunt what the blacksmith had said, and nothing further was done about the knife that night.

Goes Away Early.

Mrs. Kachenski called the little girl early Sunday morning. It was before 7 o'clock when she aroused the child.

"You make a fire and put the kettle on so we can make coffee," said the woman as she started out to milk the cows.

"But I must go after the beet knife," said the little girl. "Joe Blacksmith [the name by which he was familiarly known among the children of the vicinity] told me I must come very early this morning or I would not get it."

"Julia, you don't need to go after the knife this morning," replied Mrs. Kachenski. "I got along without the knife Saturday and I guess I can get along all right to-day."

"But Joe Blacksmith said I must come after it early, mother, and I must go."

"Well, Julia, if you must go, then hurry, and get back home in time for church," finally said Mrs. Kachenski before she went out to do the milking.

The little girl grabbed up an old whitestraw hat, the worst one she had, and set out for the shop, which is nearly a mile distant over the sand and sawdust of the lumber region contingent to the shores of Green bay. The little girl wore a dark blue dress, an everyday affair, but she had on her Sunday shoes and stockings, having made that much preparation for church.

She tripped gayly along in the sunshine and was seen to enter the blacksmith ship about 7:30, but no one ever saw her come out alive.

Three days after she entered the dark portal her bruised and crouching body was found dumped in a shallow grave under the doorstep of the shop, with a horrible look of agony frozen on her white face. There were dark discolorations on her little throat, bruises on her head and body and evidences that she had been shockingly used before she was finally dispatched.

The church bells were ringing for mass when the girl entered the shop and were caroling joyfully when Joe Beck was crushing her young life out. When she did not return Mr. and Mrs. Kachenski at once decided that she had been detained while the blacksmith repaired the knife, and they did not worry about her.

"She has probably gone to mass," said the mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Kachenski went to mass at St. Adelbert's church, near their home, and looked in vain for their little girl. She was not there.

When they arrived home and found no trace of her they began to be frightened. After inquiring of the neighbors if Julia had been seen and receiving negative answers in each instance Mr. Kachenski went to the blacksmith shop.

He found the place closed and locked. He searched in the neighborhood, but could find no trace of the girl. Later he went again to the shop, but found it closed. A boy standing near insisted that the blacksmith was in the shop. Mr. Kachenski went back and shook the door and finally turned the knob. There was a noise inside as of someone moving about.

"Open that door," said Kachenski.

The blacksmith stealthily opened the door and said good morning to Mr. Kachenski's salutation.

"Was my girl Julia here this morning?" asked Kachenski.

"Yes, she was," replied the blacksmith, looking furtively around.

"She wanted to get a knife fixed. I told her it was not finished and asked her to wait. She said she had no time. She told me she had to go to church. She walked down the railroad track and went toward town with a little boy.

"How big was the boy?" queried Kachenski.

"I don't know," answered the blacksmith, "I didn't take particular attention."

Before Kachenski left Beck asked anxiously: "Was that your little girl? I didn't know it was your girl."

Begin Search for the Boy.

After Beck said the little girl went away with a boy a search was begun for such a lad and the girl. Mrs. Kachenski thought there might be some truth in the boy story, as a day or so before Julia had caught some boys stealing cabbages in a neighbor's garden.

"I will surely tell on you," said the little girl.

"Oh, no; please don't," pleaded one of the boys. "If you won't tell on us I will give you 50 cents."

Julia went home and told her mother that a boy was going to give her 50 cents if she would not tell on him for stealing cabbages.

Mrs. Kachenski gave the little girl a lecture on the dishonesty of such a transaction and warned her to keep away from the boys, as they might beat her.

"Don't go near the boys," said her mother, "or they may beat you."

Mrs. Kachenski at once recalled the trouble with the boys and decided that the little girl had been lured away and killed by one of the cabbage thieves. But no trace of the boy could be found. No one had seen such a boy in the vicinity of the blacksmith shop except Beck, and he was unable to furnish a clear description.

Time and again the Kachenskis went to the shop to ask Beck more concerning the disappearance of the little girl, but the blacksmith always stuck to the same story.

The police were notified and a systematic search was begun. The whole suburb was aroused, for the little girl was well known and well liked. She was a very bright and winsome child and was known to everyone and everyone felt an interest in her. It was found that she had not gone to her father's home eight miles in the country.

The police were unable to gain any trace of her or the mysterious boy. The case became baffling. Mr. and Mrs. Kachenski were frantic over the girl's disappearance, when a neighbor woman revealed a vision she had seen the night before the girl vanished.

Mrs. Parsek's Strange Vision.

It was due to a vision of Mrs. Mary Parsek, a neighbor woman, that suspicion was first fastened on Joe Beck.

"I received a signal from God," said Mrs. Parsek earnestly in talking about the tragedy, "and I know from the very first that Beck had murdered the girl. I insisted that the body was in that old shop and I told the police that I would stake my life on it, but they laughed at me. I did not like to tell them of my dream, for they would not believe. But I told everybody that the body was in there. I made my son watch the place. I was as sure the body was in there as if I had seen it.

"I will tell you why I thought so. For many years I have had frightful dreams before a murder or an accident. I believe God sends them as a warning. Twice have I saved my husband's life through these dreams.

"The night before poor little Julia Wosniak was killed my son John told me he was going away hunting. When he told me that I was in bed and a sharp pain went through my heart.

"I told him I would rather he would not go. I told him it would be better if he would go to church. I went to sleep after that and then I had this signal from God. I saw Mrs. Kachenski come over to my house and she told me to come over and make a body ready for the grave.

"I thought I arose and went with her. I took with me two tablecloths on which to lay the body out. When I came to the house I asked: 'Where is the dead man?'

"They pointed and I saw little Julia Wosniak's dead body lying there, all bruised and scarred. I made ready to spread the tablecloth to cover the body and the beautiful white linen was full of holes and rotten.

Accuses Joe Beck of Crime.

In the morning I would not let my son go away hunting, for I feared the dream meant that he would come to harm. I told him not to go or he would never come back alive.

"When Mr. Kachenski came to my house looking for Julia I asked him where she had gone.

"'To Joe Blacksmith's,' said the man.

"Then I knew she must be dead. I saw what my dream meant. I told the man then that if Julia Wosniak had gone to the blacksmith shop she was dead. They would not believe me. I told them I would give my life if it were not true.

"But I could not get them to believe me. I told them how he had been drunk many times. Once he had made a mistake and come into my house instead of his own when he was living near me. That time he talked so bad that I will not repeat it and my oldest daughter put him out of the house.

"I told the police the girl's body was in the old shop, but they would not believe me. They wanted to know why I suspected the old man and I told them of the way he had talked to me in my house and I told them of other things to prove that he was not a good man.

"I told my boy to go watch the shop. He went down there and saw that the doors were all closed tightly. But he saw the blacksmith peering warily out of the screen in the door above the spot where the little girl's body was found. He would look down at the doorstep to see if anyone was looking at that spot. My boy told me this and again I said the girl's body was there. Sunday, Monday and Tuesday I insisted that Julia was in the old shop.

"Wednesday they found I had told them the truth. I cannot explain my dreams. Once before when a man was killed here I dreamed of it the night before. I saw Julia Wosniak as plain that night as I ever did in my life and her body was bruised and white like it was when they found it."

Police Make an Arrest.

When it was found that the little girl had been seen entering the shop by WillieKnutson, a little herdboy who had been seen in the vicinity that Sunday morning and had remained there for some time and had not seen her come out, Chief English began to suspect Beck also.

Monday night about 9 o'clock the chief and another officer went to the shop, thinking to make an examination while Beck was absent. They made considerable noise in getting in, but finally were successful, when Beck jumped out of the darkness and exclaimed:

"Oh, I thought burglars were coming in!"

The police thought it suspicious that he should be in the shop with the doors locked at that time of night. They made an examination of the premises. The chief noticed a board that seemed to have been put in place over the doorstep recently. He jerked this board out and threw it away.

The next morning, when he again visited the shop, he found this board had been carefully replaced and cinders placed about it to make it seem that it had not been disturbed. He arrested Beck that morning and took him to jail.

A search was made of the shop, but nothing was found that morning. Wednesday forenoon the shop was again visited and a thorough search was again made. The chief noticed suspicious signs about the doorstep. Pulling away the board that had been replaced, he saw signs of fresh sand. About two feet below the black loam in that vicinity there is white sand.

He pulled away the log used for a step and dug into the ground. He found the soil had been disturbed. Two feet down he struck the body of the girl. It was bent almost double, with the face and head downward in the sand. On the face was a look of agony and the little limbs were torn and wrenched, the clothing in shreds. A great crowd gathered about as the body was removed to one side and laid on a blanket.

Apparition Appears to Mrs. Parsek.

The morning of the day the body was found, Mrs. Parsek and her daughter went four miles into the country to dig potatoes. She left one daughter, Mary, at home with instructions to come out at once and tell her as soon as the body was found.

The older daughter, Agnes, went along to work in the field. They worked all day, but in the afternoon the mother became very restless. She began to look back over her shoulder toward town every few minutes.

"What is the matter?" asked her daughter. "You look back all the time."

"They will find Julia's body soon now," replied the mother. "I am looking for some one who will come from town to tell us about it."

It was late in the afternoon and the women were still busy in the brown potato field, when Agnes, the girl, screamed and fell on her knees in the soil.

"Oh, mother!" she shrieked, "there is Julia standing there and she is covered with blood!"

The mother and a companion crossed themselves and fell on their knees there in the field.

"The body is found," said Mrs. Parsek.

They arose from their knees and Mary, the younger daughter, entered the field, hot and flushed.

"They have found the body," she exclaimed excitedly. "It was buried under the doorstop of the blacksmith shop."

And the women left the field and went back to town.

Mrs. Parsek is a woman of more than ordinary intelligence. She is of Polish and Bohemian extraction. She does not like to tell her dreams, because people are prone to laugh at her, but in this instance her story is corroborated on all sides. Mr. and Mrs. Kachenski both say Mrs. Parsek told them her dream and that she had insisted all the time that the body was in the old shop and that Beck had murdered her.

Search was made in the shop for evidence of the crime after the body was exhumed. Between the double walls the little girl's shoes were found. In the forge the charred and partly burned remnants of Beck's undershirt were also picked up.

A box was found in the shop which was probably to have been used later for a coffin. It is thought he intended to take the body up again, place it in a box and remove it to some safe distance away from the old shop. Suspicion fell upon him too suddenly to allow him to carry out his plans, and before he could find a new grave for the little girl he was in jail.

Joe Beck, or, as he is more familiarly known, "Joe Blacksmith," looks every inch of him a degenerate. His forehead is but a narrow strip of skin between bristling hair and bushy eyebrows. His nose and mouth denote lasciviousness and brutality. One of his eyes is minus the pupil, destroyed by a spark from his forge, and he has a baleful and sinister look.

He is married and has a wife and seven children, but he has not lived at home for some time, as his wife would not put up with his cruelty. Three times during as many years he has been arrested and fined for wife-beating. The last time he was arrested he spent ninety days in jail for maltreating his wife. Several months ago the woman left him, and since that time he has been rooming at the home of a friend. He has been addicted to drink and his shop was literally crowded with empty whisky bottles.

Various Thoughts and Reflections.

Through the courtesy of a friend who exchanges with me for Mental Science and Suggestive literature, I have for two years had the pleasure of reading your excellent paper. Should I get where I cannot exchange, the others will go and I shall hold to The Progressive Thinker because it contains it all. For general information on these kindred subjects and mental uplift, I have never met its equal. I have long been an over-curious and interested investigator and experimenter.

Elder Myrick's letter that raised such an outcry, was fine nevertheless.

Will C. Hodge's expose of Sylvester & Co. was well, for their advertisements make one feel nauseated. It is a surprise that they should be tolerated by Dr. Parkyn.

Every one that files protest against Hudson has my hearty amen. When T. J. Hudson lays aside dogmatic theorizing and becomes a thorough and conscientious investigator, he will dearly wish he could blot out some of his false record.

The Stevenson letter and the peculiar case of changed personality in a recent issue were things to furnish many an hour of deep reflection. I have no doubts of the verity of either. It is regretful that the Stevenson letter can not be sung from every pulpit in the land; yet I can not see how any Spiritualist—as I understand Spiritism from The Progressive Thinker—which is all the knowledge I have of it—can do without that same old persecuted Bible, or some parts of it at least. As I understand it Spiritualism is but the unaccepted name that fell into as much disrepute with ignorance as did mesmerism. Mental science and magnetic healing cannot very well ignore the scriptures as all these are but various names or manifestations of the same thing, healing by the natural law or God; these words being to my mind, interchangeable terms.

When one is ill he is under the law. When he learns the law or understands God, his own inner self and its relation to the whole, he becomes well, and is no longer under the law but under grace.

Christ was the son of God; so is every man who breathes, though some are like Esau.

The Bible was inspired because all wisdom is inspired; all knowledge is divine; whether it prove good or bad depends on how it is applied.

There are twenty-one methods of healing, plainly set forth and carefully defined in the Bible. All Spiritists believe in this healing. How can they vilify the best text book yet written on that point?

One of the most profuse writers today on the methods and power of healing metaphysically or by the force implanted in original man, and never taken from him—no matter how long or how utterly ignored—has compiled seventy Bible references to healing, a few of which are hardly apropos; but there are pertinent Bible references to life, health, healing to the number of two hundred and thirty which would prove of benefit to every student of natural healing.

"SAVE YOUR SOUL ALIVE."

I am sick of the preacher's only strain:
"Save your soul, save your soul, save your soul!"
I am tired of hearing forever and aye,
The same old song from the pulpit roll.

It seems to me like a selfish cry
This telling a man that the only thing
Of any importance here below
Is saving himself from a future sting.

Far nobler, better, it seems to me,
To tell a man to save some other,
To send him up and down through the world
Seeking and saving his fallen brother.

To put him off from the beaten track,
Out into the hedges of sin and shame,
To teach and toil to the captives bound,
The beauty and glory of virtue's name.

To rescue the starving from sin and death,
To rescue the sinning one from crime,
To preach the gospel of present helps
To the weary ones on the shores of time.

To seek out those whom the world forgets,
To plant a flower on a nameless grave,
To hide the erring one in the heart,
And strengthen it with a purpose brave.

If a man does this, I dare affirm
That he can afford to forego all care
About going to heaven, and give his time
To the work of getting his neighbor there.

JOHN SLATER AND VIDELLE

They Mystify the People of Rockford, and Then Suddenly Take Their Departure With Well-Filled Pockets.

I believe it to be my duty as a Spiritualist who loves the cause and abhors anything detrimental to its best interests, to give to the Spiritualists of the world, through our representatives, the Spiritualistic papers, an account of a recent experience we had here in our city with a medium who gave the name of John Slater. He and his companion, a Mr. Videlle, came here from the Waukesha camp, where my husband and I first met him, and attended a seance given by him while there. The seance was good and very satisfactory to the large audience, most of whom were experienced Spiritualists. He also gave some fine tests one afternoon when he was requested to take Dr. Nellie Moser's place, she being ill and unable to be with us. He was in our city several weeks, during which he gave many seances at his rooms, at the homes of Spiritualists, and one in the K. of P. hall. He also held meetings every Sunday night in the hall, opening with a lecture, apparently inspirational, by Mr. Videlle, followed by tests given by himself and psychometric readings by Videlle.

The cabinet conisted of just one curtain hung across one corner of the room, there being only one small opening in it, about ten inches long and about four and one-half feet above the floor, and considerably to the right of the center.

Before beginning the seance, a musical instrument that is played upon with mallets, was placed upon a small table inside the cabinet, and the audience was invited to thoroughly inspect the cabinet, which some did. Three chairs were then placed in front of the cabinet, resting upon the end of the curtain which lay upon the floor. Then a request was made for two ladies to come from the audience—skeptics preferred—and sit with Mr. Slater. He occupied the center chair, and the ladies sat on each side of him, each holding his hand. Then Mr. Videlle covered them over with a black cloth, pinning it to the curtain behind them, leaving their heads uncovered. Then the audience joined in singing a familiar song, during which there was a lively movement of the curtain, as though hands were slapping it in various places inside the cabinet. Then a lady played several pieces on the organ, which were accompanied by the instrument. After the mallets were handed through the opening above mentioned, a materialized hand was plainly seen by the audience taking the mallets. A tambourine and a bell were also used by the cabinet spirit, sometimes all being played or used at once. Then a new tablet which the audience was requested to examine, and a pencil were handed into the cabinet, and message after message was passed out for members of the audience, Mr. Videlle reading them aloud as they were given him, and the persons recognizing them, going up to receive them. They were long, well written, and signed by the spirits writing them. They were fully recognized and joyfully received, the recipients being nearly all entire strangers to Mr. Slater. I received a sheet containing two messages, one from a schoolmate who passed out when she and I were little girls, more than twenty-five years ago. Her full name was signed. The other message was from a man with whose family I am very intimate, and who has been in spirit life about thirteen years, his name was also signed. They both lived and passed away several hundred miles away from here, and were not known by Slater nor any one in the audience but myself. In the center of the sheet was a full-blown wild rose, with stem, leaves and buds, all painted in natural colors. Under and to one side of it was written, "Wild Rose, the Indian Girl."

In one of my messages I was informed that Wild Rose was my guide, and had given me the flower. In another place was written, "Little Charlie." This I recognized as my infant brother who passed out before I was born, and has been in spirit life over forty years. I have so often heard my parents speak of him as "Little Charlie," when I was a child.

Another long, loving message came for a lady who lives here in the city, but who is not a Spiritualist, and had not been attending any of the meetings or seances. But there were two ladies in the audience who knew her, and it is probable the spirit, a daughter, thought the message would be carried to her mother by one of these ladies.

Before beginning the cabinet seance, two or three messages were written upon a slate held by Mr. Slater and another gentleman and two ladies, the slates and their hands resting upon a table, which was covered over with a black cloth.

Now, there are some Spiritualists here who either through ignorance or jealousy, or both, declared that Slater's cabinet work was all a fake, and that Slater placed a rubber hand in the hand of the lady on his right, and used his own right hand to do the various things I have mentioned above. This is absurd. I would like to ask them if they think it possible for him to wiggle his hand away from the lady's grasp, and substitute a rubber hand, and she not detect him in it? Even if that were possible, he could not get his hand through the solid curtain, and over the backs of the chairs, and play the instruments, and write the messages, and paint the flowers, and draw the spirit pictures which were done at some of the seances, and pass them out through the opening far above his head. It is easy for some people to imagine such impossible things, but to do them is another thing. Some of these parties seem to be opposed to most phases of physical phenomena, and they take no Spiritualistic papers, and never attend any of the camps, and therefore are not informed as to the wonderful phenomena taking place in the Spiritualistic field. We would suggest that they read more, and keep posted upon Spiritualistic matters, then they will not be so ready to denounce phenomena, because they have never heard of such things before.

The Spiritualistic papers, books and tracts are so numerous and so cheap, that all Spiritualists should provide themselves with an abunddnce of this soul-food, without which there can only be stagnation and retrogression, while the aim of all Spiritualists should be progression.

We think with Moses Hull, that the phenomena and philosophy must go hand in hand and are inseparable.

The phenomena demonstrate the philosophy.

Mr. Slater, so-called, is without doubt, a good medium, and was recognized as such at the Waukesha camp, by experienced Spiritualists, and it is an easy matter for experienced Spiritualists to detect trickery and distinguish it from the genuine; but there is a sad side to my story, which I have yet to give, and it is owing to this fact that I have said above that I feel it my duty as a Spiritualist to tell it to the Spiritualists of the world. This man Slater, so-called, has a most precious gift, with which he could do a grand and noble work for the cause, if he were so inclined, but it is very evident that he has not the good of the cause at heart, which we have discovered since his departure, but is using this gift only as a means to accomplish an end, and that end is to obtain money under pretenses that are not right. He formed a large developing class here, and promised to give twelve lessons for five dollars. And after the fourth lesson, all of which were certainly good and helpful, he devoting full two hours to each lesson, he and his companion suddenly and unceremoniously disappeared.

It was a mystery to us Spiritualists, that he should leave just at a time when a deep interest had been awakened, and many were attending the meetings and seances who had never investigated before. But within a few days some things came to light, which made it all plain as to his reason for leaving in the manner he did. In giving private readings, he presented some investment schemes to some persons, and induced them to entrust large sums of money into his care to make the investments for them. It is also reported that he pretended to sell charms which he claimed would bring the purchaser fortune and good luck; and again, it is reported that he told some parties there was gold on their property and for a stated amount he would locate it for them.

It seems that all of these victims were widows, so far as we know. It is a disgrace and a detriment to the grand cause of Spiritualism to allow it to be represented by such an unscrupulous man, and he should be kept out of our camps, and be given no opportunity whatever to deceive the people, whose confidence and favor he gains through his mediumship, and he should receive his just deserts by being subjected to the legal punishment that is administered to others who commit like offenses.

And it is to be hoped that people will learn better than to entrust large sums of money to a stranger, and also that so-called charms are useless, and only the ignorant and superstitious ever take any stock in them. Slater is a spare-built man, about five feet and six or seven inches in height, with brown hair and blue eyes, and a smooth face. His companion Videlle, is also spare and about the same height. He has dark hair and wears glasses, his eyes having the appearance of being somewhat inflamed and sore. He wore side whiskers while here. It is probable they take a new name every place they go, and perhaps change their personal appearance as much as possible, but their work will doubtless be the same, which I have described minutely so they may be easily apprehended.

If any of the readers of The Progressive Thinker know where they are located, there are some persons here who would like to know of their whereabouts, and any information concerning them can be sent to my address.

I don't think it right for Spiritualists to keep quiet and let him go on deceiving the people, while representing the cause of Spiritualism.

I am informed by a gentleman who claims to know the real John Slater, that he is a very tall, slender man, about six feet and two inches in height, with rather dark hair, and that he is a very fine inspirational lecturer and test medium. This does not tally with the appearance and work of our subject who gives his name as John Slater, except in the test work. He, of course, takes the name of John Slater, where the real John Slater is not known, to gain prominence and confidence. I will also add that this man calls himself a palmist and clairvoyant on the cards he places upon his door at his rooms. This may help to lead to his identity. I have some acquaintances who were persuaded by him to take stock in his investment schemes, and if any one reading this, knows of his whereabouts, I would be glad to hear from them. MRS. F. C. First-Class Ignorance Exemplified.

Rev. Joseph W. Miles, D. D., pastor of the South Street M. E. Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., created a sensation a short time ago by his declarations in the funeral sermon he preached over the body of Mrs. Catherine Porter, wife of Nelson Porter, of Washington avenue and Eighth street, Braddock, Pa. The Rev. Dr. Miles, who probably has no knowledge whatever in regard to Spiritualism, is credited in the associated press dispatches with saying:

"The greatest fraud of all the history of humanity is Modern Spiritualism. Death ends communication with the living. The lips that spoke kind and soothing words are never to move again with blessings. The spirit that was always thinking of those it loved, when in the flesh, can never again appear to us." * * * * *

Here he praises the influence of a Christian mother and ignorantly adds: "The spirits of the departed come not back to us, for when they are gone, they are gone, until the judgment day, and only the remembrance remains to us. Spiritualism is a farce, for it gives nothing."

This unenlightened preacher of the gospel is not posted—is not aware that a large percentage of his flock are people who think for themselves; many have, no doubt, attended "seances," and their attendance at church is a sort of perfunctory affair, merely to "keep in the swim," and sail in "good society." His denunciation of Spiritualism will set people to thinking, and if there are any Spiritualists in Braddock, Pa., we suggest to them that they thank this impertinent preacher for calling attention to this vital matter. He is evidently in gross ignorance of the "holy scriptures," and the teachings of St. Paul in regard to "spiritual gifts." Let him pray earnestly: "Lord, give me pardon for the past, and strength for days to come." For, we are told that "While the lamp holds out to burn,

The vilest sinner may return!"

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

By S. Weil. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents. This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of unterialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion, that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fanby will be superseded by knowledge and facts.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Karezza, makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through more sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

MEDIUMSHIP AND FRAUD

A Western Man Freely and Pointedly Expresses His Views

An Address by S. M. Tucker, Wichita, Kansas.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:—The subject which I have selected as the foundation for what I may say on this occasion is that of "Mediums and Mediumship." In talking upon this subject I can only speak for myself. I am always ready and willing to do all that I can for the cause of true Spiritualism as I understand it.

Spiritualism is my religion. It embraces all that is good and true in all systems of religion. It is the religion of humanity. I have investigated its phenomena and studied its philosophy until I have become satisfied of its absolute truth. I know that my friends who have passed through the change we call death still live as individuals. I also know that under proper conditions they make their presence known to me, and communicate with me. The spirit friends of other people do the same thing. There are certain persons in whose presence our spirit friends are able to make their presence known, and in various ways communicate with mortals. These persons we usually speak of as mediums. Scientists and men of great learning call these persons psychics or sensitives, but as I am neither a scientist or a man of great learning, I prefer to call them by the old name of mediums.

This subject, of mediums and mediumship is one of the most important of anything pertaining to Spiritualism, and it is a subject but little understood by Spiritualists or by the mediums themselves. There ought to be a better understanding on this subject, the laws which govern mediumship, spirit control and spirit communion. If we all understood these things and the laws which govern them, we would have less contradictions and absurdities connected therewith.

It is by and through the manifestations which are produced by and through the different phases of mediumship that we learn nearly all that we know about spirit return, which constitutes Spiritualism itself. Now what I understand by a medium is a person whose organism is such that it can be used by spirits as an instrument for producing certain phenomena, and through which they can communicate with mortals. They might very properly be called "messengers." I will now give you my views upon this subject, based upon what I have seen and heard and what I have read. While I am not a medium myself as far as I know, I have made the subject a careful study for many years, and will give you some of the conclusions I have arrived at by my observations and investigation.

There are, as you know, mediums of various kinds, and they are used for various phases of phenomena and they have various degrees of development. We have mediums who are used by spirits for what we call physical manifestation, such as rapping, table-tipping, slate-writing, automatic and independent writing, talking through trumpets, painting pictures, and partial and full-form materialization. We also have mediums for manifestations of a mental character, such as trance, inspiration, clairvoyance, clairaudience and psychometry. All these phases have their uses; that which will satisfy one inquiring mind will not satisfy another. All these phases are used by spirits for the purpose of manifesting to, and communicating with mortals. I will not take your time in describing these various kinds of mediumship. You all know something about them, and many of you probably know more about them than I do.

For some reason all mediums have been objects of suspicion on the part of the skeptic, the religious bigot and a class of people which I call professional fraud-hunters. These people are so constituted that they are all the time looking for fraud and they often find it where none exists. I am sorry to say that this faculty of being always suspicious is not entirely absent among Spiritualists themselves, and I am especially sorry to say that there is sometimes ground for suspicion, but not a tenth part as much as is claimed by our enemies. Unfortunately there are a great many people in this world who are so dishonest themselves that they actually think everybody else is dishonest. This is true in business, politics, and religion. There are a great many people too pious to be honest. I will not say one word against true piety. I am talking about that kind of piety which is ninety-nine percent pretense and only one per cent substance; that kind of piety which puts on a long and solemn face on Sunday, goes to church two or three times on that day and thanks the Lord that they are a little better than other people, and spends the other six days of the week trying to cheat their neighbors out of what belongs to them. That kind of piety, which, when asked for bread, feeds the sufferers on tracts or gives them a copy of Watts's hymns or Baxter's Saint's Rest. The world is too full of that kind of piety.

When we hear a person spoken of as a very pious or religious person, we are apt to inquire, is he moral, is he honest? But when we hear a person spoken of as a moral and honest person, we never think of inquiring whether he is religious or not. If a man is moral and honest, I care nothing for his religion. I place honesty and morality above piety and religion. There are many people in the world so constituted that they had rather lie and deceive on five years' time without interest than to be honest and tell the truth for cash in hand. This is an unfortunate condition of things, but, alas, too true. Mediums come in contact with all these classes of people at their circles and seances, while all classes of mediums have to meet the investigator, the skeptic, and the fraud hunter. It is the medium for physical manifestations who is subject to the most abuse, and is most apt to be called a fraud and denounced as an impostor, and they are the ones least prepared to defend themselves against such charges. It matters not how honest a medium may be, there is always some one ready to denounce him or her as a fraud or a fakir.

There are a great many people who are always ready to condemn anything and everything which they cannot understand. While the medium for physical manifestations has all these things to contend with, the trance medium, the inspirational speaker and psychometrist, if one of them should make a mistake in speaking or in giving tests may escape the charge of fraud by laying their failures or mistakes to their spirit spirit guides or controls. But woe to the medium for physical manifestations if one of them goes wrong in the smallest particular! If any member of a circle composed of all sorts and conditions of men and women, from honest Spiritualist and honest investigator down to the professional fraud-hunter and professional exposer, fail to get what they want or what they demand under conditions about which they know nothing and care less—conditions which they help to make, the cry of fraud goes up and is echoed and re-echoed, and they make themselves into a pack of howling wolves upon the track of the poor innocent medium. This cry of fraud is repeated and grows with each repetition.

Who ever heard of a lie becoming smaller by repetition? This subject of mediumship, which, as I said before is but little understood by Spiritualists themselves and mediums, is a subject about which the outside world knows absolutely nothing.

In my investigation of Spiritualism and mediumship, I have learned an important fact connected with the subject, and that is, that persons who are so constituted as to become spirit mediums, and are susceptible to spirit influence, are also subject to the psychological or magnetic influence of spirits still in the body, so that the composition of the circle or audience has much to do with success or failure of the seance. Those who have attended many seances have noticed the difference in the results with the same medium, but with a different circle, so you will see that the medium is not always to blame for failures. There are honest mediums and, no doubt, there are dishonest mediums. There are honest preachers and there are dishonest preachers. There are honest circles and there are dishonest circles. There are honest men and women in this world and there are those who are dishonest. There are honest spirits on the other side of life and there are dishonest spirits there. There is no law that I know of that will permit the one class to return and manifest through the mediums and not the other.

The passing of a dishonest man or woman to the spirit side of life does not at once make him or her honest and truthful. They carry with them into that life the same moral, intellectual and spiritual character which they had here. In our investigations we should never forget that spirits are not all possessed of great knowledge, and while they may have the very best of intentions, they may have a great lack of wisdom. I believe as a rule that ignorant goodness is about as apt to do harm as intelligent badness, if not too bad.

As before intimated the imperfections apparent in mediumship are not all on the part of the medium. Much of it may be attributed to the circle or sitter, and much to the ignorance of spirits who attempt to do that which they do not know how to do. This should not be considered strange as it is not the intellectual or moral condition of spirits which give them the power to influence mediums; neither is it the intellectual or moral condition of the mediums which render them susceptible to spirit influence; and then consider as an important factor the ignorance or dishonesty and consequent egotism of the circle or audience. Dense ignorance and great egotism are too often found in the same individual.

We know that vast multitudes have passed and are passing to the spirit side who are profoundly ignorant of the laws which govern spirit return and spirit manifestation. I believe that the great majority of mediums are honest, just as honest as any other class of people. All mediums should be honest, all people should be honest, but unfortunately all are not honest. Mediums should be temperate in all things. They should abstain from all kinds of strong drink and from all bad habits, and from all evil associations. They should have true goodness and purity within themselves. They should cultivate calmness of mind, evenness of temper and concentration of thought.

All these things and these conditions will contribute largely to good results, while an opposite course will lead to the bad. These rules of conduct apply with equal force to us all, whether mediums or not.

The law that like attracts like applies with full force in these matters. I believe that as a rule, women are more susceptible to spirit influence than men. Children are generally more susceptible to these influences than adults. This may probably be, owing to their not having formed opinions of their own, and not having so many other things on their minds.

Mediumship should never be considered as a condition of servitude or control. Mediums are under only the same obligations to spirits that spirits are to them. Mediumship may well be considered as a kind of partnership between spirits in the body with spirits out of the body. Neither should try to coerce or control the other. The inhabitants of the spirit world are no worse than those of this world and in many cases no better. Spirits on the other side are actuated by the same motives as spirits on this side. All men, whether in this life or the other, act from a desire for happiness. Some seek it in one way and some in another. Some people think their happiness depends altogether upon the amount of money they can control. Money is their God and they worship no other. Some think their happiness depends upon the amount of political influence they can command. There are some, but unfortunately their numbers are not as large as some of the others, whose happiness depends upon the amount of good they can do to their fellow-men and the amount of suffering they can alleviate. To which of these classes should Spiritualists and mediums belong? I do not think I need to answer this question. Let each one answer it for himself.

We cannot take our money to the spirit world. We cannot look for political preferment in that life, but we will find that the effect of our actions, be they good or bad, will go with us beyond the grave. Which should our mediums prefer in the practice of their mediumship? The good of their fellowmen or the amount of money they can accumulate? As I said before, I believe I know that a very large proportion of our mediums, public and private, are honest—just as honest as any class of people.

During the last fifty years I have sat with a great number of mediums for almost every phase of manifestation. I have sat with them under the most crucial test conditions, and when no test conditions were required, and have found but little difference in the results. I for one do not believe in so-called test conditions in our seances, public or private. I look upon them as an insult to the medium and a disgrace to Spiritualism. I never attended a seance in my life expecting to be defrauded, and with one or two exceptions I do not believe I ever have been. I have attended seances where some one in attendance could see oceans of fraud, but I failed to discover any, and I know I was as careful and as capable of detecting fraud as any one present. The wish is often the father of the thought. The desire to discover fraud often makes a person believe he has found it where none exists. Besides this there are some persons who will attend a seance and then willfully and persistently lie about it.

Friends, you may have discovered by this time that I am a friend of mediums and do not believe in this eternal cry of fraud. I believe that mediums may attain to that degree of growth and development, that they can at once recognize, not only the character but the actual identity of spirits who attempt to influence them. Many mediums have reached that condition, and I believe it should be sought by all. The mere giving the name of a great man or woman who has passed over is not sufficient evidence that the spirit manifesting is the one he or she claims to be. This is important, for I have no doubt that there is a class of spirits who take delight in and are intent upon deceiving mediums, and trying in that way to impede and if possible stop the growth and spread of Spiritualism.

There are certain portions of the so-called Christian church who have found out that they could not stop spirit manifestations, and having to admit the facts, have determined if possible to control and direct them. Here is where the Jesuits of every class, in and out of the body, are reaping their greatest harvest. The passing of one of these church men or women from this to the spirit side does not in any way change their character or aims. They are still intent upon building up and perpetuating their own creeds and dogmas. There are crank mediums whom this class of spirits can control. They are generally very pious. They rave at science and deny reason. They oppose most bitterly the advancement of true and unadulterated Spiritualism. They usually preface their discourses or seances with most pious and penitential prayers and invocations to some imaginary Deity. They have a kind of spurious, half-baked kind of Spiritualism, which they call Christian Spiritualism, Christian Science or some other name; anything but pure Spiritualism as taught by the good and advanced spirits from the other side. They have and encourage a kind of ecclesiastical or churchly Spiritualism. They send their children to sectarian Sunday-schools; attend orthodox churches themselves, and in many cases join them. These Jesuitical spirits which I have spoken of are adepts in all kinds of craft and deception. They practiced it when on earth, and they still teach the same from the other side. With this kind of teaching and such examples, what can we expect? With them, mankind has no rights. Man owes no duty to his fellow-men but everything to God. From their standpoint, a belief in their God is heaven; disbelief is hell. Their God hates pure Spiritualism, so they must hate and persecute the believers therein.

As far as spirit influence and spirit teaching is concerned, we have nothing to fear from any claim of spirits but the religious bigot. As to earth-bound and undeveloped spirits, we can help them, but not the religious ones. They think they need no help. To assist the weak and undeveloped spirits to overcome the craft and deception of these Jesuitical ones, is one of the grand objects of the spiritual movement. Then let all mediums, as far as possible, learn the character and intention of all spirits seeking to influence them. Try the spirits and see that their intentions are good.

Do not allow any spirit who is disposed to deceive and practice fraud upon mediums and the people to control you at any time. When all of our mediums are able and willing to do this we will have better results and much of the prejudice now existing against mediums will disappear. Perhaps no one thing has stood more in the way of genuine and successful mediumship than pecuniary dependence. Public mediums should be so well supported that no fear of poverty could interfere with their usefulness.

The Greeks more than two thousand years ago took much better care of their mediums or oracles, as they were then called (which are the same), than we do now. They never compelled or allowed their medium to plan, or as we call it hustle, for their living. Their mediums were provided with homes and supported by the public. Just think for a moment of the mediums or oracles of Delphi or Dodona having to take in washing for a living, while acting as mediums or messengers between the spirits and mortals. This or its equivalent is what many of our mediums have to do or starve or quit the business. The Greeks built temples for their mediums. The principal building in the city of Delphi was the temple of Apollo, which was the home of their oracles or mediums, and from which their communications were delivered. Their oracles were next to their Gods. They looked upon these communications as the expression of the will of their Gods. Of course, we look upon the communications which we receive from the spirit world in a somewhat different light, but our mediums should be cared for much better than they are. Many people complain of the selfishness and money-getting propensities of our mediums. Who are to blame for this condition? I answer the Spiritualists themselves. We have compelled many of our best mediums to make commerce of their mediumship or starve. We have left many of the most delicately organized and the most sensitive ones among us to buffet alone the cold, unfeeling, selfish, and money-loving conditions of the world.

And when one of them has faltered and perhaps given away to temptation, instead of flying to their rescue, too many of us have been, if not ready to worry and persecute them, we have stood by and let them sink still lower instead of trying to help them to retrieve themselves and regain their former position of usefulness.

I say shame on such Spiritualism!

We should hide our heads if we could from the eyes of the angels who gather in pity around these unfortunate ones, until we have provided such conditions as their needs demand. My opinion is, and has been for years, that the proper way to treat public mediums is to employ them by the year, month, or some other stated time at such salary as can be afforded and agreed upon, and thus remove these temptations from them; then give them the very best conditions possible and we may expect good results.

The Christians pray daily to their God not to lead them into temptation and to deliver them from evil. It seems to me that we should not allow our mediums to be led into temptation, but should keep them from evil, or deliver them from it. There is a great deal of what is called evil in the world. We should see as little of it as possible.

There is much good in the world. Let us see and enjoy as much of it as we can. To be constantly on the lookout for the worst side of things instead of the best, is a great waste of our energies and a great hindrance to our progression. To impart a wrong motive to an act when we can just as easily impart a good one is to do our own souls an injury as well as the other party.

I know and so do you, that when we come to spiritual matters, we find a great many people who are never satisfied with anything they see or hear. And I am sorry to say that some of this class are professional Spiritualists. Don't let us forget that mediums take more or less of the conditions, mental, spiritual, and to some extent physical of those composing the circle or audience before which they appear.

In a circle composed of sordid, selfish, and fraud-hunting men and women, the medium must be most perfectly developed and surrounded by powerful spirits or he or she would be about as likely to be under the psychological influence of the circle as that of spirits. Mediums have a right, and it is their duty to refuse to sit in and for such circles. The law of self preservation gives them that right, and they should not be afraid to use it.

Now, friends, I feel that I have taxed your patience long enough. In conclusion I desire to say that I am a friend to all honest mediums, and when I am satisfied that a medium is honest, I will stand by him or her, though all the world should turn against them. I am a friend to all mediums, but I detest the practice of fraud and deception by any one. I hope I may be pardoned for a little repetition. Mediums, be honest! Be true, be true to yourselves and true to the spirit world.

Remember the responsibility which rests upon you, which is that of transmitting to earth's children the glad tidings, "There is no death." Stand for your rights and see that they are respected. Don't be afraid to let your mediumship be known. Let your motto be, to be good and do good.

Now, a word to Spiritualists, and I am done. Stand by your mediums. Hold up their hands. Help them to do their duty. Give them at all times the best conditions possible. Let us all be true to our profession. Let us remember that to us as a people the world must look for its salvation from the burden of superstition which now holds it in bondage. Let us bear the good tidings to all the world, of victory over death and the grave.

SEEKERS AFTER FRAUD.

Do They Always Find What They Look For?

To the Editor:—I have been attending lectures, going to spirit seances, reading various occult works, and I am always on the lookout for fraud—I am an inveterate fraud-hunter. The statement made by some, that if you look for fraud you will always find it, is the veriest rot—false throughout. By looking for fraud with a critical mind, I sometimes am refreshed with the most grand and beautiful truths—giving the lie to the statement that the fraud-hunter always gets what he is seeking for. When I look for fraud I also intently desire the truth. Every Spiritualist should become a fraud-hunter, and at the same time a truth-hunter. I commenced looking for fraud about thirty years ago, when I was swindled out of about $2,000, in a business transaction, by a medium in whom I had perfect confidence. If I had looked for fraud, I would have found it at once. I learned my lesson then—to carefully guard myself against the tricks of friends and foes alike. A dyed-in-the-wool Spiritualist as I am I consider it my sacred duty to weigh all spirit manifestations in the balance of reason and common sense. I know every phase of spirit manifestation is absolutely true. I know also that the same is imitated on all sides. The fake ballot test, the fake platform test, the fake materialization and etherealization, etc., are common in our ranks, and are deceiving hundreds, presenting a very dark spectacle.

TRUTH SEEKER.

The Illinois State Association.

The Illinois State Spiritualist Association held its annual meeting, October 14, 1902, at 4203 Evans avenue, Chicago, at 7 p. m. The secretary reported having recently chartered the following societies: Englewood Spiritual Union, Wheaton Spiritualists' Unity Society, and the Fraternal Society of Greenup.

Our esteemed treasurer, Mrs. Dr. Emma Nickerson Warne, having left the body on October 7, 1902, her husband, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, handed in the treasurer's report; it showed that the association had a balance on hand of $121.73. This is the first time in the history of this association that one of its members had passed to spirit life during the term of office. Dr. Emma Warne left her mortal body Tuesday evening, October 7, 1902, and her body was laid away on Friday, October 10.

The following amendments to the constitution were adopted: Sec. 1, Art. 4—The voting members of this association shall be its officers, ex-officio, the regularly chosen delegates from societies chartered by it and individuals who comply with section 2 of this amendment.

Every chartered society shall at or before the time of each annual meeting pay into the treasury 25 cents for each of its members and shall have as many votes upon the floor of the annual convention as the number of regular members upon which it pays annual per capita tax to this association.

Section 2 of Article 4 remains as it is.

Section 3 of Article 4 as adopted: Upon payment of ten dollars by any person will constitute them a life member and entitle them to vote upon all questions.

The following amendments were offered for consideration to be voted upon at our next meeting:

That Article 3 of the constitution of this association be amended by striking out the words on second Tuesday in October, and inserting third Wednesday in February.

That Article 5 of constitution be amended by adopting as section as section 2 thereof: The official board shall have power between annual conventions to receive and accept resignations tendered by its members, and fill by appointment all vacancies occasioned by death, resignation or removal from state until next annual convention, or until successors are duly elected and qualified.

A motion was made that meeting adjourn and election of officers be postponed until February, 1903. This being duly carried, meeting adjourned.

The Boss Politicians Cannot Manipulate the Women Voters.

At the recent convention of the joint committees of the Women's Republican Clubs of Colorado, the president of the State League said some significant things and one of them was this: "We must not work under the direction of men. We will work with them, welcome their advice, but we must work under women and only good women." The "machine" politicians cannot be expected to favor equal suffrage when the women talk like that, or like the Democratic Women's Club who said: "We must have our own money and be independent of professional politicians." Pretty soon we will be favored with another batch of anonymous opinions from "prominent" men declaring that woman suffrage in Colorado is a failure. —Ida Husted Harper in New York Sun.

DR. H. V. SWERINGEN.

He Gives His Views on the Modern Method of Medical Treatment, and Shows Its Success.

An article on "Vile Medical Fads" or "Thoughts on the Toxin and Antitoxin Craze," by Hudson Tuttle in The Progressive Thinker of October 18, should not be allowed to pass unchallenged. I intended to reply to it at some length, when I first read it, but was deterred from so doing by an unusual press of professional duties.

That there are "fads" and "crazes" in medical practice is a fact to which all physicians will testify without hesitation, but when a member of the profession has tested by experience the value of any new discovery or treatment for any disease which in its severest form has baffled it in the past, and found it to be all that is claimed for it, it is his duty in behalf of that profession and of humanity, to defend such treatment or discovery.

I have practiced medicine as a regular physician for more than a quarter of a century, and I freely confess that I never saved a case of severe, malignant, laryngeal diphtheria or diphtheritic croup until I made use of the diphtheria antitoxin. I always dreaded and shuddered at being called to a case of diphtheria, knowing that if it should prove a severe one, laryngeal in character, my presence at the bedside would be but a melancholy attendance upon misery which I would be unable to relieve. This is not only my experience, but the the experience of every professional brother with whom I have conversed upon the subject. The fact that antitoxin when used sufficiently early, will cure that class of cases of diphtheria which hitherto invariably proved fatal, is as well established in the minds of physicians who have had any experience with it, as the fact that day follows night.

I have lost but two coses of diphtheria since the introduction of anti-toxin and those were delicate children at their best, to whom I was called after eight and ten days had elapsed from the beginning of their attacks, and when they were already very near the stage or condition of articulo mortis. And yet, even in those fatal cases, the great power and potency of the remedy for good was most emphatically demonstrated, for all manifestations of the disease in the throat, larynx, trachea and cervical glands, were completely obliterated in twenty-four hours. But the diphtheritic poison had so overwhelmed the nerve centers, that the one presiding over and controlling the heart's action was unequal to the task of keeping it in operation until the recuperative forces of nature succeeded in establishing convalescence.

It is simply nonsense for any individual either in or out of the profession to endeavor to argue a physician out of the undeniable facts of his experience. Diphtheria antitoxin is the grandest discovery of the centuries. I would not think of treating a member of my own family without it, and if I were refused the use of it in a case in any other family, I would immediately withdraw from the treatment of the patient. I will not treat a case of diphtheria without it, and I would regard as criminally negligent and ignorant any physician who would do so. I know what I know. I am at this writing treating a girl twelve years of age in a family too poor to buy the remedy, but this fact did not deter me from buying it myself and promptly administering it. She had been sick three days before I was summoned to see her, when she presented all the symptoms and conditions of a threatened fatal issue. It is now forty-eight hours since I gave her the antitoxin and she is convalescing. No manner of argument or suasion can dispossess me of the facts of my own experience.

"Spiritual Baptism Heathenish."

To the Editor:—In your issue of Sept. 20 appears an article with the above title. The Rev. Dr. R .S. McArthur seems to have struck an extreme position when he said that Baptism was of heathenish origin and pernicious in practice. There must always be two sides to a question, and to get at a happy "mean" between two extremes seems to be the utmost satisfactory and perhaps the correct position. Some time ago, the writer was of the same opinion as Mr. McArthur, but having discovered the origin and the true meaning, as well as the uses of that sacred rite, I now wish to give the knowledge to your many thousands of intelligent readers in the hope of advancing the cause of truth. First, then, baptism, was first ordained by God through an inspired person under the dispensation of Zarathustra or Zoroaster. It was decreed that, upon the birth of a Zarathustrian child, the Rabah, or priest of the order shall visit the house of the parents and he shall in the presence of friends baptize the child by dropping a few drops of water on its head from a rod previously dipped in water; and be it known, it is from misconstruing this very ancient practice, that it was evolved into the saying: "Spare the rod and spoil the child."

Now, this should have truthfully been rendered: "Spare the rod by not baptizing, and you spoil the child's chances in its entrance into the spirit world, in case it should die in infancy."

Now, as to the true uses of baptism, it is given in these words: "And if it die in infancy, it shall be received, not with the children of the irreligious, in heaven, but in such a place as will enable the parents to visit it after their death, with delight, that it may not fall into the hands of low, lying spirits after death!"

Dear reader, just think of the almost fiendish, aye, devilish practice which has prevailed throughout christendom, of whipping and torturing the dear children, and then think of the sins that parents in their ignorance have committed, all on account of this false rendering of an ancient tradition, some 8,900 years ago.

In its original form the decree of baptism was only intended to protect the child, instead of punishing it, having been sealed with water into the sacred presence of those who lived under the law of God, on earth!

Spiritualists have a beautiful and celestial ceremony of baptism, with flowers, instead of water, and they should know the beauty and importance of this heaven-ordained rite. For authority, see page 289 of the New Bible, "Oahspe."

THE FAITH THAT SAVES.

When heart grows cold and courage fails,
And black-faced Doubt the soul assails—
When shadows grim and dark doth stand
Around thee like a spectral band—
When earth seems drear, devoid of light,
And angel Hope hath taken flight
And winged her way to realms unknown,
Until it seems thou art alone
Amid the countless throngs of earth,
Where joy doth mock and harmless worth
Burns like a brand within thy soul,
And then thou feel'st like cursing all,
Would in Lethean waters cast
Thy burdens and thyself at last—
When, bursting from thy pent-up soul,
One agonizing prayer doth roll
To Universal God of Life
To stay the torrent, calm the strife,
To oil upon the waters pour
Till waves shall lash thy soul no more:
Then stillness seems somehow to creep
Into thy heart; its sorrows sleep;
Then comes a sweet, soft, distant strain
Of music; like the gentle rain
It falls upon thy troubled soul,
Inducing peace, doth all control.
'Tis then the Father's voice is heard,
In loving accents comes His word:
"Abide in me; I will not fail
To guide thy bark beyond the veil.
Doubt not my love; no more distrust,
For when thou dost, suffer thou must:
For thou hast broken then the tie
That held thy soul; it then must die
From lack of love, the angel life,
And perish 'midst earth's doubt and strife.
Renew the union; keep it strong;
Let wisdom guide thy bark along:
Living in me, as I in thee,
Then here immortal life thou'lt see."

Immortality a Fact of Nature.

To the Editor:—The following is from an address delivered by Dr. J. E. Roberts, the Liberal lecturer who speaks every Sunday to some 2,000 people in Kansas City, Mo. I perfectly agree with what he here says and I thought the readers of your most valuable journal might like to read it.

H. L. GREEN.

The only consistent theory of immortality is that it is a fact of nature, if it is at all. It does not depend upon any religious belief, or any complexion of religion whatever. If it is, it exists as a fact of nature. The man that does not believe it does not destroy the fact; the man who does believe it does not make it any more a fact. A man to have immortality does not need to prove it, or demonstrate it, or even to believe in it, if it be regarded as a fact of nature.

The world has never been able to formulate a satisfactory working idea of future existence. The church attempted that and failed. It is beyond the reach of our imagination to picture where they live, if they live, or what they do, if they do anything but sleep. The thought of the future life has been confused and complicated by these attempts of men to explain what the future is. The Christian world, for the most part, has settled down upon those two antithetical ideas—the heaven of joy, the hell of punishment. There is nothing in either of them but what a good man would shun. The inane heaven has no attraction. The selfish, cruel, heartless joy is abhorrent to every man and woman with a truly human heart. No one wants heaven if while they are rejoicing any they love or any they do not love must be consuming in quenchless fires. And the other place with only punishment is just as useless and unmeaning and unworthy a rational destiny or a rational God.

The only idea of a future world that approaches common sense is the idea of the much abused Spiritualists. They speak of the life beyond as a continued responsibility, a continued moral obligation, and continued opportunity; in other words, they represent the world beyond as a place of progression. They do not make it unnatural or inhuman. They say that after a man is dead he is the same man, no better, no worse. It is the only rational conception of the world beyond. If to die is to forget; to become something different; to no longer know and love those who have loved us here, then immortality has nothing that a good man wants. It would be better, a thousand times better, to die and turn back to dust than to wake up to immortality and be utterly indifferent and forgetful towards those who had made life divine in this world. The idea that there is a changing or transforming power in death proves too much. If we are to lose, and lose at once, all of our imperfections and limitations, then we may at the same time lose our virtues and our excellencies, if we have any, our loves and our friendships, too. If, on the other hand, it is but a continuation; if, after a man is dead, it takes him a little while to find out that he is dead; if, indeed, it is so much like living that he must look at the body that he is now freed from and say to himself, "That was mine, it was not I;" if they are right about that, and we take up life exactly where we laid it down, and remember and love, then there is nothing appalling or hideous about death. It is of a great deal of moment to me that they took away the old limitations of the universe and left no localized spot for heaven. It is much more congenial to my thought to believe that when anyone dies he does not need to hurry away from the world, if he does not want to; he can tarry—to believe that there is no throne before which he must be brought for judgment; no angry judge to separate the good from the bad, any more than there was while we were in the flesh. If a man separated himself from the bad here, he did it by his own volition; if he chose the good, he chose them because he preferred the good; if he lived in light, it was because he loved the light; if he walked in dark and shadowy places, it was because he loved the darkness rather than the light.

HE'S GIVING AWAY A FORTUNE

A BOOK FOR EVERY HOME

A Masterpiece of Philanthropy by Hon. James R. Kenney, Ex-Mayor of Reading, Pa.

HON. JAMES R. KENNEY.
The man who is giving away a fortune in books

Hon. James R. Kenney, ex-Mayor, is giving away a fortune in books. He is putting them right into the homes of the people absolutely without cost or trouble to them save the small trouble of writing. He has had prepared and printed the most remarkable work on personal magnetism, hypnotism and how to succeed in life that has ever been written. It is brimful of intensely interesting and practical information. It is just what the young man needs who is starting in life to give him vim, push and energy; to make him magnetic, to enable him to overcome obstacles and surmount every difficulty to success. It is just what the middle-aged man needs to enable him to win and hold friends, to become a leader in his community, to influence and sway the minds of his business associates and make his mark in life. It is just what every father and every mother needs to eradicate bad tempers and evil inclinations in children, to strengthen their moral faculties, banish diseases and make them grow to be men and women such as God intended they should be.

It is just what every minister of the gospel needs to help him hold the wavering steadfast in their faith, to help him turn the minds of the wicked toward morality, honesty and right-doing. It is just what every lawyer needs to help him influence juries, control witnesses and to deliver his argument in that forceful, convincing manner which carries conviction with every word. It is just what you need, no matter who you are or what you do, to enable you to get out of life the success, pleasure and happiness which the Creator intended should be yours. If you are not successful, if you are not making money, it is because you do not know that secret power that rules the thoughts and minds of men. If you are already successful, you can become more successful if you will but master the hidden forces around you. Learn to use the secret magnetic power with which nature has endowed you.

Ex-Mayor Kenney's book proves every one is born with this mighty subtle power; that any one can easily develop it at home without the knowledge of his intimate friends or associates, and influence people secretly to carry out his thoughts and ideas. It certainly is a wonderful force, capable of infinite good.

"Hypnotism truly reveals the secrets of life and the mysteries of nature," writes J. H. Schneller, 1012 Avon street, La Crosse, Wis. "My own father could not have convinced me of its wonderful power if I had not actually tested it for myself. I consider a knowledge of it invaluable to those who wish to get the most out of life; to those who wish to achieve success and live up to the full measure of their possibilities."

J. R. Gaskins, Newport News, Va., writes: "I must admit that I doubted very much that hypnotism could be practically taught. In four days after receiving your work, however, you demonstrated to my entire satisfaction that I was never further from the truth in my life. I have met with wonderful success. Your free book is the finest thing of the kind I have ever seen."

A. C. Byers, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "If any fault could be found with your instruction it would be that you give too much, thereby giving too many people the opportunity to acquire great secrets that have been guarded and known only by a very few for centuries—secrets that confer upon the possessors a wonderful power over their less informed friends."

Rev. John Leverling, of Brownville, Neb., writes: "You are engaged in a glorious work. Hypnotism sets us free from poisonous drugs. I have just cured a case of throat and lung trouble, which the doctors had pronounced incurable. I am applying your teachings every day. I congratulate you upon your work for suffering humanity."

Ex-Mayor Kenney ordered printed three months ago 10,000 copies of his new book for free distribution. The first copies are just now coming off the press. They are elegantly illustrated with the finest engravings, and will prove a valuable addition to any library. If you would know all about hypnotism, the wonder science of the age, personal magnetism, thought force, magnetic healing and kindred sciences, write for a free copy of this remarkable book at once. It will be sent to your address postpage prepaid. You will be delighted, mystified and benefited more than words can tell. Nothing like it has ever before been printed. Ex-Mayor Kenney is giving them away for the benefit of the public. He believes by so doing he is accomplishing more good than by donating his money to hospitals, public libraries or anything of this nature. He gives you a book worth more to a young man than a college education. He gives it to you for your own personal use, to keep in your library or to carry with you. On account of the great expense in preparing and printing this book only those are requested to write who are especially interested in bettering themselves in life and who actually wish to make practical use of the information given in the book.

If you want a free copy, write at once to C. C. Gilliland, secretary to Ex-Mayor Kenney, office P.L.5, 420 Walnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Aristocracy.

Have we any of that ancient relic of superstition, of monarchy and tyranny in our grand and noble cause?

Have we those within our ranks who, on account of the extent of their financial successes, or on account of the money at their command seek to hold others down as slaves?

Have we those among us who would deprive others of their rights, their liberty, their pursuit of happiness, or who are so thoughtless of the wants, the needs of others as to use in wasteless extravagance their thousands or their millions of surplus wealth?

Have we the bigotry and arrogance that often come with rapid success, and that usually accompanies possession, ownership, greed and power?

Have we the egotism to make us forget that while we are in possession of a great truth, we are only in the primary class of knowledge yet, and there is no way of procuring a patent or forming a trust thereon?

Have we reached that period of superiority that we must consider ourselves chief among the many; the only?

Why should we fear the absorption of Spiritualism by the church or even the world?

Spiritualism has simply brought a truth, or the knowledge of a great truth into the world, not for itself but for all mankind, and when that truth shall have been universally accepted by the world's people Spiritualism will have fulfilled its mission and new truths will then spring up, which may or may not be the outgrowth of Spiritualism, but will be the outworking of truth in some form.

It seems narrow to fear absorption, for if Spiritualism is a truth it is also eternal. If it only carries and promulgates a truth and the world accepts it, the mission of Spiritualism as a distinct institution expires, and the truth goes marching on, whether in the church or upon the streets with a brass band accompaniment. We cannot expect the world to leave off all its pet names and rush towards us with pleadings and implorations for admittance under the name of Spiritualism. We cannot expect the Christian world to forget all the sweetness that has come to it under the name of Catholicism, Episcopalianism, Presbyterianism, etc., and seek shelter under a roof they have so long thought defective.

It is all right to perpetuate the name as long as possible and so we will as long as the name is loved by mortal and immortal man, but the Truth is perpetual. It may be lost sight of for the moment, but it will rise from its obscurity and assert itself again.

Some of the knowledge of the future life is being drilled into the churches. Preachers are preaching of it and from it; members of great congregations visit our mediums and become convinced of the continuity of life. Their mothers, and fathers, and children come back and tell them of another state of existence. They sometimes learn that their beloved pastor has been through the same crucible of investigation, and his sermons are "more advanced."

Spiritualism is not ours, but the world's. It does not belong to us, but we belong to Spiritualism so long as we receive its truth. It may be called by any other name and possess the same truth and as Shakspeare is credited with saying of the rose, "by any other name would smell as sweet," and to many far sweeter.

The Innocent Creatures.

While the Supreme Court of Nebraska has rendered a decision adverse to Bible reading in the public schools of that state, we note that a group of Methodist ladies has registered an earnest call for such reading.

The dear Methodist sisters are apparently innocent of a thought that there are many individuals who are taxed to support the public schools, and whose rights are equal with theirs, to whom the reading of the Bible in the schools would be an affront and an infringement of their rights, as much so as, to these ladies, would be the reading in the schools, of Paine's Age of Reason, or Ingersoll's thrusts at orthodoxy.

If Christian people insist upon Bible reading in the schools, "infidels" may as justly insist upon the reading of "Tom Paine," Voltaire, and Ingersoll.

The correct principle is, to shut out the Bible as well as Paine and Ingersoll. To do otherwise is to contravene the principle of equal rights upon which our government is founded. Neither religion nor irreligion, neither Bible nor Anti-Bible, has a rightful place in our public schools.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

"Gleanings from the Rostrum." By A. B. French. Cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

Modern Religious Thought.

It will be of interest to intelligent, up-to-date Spiritualists, who keep in touch with the various phases of the most advanced thought of the day, to note the trend of the bravest and most thoughtful minds in the leading churches. The time has come when real thinkers can no more be bound and tethered by the staple notions of old-time orthodoxy. An indication of this fact is thus stated by the Chicago Chronicle:

Unmindful of the fate that befell Professor Charles W. Pearson of Northwestern university a year ago, Professor George A. Coe, head of the department of moral and intellectual philosophy at the same institution, has prepared a work in which he unfolds his views on religion. These conflict with Methodist doctrine.

Proof sheets of the book, which is entitled "The Religion of a Mature Mind," were issued yesterday by the Fleming H. Revell Company and at once excited the comment of the ministerial world. The work of a student, the volume expresses many ideas that are in advance of the beliefs held by the majority of the followers of Wesley and a chapter on the "Life of Prayer" contains tenets particularly radical.

Supplication, in the efficacy of which Methodists have ever held absolute faith, is reduced to its philosophical explanation and the belief of Herbert Spencer is reiterated that "Prayer carries its end, its justification, its efficacy in itself."

Although this view in itself is not a radical departure from the opinions held by many ministers in city pulpits, it is expected that storms of discussion and theological debate will be provoked when the volume penetrates to the country towns where the clergy hold less advanced views. Intercession for others is explained on psychological grounds and apparently heretical material is found in the following:

It has been suggested that by a subtle sensitiveness of soul for soul, such such as the term "telepathy" is intended to describe, the man who prays may perform a specific vicarious act for another. Intercession would then become a phase of telepathy and would take its place under the general notion of psychological law. This is not the place for discussing the tenability of such a hypothesis. Yet a warning must be uttered. No such speculation as this should be made into a support or apparent support of prayer, nor should apparent answers to prayer be adduced in support of the hypothesis.

Revivalists and the emotional element among the ministers will find a bitter dose in the following apothems relating to a change that is becoming pronounced in the attitude of the laity toward prayer:

Active consecration rather than passive submission has come to be the mark of sanctity.

The credulous man has been exalted above the man of critical intellect, and tears have been habitually preferred to action.

The volume is based on an outline that embraces the tendencies of the church in its reconstruction. The great changes, it says, are coming. "Christian life is being simplified; its ideals are being socialized; its motives are being intensified."

With these ideas the work sketches the wholesomeness of modern tendencies, reconciles religion and science and attacks as an obstacle the authority assumed by official Christianity. The existence of God is surmised on the ground of experience and the book passes on to the chief end of man.

Here the author reinterprets the Westminster catechism and says that man's chief aim should be a thorough participation in the life of his fellows. In this chapter the new idea is expressed with originality that the future life is not a device for getting even with men or for patching up a universe that is badly put together. What is it to be a Christian? This question that has vexed theologians since the time of Christ is thus answered.

One becomes a republican, remains a republican and establishes his status as a republican simply by voting that way. Just so one becomes a Christian by putting one's self on that side.

Reasons are given for the fact that conversion is going out of date and in an argument for salvation by education the author criticises the Sunday-school as a place whose methods are as "far behind those of the common school as a tallow dip is behind an electric light."

In commenting on a personal experience of religion Professor Coe asserts that Christology ought not to be discussed with persons who are in a skeptical attitude. The most important contribution to religious thought for the current year ends with the statement that Christianity is a life rather than a system of doctrine.

Prof. Lockwood's New Book.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth—Based Upon the Principles of Natural Philosophy and the Co-relations of Nature's Elements, Energies and Forces." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. A supply of this new and important book has been received and is now on sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price $1. Cloth bound. It makes a valuable addition to a library, being a work for thinkers.

The Burning Bush and Burning Hell.

The Burning Bush is a journal edited by Duke M. Farson, in the interests of the Holiness sect. In a recent issue the religious views of the sect are set forth, pertaining to hades. In part the editorial reads:

"Peter says that sinful angels were cast down to hell, while the revelator says they were cast down into the earth. Peter says, further, that they are chained in darkness, while John says that when the angel from heaven unlocked the bottomless pit the black smoke arose sufficient to hide the sun and the evil angels, like locusts, with Apollyon at their head, came out. The interior of the earth we know to be a flaming, smoking furnace of eternal fire, not only by II. Peter, ii:7, 10, 12, but by the hundreds of belching volcanoes scattered over the surface of the globe upon which we spend our few days of fleeting time.

"The interior of the earth is undoubtedly the abode of the damned, the penitentiary of the Almighty, the 'lake of fire,' the 'perdition of ungodly men.'"

To illustrate this theory the paper contains a drawing of the earth with a section of the surface removed, disclosing this lake of fire, in which are men and women in all sorts of contortionate positions, and standing on a rock is his Satanic Majesty. The flames belching up through the earth are pouring forth through the crater of a volcano.

With a firm belief in the existence of such a place of torment for the "ungodly," is it any wonder that minds are unhinged by the contemplation of such horrors in "the penitentiary of the Almighty?"

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price 25 cents.

ANNOUNCEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.

Our Fall and Winter Campaign will be especially valuable to every thinking mind. The Progressive Thinker never becomes sluggish or stale in any respect. It is a constant incentive to every reflective mind. In order to maintain the interest in Occult and Spiritual subjects we have made arrangements to have several of the lectures by the great English psychic, C. W. Leadbeater, now in this city, reported especially for The Progressive Thinker. Mr. Leadbeater's trend of thought in the domain of the Occult and Spiritual, is of such a character that one is led to think along new lines as they peruse his lucid presentations of his subject. He reasons logically; his ideas are clearly expressed; he speaks from actual experience as a psychic, and he will deeply interest you. The following are among the lectures that we have ordered reported:

1. "Man and His Bodies."
2. "The Necessity of Reincarnation."
3. "Karma—the Law of Cause and Effect."
4. "Life After Death—Purgatory."
5. "Life After Death—the Heaven World."
6. "The Rationale of Telepathy and Mind-Cure."
7. "Invisible Helpers."
8. "Clairvoyance—What It Is."
9. "Clairvoyance—How It Is Developed."
10. "Clairvoyance—in Space."
11. "Clairvoyance—In Time."

The above lectures are not the only attractions that The Progressive Thinker will offer. Carlyle Petersilea's communications will be resumed. They are always read with deep interest. They carry one into the Spiritual domain. There will be other special attractions from time to time and like the boy's definition of salt, "That which makes victuals taste bad when you don't use it," it will make life taste bad to do without The Progressive Thinker.

During the long evenings of the coming winter, while sitting by the fire thinking, dreaming of children far away in the busy marts of life and of those arisen in some fairer land, you will grow sad and weary with life without something to read to remind you of the future. The Progressive Thinker in your home will come like a weekly messenger from the Spirit Land, bringing peace and soul comfort.

Now is the time to send in your subscription, and begin promptly with the soul-feasts, the intellectual harvest of high-class scientific, literary and occult readings. Induce your neighbors to subscribe also, and form your reading circles for the coming season and join us in this good work. Build up the educational side of the cause and perform a lasting deed for your fellow-man. See our special inducements elsewhere in this paper.

Remember, the cause you love so well needs your most hearty support and co-operation here and now, and let us hear from you at once.

Spiritualism in Science.

James Robertson, one of the best writers and erudite scholars of England, has a notable article in a recent number of "Light," from which the following passage is taken:

"There were others besides Darwin who were charmed with the depth and grandeur of Hudson Tuttle's mediumistic writings. 'The Arcana of Nature' was translated into German, and advanced minds of that country saw in this volume a solution of the problems for which the thinking world had been so long looking. When Buchner, the great German naturalist, went to America, and hunted out the author, he was a bit surprised to find that he was a poor farmer, toiling for his daily bread. And of course Buchner could not accept Tuttle's statements as to the source of his inspiration. Who that has not some close acquaintanceship with mediums could believe that a farmer's boy, without books, education, apparatus, with none of the appliances of schools, not even cultured surroundings, could launch upon the world books at once philosophical and profound, commencing with the construction of the atom, and ending with the laws of spirit life? The observer of mediumship in its rarer forms has no difficulty at all in accepting Tuttle's words as to the cause of such phenomena. 'For years,' he says, 'I have been led through the paths of science by invisible guides, who have manifested the earnest zeal of a father for a feeble and truant child. From these invisible authors I draw the concealing veil.' And this mediumship of Tuttle's began with moving of tables and other objects; common, vulgar table-rappings, so often derided, but which has ofttimes opened the door to higher realms where we get linked on in companionship to the wise and true.

"As showing the spirit's action in the realm of science, I would point out that Darwin takes some of his statements on the origin and antiquity of man in his great work, 'The Descent of Man,' and acknowledges the indebtedness, from Hudson Tuttle, whom all Spiritualists know to be what is called a spirit medium. Tuttle's own words in defining his position are so clear that no one can misread them: 'Mine is the task of the amanuensis, writing that which is revealed to me. I have faithfully, carefully, and conscientiously presented my impressions as they have been given me by my masters, the invisible spirits, claiming neither the honor nor dishonor pertaining thereto.....Ever have I been cheered by the presence of spirit friends and bathed in their magnetism been supremely blessed.' We almost wonder whether Darwin would have looked upon the writings of Tuttle as an authority had he known that the inspirers claimed to be spirits, and that the books written through Tuttle were part of the phenomena which make up the fabric of Spiritualism."

The quotation from Darwin referred to is as follows:

"The Descent of Man," by Charles Darwin, 1901 edition, published by John Murray. "I have taken some of the above statements from H. Tuttle's 'Origin and Antiquity of Physical Man,' Boston, 1866, p. 35."

The statement in regard to Buchner might and should be made much stronger. The reader of his great work on which his fame depends, "Matter and Force," will clearly see from numerous passages taken as mottos at the beginning of its chapters, and in the structure of the work, that he was influenced by it as by no other and that had he not given it careful study his great work would have been written on different lines. And here is presented the anomaly, and paradox, of what is regarded by materialists the world over, as a classic work of unimpeachable authority, depending for its facts and basic conclusions, on a work professedly of spiritual origin, written for the express purpose of giving a foundation for a scientific interpretation of the material and spiritual world.

Spirit Manifestations Common to All Classes.

As set forth in the Chicago American, Annie Jacobsen, a juvenile mystic, appeared in the West Chicago Avenue Police Court to-day—October 20.

She wanted to be a martyr. She said she had been called to suffer by a vision. She declared that she had been elected to be a preacher and a missionary, and that she had been commanded to save souls by a mandate from heaven.

Annie is a tall, thin anaemic, fifteen-year-old girl, with full-lidded, imaginative blue eyes, an emotional mouth and the hypersensitive features and visionary expression of the religious mystic.

With her was her mother, a comfortable-looking, prosperous-appearing, middle-aged woman, with a kindly, good-humored expression and a practical cast of features.

For almost a year, she declares, she has been tortured by the fear that her daughter would become a religious maniac.

Time after time, she says, the girl has been seized with religious frenzy and has gone about in the streets jumping up and down, singing hymns, preaching and shouting. Hour after hour, she declares, the child has been on her knees in the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church doing penance for the commission of imaginary sin. Once, she says, the girl went into a trance and remained in the church all night long.

The girl was seized with a religious frenzy and began to scream and exhort the people in the church. Mrs. Jacobsen appealed to a policeman who was standing near by and the girl was taken to the station and locked up for the night.

Shortly before noon to-day Evangelist Duke M. Farson, head of the Metropolitan church, telephoned to the authorities at the West Chicago Avenue Station and inquired upon what charge Annie Jacobsen was detained at the station and whether it would be necessary for him to get a writ of habeas corpus to secure her release. He was informed that the authorities had become satisfied as to the girl's sanity and that the examination by the Cook County physician had been waived. Shortly after noon the child was released and she went home with her mother.

Not long ago Duke M. Farson had her mother arrested on charges of attempting to whip the religious ecstasy out of the child and locking her up and not permitting her to go to church. The case was brought up in the Juvenile Court and Judge Tuthill ordered Mrs. Jacobsen to let the girl attend the meetings. Since then, however, the girl's visions and frenzies have increased and Mrs. Jacobsen has been induced by fear for her child's reason to lock her in the house.

Annie admits that she sees visions and hears voices. When asked about her religious estates to-day, she lifted up her large, full, limpid blue eyes and said simply:

"I see with the spiritual vision. The Divine face has appeared to me. The Divine voice has called to me. I am going to be a missionary in Africa.

"Why do you want to be a missionary in Africa?" she was asked.

Annie smiled into space as if a vision were then before her eyes and said: "Because I love souls."

"And what do you want to do there?"

"I want to bring salvation to souls. There are many souls that need salvation. I preached last night to the policeman who arrested me because I thought he might need salvation. I came to the station with him because I thought I might find souls here that need salvation. I would be willing to stay here all my life if I could bring salvation to souls."

"Then you would like to be a martyr?"

Annie clasped her hands on her hollow breast and sighed ecstatically.

"Ah, yes; I am ready—ready even for that," she whispered.

"And you will keep on opposing your mother in order to be a missionary?"

Annie looked at her interrogator almost pityingly.

"I have a call," she said simply. "I must obey it. I may have to wait, but I shall answer in time. The Lord is in no hurry. He can wait—if I am faithful. And I shall be faithful. They have tried to beat it out of me. They have tried to lock me in. I have stood the beatings and I have escaped from the windows when they have locked the doors. God will protect me. I shall not die until His appointed time."

"What do you consider sin?"

"Singing and dancing and all wickedness."

"But don't you sing and dance at your meetings and in the streets?"

"Ah, but that is different. That is spiritual joy. The Holy Ghost comes down on us and causes us to sing and dance."

"And then, when you are tired out, you go into trances?"

"Yes, and see visions."

"What do you see in your visions?"

"I? I saw the face of our Lord."

"Did He speak to you?"

"Yes. He spoke to me and commanded me to go and preach to the heathen."

Annie spoke in a low, hushed, awe-struck voice. Her manner appeared calm and rational. Her calm blue eyes looked steadily at her interrogator or straight before her into space. She smiled happily now and then as if there were no earthly cares which could disturb her.

When she was released she went home with her mother as quietly and indifferently as she had faced the ordeal of sleeping for the first time in a jail. The fervor of the genuine mystic and visionary upheld her and she was almost unconscious of her temporal surroundings.

In the above we have a fine example of spirit power—the Voices and Visions, perverted to some extent by the bigotry and intolerance of the controlling spirit. It illustrates, too, an important point. Spiritualism has come to the whole world.

It exists in every clime.

To some extent its influence is manifested in every church.

No one has a monopoly of spirit manifestations.

Spiritualists should recognize the fact that spirit manifestations can never be controlled in one channel.

Annie Jacobsen is a living representative of the diffusive, wide-spreading character of spirit influence.

Another fact that should be borne in mind: The difference between the Spiritualism of the Catholic church, and that of exalted Spiritualists, is no greater than that manifested by the different cults that go under the name of "Modern Spiritualism."

Theosophy has a segment of Spiritualism as clear-cut and as expansive as the noon-day sun.

While Spiritualists can not and will not agree among themselves as to certain cardinal principles, should they not be kind and indulgent to those who live in their own spiritual atmosphere outside of their ranks.

Brotherhood.

The crest and crowning of all good,
Life's final star is Brotherhood;
For it will bring again to earth
Her long lost Poesy and Mirth;
Will send new light on every face,
A kindly power upon the race,
And till it come, we men are slaves,
And travel downward to the dust of graves.

Come, clear the way, then, clear the way:
Blind creeds and kings have had their day.
Break the dead branches from the path;
Our hope is in the aftermath—
Our hope is in heroic men,
Star-led to build the world again.
To this Event the ages ran:
Make way for Brotherhood—make way for MAN.

The Champion Quacks.

The biggest quacks in this world, and the most egregious in their quackery, are the "regular" medical school quacks. They can outdo the irregular quacks easily, and not half try; they can quack longer and louder and more persistently than any other class of quacks in existence. They can clothe their quacks in high-sounding phrase of scientific Greek and Latin—not to say Choctaw or Pottawatomie lingo—which gives their quackery a wondrously learned and mysterious appearance of great profundity of wisdom and knowledge, calculated to strike awe in the minds of the simple.

In evidence of the truth of our statement, we present the following from the editorial columns of the Chicago Record Herald:

A writer in The Lancet informs the world that "the operation of gastrectomy is on its trial." He then quotes the opinions of others on this question thus:

Although the entire stomach has been remover for cancer with temporary success, we cannot think that the number of cases in which this can be done will be large; nor do we look upon the operation as at all a favorable one. They do not even describe the operation, as "if the growth be sufficiently large to warrant such a severe procedure, it is practically beyond hope of immunity from recurrence."

It is evident that The Lancet's expert has no patience with surgeons who would permit people to retain their stomachs when opportunities for removing them have been offered. Here is his declaration:

It seems to me that in all cases of gastric caricinoma, where operation is advisable at all, gastrectomy is indicated, as, it having been proved that the stomach is not essential for digestion, the more complete its removal the greater should be the probable immunity from recurrence, while the risk is not proportionately increased. If at all possible it is, however, wise, for physiological reasons as well as for ease in operation, to leave a small portion of healthy stomach.

The gentleman should be thanked for his concession as to the small portion of healthy stomach, but why leave any of the stomach if it is not essential for digestion? Why carry a stomach or even a portion of one around just as a matter of form? Describing an interesting operation performed by himself The Lancet's correspondent very interestingly says:

As compared with pylorectomy the operation as performed in this case was easier and took less time, because there was less stomach surface to suture. The cut edges were easily and rapidly brought together with continuous silk sutures (through all the coats) and then the duodenum was implanted into a very small surface of the fundus that was left. Had there been difficulty in approximation I would have closed the duodenum and attached the jejunum.

This plain and unequivocal statement should inspire the public with new confidence in surgery. When it becomes possible in case of difficulty of approximation to close the duodenum and attach the jejunum who can reasonably continue to sit back in doubt? Down with the stomach!

The penchant of the "regular" quacks, to cut and carve the human anatomy on every appearance of an excuse for doing so, is manifest in The Lancet medical writer's effusion, which smacks of the superabundant quackery prevalent among the high-toned "regular practitioners."

For downright quackery, pure and unadulterated, the "regular" quacks are the world's champions. And the champion quacks are not willing that the sick shall be cured by any others than themselves, and by their methods.

Let it not be supposed that we include all "regular" physicians in our category of quacks. The "regular" profession includes many most learned, careful, conscientious and skillful practitioners, whose labors are an honor and a blessing to humanity. Such are in principle and practice far above any title to the name of quacks. Their character, their attainments and their beneficent works exempt them from the appellation. Such are worthy of all honor and esteem.

Mrs. Emma Nickerson Warne.

To Dr. Geo. B. Warne, and Spiritualists of America:—At the first regular meeting of the year, of the N. S. A. board of officers and trustees, held in Boston, October 25, expressions of profound sorrow at the mortal decease of our co-worker and friend, Mrs. Emma N. Warne, were unanimously passed, and a standing vote taken to tender our sympathy and condolence to Brother Dr. Geo. B. Warne, in his great bereavment, and assure him, that not only the N. S. A. trustees, and the delegates of this National Association, consider, that in the passing of Mrs. Warne a great loss to the cause of Spiritualism has been sustained, but also, in our opinion, the entire body of Spiritualists of the United States will feel the loss in our ranks, and unite in expression of sympathy and of condolence towards the bereaved husband and family of our ascended sister, and towards the Illinois State Spiritualists Association, in its grief over the passage from earthly scenes of one who has ever been its helper and friend.

We know that Mrs. Warne has only ascended to a higher field of labor and of achievement, and that her earnest efforts and sweetest influence will still be given to the cause of truth; for her we need not mourn, but for the loved and loving ones here below, we feel the sense of loss and of grief that must ever come to tender hearts when a dear one is missed from the usual ways of life, and we can only trust that each and every heart will be uplifted to a new conception of love and of angel ministration by a consciousness of the presence and helpfulness of Mrs. Warne.

The Ten Commandments Obsolete.

Rev. Joshua Gravett, pastor of a Baptist church of Denver, Colo., recently expressed some peculiar views concerning the ten commandments. In an address before the Baptist Pastors' Club of that city, he said:

"The ten commandments are obsolete, rules that are not to be followed in the present day. If as Christians we are commanded to keep perfectly the law of the ten commandments we had better check our baggage for hell, for we shall surely go there.

"Christ was the only one who ever kept them, and he kept them for our salvation. I do not measure my conduct to see if I am pleasing God as a Christian, but I measure my life by the epistles to the churches. The ten commandments were a covenant between God and the children of Israel with the promise of earthly rewards or earthly judgments and were not for the attainment of eternal life."

Lost to Faith.

A telegram in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch says:

"Parker Stockdale, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Independence, Mo., and one of the most widely known of the younger Baptist ministers of the state, has resigned his pastorate and left the church because he no longer accepts the creed of orthodoxy. Following are the specific reasons constituting a sweeping denunciation of orthodoxy, for his action: "I do not believe the Bible was inspired, any more than any other great book. I reject the doctrine of the trinity as being contrary to the dictates of common sense. I do not believe in man's creation on the biblical plan and his fall. I reject the doctrines of predestination. Education is the only salvation to be achieved. I reject the doctrine of eternal punishment as unworthy of God. I reject the doctrine of the deity of Jesus. I do not believe a miracle was ever performed."

The announcement of Mr. Stockdale's retirement from the church astounded his congregation. He made it to them in person in a speech that moved many of them to tears and all to regrets. When he said that his conscience was driving him to the renunciation of the creed in which he had been reared, all knew he spoke the truth. There was no other possible motive. No young minister of his denomination had brighter prospects. He had already received evidences of being favored by the church, and greater favors waited on his age and experience. He was happy in his relations with his pastorate. The salary was comfortable and his congregation was ready to increase it. He was popular in the community as well as among the members of the congregation."

WHAT IS MAN'S BEST GOOD?

How May He Emerge From the Follies and Miseries of the World and Get on the Way to His Best Good?

"Retire; the world shut out; thy thoughts call home,
Imagination's airy wings repress;
Lock up thy senses; let no passion stir;
Make all to reason; let her reign supreme."

To the Editor:—I am impressed to send a few words for your readers to consider. In the seances now being held in Spring Hill for the production of a work on Life in the Higher Spheres, there are so many thoughts, wise and profound; and withal, practical in mortal life; and such work being known to the spiritual fraternity, I am surprised at the apathy and indifference manifested by the thinking world. It seems that the people are eager in the pursuit of what they want; and well nigh oblivious to what they need. Words that are as "apples of gold in pictures of silver" are unheeded and the people of the world are groveling in the dust of the ages, utterly unconscious of the grand possibilities innate in them.

This subject was dwelt upon last evening (September 21) by Prof. Denton in a most impressive manner. He deplored the apathy and lack of appreciation in the masses of the people, and declared in solemn tones that in the vast majority of cases, the children of earth opened their eyes on the spirit side of life in darkness and spiritual gloom; and their regret and anguish were aroused and intensified by the reflection that the golden opportunities for encircling their lives while on earth, were so heedlessly lost; and they exclaim, "Too late! Too late!"

It is universally conceded that the main energies of life are expended in the pursuit of things that perish. Those who look will see that the so-called civilized world of mankind is living on the selfish and sensuous plane; whereas, the moral and spiritual plane is the true plane of life.

Man is endowed with both a physical and a mental constitution, subject absolutely to the natural laws of his being. There are two questions of inconceivable importance to mankind; the answer to which will afford the means by which man would be raised from the lower to the higher plane of life. The first question is, What is man's best good? and the second is, How may he emerge from the follies and miseries of the world, and get on the way to the best good? These questions in substance have been discussed from the remotest ages, and still the answers are not forthcoming—at least, not in agreement one with another; and none in a manner from which practical application to the uses of life could be made.

When the mechanic or the chemist proceeds to his work, he is guided by certain natural laws, to ignore which, he would regard as folly. If the mathematician should reckon seven as sometimes to mean ten or any other number, his science would be false. So with the ethical scientist.

The physical constitution of man consists in the organs of the body; the bones are the frame-work; the muscles are the organs of motion; the nerves are for the distribution of forces; the brain is the organ of the mental faculties; the alimentary system is for nutrition; and so on, of every other part of the body.

It is also, a chemical laboratory, for the action of various chemical operations—in digestion, changes of the blood, secretory and excretory processes, and the like.

The body is likewise an organic structure made by the transformation of inert, passive, mineral matter into living tissue, endowed with sensation and motion.

Therefore man physically considered, is subject to the laws of mechanical, chemical and vital forces; undevelopating, and ever persistent in their action; and over which he has no control. He is so constitutionally formed, that conformity to these laws brings to him life, health, vigor and painless transition to the realm of spiritual life. Nonconformity to these laws results in sickness, pain and prematuredeath. Physically considered, then, conformity to the laws of man's physical economy will bring to him the best material good.

The mental constitution of man consists in the various faculties of the mind. The feelings and the intellect. The former are the forces, the mode of whose action we call the natural laws of mind, to which man is absolutely subject, and over which he has no control. That force is Sensation, which gives rise to consciousness. These two words (sensation and consciousness) are all embracing in their meaning. Sensation is life—the summum bonum of existence itself, the very essence of being—in it we live and move and have our being. In the various forms of desire, passion, hunger, thirst, it seeks satisfaction; and in the various forms of pain and misery it seeks relief. This seeking demands means for which the intellect is provided.

Here we have two things to consider—forces in their various forms of sensations—desires, passions, hunger, thirst, imperious in their demands for satisfaction, and pain and misery to be avoided on the one hand; and the devising and application of means through the instrumentality of the intellect, on the other hand.

As the physical, so the mental constitution is subject to natural law, conformity to which brings the realization of man's best good in its ethical sense. Non-conformity results in the conflict of interests, extremes of wealth and poverty, war, slavery, oppression, and the thousand and one antagonisms that make this world a vale of tears and man the worst enemy of man.

It is well known that the bodily organs grow and are developed by exercise; therefore, the necessity of a system of athletics for the equal, complete and harmonious development and training of the bodily organs, is being recognized as an indispensable part of physical education. It becomes a question of even greater importance to establish a system of mental training; for it is universally recognized as true, the proverb, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Since Nature never blunders, it is equally true that the full, orderly, complete and harmonious development, unfoldment and culture of all the mental faculties of the individual will at maturity, result in the complete human being. Here again is the answer to the first question.

How may man emerge from the follies and miseries of the world and get on the way to his best good? There must first be a clear conception of the best good. The golden rule has, for thousands of years been familiar to the world, but there never was, nor is there yet, a clear conception of it except by a few. Socrates said: "To know the good and not pursue it is akin to madness." That is very true; but who knows the best good? The incentive is all-sufficient. Its force is measured by that of sensation. The multitudinous "ways" to the best good, and the failure to reach it, afford sufficient evidence that the right way is not found; yet that there is a right way, no reasonable man can doubt. The theologian, despairing of any hope, on account of man's "total depravity," appeals to God's mercy for salvation from His eternal wrath which he nurses against His children and invents "a plan of salvation" whereby God can be justified in forgiving sin. It is concluded that nothing will satisfy Him but an infinite sacrifice; and the only way to obtain that is for Him to beget a son for that sacrifice. We read with horror the account of His acceptance of Jephtha's daughter as a sacrifice whose body was laid upon the altar by her own father; but far more horrible is it for the Almighty to beget a son for the sole purpose of having him tortured to death on the cross, just to appease his anger against the workmanship of his own hands, and to justify him in forgiving the transgressions of repentant sinners! The horror and absurdity of it can never be expressed. This is the "way" the theologian has devised.

The politician and statesman, the jurist and political economist, the educator and the moralist, have each respectively been plodding on their several "ways," but the best good has not yet appeared in sight. The reformer now takes up the case. He will show you the "way." He goes first in one direction, then in another. He invades the church and the state; he affects to divest the various institutions of their authority, denouncing this, and commending that, and yet he has not made the "way" clear. Thus we have churches, law courts, prisons, jails, reform schools, hospitals, almshouses, and various charitable institutions, and yet the people do not get on the "way" to their best good; for lonely is the way and few there be that enter therein.

It is feeling and not knowledge that is clamoring for the way. Error blinds and misleads because it is mistaken for truth. Feeling that is aroused by a false conception of truth, gives rise to a sense of reality in what is felt to be true; never suspecting that that sense of reality is no proof of its being reality.

That one step forward when taken, would show the unstable ground upon which the unreasoning bigot stands, and open up the way for further investigation.

The great trouble with reformers is the attempt to adjust matters on the basis of existing institutions—a kind of patching up, of correcting abuses which necessarily arise from the operation of existing causes. Truth makes no compromises with error. The putting of new wine in old bottles, and the patching of old garments with new cloth, were things condemned by the Nazarene Reformer.

There is one dogma that stands as an apparently immovable obstacle to all progress in ethics, namely, the dogma of so-called free moral agency. Freedom of the will when will means choice of means—a discretionary power—is granted; that is a question of the balance of forces. All action has its rise in force in its last analysis, it is motion—one law of which is, that the stronger dominates the weaker. A careful consideration of the fundamental law of human conduct will demonstrate the principle of the question involved, as seen in every voluntary, rational act: Man employs every available means at his command and pursues every interest which he feels (and therefore thinks) will most effectually satisfy his strongest desire and best promote his well-being, present and future; and he avoids as best he can, those evils which he fears will bring him pain or misery.

Socrates' saying is true: "He who knows the good and does not pursue it, is akin to madness." No one knowingly and intentionally injures himself. When he does, it is because his propensities are stronger than the restraints of judgment—than the fear of consequences. Since his irrepressible, persistent desire is to live to enjoy, to be happy, he can no more resist that desire than he can raise himself over the fence by pulling on his boot straps, and standing on both sides of the fence at the same time. Then what becomes of the dogma of free moral agency? It vanishes like the mist before the morning sun. The essential thing is conformity to the laws of man's being. Then all is peace and harmony, enjoyment, happiness. Our trust should be in the immutable, infallible laws of Nature. Obedience to them brings to man his best good; disobedience inevitably results in failure.

I cannot better close these considerations than by quoting from the Great Harmonia, by Andrew Jackson Davis:

The philosophy of reform, then, is plainly exhibited in the Principles of Nature. It is the philosophy of perpetual improvement, of changes, construction and progression. Reform is kindred with sunlight, kindred with trees, with the flow of the ocean and the tide of time; and will grow naturally as the flowers come out of the ground, and as mountains rise out of the sea. We will not go forth to fight demons, to cultivate combative habits in our fellowman; but, instead, to do the positive work of life; to construct the Harmonial Temples of thought, and welcome the world hospitably to our happy homes." THE UNDERTOW.

You hadn't ought to blame a man fer things he hasn't done,
Fer books he hasn't written or fer fights
he hasn't won;
The waters may look placid on the surface all aroun',
An' yet there may be an undertow akeepin' of him down.

Since the days of Eve and Adam, when the fight of life began,
It ain't been safe, my brethren, fer to lightly judge a man;
He may be tryin' faithful fer to make his life a go,
An' yet his feet git tangled in the treacherous undertow.

He may not lack in learnin', an' he may not want fer brains;
He may be always workin' with the patientest of pains,
An' yet go unrewarded, an', my friends,
how can we know
What heights he might have climbed up to but fer the undertow?

You've heard the Yankee story of the hen's nest with a hole,
An' how the hen kept layin' eggs with all her might an' soul,
Yet never got a settin', nor a single egg,
I trow;
That hen was simply kickin' 'gin a hidden undertow.

There's holes in lots of hens' nests, an'
you've got to peep below
To see the eggs a-rollin' where they hadn't ought to go.
Don't blame a man fer failin' to achieve a laurel crown,
Until you're sure the undertow ain't draggin' of him down.

AN EMINENT DIVINE.

He Gives Some Plausible Views on Baptism.

Dr. Madison C. Peters, in his sermon at the Baptist Tabernacle, St. Paul street and North avenue, Baltimore, said:

"Every man's religion and his character depend upon his thoughts of God. The real God is to us precisely what we make him to be. Our thoughts of God only affect us, but our ideal of God will become the real in our life. In the Middle Ages the Church conception of God was the accursed idea that he was vengeful, and they reproduced this cruel notion in painting, sculpture, worship and in life. They believed that God would burn heretics forever, and in burning them now those savages honestly considered themselves co-workers with God. It was this idea of God which reddened Christendom with human blood.

Even Balances.

"Another world where the balances swing evenly is what our sense of justice demands. The imperfections and inequalities of the present moral government will not only be redressed somehow and somewhere, and in the desolation that shall overtake the evildoer and the crown of glory that shall be set upon the goodness that suffered, it shall appear that God was always on the side of right, and from the beginning the foe of wrong.

"But from the theory that would turn the gospel of God's plenteous redemption into an anathema of all but universal, ever-never-dying and irretrievable perdition by an absolute predestination, from such a blasphemous teaching, embodied in most of the orthodox man-made creeds, every fiber of my intellectual, moral and spiritual life shrinks, and in the name of the outraged conscience of humanity and in the name of the infinite tenderness of God, the yearning Savior and the pleading Spirit, I hurl from me such a doctrine.

God's Character.

"That is a strange view to take of the character of the loving Father in heaven that he could permit the little ones who are taken out the world before they come to years of discretion to be forever exiled from his presence because no consecrating drops of water have fallen upon their foreheads. The prescribed forms for infant baptism teach baptismal regeneration and imply as plainly as words possibly can that a child cannot be saved without being baptized.

"The majority of Christians if they are loyal to the creeds of their churches still believe this. Infant baptism implies that it is a saving ordinance, and most people who have their babies baptized, if they do not believe in the horrible doctrine of infant damnation, yet fear that without baptism their darling babies may be lost. I know whereof I speak from twenty years' experience as a baby-sprinkler.

Baptismal Grace.

"Baptismal regeneration makes the minister of religion a worker of miracles, for, according to the theory, the child, now a lump of depravity and doomed to perdition, becomes a child of God and heir to glory, while the performer of ecclesiastical miracles pockets the baptismal fee. The church of God will continue to lose her hold on the people and suffer spiritual decrepitude until she lets go her man-made creeds, her traditions and superstitions and comes back to the Bible as authority in matters of faith and practice."

"THE NEW NAME."

"And his name shall be in their foreheads."

"And I will write upon him the name of my God."

"And I will write upon him my new name."—Revelations.

A soul struggling up to the sunlight—
Up from the mire and the clay,
Fighting through wars and jungles,
And sometimes learning to pray—
And sometimes a king with a scepter,
And sometimes a slave with a hod—
Some people call it Karma,
And others call it God.

A beggar ragged and hungry,
A prince in purple and gold,
A palace gilded and garnished,
A cottage humble and old—
And one's hopes are blighted in blooming,
And one gathers the ripened pod,—
Some call it fate or destiny,
And others call it God.

Glimmering waters and breakers,
Far on the horizon's rim,
White sails and sea gulls glinting,
Away till the sight grows dim,
And shells spirit-painted with glory,
Where sea-weeds beckon and nod,—
Some people call it ocean,
And others call it God.

Cathedrals and domes uplifting,
And spires pointing up to the sun,
Images, altars and arches,
Where kneeling and penance are done,—
From organs, grand anthems are swelling,
Where the true and the faithful still plod,—
Some call it superstition
While others call it God.

Visions of beauty and splendor,
Forms of a long lost race,
Sounds and faces and voices
From the fourth dimension of space—
And on through the universe boundless,
Our thoughts go lightning-shod,—
Some call it imagination,
And others call it God.

Vibration of Etheric Substance,
Light, flashing through regions of Space,
A girdle of Something, enfolding
And binding together the race,—
And words without wires transmitted,
"Ariel"-winged, Spirit-Sandaled and shod,
Some call it Electricity,
And others call it God.

Earth redeemed and made glorious,
Lighted by Heaven within;
Men and angels brought face to face,
With never a thought of sin,—
Lion and lamb together lie
In the flowers that sweeten the sod—
Some of us call it Brotherhood,
And others call it God.

And now the sixth sense is opened—
The seventh embraces the whole—
And clothed with the Oneness of Being
We acknowledge dominions of Soul,
And in all of life's phases and changes,
And along all the paths to be trod,
We recognize only one power—
One present Omnipotent God.

SPIRITUALISM & CHRISTIANITY.

A Letter From a Southern Divine.

With my limited knowledge of Spiritualism I can see little difference between it and Christianity. The former seems to be a demonstration of the latter, or, in a measure, the fruition of hopes born of the latter. Without the one the grandest truths of the other are lost. I believe that the higher one climbs in the science of Christianity the more clearly he beholds the beauties of Spiritualism; and the more thoroughly he understands the doctrine of Spiritualism the more perfectly he comprehends the grandeur of the plan of Almighty God for the glorification of his creatures.

Spiritualism is no more to be understood through the numerous fakir manifestations in our midst, than Christianity is through the agency of the churches. The truth, the grand and perfect truth of both lies far above the reach of the sordid, the avaricious, the selfish and bigoted. The faintest glimmer of the reward held in store by the Giver of all good for those who put themselves in a condition to receive it cannot be seen through orthodox creeds.

Jesus said many things to his disciples which could not be understood by them at the time they were spoken. He refrained from saying many other things because they could not bear them. After His apostles received Spiritualistic power they understood; and in their subsequent teachings reproduced the first and expressed many of the latter. Among these thoughts are some that, without the aid of Spiritualism, would be unintelligible; as at Matt. 18:10: "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father." Spiritualism teaches that a pure character attracts pure spirits which can only be driven away by sin. So at this point both sciences teach the same beautiful truth. The child is pure, hence his angels, or guardian spirits behold continually the face of our Father.

Spiritualism teaches that in Jesus were found all the various mediumistic powers known to the world. The Bible does not contradict this, but rather endorses it. It is admitted that the Father of spirits is the source of all power. Jesus said that the Father was in him doing the works, and that without this power he could do nothing. This accounts for his power. His pure life made it possible for the Father of spirits to dwell continually with him doing the works that he desired to have done; and when his earthly race was run and the Father left him, he was no more than any other man, which he evidenced by crying out in mortal agony, "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me!"

Jesus told his disciples that it was necessary for him to go away so that the comforter should come. He said that he would not leave them comfortless, but would return unto them. This he did on the day of Pentecost. Spiritualism teaches that one spirit can operate through several mediums at the same time. (See letter from Miss Frances E. Willard in The Progressive Thinker of Sept. 6th issue). The Bible teaches that Christ is operating through all Christians at one and the same time. If Miss Willard can sing through one medium, lecture through another, and converse through another all at the same time, though many miles apart, why should it seem strange that Jesus Christ can do the same thing? Miss Willard can not work through one who is not in harmony with her; neither can Jesus Christ. One Christian receives through the spirit, the gift of prophecy; another the gift of teaching; another the gift of exhortation; another the discerning of spirits; another the gift of healing, etc., (I. Cor., 12th chapter). All the different powers of Christ are distributed among his true followers, each one receiving that for which he is prepared. Paul said, "We have the mind of Christ." So we have if we put ourselves in a condition to receive it. That the world does not behold these manifestations of the power of Christ in professed Christians is not proof that the teachings are false, but rather that the Christians (?) are.

Spiritualists know that uncanny spirits are often troublesome, and that the only way to get rid of them is to invoke the aid of the Father of spirits. Jesus, through James, says: "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." He who is educated in higher Christianity knows that there is no death for the Christian; simply a change, a most desirable change. The same day that saw Jesus and the thief liberated, saw them in Paradise—the spirit world—together.

He who has no conception of a spirit world has no conception of Christianity.

Spiritualism teaches that the growth of the spirit does not cease at what we term death, but continues to grow. Paul evidently believed the same thing, for he spoke of "the spirits of just men made perfect."

There is much in Spiritualism that endorses Christianity, and much in Christianity that harmonizes with Spiritualism. In fact I believe the higher walks of both to be identical.

If Spiritualists could eradicate from their minds the belief that the churches represent the teachings of the Bible, and learn how wide is the difference between orthodoxy and Christ, they could easily harmonize their views with the principles of Christianity.

Hears From His Wife and Mother.

I think here is something out of the ordinary in spirit communication. My mother and three sisters passed to spirit life, ranging down in years from 1848 to 1877 (the year my mother died), and since then I have learned of the truths of Spiritualism, about twelve years ago, through the passing out of my wife. She came to me as I was reading a paper, called me by name in her own peculiar way, and so close to my ear I felt the breath or air-vibration very plainly.

Now, in regard to the communication from my mother: I have often wished to hear from her and my sisters, and wondered why I did not, as others seemed to get them through the Light of Truth. I constantly watched its columns and to my great satisfaction, I saw my mother's name at last, and the names of my three sisters given respectively as they passed out. Now I have two sisters living of whom I have lost all knowledge of their whereabouts. The last heard from Harriet, she was in Boston, Mass., and a widow, and I have hunted for her high and low, she being now 74 years old. I greatly desired her company in our declining years. My mother tells me she is in the western country and is probably with my other sister who is located somewhere in the west. Now all of this came to me from mother and sisters without any solicitation on my part to any one, they answering to my mental and not from any other knowledge given, and they further propose to assist me in bringing from around me a slate-writing medium.

VAGABOND THOUGHTS.

Somewhat Reminiscent and Otherwise.

Webster defines the word vagabond as follows: A vagrant, one who wanders from place to place or town to town, having no certain dwelling-place or not abiding in it and usually without the means of honest livelihood. By the laws of England and the United States, vagabonds are liable to be taken up and punished.

That definition suits me, and many of my thoughts are vagabond thoughts, and by the laws of priests, preachers and lecturers, are liable to be punished when caught, for, like the demon of Socrates, they are ovanescent vagabonds.

Quite a considerable number of persons with whom I was acquainted have died recently, some of them were Presbyterians, some Episcopals, some Methodists, Baptists, etc. Now, when I was young a priest or preacher was invariably sent for when death was expected, but of all those who have departed recently I have yet to hear of the first one who "got the rites of his church" before he crossed over. Not one priest or preacher was sent for to my knowledge "to pray for the departing soul" or administer "the secrament." Can it be that the friends of the dying have lost faith in vocal prayer or in the efficacy of the rites and ceremonies of the church militant? Can it be possible that they have come to the conclusion that their own supplications are as efficacious as those of a "regularly ordained servant of the Lord?" This is quite a conundrum to me, for I well remember how it used to be, and how restless and anxious, sometimes even wretched, the friends of the sick used to be lest anything should delay or prevent the coming of the Rev. Pastor. Ah! well, as a rather rough spoken man said to me once, "See here, Harding, you are only a darned old Quaker, anyway."

Could anything in this world be more funny or vagabond-like than the assertion that "Bob" Ingersoll was a man of God? and yet when I look fairly into his character and life and consider the sincerity and depth of his affection, his charitable disposition, his liability to be "taken out of himself" in moments of abstraction, his sentiment, his tenderness of feeling while contemplating the wonders of nature, and the general refinement of his character; I think myself justified in placing Robert Ingersoll amongst those who loved and reverenced the essence of all good.

Intellectually he knew no more about God than any one else, perhaps, but affectionally he must have known, the "Holy Ghost" in his trinity of father, mother and child. On the evening before his decease he arose from his chair, after deep absorption in the contemplation of the heavens, and with deep emotion soliloquized, "What a wonderful universe this is." We have all felt the same under the same circumstances. In moments of divine abstraction the pope and the peasant, the priest and the layman utter the same sentiment, or at least feel, "Oh! what a wonderful universe this is!" There are times when the partition wall of the flesh is melted down under the genial warmth of spirit and our souls are permitted to come forth from their prison houses. I know materialists and atheists whom I feel assured, stand high in spirit, and will yet enjoy a mansion prepared for them in their "Father's house." Many who cannot see God as a person can enjoy Him as a fact, and in the depths of their souls aspire after heavenly wisdom and love. Our souls are wiser than we! Our earthly careers are fitting us for our future. Whatever is is the most salutary. The winter of earth is preparing us for the spring of heaven, and a manifestation of the spirit is given to every one to profit withal.

I am getting old, not far from four score, but I have long known that my unaided intellect is almost always wrong in its conclusions which refer to soul subjects. Who can express in words the language of the inner essence? Principles are greater than persons. Those things which cannot be revealed by language are greater than those that can and we rise higher after a fall.

A man who was a fine healer and a good man wrote me once, "I do my best work while I dwell in the secret place of the Almighty." How true it is that "God" is in secret, and that "He who judgeth another condemneth himself."

I am familiar with the soul world all around me; it is to me a fact that my little canoe is paddled by wiser hands than mine, yet, strange to say, my will is not trammeled nor my independence circumscribed. I am more than content to have it so, for I know that it is best. Yes, conscious that it is all around me, yet I see it not with my eyes, I feel it not with my hands, no voice speaks to my outward ear to tell me that friends and the Infinite Father are near, yet how palpable it all is. Do I understand it? Oh, no, I cannot explain it, its modus operandi is unknown. The tables don't tip any more, our good spirit friends, of by-gone days no longer manifest outwardly, yet for all that I know better than ever before "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

I know some professed atheists and materialists who stand higher, I feel assured, in the psychic sphere, than many who condemn them, virtually saying, "stand aside for I am holier than thou," and are better acquainted with the ways ways of "God" with the human soul than the pharisaical professor of fellowship with Christ. Our hidden self is nearer to Divinity than we know of, it has its fellowship with those the latchet of whose shoes we are not worthy to unloose. The under current of our lives is far more important than the outer, and I thank heaven that it is so.

I asked an independent Roman Catholic once to expain the difference between "high mass" and "low mass." "Well," said he, "the fact is, it is high mass for high money, low mass for low money, and no mass for no money." All such matters are of the outward world and savor not of the things that be of God, but those that be of men. "Poor pay, poor preach," big pay for the sensational actor who "draws." Tickle me and I'll tickle you. Such people are the real atheists, it must be so, for "God is in secret" and not in outward money-getting.

What loud talk we hear about "caste" (the caste of wealth, the caste of birth, etc.) Let me tell those who talk about it that there is more "caste" in the soul world than in this, but one's high standing is determined there not by outward possessions or blood relationship, but by character, invisible to us. Not by the superficial and visible, but by character, invisible to us. Not by what we had done in this transitory world, but what we are in spirit. Not by "smartness" in debate, but by soul wealth. Not even by our deeds of charity but by the pureness of the Ego who prompted to the act. There are last that shall be first and first that shall be last. No robes of office entitle one to enter the "Holy of Holies" there, every spiritual community knows its own members; they make no mistakes. Instinctive wisdom is a quality of higher souls.

But to my vagabond thought it seems curious that a sensible person could believe in the existence of the individual souls of men, women and things, and think, at the same time that the universe has no soul. Even Ingersoll said, "I don't know." If my material body is the clothing of my soul, why not the visible universe be the clothing of a great soul? If I can hear and give answer to a request, why cannot the intelligence of the world, of which I am only a part, do so? They say man is the "highest manifestation." Well, he everywhere, believes himself dependent upon one higher still. It is known that requests called "prayers" are answered when the person requesting is in a certain condition of mind and soul, but we are assured that it is those spirits who are en-rapport with us who, hearing our prayers, answer them. But supposing that to be correct, are they not urged or impressed to do so by the spirit within them (for we must suppose that in every sphere of life there is an interior and exterior). So, after all, whether prayer is answered by spirits or by laws, it is the universal and divine who really answers through agents. When our philosophy goes deep enough it always finds "God." But it may be that those who are on the negative side of the question contend for victory over an opponent and not to advance truth or ameliorate the condition of mankind. Surely they must know that Faith and Love elevate their possessors.

I have been taught when in communion with the invisibles that earthly conditions are the imperfect shadows of the heavenly. Thus when a public meeting is called the first thing done is to elect a person to preside and preserve order. Even every city must have its mayor—every country its president, king or ruler—even every village has its chairman. So also we have secret societies, membership in which is obtained by solicitation, discipline and fitness. Those societies (or communities as I have been taught to regard the spirit societies) take care of their members, they protect and defend them from enemies, they instruct and cherish them. And so I might go on through all our earthly concerns and associations and show, did space permit, that a supreme exists and under that supreme, all grades of wisdom, power and love, organized for special purposes. Individuals and communities working out the great end of universal betterment.

Honesty is the best policy in dealing with the soul world—one cannot deceive the folks over there—they can read every thought before it is expressed—I have had many proofs of that. Those who do not believe in God should never pretend in public or in private that they do. Those who don't believe in prayer should never pray, it is worse than loss of time, it is hypocrisy. Public prayer is in my opinion unjustifiable. People treat the Infinite Wisdom sometimes as if he were a fool and could be put in a good humor by flattery. You can't throw dust in the eyes of disembodied spirits, much less in the eyes of the spirit of all spirits. Those who can hear your requests and help you out of a difficulty will not enter into partnership with you in anything bogus or help in priestly humbuggery or "mediumistic" rascality.

Doubtless there are those who are earth bound—their treasure is on earth and their hearts are there also, they may be willing to practice deception but such have no power to answer the sincere aspiration of a righteous soul. We can pity where we can't condemn! But our own safety demands that we avoid contact with evil.

Fellow-citizen of the world, we are here for a purpose, let us not permit our fleshly passions or worldly ambitions to subdue the higher qualities which we possess in "secret." In time to come (and perhaps that time is not far distant) we shall reap what we sow. Never violate conscience, that is the Holy Spirit within us, for in its service alone we shall find "perfect freedom." It is not in doing that we shall find peace but in living the life of the just. Not in kneeling down, but in standing up in the consciousness of rectitude.

Mr. Editor, I have not written the above for the literary critic or the discontented caviller. The best period—the day of outward manifestations of spiritual truths—has passed away for us—the vestibule of the temple is behind us—She and I are passing on. There are many rounds in the ladder of progress. It is long since our old Indian friend from that world of souls, cured me of Atheism by convincing me of the existence of "The Great Spirit." His words alone did not do it, his language was inelegant and commonplace. Oh, no, it was the invisible spirit accompanying the words. Memory is busy with me now! "Remember," she says, "how they saved you from self-destruction on that terrible night of suffering. Don't forget that other dark night when they carried you bodily across the cattle guard and thus saved you again. But we have no need of such interposition now, no danger is allowed to approach you; no evil thing can come nigh thy dwelling."

It is true our daughter no longer comes from the soul world to answer our questions and remind us of the past. No stranger spirit comes now with his undeniable test for us and others. The walls of our home no longer encircle our spiritual visitors, as palpable and visible beings, but they come in spirit and in truth to impress us with higher aspirations and psychic knowledge which language cannot convey— they come, though invisible, as the agents of the Most High. The Love.

Vagabond thoughts! vagabond memories! How they do come and go; often when we want them they are far away and when we do not need them, they come. THOMAS HARDING.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninty-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention, is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly due to catarrh. We are receiving hundreds of letters like the following:

Deafness Cured.

Sp'gfield, Mass., Mar. 30,'02.
Gentlemen:—Received the Actina all right, and would say it has done wonders for me. I have been deaf about five years so that I could not hear the ticking of a clock, neither could I engage in conversation, as it was very difficult to make me understand even with a speaking tube. After treating with several doctors and receiving no help or encouragement from them, I expected never to hear again and tried to make the best of it. A friend called my attention to Actina, saying that it had cured her. Not having much faith in it I did not use it according to directions at first, but after having it about 6 months noticed an improvement, and in five or six weeks after was able to hear public speaking and converse with anyone without any trouble. Quite a number of the afflicted called on me and are greatly encouraged by my experience.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning." Cloth, $1.00.

Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora Leigh:"

"If a man could feel
Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day,
The spiritual significance burn through
The hieroglyphic of material shows,
Henceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is to reveal the curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to a higher morality and increasing happiness. The book is characterized by the same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

AFTER HER DEATH.

The Story of a Summer. By Lilian Whiting. Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual experience. Price, $1.00.

THE DESCENT OF MAN.

By Charles Darwin.—Cloth, gilt top, 75 cents. On its appearance it aroused at once a storm of mingled wrath, wonder and admiration. In elegance of style, charm of manner and deep knowledge of natural history, it stands almost without a rival among scientific works.

THE DIAKKA.

The Diakka and Their Earthly Victims. By the Seer A. J. Davis. A very interesting and suggestive work. It is an explanation of much that is false and repulsive in Spiritualism, embodying a most important recent interview with James Victor Wilson, a resident of Summer Land. Price, 50 cents.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,

By means of natural selection, or the preservation of a favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

You should sign your own name and address to the items you send in; otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

October 30, Harry J. Moore went to Rochester, Ind. He may be addressed there during the winter.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley is open for engagements as lecturer and message medium for camp season of 1902. Address her at 121 E Vermont street, Indianapolis, Ind.

I frankly confess that the Catholics stand before the country as the enemies of the public schools.—Father Phelan.

J. Howard Bishop, secretary, writes: "The First Spiritual Temple opened its first session for the season of 1902-3, at Lakeside Hall, the second Sunday of August. The directory are more than pleased with success of their endeavors, by the constant increase of attendance, and the class of its attendants. We have had some very fine mediums who have done a grand work for the cause of Spiritualism. As a supplement to the work of our regular pastor, Mrs. Lucile DeLoux, the work of our pastor has been exceptionally brilliant. He has given some very notable tests of continued life and the possibility of our departed friends to return and manifest themselves. We wish to say also, that the address of Dr. Warne, just previous to the departure of his loved and highly esteemed wife, Dr. Emma Warne, for her spirit home, has been a constant subject for conversation by those who had the pleasure of hearing him and favorably, too. They all hope to hear him again. The society has held one social so far, which was an immense success. Mrs. De Loux' parlors, where the social was held, were crowded to the utmost with an enthusiastic and appreciative crowd of truth seekers, pleasure bent. A fine series of numbers musical and recitational were given, and also many communications by some of the most noted psychics in the country of spirit loved ones gone before. A resolution of regret for the demise of our loved worker and friend, Mrs. Dr. Emma Warne, was passed by the gathering, and noted by the secretary. In closing I would say the conferences of our church are open for the free discussion of all subjects, for the uplifting of humanity, and we heartily wish for a full and free expression of thought from every visitor. Our meetings are conducted on the most liberal platform, and we invite mediums and speakers of ability to make us a visit when so inclined. We shall have during the season some of the best speakers to be had in the country. The sale of The Progressive Thinker in our hall has been very good, and is an indication of the mental standing of our audiences."

Harriet S. Parker writes from Summerland, Cal.: "I went to the camp-meeting at Sycamore Grove, Los Angeles, purposely to hear the Rev. Moses Hull. He held his Bible in extended hand, and said with unmistakable voice, 'This is our Book. God is a spirit,' and then he showed us that the Bible was all Spiritualism from Genesis to Revelations. Through all the lectures I heard he was true to the truth. May God bless him, and his, in the work he has undertaken. I witness the advancement in churches and I most sincerely believe they will soon become real spiritual Spiritualists. Truly I am in favor of good will to all."

Frank Hill gives his experiences. He says: "I have the indisputable evidence as to a spiritual existence. The first meeting was a dark circle, and after repeating the Lord's Prayer, and singing 'Nearer, My God, to Thee,' there appeared a bright cross. It floated around the room and then disappeared. The next that appeared was a bright star, and following that were flowers."

J. O. Stephens writes from St. Joseph, Mo.: "I thank you for recommending Mrs. M. A. Burland as a trance speaker. She is not only good, but the best we have had here; in fact the best I have yet had the pleasure of listening to. At our meeting on Sunday evening, the second Sunday of her sojourn here, there were over two hundred in the hall. Her test work is free from all possibility of faking, and very satisfactory. We expect to keep her here during November, and possibly the whole season."

Frank T. Ripley is serving the society at Alexandria, Ind., for November. He has January, February, March and April open for engagements to lecture and give tests. He would like to engage for week evenings within 100 miles of Alexandria, Ind. Can also be engaged for funerals. Address all letters in care of General Delivery, Alexandria, Ind.

Alfred Curtis writes: "The Progressive Society held its annual installation of officers, October 29, in the hall, corner Burling and North avenue. A blessing was invoked on those present by the pastor, Mrs. W. Hilbert, following this an exceedingly able and well delivered address was made by Dr. Geo. B. Warne, referring to the solemnity and the especial duties that would fall on those about to hold office for the ensuing year, namely: President, A Curtis; vice-president, Mrs. H. L. Leighton; secretary, Mrs. Heuser; treasurer, Mr. Schwandt. Following this the installation was duly made. Mrs. Schwahn then delivered an able address in German, followed by an exceedingly laughable speech by Mr. Vasse, on the duties of woman. We rapidly found out this gentleman thought he had been invited to address the Ladies Progressive Society, an auxiliary, but seeing so many gentlemen present he concluded it was all wrong. Other members of our society presented some able speeches. An excellent song was well rendered, 'Only a Thin Veil Between Us,' by Mr. and Mrs. Francis Nichols, followed by tests by Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom, which were highly appreciated by those present; following came Mrs. Schwahn with able tests. The president then spoke of the year passed and also how well the society stood financially, also at the previous installation how he was buoyed up by one dear and zealous worker in the cause, now passed to the higher life, Mrs. Dr. Emma Warne. Following this the president was presented with a beautiful oil painting massively framed, the subject being Hiawatha. The service was then closed by the pastor, Mrs. W. Hilbert. All through the evening not a seat was vacant and many persons standing. After the close a beautifully worked pillow, presented by Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom, was raffled off, which went to Mrs. Hilbert. Following this all present were invited to partake of a luncheon provided downstairs, and thus closed a very memorable evening to the members of the Progressive Society."

F. P. Bitters writes: "Rev. Harry J. Moore and wife are now located at Rochester, Ind., for the winter, as pastor of the Spiritualist Church. This is the third year for Mr. Moore in this places, which is evidence enough that he 'takes' well. His address for the winter will be Rochester, Ind. This morning occurred the transition of Mr. J. C. Phillips, of this place, a worthy man, ex-county auditor, and a prominent Spiritualist."

Dr. J. W. Ruminer writes that he is ready for engagements to lecture for Spiritualist Societies. He is a psychomagnetic healer and a graduate of two colleges in line with the philosophy of Modern Spiritualism—Dr. Geo. Dutton's Medical School and Dr. E. D. Babbitt's College of Fine Forces. Charges reasonable. Twenty years old in the cause. Address him at No. 1816 E. Oregon street, Evansville, Ind.

J. W. Ring, of Galveston, Tex., sends the following, addressed to those interested in Lyceum work: "I have succeeded in arrangements for the publication of 'The Progressive Lyceum' here in Galveston, where I can have the personal supervision of its work; and I trust that all will so shape itself that the first issue will reach the various lyceums, Sunday, Dec. 7, 1902, S. E. 55. The month of December will be devoted to the 'Life Study of Andrew Jackson Davis,' and cards bearing his portrait and favorite sayings are now ready at one cent each. The price of the paper, which will be 6x8, four pages, will be not more than seventy-five cents per year according to the support which comes in the way of guarantee subscribers; and here I wish to ask you to please favor me with your guarantee of a personal subscription or of as many as you think you can use in the lyceum if you are a lyceum worker. I have no means to run a paper myself, but have consecrated my energies to this work and depend on your support to become your servant in the capacity of the manager of 'your paper'; so I want your suggestions as well as your guarantee subscriptions; no money until after the first issue. We must begin to raise Spiritualists and this is to be done by education. I shall very much appreciate your suggestion, your criticism and your guarantee of one or more subscriptions. Address me at the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas."

Correspondent writes from the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas: "During the absence of Mr. John W. Ring, the regular speaker, October 12 and 19, Mrs. Laura B. Payne, who is now state missionary, lectured for the society and held several parlor meetings. Mrs. Payne's work was much appreciated and pleased all who were so fortunate as to attend the meetings. She possesses a magnetic presence which impresses one with her earnestness and devotion; and these qualities are manifest in her every act, for she surely has the good of the cause at heart and is one of the lights in the ranks of Spiritualism who will send the gleam of joy and gladness and comfort into the lives of those to whom she ministers. We need spiritual Spiritualists, those whose lives speak in tones louder than bugle notes of the purity of thought and gladness of spirit which the knowledge of Spiritualism affords. Mr. Ring returned to his charge, Oct. 26, and Mrs. Payne went to San Antonio, lecturing in Rosenberg and Flatonia on the way there. Mr. Ring's subject was, 'Who Is My Neighbor and Where Is His Home?' The discourse was appropriate after an absence from his home charge and seemed to find a culminating expression in, 'What I owe to myself I owe to my neighbor, and what I owe to my neighbor I owe to the whole world,' and 'Home is where the soul finds rest.' The lyceum keeps up its regular sessions with usual interest and we expect quite a revival with the advent of the 'Progressive Lyceum,' a paper devoted to the Lyceum, which Mr. Ring contemplates starting about the first of December. Our reading-room, library and news stand are very valuable auxiliaries to our society, and we think that each society would do well to gather up the books among its members and form a circulating library, for the reading of occult literature will make intelligent Spiritualists, who can give a certain and interesting explanation of the truth of Spiritualism."

F. C. Hill writes from Sacramento, Cal., denying the statement made by Joseph P. De Blumenthal, in The Progressive Thinker of September 20. Mr. Hill says: "Hiram Cameron is a medium of rare gifts and to-day stands without a blemish as to his mediumship. Only four weeks ago, a gentleman came all the way here from Lincoln, Nebraska, to attend Cameron's seances. He attended four of them, and then returned home a confirmed Spiritualist. I trust he will write up his experience and publish it in The Progressive Thinker."

Hon. Alonzo Thompson returned safe and sound from the convention at Boston. He is an influential worker.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

Carlyle Petersilea gave a Recital at Blanchard Hall, Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 30. He is considered the most gifted musician on the Pacific Coast.

A. P. Stout writes from Sheridan, Ind.: "During November, or until 500 copies are ordered, I will send 'Creeds Outgrown,' free, for 5 cents postage. Parties ordering are kindly requested to loan, or give away their books."

G. W. Kates and wife desire calls, as missionaries of the N. S. A., for 1903. They want to hear at once from Pennsylvania and thence throughout the middle-west, and possibly to California. Every place desiring their services should address them soon as possible, that they may arrange dates en route. Address them, 600 Pennsylvania ave. S. E., Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Helen Sleuter, late of London, Eng., and a healer of excellent powers, has arrived in this city, and is located at No. 242 East Erie street, where she can be consulted.

"The Eightieth Birthday Anniversary of Dr. J. M. Peebles," is a neatly printed pamphlet from the office of Light, London. The Doctor intends to reach a hundred years, thus exemplifying his teachings. We hope he will. He has certainly assisted in making the history of Spiritualism interesting.

F. P. Wilmarth speaks approvingly and encouragingly of the good work done by Frank T. Ripley at Springfield, Mo.

Dr. and Mrs. Fisk, prominent Spiritualists, passed through Chicago on their way to their home from the N. S. A., where they were active delegates. They reside at Keokuk, Iowa.

Field writes: "G. W. Kates and wife held meetings in Lawrence, Mass., Oct. 26 and 28. They had good attendance and gave excellent lectures and messages. A nice temple has lately fallen into the hands of local society here and the members have improved and decorated it until it has become a place of beauty. It was lately dedicated by Max Gentske, editor of 'Lichtstrahlen,' who has by effective work developed a strong society, mostly of German people."

Wm. Z. Hatcher writes: "It is with great pleasure I am able once more to renew my subscription for The Progressive Thinker, an ever welcome weekly visitor, heralding the possibilities of a brighter and better uplifting for humanity, with an increasing library of valuable information included on a most generous plan."

Chas S. Hulbert writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "Harmony Circle Spiritual Society was organized Oct. 1, 1902, with a charter membership of 26. It will affiliate with the State Association as soon as its charter is granted. The society has leased the pretty Union Bank Hall, corner Main and Mohawk streets, which has been newly decorated and painted. The public meetings will be held there Sundays; conference in the afternoon, and lectures and messages evenings. The evening services are meeting with splendid success, and the audiences are growing. The members are very enthusiastic and are all workers in the cause of Spiritualism. The following officers will serve for the first year: Chas. S. Hulbert, president; Mrs. A. Vanneta, vice-president; Mrs. M. E. Lane, second vice-president; Wm. Griffith, treasurer; Mrs. M. Lang, secretary. The writer is also the lecturer and test medium, as well as a steady reader of The Progressive Thinker."

Scribe writes from Detroit, Mich.: "A good work is being done in this city by the pastor of the Society of Spiritual Unity, Marguerite St. Omer Briggs, the hall being filled by people seeking to know the truth of the philosophy, as well as the phenomena. After an address by the pastor we hold a spiritual communion service. We have excellent singing. Mrs. Penna and Mrs. Metcalf, local mediums, assisting in the service. Mrs. Penna holds services at her home Tuesday and Friday evenings with an average attendance of forty. Mrs. Crawford holds services at her home, Tuesday evening and Friday afternoon, with about the same average attendance. Dr. C. W. Burrows every Sunday and Wednesday evening holds meetings at Occult Temple. The Willing Workers hold services Sunday and Thursday evenings. A new name, The Church of Psychology, presided over by Mrs. La Grange, is doing a good work. Another society called the Upper 400, meets—I don't know where nor how often, or could not be admitted without the recommendation and an introduction of one of the elect, but as the principal streets of this city point to Cadalac Square, so each society is working for the uplifting of humanity, and whether we are of the elect or select, we shall all get there just the same, and St. Peter won't ask us the question, 'Did you belong to the elect, select, or the four hundred, or the Inner Circle,' but we may hear the 'well done, enter in.'"

Mrs. C. B. Empy writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "The Society of Spiritual Truth has reorganized here, and under the auspices of Mrs. Carrie L. Bean, as lecturer, and Miss Edith Evelyn Edwards as test medium, is holding regular meetings each Sunday night, at Warnick Hall, which is elegatnly furnished, and ample for large attendance. Though just begun, these meetings promise to be highly successful, and to accomplish much for the spread of the light ever needed. Mrs. Bean and Miss Edwards have resided in Kansas City for more than two years continuously, and through unremitting labor, honesty in purpose and work, as well as high proficiency, have wrought well for the cause, and established themselves with commendable reputations in deed and life. They are universally respected as of that genuine and meritorious type which reflects credit to their profession, and is ever attended with magnificent results in the line of spiritual progress. Both are excellent mediums, and for platform tests Miss Edwards is unsurpassed, while her inspirational performances on piano and organ are unexcelled."

C. B. Estes, of Tacoma, Wash., writes: "Spiritualism in some places seems to be taking on a new life—at least it is in this place. We feel very much encouraged. Many faces that were never seen before at a Spiritualist meeting are now becoming regular attendants, the result of the efforts of D. W. Hull and his co-workers in the Tacoma Spiritualist Church (the name changed from the First Spiritualist Church.) The east had its 'Moses' to lead them out of the wilderness, but the west had to wait for a 'Daniel' to save it from the wild beast of Ignorance, he being the only one on the coast so far as we know that will meet our church brethren on their own grounds, taking a text from the Bible. We, as a church, were organized only a month ago, yet we have had to ask for more chairs for our hall. Only a few met and said, 'Let us have a new church with declaration of principles, so that people may know something of the ground-works of Spiritualism.' Brother Hull seems to fill a long-felt want with the help of the assistant pastor, Mrs. Frances A. Sheldon, who is certainly the best organizer on the coast. She is also a good psychic. They are putting the cause rapidly to the front. We must not forget another who needs more than a mention, that is Mrs. Florence Heckman, formerly of Cincinnati, moving here from Seattle. Since the church was organized, she, too, has been doing efficient work, assisting in giving tests in her clear and convincing way. Any one desiring the declaration of principles may obtain them by addressing the pastor, D. W. Hull, or assistant pastor, Mrs. Frances A. Sheldon, 911 South E street."

S. Chapman writes from Greenfield, Mass.: "The premium book by Hudson Tuttle, came all right to-day and it is very satisfactory. I thank you for your kindness and the value that I place upon your paper."

Dr. Louis H. Freedman, M. D., can be addressed at 914 West Fifth street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Frank N. Foster, the spirit photographer is permanently located at 3017 Wabash avenue, Chicago.

Mrs. Dr. Edwards writes from Butte, Mont.: "I closed my second month's meetings last Sunday night with large attendance. They have been very successful, and I regret parting with the good people here who have been very kind. Mrs. M. A. Lange, who has been a worker for the cause all her life, kindly gave up her Sunday meetings to increase the attendance at mine. I consider it a great courtesy and highly appreciate the generosity and unselfishness that prompted the act. I fully intended to leave the first of November for the coast, but I find engagements here will detain me at least two weeks longer. I am having a delightful time. The weather is grand; bright sunshine every day, and warm enough to go without wraps. As I am kept busy all day long giving readings, slate-writings, etc., I suppose it does not matter much whether I am working here or farther along."

The Occult Club Stands by Mrs. Wagner

Resolved, By the Occult Science Club of Topeka, Kansas, it being the only Spiritualist organization in the said city and numbering several hundred members, that we have heard with regret of the outrage that was perpetrated on one of our mediums, Mrs. Inez Wagner, at her rooms on Tuesday of last week, while holding a trumpet seance, and we denounce the same as cowardly, malicious and dastardly, and knowing Mrs. Wagner as we do, believe the statements of the man White that he saw Mrs. Wagner with the trumpet to her mouth as maliciously false and untrue, and was only a part of a scheme by her rivals and enemies to ruin her as they have threatened to do.

Resolved, That we have implicit confidence in the honor, honesty and truthfulness of Mrs. Wagner, and in the genuineness of her mediumship and believe her to be one of the best mediums in the Western country and the making of one of the best in the nation.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in each of our daily papers and in The Progressive Thinker, of Chicago.

A. MARKLEY, President.
G. B. Payne, Secretary.

A Distinction Without Much Difference.

To the Editor:—Dr. H. V. Sweringen, writing in the September "Sermon," on "Christian Science," quotes from the Bible, as follows:

"The Lord shall smite thee with the boil of Egypt and with tumors and with the scurvy and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed."—Deut. xxviii:27.

I have compared this text with same chapter and verse in my Bible, printed in 1821, and dedicated "to the most high and mighty prince James, by the grace of God King of Great Britain France and Ireland, defender of the Faith," etc., and I find that they do not exactly agree. My version reads as follows:

"The Lord will smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed."—Deut. xxviii:27.

Now, here is a discrepancy—a distinction, without much difference, it is true. But, why in the name of God should there be such afflictions sent upon poor humanity? I suppose, Dr. S., had there been any "small-pox" available, the Lord would certainly have included it among the afflictions sent as a punishment upon "his chosen people?" I sincerely hope some of our pious Methodist brethren, either here or in Fort Wayne, Ind., will explain this matter, and clear it up to our full satisfaction.

While the American Bible Society is sending out millions of "Holy Bibles" among the heathen, would it not be a pious notion to get copies of the original, in God's hand-writing, and compare them with the original, before sending them to the Filipinos? In these "latter days" of fraud and deception, accuracy is most desirable. Is it any wonder that "the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing," when there are such discrepancies in the Christian Bible? I pause for a reply?

EXPOSITORY.

The Objective and Subjective Minds, and Their Relation and Duties.

In my treatment of this subject, it is proper to say that all sensitives and mediums give positive knowledge, from a psychic or spiritual basis, and not from opinion based upon theories, or orthodox inspiration. I write the following lines from a clairaudient and psychic view of the subject before me.

It is a common thing to hear one man say of another that he is so depraved and immoral, that his better nature connot control him; this is the primitive manner in which all orthodox people express themselves, while a Spiritualist would say his objective mind was too strong and rebellious to be controlled by his subjective mind.

The five senses, namely, seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, and feeling, have been given to man by his creator to control his daily actions in life, and the subjective mind has been placed in charge and over these senses, as a preceptor, endowed with the sense of reason upon which is based judgment and executive power; I may compare the two minds to a watch and its owner, the objective mind representing the machinery of the watch and the subjective mind the owner. The watch cannot run and keep correct time unless its owner keeps it wound up and its machinery in order; neither can the Adamic man, with his five physical senses, perform his part in this life, if his instructor, the subjective man of reason is not at his post on duty to give instructions when called for by the acting senses of the objective mind.

To illustrate the relative duties of the different minds, suppose while I am crossing a meadow I see a serpent lying across my path, my objective sense of seeing immediately gives warning to my subjective mind, which if on duty will instruct me to flee from the danger or direct me how to destroy the snake. If I am on the railway track, and hearing the warning note of the whistle, my sense of hearing will warn my subjective mind, which if at its post of duty will instruct me how to escape the danger, but if the subjective mind is indolent, and I am left to the control of my objective faculties, I may be snake-bitten or run down by the train, and the verdict of a coroner's jury and the public is, suicide, or want of common sense, whereas truth records the facts of indolence and neglect of duty on the part of the subjective mind.

Our objective and subjective senses were given to us by the same creative power, and are equally liable to err in the discharge of their respective duties in this life, and we should be slow to discriminate between them for negligence and error.

The infant is awakened to the necessity of motion by the sense of feeling, and the subjective mind instructs it to crawl to its mother's chair and climb up the chair. This gives strength to its limbs, and learns it to stand erect, as the first act that distinguished between the animal and a human, and if there is harmony existing between the two minds, it will become an apt scholar at home and never attend school, under the teaching of the subjective mind, the product of which we call a self-made man. We see many of them today at the bar, in the pulpit, and at the head of our institutions of learning.

But if the objective appetite is strong, and the subjective mind weak and indolent, the man will gravitate to his animal nature; he may go to school for years and be no farther advanced than he was at the beginning. Such failures are generally to be found among the offspring of parents who are great lovers of animal food and slaves to strong drink.

A great many of our sensitives fail in distinguishing between spirit control and the daily action of the subjective mind. I will suggest the following as a means of distinction between them: The subjective mind is always instructing us in our daily work and duties in this life, but the spirits only on important matters. If I start to do one thing, and change my mind, without knowing why I do it, and do something else, it is only the work of auto-suggestion; but if I am about to cross the ocean, and am awakened by a thrilling and nerve-exciting dream of the ship that I am on sinking, it is likely to be a spirit warning me. Clairaudients are often talked to and conversed with by invisible powers; if it is about common daily matters, it is the subjective mind, and auto-suggestion, but if it is concerning something that you have never thought of in your life, and transcends your normal wisdom and ability, it is apt to be the result of spirit control. As an instance, it has been almost impossible for me to control the desire to use profane language when I was very mad. I often prayed to God to give me strength to overcome weakness, but receiving no response to my prayer, I would become disheartened, but a voice said to me:

"Do not be discouraged, you have not asked God to do the right thing; God never tells any one not to curse and swear, but he has often told you not to get mad or angry, but you do not heed him. Keep from getting angry and the profanity will take care of itself. You tell your child to not put its hand on a hot stove, but after it has disobeyed you, and burned its hand, you do not forbid it crying. That is the punishment it receives, and evidence of its disobedience to your advice not to put its hand on the stove."

This was an instance of spirit warning, which I obeyed, and do not allow myself to get angry, and since heeding the warning of my spirit friend, I have no occasion or desire to use profane language.

As a general rule I will say to clairaudient mediums, that when an independent voice addresses you, do not permit your own mind to ask thought questions, but let your mind remain passive until the controlling spirit has delivered its message, and thereby prevent auto-suggestion; remember that if the controlling spirit fails to deflect from the subject matter of its message, and answer your thought question, your own mind will respond to your will, and answer your question, and thus introduce auto-suggestion as a factor in the message, and destroy its correctness and value.

With due respect to the apostles and prophets of old, I am impelled to say that I think that their inspired teachings were greatly blended with the work of their subjective minds, but I do not deny that their manuscripts were leavened with true inspiration from God; but the auto-suggestion of their own mind has caused the want of concordance and unreconcilable conflict that exists between the voice of reason, and claims of inspiration.

Our objective and subjective minds are like a garden which is divided between the production of food and flowers, the food or animal side is all that the average man cultivates, while the floral department is left undeveloped to look after itself. In the homes of the poor, where the parlor should be, are found chill and vacant rooms, while the kitchen is densely populated with suffering and undeveloped mortality, intimately associated with the lowest grade of animal life, all doomed to poverty and ignorance, while the home and parlor of the wealthy, shine with splendor and resound with music, while obesity and selfishness repose in state in undeveloped satiety, regardless of the suffering of the poor class. Is missionary labor not needed more in America than in China?

In Hudson Tuttle's book, "The Religion of Man," page 262, he gives expression to the following sentiment:

"To believe in a personal God is absurd. God is but principle embodied in all men and over all," and on page 265, he says: "There is no pardoning power in the Universe."

If I am pardoned from the scaffold for crime, by the Governor, is it not the God that is in the people of the state that do it through the chief executive? and is it not the God over all that moves the God in the people to do it? And that God must be a spiritualized individual entirely, and being over all, guiding and directing all their thoughts and acts.

On page 268, he says there is no efficacy in praying to God who is only an embodiment of principle. If your God is but a sepulchral cloud of principle inanimate and lifeless, why do the N. S. A. and all Spiritual convocations open with a prayer to the God father and God mother, as they would surely have neither eyes to see or ears to hear their prayers.

I am thankful to feel that there is a God over all, who has the power to pardon when unjust prejudice condemns, or when unmerited sympathy or weakness of the law would defeat the demand of justice.

God spoke through the subjective mind of Jesus on the cross, and said to the condemned but penitent thief, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise."

Let us not make a mighty music box out of God, unless we allow the musician to go along with him. If I ever get to disbelieve in God, the hope conferred upon me by my subjective mind of eternal prdgress and immortality, will die as ashes upon my lips at the parting of the way that divides the finite mind from the subjective and immortal man or being."

TRUTH SEEKER.

THE SCHOOL OF LIFE.

Experiences and Lessons of Mortal Life.

Spiritualism teaches that the human heart may be rendered by adequate effort a fitting temple to welcome the presence of angels who seek to compass the regeneration and salvation of the human race. Such a heart filled with the purest hopes for human good, energized with the desire to be a blessing to others, placing its own personal and material prospects last in the list of its aspirations, will indeed be a fitting shrine in the circle of whose glorious presence angels may walk with men.

You can bring the kingdom of heaven into the world by developing it within yourself. If each individual were to feel intensely that his own culture and improvement means the culture and improvement of mankind, so far as he individually can bring it about, they would banish forever all selfish hopes of heaven and all superstitious fears of hell—all thought of personal reward and all dread of personal punishments.

The truly great and glorious spirit is the one who forgets self in his interest in humanity, who never looks forward to a heaven for his own delectation—though he finds one when he does not seek it. He never thinks of avoiding hell for himself only, but by always seeking to bless mankind finds there is no hell for those who live in the love of the truth and in the practice of goodness.

There is no goodness whatever in trying to make a cozy corner in the kingdom of heaven for one's self, as such endeavor is only an evidence of self-interest.

People cannot really do good in spirit when their only motive in trying to get to heaven is because they think it will be a nicer place to live than hell.

They cannot prepare themselves for that joy and blessedness which follow upon a noble life, unless they live a noble life; and there is true nobility in a life that freely gives itself away in love to bless and benefit mankind.

Thus, in moral education, in true spiritual culture, we strike the key-note where the individual sees in himself or herself a means of blessing humanity. He loves himself only so far as he does this and educates himself to this end. And he perceives that as he becomes cultured his neighbor's interest is promoted, divine truth more fully proclaimed and his own improvement as an instrument in universal benefaction.

"Then may I learn that heaven true
Flaunts no external guise;
Nor waits in some far distant blue,
But in the heart it lies.

"Then may I say these words to men,
That if you will be true,
You need not go to heaven then,
But it will come to you."

To my mind that which constitutes the highest degree of development and worth in an individual, is a high standard of moral integrity. The man who possesses this integrity has that which will bear him through life calmly and serenely; such as will lift him above temptation and assist him so that he may prove not only a guide to his own soul, but a friend and helper to his afflicted kind. He will find himself unfolding in spiritual beauty, in symmetry, possessing flowers within his own soul that will in time bear rich fruit for his own instruction and support.

Such a man or woman may indeed pass through life, undisturbed by its toil and friction, unmindful of that which seems so alluring to others less self-possessed and serene, and which proves a pitfall to so many faltering feet.

A friend is not a man who will sun himself in your prosperity, enjoy with you the blessings that your life may confer, and when the shadow comes look around for some other sunny spot in which to rest himself. Such friends are like bees that gather around the flower while they can fill themselves with honey, and when the flower begins to wither and there is nothing more for them, they fly away to some other one where they may be more fortunate. A true friend is one that may be faithful in prosperity, but will be equally so when adversity comes.

True happiness in this world is that which is noble and unselfish in its aims and satisfying in its tendency, and is participated in by good spirits who enjoy seeing us in pursuit of the right course.

All human temporal possessions are held by an uncertain tenure and "riches take wings and fly away." "Fluctuations in trade, speculation, fire and flood, may in a single day overthrow the labor and vigilance of a lifetime; but the real soul possessions are enduring.

At the close of the earthly career the heavenly guides take up the broken lives of world worn spirits and bear them to purer heights above the shock of worldly misadventure.

With shining hands they beckon them to healing fountains and health-bearing fields, where the whispers of hope fall upon the listening ear, and calm, inexhaustible peace enfolds the bruised and weary spirit. A. H. NICHOLAS.

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.
The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.
The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."
That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."
Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."
Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."
The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

THE OTHER WORLD AND THIS!
A compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature. By Augusta W. Fletcher, M. D. In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings. Price $1.50.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.
PART I.--The Pentateuch.
Comments on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lillie Devereux Blake, Rev. Phebe Hanaford, Clara Bewick Colby, Ellen Battelle Dietrick, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, Ursula N. Gestefeld, and Francis E Barr.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.--PART II.
Judges, Kings, Prophets and Apostles. Comments on the Old and New Testaments, from Joshua to Revelation. The comments are keen, bright, spicy, full of wit, the work of radical thinkers who are not ignorant of the higher criticism. There is not a dull page in either of these books, but each is a galaxy of the bright minds of the day and throw a new light on the Bible teachings relating to woman. Price of each, paper, 50 cents.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. "Healer": Q. Are there examples in the Bible of healing by magnetized articles?

A. Yes. II. Kings iv:29; Acts xix; 11,12.

Mrs. J. Carlson: Q. Is it true that Pope Leo X said of the Catholic religion: "It is a profitable fable?"

A. There is no reason to doubt the writer in Scribner's Magazine for August, 1901, where this astonishing saying is quoted.

Poet: Q. Who was the first poet laureate of England? and who the present?

A. The first was Ben Jonson, 1615. The great Tennyson was succeeded by Alfred Austin.

A. C. F.: Q. What is the difference between profane and sacred history? Why is the church of Rome opposed to socialism?

A. All history except that contained in the Bible is to Christians profane history. The chief difference is that profane history is written by known writers and at known dates, while of sacred history no one knows when or at what time it was composed.

The Church of Rome opposes Socialism because it will tolerate no rival to its absolute authority to which Socialism is directly opposed. The Catholic church has shown a wonderful prescience which would be admissible in statesmanship if in the cause of justice and right. Its organic tendency is conservative—to keep everything as it is, but when its leaders foresee that changes must come, as demanded by the growth of intelligence, they adopt the change so quietly that it appears to be entirely the work of the church.

C. F. Short, New York City: Q. Where abides the seat of authority? Where can we locate the infallible criticism to determine our duty? Some say the infallible pope, others the church, others the sacred books, others Christ, others the authority from within, others that our best conceptions of right is the final appeal.

A. An answer to this question is given page 194 in "Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," offered as a premium by The Progressive Thinker. The spirit authors there give a law for the moral world as universal as that of gravitation in the physical. The following quotations will serve to partially at least show the views of the writers, although for a full understanding the passages should not be taken from their connections.

"We state the law of morality and conscience to be that the higher faculties should always control the lower in the conduct of life. Each and every faculty of the mind has its own appropriate function and office to perform, and within its sphere of activity is promotive of good and conducive to happiness. Whenever a lower faculty transcends its sphere and encroaches on that of a higher, evil and unhappiness result. How are we to determine the high from the low? Are not all good, and for good, and as integral parts of the mind are they not all equal? For a thorough comprehension of this subject which has become a confusion of conflicting theories, the formation of the mind must be attentively studied. Then we shall be prepared to pronounce on the ascending degrees of higher or lower, and can be eliminated from the mind and yet preserve its integrity; what faculties and functions man may lose and remain man."

As gravitation by ultimate analysis is found to be the fundamental principle of the physical world, this principle dominates the spiritual. This conclusion is reached by the steps shown in the following quotation:

"In man the first process is of growth, assimilation and the mental faculties, which are awakened by the demands made by this process and its correlated functions, lie at the base of the brain and are called the Appetites and Passions. Related to these and in part springing from them, are the Desires, and above these the Emotions. In order of growth, the latest in development is the intellectual and moral faculties. That they are not essential to animal life is proved by the fact that animals exist without them. The later development of moral consciousness proves that it is not essential to intellectual life, although these two have kept an even or parallel course. Comparing man with the animal, we eliminate all faculties except Reason as intellectual and moral consciousness. It is to man what gravitation is to the physical world. It is unlimited by any other faculty, nor is it dependent for its manifestation on any other. Unlike the lower, it makes no prophecy of another faculty; its promise is of its own perfection....The body was made to serve the mind, and not the mind the body. The appetites were made to serve the desires and love, and not the desires and love the appetites. All below were made to serve those above. Lastly the intellect was made to serve the moral consciousness, and not moral consciousness the intellect." Here we grasp the true distinction between high and low. When a faculty is the foundation of another, it must be regarded as lower than that to which it administers. Thus the appetites which feed the body are lower than the faculties which are manifested through the body so fed. Reason which takes cognizance of perceptions and emotions must be superior to the faculties on which it sits in judgment. Spiritual reason, or moral consciousness, the essence of the spiritual perceptions must be highest of all. If you now ask what can a man not spare and yet remain a man, the answer is reason and this higher spiritual consciousness, or spiritual reason."

Our lives are made up of a conflict of these various faculties, and in such conflicts the actions which lead to spiritual perfection shall always be chosen rather than those of the animal. This is the only "authority," for beyond his own organization there is no authority to enforce its decrees.

Alexander Devereux: Q. Where can I procure Dr. Chase's Receipt Book?

A. Murray Hill Publishing Company, New York.

Hy Henning and H. Engelboch: Q. Can spirits take cognizance of material environments without the use of a human organism?

A. Spiritual beings have spiritual senses corresponding to the senses in man. These take cognizance of spiritual things as the physical senses receive impressions of the physical. From this statement it would be inferred that spirits cannot directly take cognizance of material existence, but as all physical objects have also a pervading spiritual form, and by means of this spiritual beings are able to take full recognition of the material universe. It is often difficult for them to distinguish those in the physical body and those departed therefrom. This difficulty is frequently met by clairvoyants.

MEDIUMSHIP.

"Is Mediumship Demoralizing?" Is the Question.

Brother J. Madison Allen seems to be much disturbed over an article written by myself in answer to the above question, and pronounces it to be "radically erroneous, misleading and demoralizing." I sincerely hope the editor of The Progressive Thinker will exclude all the demoralizing articles I may send him. I have only to ask the interested reader to look over my article in No. 665 of The Progressive Thinker, and Brother Allen's article in No. 675, and see if he does not admit all that I assert. That I opposed mediumship or suggested that it be abandoned is a flimsy pretense. The only intent of the article was to guard against the abuse and misuse of mediumship, which he admits is a fact. And it would take a volume to point out all those abuses, and the moral and physical wrecks which have resulted from such misuse.

Brother Allen indulges in many high-flown periods about the influence of mediumistic communion with the glorious beings of the spirit world. All this will do for buncombe and oratorical effects, but when we come down to the sober facts of the case, these florid assumptions melt away like the morning dew.

1. It is not a fact that spirit mediums are conspicuous for moral rectitude. They are not superior to the general mass of people.

2. It is not a fact that moral excellence has anything to do with the mediumistic capacity, which is purely physiological. Spiritualists have always taught this fact.

3. It is not a fact, it is not pretended, by any one familiar with the facts that mediums usually come in contact with a high order of spirits, but on the contrary it is with an unprogressed class. And it is not uncommon that the medium's "guide" or control" is one of the most profligate or criminal.

4. All sorts of persons are the patrons of mediums, and bring their own influence and that of their spirit friends to bear upon the mediums. No special moral influence or development could be expected under such conditions. The idea that contact with spirits should induce a higher moral conduct and character is part of the old church superstition, from which many Spiritualists are not yet free.

5. It is not a fact that all, or the most of the progress in thought during the last fifty years is due to Spiritualism. I am far from undervaluing the progress of the last half century, or the work which many Spiritualists have done. But Spiritualism has enunciated but one original idea; and that is that all spirit phenomena are natural. Miraculism is swept away, and man is relegated to the scientific method. The tremendous onward rush of the past century was not inaugurated by Modern Spiritualism, which, as planned in the heavens and formulated on the earth, was intended as the modifier, leader and helper of man's uplifting. It is the great world movement which has made the medium, not the medium the world movement.

As to mediumship being normal, we may answer and say, yes; it is just as normal as the mesmeric or hypnotic trance sleep, and is not normal from the fact that it is only an occasional person who can be a medium; and it is only at occasional times that the medium condition can be attained.

J. S. LOVELAND.

WANTS AUTHORITY.

An Urgent Demand on Prof. Loveland.

I said my final word in the "Origin of Life" controversy and do not wish to reopen it. But I rise to a question of fact. Prof. Loveland said: "Effects very often transcend, or are greater, than the causes producing them." I denied. He reaffirmed. I again denied and said he could name no reputable scientist who ever so taught. In his final article he again says: "Effects are greater than their causes," and intimates that if I had ever read Comte's Positive Philosophy I would know that it was so held and taught.

Well, I am a Missourian and he will have to "show me." If it is held by scientists that effects are often greater than the causes which produce them, let us know it. The evidence should be forthcoming. Therefore—.

(1) Does Comte in his Positive Philosophy teach that an effect may be greater than its cause? If so, in what edition of his work and on what page? Please tell.

(2) Does any college, university or high school in the United States teach that effects may be greater than their causes? If so, what school, name of the professor, name of the text-book, and page on which such teaching may be found.

(3) Has any reputable scientist or philosopher ever taught that "effects often transcend their causes?" If so, in what book, paper or periodical, and on what page? To assist Prof. Loveland I append a few names whom he might consult. For instance: Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Spencer, Virchow, Binet, Bastion, Dawson, Mivart, Agassiz, Lord Kelvin, Raymond, Le Conte, Duke of Argyle, et. al. Anybody (except J. S. Loveland) will do.

Now, then, if there is any authority for the statement that "effects are often greater than the causes that produce them," let friend Loveland produce it.

"THE BEAUTIFUL SNOW."

Illustrating the Heartaches of a Fallen Woman.

"The Beautiful Snow" which met with such universal favor and has been so eagerly sought for, at the special request of many friends, we republish. "The Beautiful Snow" will bear reading every month in the year. It has been pronounced by the London Spectator to be the finest American poem ever written. This opinion we think is not far out of the way. But here is the history of "The Beautiful Snow," taken from the Omaha Republican:

How many thousands have let their tears fall over these lines, as their touching pathos call into recollection the sad story of other and similar victims to man wanton cruelty! In point of smooth versification, easy flowing rhythm, through which is almost heard the plaintive wail of woman's ruined honor, our knowledge of English literature brings to mind no single poem of such thrilling sentiment as this.

We have lately seen an article floating the rounds of the press, purporting to give the authorship of this remarkable effort; but the writer of the statement, who indulged his inspiration "amid the cool breezes of Lake Erie," seems really to know something of its real history. The writer gives Miss Dora Shaw, an actress, and author of "Out in the Rain," the credit as author of this poem. This is a mistake. Dora Shaw has written some pleasant lines, but her brain never flashed that sparkling Gem, "The Beautiful Snow."

In the early part of the war, one dark Saturday night in the dead of winter, there died in the Commercial Hospital in Cincinnati, a young woman over whose head only two and twenty summers had passed. She had been once possessed of an enviable share of beauty, and had been, as she herself says, "flattered and sought for the charms of the face;" but alas! upon her fair brow had long been written that terrible word —prostitute! Once the pride of respectable parentage, her first wrong step was the small beginning of the "same old story over again," which has been the only life-history of thousands. Highly educated and accomplished in manners, she might have shone in the best of society. But the evil hour that proved her ruin was the door from childhood, and having spent a young life in disgrace and shame, the poor friendless one died the melancholy death of a broken-hearted outcast.

Among her personal effects was found in manuscript "The Beautiful Snow," which was immediately carried to Enos B. Reed, a gentleman of culture and literary tastes, who was at that time editor of the National Union. In the columns of that paper, on the morning of the day following the girl's death the poem appeared in print for the first time. When the paper containing the poem came out on Sunday morning, the body of the victim had not yet received burial. The attention of Thomas Buchanan Read, one of the first of American poets, was soon directed to the newly-published lines, who was so taken with their stirring pathos that he immediately followed the corpse to its final resting-place.

Such are the plain facts concerning her whose "Beautiful Snow" shall long be remembered as one of the brightest gems in American literature.

The Beautiful Snow.

Oh! the snow; the beautiful snow,
Filling the sky and the earth below;
Over the house tops, over the street,
Over the heads of the people you meet,
Dancing,
Flirting,
Skimming along;
Beautiful snow! it can do nothing wrong;
Flying to kiss a fair lady's cheek,
Clinging to lips in frolicksome freak,
Beautiful snow from the heavens above,
Pure as an angel, gentle as love!

Oh, the snow, the beautiful snow,
How the flakes gather and laugh as they go
Whirling about in their maddening fun
It plays in its glee with every one—
Chasing,
Laughing,
Hurrying by;
It lights on the face and it sparkles the eye,
And the dogs with a bark and a bound,
Snap at the crystals that eddy around—
The town is alive and its heart in a glow,
To welcome the coming of beautiful snow!

How wildly the crowd goes swaying along,
Hailing each other with humor and song!
How the gay sledges like meteors flash by,
Bright for the moment; then lost to the eye—
Ringing,
Swinging,
Dancing they go,
Over the crust of the beautiful snow;
Snow so pure when it falls from the sky,
To be trampled in mud by the crowd rushing by,
To be trampled and tracked by the thousands of feet,
Till it blends with the filth in the horrible street.

Once I was pure as the snow—but I fell!
Fell like the snow-flakes from heaven to hell;
Fell to be trampled as filth in the street;
Fell to be scoffed, to be spit on and beat.
Pleading,
Cursing,
Dreading to die.
Selling my soul to whoever would buy,
Dealing in shame for a morsel of bread;
Hating the living and fearing the dead;
Merciful God! have I fallen so low?
And yet I was once like the beautiful snow.

Once I was fair as the snow,
With an eye like its crystal, a heart like its glow;
Once I was loved for my innocent grace—
Flattered and sought for the charms of my face!
Father,
Mother,
Sister, all,
God and myself, I've lost by my fall;
The veriest wretch that goes shivering by,
Will make a wide swoop lest I wander too nigh;
For all that is on or above me, I know,
There's nothing that's pure as the beautiful snow.

How strange it should be that the beautiful snow
Should fall on a sinner with nowhere to go!
How strange should it be, when night comes again,
If the snow and the ice strike my desperate brain,
Fainting,
Freezing,
Dying alone,
Too wicked for prayer, too weak for a moan
To be heard in the streets of the crazy town,
Gone mad in the joy of the snow coming down;
To be and to die in my terrible woe,
With a bed and a shroud of the beautiful snow.

To the Author of Beautiful Snow.

Sorrowing victim of terrible wrong,
Why do the strains of thy beautiful song
Strike with such power on the keys of the soul,
As over the spirit its harmonies roll,
Ringing,
Thrilling;
Lingering there,
Filling the heart with a wail of despair?
Down from the judgment seat haste we away,
All we can do is to pity and pray;
All we can see is thy form at our feet
Frozen to ice with the snow in the street.

And where is the hand that betrayed thy young breath—
And pushed thee from beauty and gladness to death?
Courted by fashion, by wealth, and the gay,
Only again to deceive and betray.
Smiling,
Flirting,
Charming his spell,
Only to drag down our loved ones to hell.
Father and mother and brothers and all
Joining to flatter the cause of the fall.
How long—O, ye heaven of heavens—how long,
Must we stagger and faint 'neath this burden of wrong?

"Snow so pure when it falls from the sky,
Tramped in the mud by the crowd rushing by,
Trampled and tracked by the thousands of feet,
Blends with the filth in the horrible street."
Falling,
Whirling,
Sinking away,
Crystals of brightness, besotted with clay.
The night, and the cold, and the darkness come down,
And chill the soft mass to a pavement of stone,
The morning pedestrian looks down at his feet,
And sees the wild havoc of ruin complete.

But, lo! what a vision prophetic I see.
The sun hath arisen in splendor and glee,
His warm rays descending with joy at our feet,
Is melting the ice in the "horrible street."
Warming,
Raising,
Lifting their heads,
In vapor the snow-flakes awake from the dead.
The clay with its darkness remaineth below,
While upward ascendeth the soul of the snow,
And pure as the crystals when first they were given,
Ascends with the sunbeams in gladness to heaven.
O, joy! weary mortal, the vision is thine,
The earth stains that bound the pure spirit divine,
Shall melt and dissolve, with their stains, from the soul,
And wisdom and goodness alone bear control.
Weeping,
Praying,
Striving to rise,
God shall redeem thee again to the skies.
Working for others who fall by the way,
Shall lift thee from sorrow, as mist from the clay.
And when we have ended our task may we go
To dwell with the author of Beautiful Snow.

SPIRITUAL UNFOLDMENT.

The Leading of the Unseen Forces.

In glancing over the many ways of spiritual unfoldment, I can see none so pleasant and rapid as studying along the occult. Mysterious paths always attract, and what is so mysterious and fascinating as the leading of the unseen forces. To me, it is a beautiful truth, this being guided by invisible hands, this study of the power of the Infinite, this complete rest in the positive knowledge of the nearness of my loved ones, this happiness of feeling secure wherever they may see fit to lead me. The vastness of it is overwhelming at times, and then I fear lest I may do something to offend, and cause the invisible helpers to cease to tarry close by me.

When we are in close touch with infinite power, we seem to be so small and insignificant. I wonder many times at the goodness and mercy of the great "I am." Yet after all He is as a loving father to all his children. How often have I cried aloud in defiance of what my spirit people said, and wanted to do my own way. I assure you I have always done their way, and found it best. So much the best that had I done as I wanted to I would have made a mistake.

To me, the life beyond is just as real as the life I now live. There can be no difference, only as our spiritual self may be either more or less advanced. When our spiritual self becomes awakened to the necessity of unfolding to the higher life, then we will advance more rapidly than before.

One reason there are so many "earth bound" spirits is because the spiritual part of them has never been aroused. If we could only educate the criminal to the first plane of spiritual life, we would soon have fewer "earth bound" spirits, and soon have less crime upon the earth.

I have always been glad that Spiritualists—true Spiritualists—do not believe in taking human life. We often hear clergymen speak of being led to do thus and so, by the "Holy Spirit." My spiritual people lead me to do many things; I believe they are under a power higher than their own. I often ask them, "Why must I," or "why can't I" do some other way. They reply, they "do not know," but point above. I understand by that, they are doing their work in giving me the message they are bidden to. Thus, you see, we are all led by a power not of earth. And the more and closer we obey the silent leading of the host that have gone before, the more rapidly our spiritual nature will develop, and we will be drawn closer to the "Divine Power" that has a ruling over all. The unseen is the real.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

On Delegates' Reports to the N. S. A.

Mr. President and Fellow Delegates:—The committee on Delegates' reports respectfully submit the following: Your committee report that they have received reports from 73 societies for consideration.

These reports are from 11 state associations, 52 local societies, 4 camp-meeting associations and 6 lyceums. A careful examination of the various reports show that while many societies have endeavored to comply with the requirements of the N. S. A., but few of them have really done so.

State Associations.

11 state associations have sent in reports. New York reports 11 delegates representing 11 chartered societies; Massachusetts 35 individual members; Maine 140 individual members; Connecticut 80 individual members; Ohio 19 lay members and 9 delegates from chartered societies; Minnesota 100 members composed of delegates from 22 chartered societies and individual members; Wisconsin 112 delegates and individual members; California 320 members individual and delegates from subordinate associations; Washington 92 individual members; Texas 13 chartered societies.

FINANCIAL REPORT.

	Rec'ts.	Ex.	Bal.	Property.
New York	$672 12	$357 76	$315 36
Massachusetts	204 84	147 88	254 00
Maine	235 77	239 77	90 00
Connecticut	319 18	220 65	48 48	$25 00
Ohio
Iowa	650 08	303 81	247 77
Minnesota	2720 58	2120 58	677 50	100 00
Wisconsin	2303 15	2256 15	112 00	200 00
California
Washington			50 00	125 00
Texas	804 24	774 19	30 05
	$7875 91	$6420 29	$1881 10	$450 00

Your committee calls attention to the fact that though only 11 state associations have filed reports, there are three different plans of organization. Your committee therefore recommends that some uniform plan of organization be adopted for state associations, as these different plans are liable to create confusion.

Four state associations have individual membership only, 5 have individual membership and subordinate associations, 2 have subordinate societies alone.

Local Societies.

The returns from the various societies have, as in previous years been most sadly neglected, only 52 reports having been rendered, and most of them incomplete. Sixteen contained no financial statement or in any way assisted the committee in its work. 35 of the reports are without anything except the blank reports sent out by the secretary partially completed, while 17 contain a more or less complete statement of the work accomplished by the society during the year.

While it is impossible to give a complete report of the standing of the local societies, owing to meagre details furnished, your committee wish to present the following facts and figures:

The amount of receipts reported are $23,655.11; the amount of expenditures, $22,896.95; value of property $45,000.

There is a marked increase in the membership, only 6 societies reporting a decrease, which, in most cases, is but one or two.

Three societies report that they have secured temples in which to hold their meetings, viz.; First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, Pa.; First Spiritualist Association of St. Louis, Mo.; and the German Spiritualist Society "Truth Seekers" of Lawrence, Mass.

Four societies, the First Spiritualist Society of Lowell, Mass.; First Spiritualist Church of Fall River, Mass.; First Spiritualist Progression of Newark, N. J., and the East Joplin Spiritualists Association of Joplin, Mo., report that they have created funds for a temple.

We feel the present system of blank reports sent out to the chartered societies do not seem to meet the requirements of the N. S. A. Your committee recommend that a suitable form be printed, and sent out with sufficient space left upon it for a brief written report.

Camp-Meeting Associations.

But four camp-meeting associations have reported.

The Penobscot Spiritual Temple, Verona Park, Me., reports a three weeks' meeting in August, 1902. Receipts, $250; disbursements, $250; value of property, $4,000; membership 30.

The Compounce Association of Spiritualists, Connecticut, reports thirty-eight annual picnics. Receipts, $75.97; Disbursements, $32.81; contribution to N. S. A., $5.

The Connecticut State Camp-meeting Association, Niantic, Conn., makes no report of membership nor finances.

The Mississippi Valley Spiritualists Association, Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, reports its twenty-first annual camp-meeting held July 27 to Aug. 24, 1902. Receipts during the year, $2325.33; disbursements during the year, $2,064.43; value of property about $25,000; contribution to the N. S. A., $42.

This is a very incomplete showing of the camp-meeting work of the territory covered by the N. S. A. Your committee recommend that a special effort be made that camp-meeting associations be urged to charter with the N. S. A. and send full reports of their work.

So important a factor in the life of the Spiritualistic movement should make a better showing in the annals of the N. S. A., in view of the fact that each year many camp associations set apart a special N. S. A. day, and on such days the proceeds are turned over to the N. S. A.

Lyceums.

Only six lyceums have sent in reports, of those chartered with the N. S. A., four only sending detailed statements.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Washington, D. C., average attendance 25; receipts for the season, $30.

Boston Spiritual Temple Lyceum, gross receipts $300; expenditures $241; property $100; average attendance 50.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Boston, Receipts $827.59; expenditures $140.80; property $50; average attendance 50.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, enrolled members 77; receipts $147.22; expenditures $145.11; property $100.

A very poor showing of lyceum work, as a whole, though the lyceums reporting are nearly all in a flourishing condition. The committee would recommend the adoption of a systematized plan of lyceum work to be under the N. S. A. Also the appointment of a superintendent, the issuance of printed lessons to be used by all lyceums in unison. Also the simplification of the lessons, as those now in use are beyond the comprehension of the children.

Educational Institutions.

The Morris Pratt Institute, Whitewater, Wis., reports as an incorporated body, 7 trustees, 20 students. Membership unknown, but steadily increasing. Receipts, $3,294.34; expenses $3,599.84. As this is the only school of its kind under the management of the Spiritualists, and is a chartered auxiliary of the N. S. A., your committee recommend that every effort be made to sustain it financially, as it is an important factor in the progress of Modern Spiritualism.

Your committee wish to call your attention especially to the fact that the most valuable information furnished from the societies come in the form of brief written reports, and therefore, recommend that a few of these reports be read at the convention, especially those regarding state associations, or other special reports that seem to require special consideration by the convention. Your committee recommend that all societies be requested to forward their reports not later than thirty days previous to the convention in order that the statistics of said reports may be compiled as far as possible in advance of the assembling of the same. Your committee find it almost impossible to do this properly in the time of the convention.

Your committee recommend, in order to expedite business, that all reports of delegates, or money coming in after the close of the fiscal year, be given as a supplementary report of the convention, and included in the report of the following year, it being deemed necessary to establish some system in regard to these reports.

Your committee recommend that a complete list of the societies chartered by the N. S. A. be compiled and a copy of the same be sent to the spiritual press for publication, and that the secretary send a circular letter on matters of interest pertaining to the work of the N. S. A. at least once a quarter.

Your committee desire to call attention to the danger of proxy voting. This method of voting does more to disorganize associations than all other internal dissensions. We therefore recommend its entire abolishment.

Your committee recommends that a greater effort be made to secure representation direct from each society. Unless this is done the societies cannot be held in touch with the National body, and cannot see the necessity of financially supporting the N. S. A.

BOOK REVIEW.

War and Worship: a Poem. By Henry Bedlow.

Whoever sets out to read this book, with the thought that it is of the ordinary, to read which would be as a painful penance, will discover that such a thought is erroneous.

The author is a master of rhythm, a master in thought, and also possesses true poetic instinct and intuition, the divine fire kindled by inspiration of Nature and spiritual revelation.

It is afire with the spirit of free-thought, applied to the well-being of man mental, moral, material and spiritual. As a sample of the author's style and thought, we quote:

"Stated in aphorism terse,
Man's glory is in 'pride of place'!
For he with Him stands face to face:
God is Himself the Universe.

"Finite holds no divining rod
For searching Infinite; and He Is no objective entity:
Nature's Totality is God!

"Yet, till the soul, immaculate,
Purged of all carnate grossness, stands
Pure spirit 'mid pure Spirit bands,
In loftiest archangelic state;

"Until the faculties are held,
By which that soul can measure space,
The confines of th' Eternal trace,
The human paradox dispelled,

"Through epochs of progression, show
No taint of matter's crass control
Upon the pure discarnate soul,
Can it the God, the Father, know."

Published by The Truthseeker Co., New York. Price $1.25.

Sappho and Sophocles, Inspirers of the Works of William Shakspeare, Francis Bacon, the Reviser and Preserver of the Manuscripts. Price 10 cents, postage 1 cent. Published and for sale by the Star Publishing Co., Springfield, Mass.

Aims to settle the matter by spirit testimony.

Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion. By Newton N. Riddell.

An excellent and thoroughly practical book, based on sound psychological principles and the author's critical study of more than ten thousand children. It is extremely valuable in its suggestions to those having charge of the education, government and mental and moral development of children.

It is on sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price 65 cents.

Thought Force in Business and Everyday Life. Being a Series of Lessons in personal magnetism, psychic influence, thought-force, concentration, will power and practical mental science. By William Walter Atkinson. Published by the Psychic Research Co., Chicago.

An excellent work on the lines of New Thought. Its character is well defined by its title, and it may be consulted with interest and profit by all.

Vital Electric Healing. By Cyrus Stone Farrar. Chicago.

A little book with matter that should set the "regulars" to thinking. The author writes from experience, and advances some new thoughts worthy of being pondered. And he says:

"In more than forty years' practice in Vital Electric Healing it has been my lot to have a fair percentage of diphtheria cases, and I have never lost a case; neither have I ever met with a case of it that the cause originally did not lie with medical treatment, either in the person of the individual patient or its parents. The same is true of typhus and typhoid fevers, and fully ninety per cent of pneumonia, appendicitis, and dyspepsia, with a multitude of other physical diseases."

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. For sale at this office. Price, cloth $1.

"The Life Booklets." By Ralph Waldo Trine. Three daintily beautiful little books, finely adapted for holiday presents. The titles are, "Character Building by Thought Power," "Every Living Creature," and "The Greatest Thing ever known." The matter is of high-toned spiritual character and of helpful purpose. Price 35 cents each, or $1.00 for the three.

"A Plea for the New Woman." By May Collins. An address delivered before the Ohio Liberal Society. For sale at this office. Price 10 cents.

JOYS BEYOND THE THRESHOLD
A Sequel to The To-morrow of Death.
By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French. The To-morrow of death was written to develop the idea of the principle of the permanence of the human soul after death, and its reincarnation in a chain of new beings, whose successive links are unrolled to the bosom of ethereal space. "Beyond the Threshold" continues on the same lines, enlarging and expanding the idea by reasons and considerations drawn from science and philosophy, claiming that the certainty of a new birth beyond our earthly end is the best means of arming ourselves against all weakness in the presence of death, and that the help offered by science and philosophy to that end is far superior to that of any of the existing religions. From beginning to end it is interesting, entertaining, instructive and fascinating, and whether one accepts it all or not, much will have been learned and much pleasure enjoyed in its perusal. Price, $1.65.

THE GOSPEL OF NATURE
Is a most excellent work by Dr. M. L. Sherman, assisted by Prof. W. F. Lyon. Heretofore it has been sold for $2, but the price now has been reduced to $1. It is a book that will interest and instruct. It contains 280 pages, and is full of suggestive thoughts. Dr. Sherman was a medium of rare qualities, and his work is a reflection from the celestial spheres.

The Science of Spirit Return.
By Charles Dawbarn. A scientific rehearsal that is truly interesting. Price, 10 cents.

Discovery of a Lost Trail
BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,
Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by the wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.
"Discovery of a Lost Trail"
is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

Cultivation of Personal Magnetism

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.
Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

The Young People's Sunflower Club.

To the Editor:—The annual reunion of all members of the Young People's Sunflower Club, of Philadelphia (auxiliary to the First Association of Spiritualists) was held Monday evening, Oct. 13, in the temple. The president, Mr. E. S. Benner, opened the meeting with an address of welcome, followed by remarks by Capt. F. J. Keffer, president of the First Association, and Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader. The president then called on Mrs. Cooley, of Chicago, who was sojourning in our city, and she favored us with some very interesting remarks. Prof. Evans, of this city, also gave a short talk which was appreciated by all the members. The secretary then read letters of greeting from Mrs. M. C. Barrett, from whom we are always glad to hear; Rev. B. F. Austin, of Toronto, Canada, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, of Westfield, N. Y.; Miss Margaret Gaule, of New York City, and Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, of Stoneham, Mass. Mrs. Allyn also sent the following impromptu greeting in the form of a poem:

My dear Sunflower Club, whose faces
oft gleam,
On Memory's walls like a beautiful dream,
Your kind invitation lies here in my sight,
That bids me meet with you and greet you to-night.
I read it with pleasure, and say in my heart,
Although many miles keep our earth-
forms apart,
Still I'm with you to answer your dearly-prized call,
Can you hear me? I'm saying "Good evening to all."

And this is my speech, Mr. Chairman and friends,
With rejoicing my spirit its greeting extends,
For transmission of thought has a value and power,
That increases with friendship in splendor each hour.

Like the dawn of the day is the glory of youth,
Like roses unfolding you are seeking the truth,
Press on through the Twentieth Century strong,
Till Justice shall herald the downfall of wrong.

The Sunflower ('tis said) always turns to the light,
May your club prove its claim to this title is right.
And giving the sunshine to all that you meet,
Make pathways of kindness for wandering feet.

Hail! friends in the spirit, I give as my toast,
"Here's wisdom and health to each hostess and host;
May the Liberty Bell vibrate like the sea,
And our banner be lifted as sign of the Free.
May the rich inspirations of Angels of Grace,
Be felt at your meetings, and every place,
While blessings of heaven with earth-hearts unite
And our souls shall re-echo a fervent good night.

All the letters read were very interesting and contained many thoughts and suggestions which will prove beneficial to our Club. The Sunflower chorus sang several selections, and readings were given by Miss Irene Leslie and Miss A. J. Gundermann. The committee in charge of the reunion served refreshments in the dining-room, and the evening was one that will long be remembered by all those present.

AMELIA J. GUNDERMANN,
Philadelphia, Pa. Secretary.

Convivial.

On Saturday evening, October 25, there was an informal gathering of intimate friends with Mrs. Margerite Spencer, trumpet medium, at her home, 177 N. Union street, this city, of a unique kind. In this party of nineteen persons many characters were represented in dress and ensemble. Among them was a lady aborigine so realistic, not only in dress, but in manner from living among the reds as to be very impressive; a genuine Topsy in short dress; a girl child transformed into a model boy; a princess in white; a "weary Willie" six feet tall forgot his weariness in the general mirth; the masked Irish policeman had about all he could do to take care of his surplus fleshiness; Sis Hopkins flew around at a lively rate; a beggar woman was well acted, and a small lady devil was there in black.

The carnival of fun was interrupted at 10 p. m. by the arrival of a photographer who made a flashlight picture of the interesting scene. This was followed later with a service of oysters, ice cream and many "I screams," etc.

Before the party disbanded in the wee small hours, two of the medium's guides added their humor and conviviality in the impromptu darkened room.

Persons who have not made study of mediumship, especially in connection with physical demonstration, hardly realize the situation with the medium in regard to overwork and exhaustion of the forces, and the great need of relaxation and recreation. An almost overpowering desire to get entirely away from the mediumistic exercise and to abandon oneself to a no-effort, run-itself activity, for a change from the monotony of its continuous use, is common to all mediums. How much better is such a season of amusement as is here recorded, than the yielding to vicious indulgence of any kind or degree, especially when stimulation is sought through drugs or excitants! If all mediums realized the danger, and sought these innocent pleasures and recreations, not so many would fall as did once our dear pioneer medium.

A WYOMING JUDGE'S VIEW ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The following letter from Judge Melville C. Brown, of Laramie, Wyo., to Mrs. E. H. Wilson, of Bismarck, Dak., gives a practical man's observations of the effect of equal suffrage:

My Dear Madam:—My prejudices were formerly all against woman suffrage, but they have gradually given way since it became an established fact in Wyoming.

You ask, "Has woman suffrage worked good or evil in Wyoming?" I answer unqualifiedly, it has worked good.

Again you ask, "What class of women go to the polls?" I answer, all classes. Women vote as generally as men, and are no more restricted in the use of the ballot. My observation of the workings of woman suffrage, extending over a period of fifteen years, satisfies me of its entire justice and propriety. Impartial observation has also satisfied me that in the use of the ballot women exercise fully as good judgment as men, and in some particulars are more discriminating, as for instance on questions of morals.

You further ask, "Has it a degrading influence?" Again I answer positively, no—a very loud no. I should laugh at this last question if it were not asked in such evident good faith. Just think of the ridiculousness of it. My wife goes with me to the theatre, the opera, to church and prayer-meeting. We also associate in the family circle from day to day, without apparent injury to her. She also takes my arm and we walk to the polls together and deposit our ballots. Isn't it ridiculous to suppose that our association in the latter act would be more injurious than in the former? It seems so to me.

I will only add, in conclusion, that woman suffrage is as firmly established in Wyoming as man suffrage, and the latter is in as much danger of repeal or abridgment as the former. Our people are satisfied with it, and are proud of the fact that Wyoming has set an example that all the older states of the Union are sooner or later sure to follow.

I am, madam, your most obedient,
MELVILLE C. BROWN.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of te nlines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, Sarah Woodrow, at Hobart, Okla., October 23, 1902, aged 84 years. The body was taken to the old family graveyard near Santiago, Ia. She was the mother of thirteen children, ten being heads of families; nine remaining incarnate. A most lovable spirit, hospitable, kind without affectation.

T. W. WOODROW.

Hobart, Okla.

John C. Phillips passed to the higher life at his home at Rochester, Ind., aged 66 years. He had been a Spiritualist for many years, and was a member of the First Spiritualist Church. The funeral services were conducted at the residence by Harry J. Moore.

COR.

Anna Theresa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Armbruster, 458 West State street, Columbus, O., aged 18 years, 10 months and 7 days, was born into spirit life at the home of her parents, Friday morning, October 17, 1902. Anna Theresa and her mother were charter members of the West Side Spiritualist Church, but a part of their kinsfolk being of orthodox proclivities, both orthodox and Spiritualists participated in the service. Rev. H. E. Boerstler, Spiritualist, offering the opening invocation, Rev. Hattie Gillette Webster, Spiritualist, reciting an original poem, and Rev. S. K. King, Methodist, delivering the discourse; all of which were well adapted and eminently appropriate for an occasion of this kind. The floral offerings were numerous and grand.

MRS. ROSE BLACKWELL.

Passed to spirit life, October 19, Dr. Thomas McAboy, after a brief illness of two days, aged 60 years. He was one of Louisville's most prominent physicians as well as a veteran Spiritualist, being the founder of the First Spiritual Church of Louisville, and holding offices of trust in the same for twenty-five years. His demise was so sudden that his friends can scarcely realize he has gone from our midst. His funeral took place October 21, at his residence, 733 12th street, and was attended by a large concourse of sympathizing friends. The services were conducted (at his request) by Rev. Geo. Heinsohn and Rev. Mrs. A. Annabel. His remains were laid to rest by the side of his wife, who passed to spirit life little more than a year ago. United in life, they were not long parted by death, so-called.

MRS. WILLIE McABOY.

Louisville, Ky.

Mrs. Mary L. Lovell passed to the higher life after five weeks of suffering, on October 29, from her home, Nevada, Iowa. Mrs. Lovell was an old pioneer in Nevada. Her father Isaac Romane, was the builder of the fifth house in Nevada, and the first lawyer who settled here. At the time of her demise she was the oldest resident of the town. The family are all believers in our beautiful philosophy, that had been the knowledge of Mr. and Mrs. Lovell for over thirty years. Jennie Hagan Brown conducted the service at their home, amid beautiful flowers, with sweet song service. There was peace in the hearts that were left to mourn. Mrs. Lovell had said to her husband, "Be cheerful. Do not stop your happy laughter and merry jest, as I shall be with you; do not be sad." JENNIE HAGAN BROWN.

Passed to higher life, Mrs. Levi Hildredth, of Barton Landing, Vt., October 17, 1902.

"Friendship and Love wrought to the last,
And Sympathy stood at the door;
The bitterness of Death is past,
And all her sufferings o'er."

SURE GOITRE CURE

A Famous Michigan Specialist Discovers a Positive Cure For Goitre at Last. Use It At Home.

Why will you suffer with this dangerous and disfiguring disease when there is a treatment at hand that is positively guaranteed to cure it? We have cured thousands of cases after all else had failed and can cure you. Miss Lizzie Evans, of 3553 Caroline St., St. Louis, in writing to the Doctor, says: "When I began taking your Goitre cure all hope was gone. I had tried everything I could hear of and was constantly growing worse. My neck was a horrible sight and often caused me much distress. Wonderful to say I am now in perfect health and have been since taking your treatment nearly two years ago." Do not experiment longer with "Free cures" and worthless nostrums but write at once to Dr. W. T. Bobo, 23 Minty Block, Battle Creek, Mich., for full particulars of this great and tried remedy. It will cure you and brighten the remainder of your life. If you have a friend with this malady do them a lasting kindness by sending us their name and address. Write to-day.

AGAIN AT WORK.

Dr. J. C. Batdorf, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who will be remembered by all old Spiritualists as a skillful Physician, Clairvoyant and Magnetic Healer, and who was compelled by the Postoffice department to abandon the use of a lock of the patient's hair in diagnosing the owner's ailments, is again devoting his time to his life's work. If you are sick write to him. Give full name, age, and tell him in your own way how you suffer and he will send you a correct diagnosis of your ailments and outline a course of treatment that will cure you. 676

Self-Hypnotic Healing.

I have made a late discovery that enables all to induce the hypnotic sleep in themselves instantly, awaken at any desired time and thereby cure diseases and bad habits. Anyone can induce this sleep in themselves instantly at first trial, control their dreams, read the minds of friends and enemies, visit any part of the earth, solve hard questions and problems in this sleep and remember all when awake. This so-called Mental Vision Lesson will be sent to anyone Absolutely Free, actually enabling him to do the above without charge whatever.

And Civilize With Education and the World and Peace Are Ours!

A word to our loving friends and fellows in the cause of Spiritualism: Let us move slowly until all the world shall see the truth and beauty of our philosophy and they will be with us to the end. Let us elevate ourselves into the sphere of the higher thinkers by a thorough study of the higher literature.

The Occult Wisdom of the Universe Is Within Reach of All.

OUR PREMIUM OFFER.

READ AND REFLECT.

Remember, please, that we send many of our Premium Books by express. If you do not receive your order promptly by mail, inquire at the express office. If not there, notify us at once.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to purchase any of these Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands." Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills on exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have NINE Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any seven of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the nine Premium Books you may order, price $2.50.

Lastly all of these NINE valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $2.75, a price never before equaled in this country or Europe. The following is the list:

NINE REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $2.75.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.

5.—Ghost Land, Spiritualism; Occultism.

6—The Next World Interviewed.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These nine books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printers art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $2.75, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.
